INTRODUCTION

THE great library of Divine Truth which we know as The Bible, is primarily a home book. It begins with the establishment of a home on earth, and ends with the great home gathering of the redeemed about the throne of the Heavenly Father. Throughout the Bible the sacredness of the home is emphasized. Properly-trained children are necessary to the establishment and maintenance of Christian homes, and Christian homes are necessary to a Christian nation. Every nation that has rested upon any other foundation than the unchangeable truths of God has learned to its sorrow that it had built "wood, hay and stubble," and has passed away. The home is the fountainhead of all the streams that flow into the great sea of society and national life. The Bible and its teachings constitute the center of every Christian life and of every Christian home. Therefore, whatever will make plainer and more attractive to the family, and especially to the children in the homes, the wonderful truths of God's Word, is to be welcomed as we welcome a friend. On this account, I am glad to write this introductory note.

This book will be attractive to children, and also to those who teach them, as all books are that teach by pictures. We learn more through the eye than through any other organ of sense, and it is a pleasing way to learn. Furthermore, what is learned through the eye is usually longest retained. To many a mother this book will come as a boon to help her solve the double problem of how to instruct her children in the Word of God, and at the same time profitably to use innumerable Sunday afternoons and long twilight hours. After a few lessons from its attractive pages there will be no difficulty in inducing the children to gather about her knee, as she opens the book to them and guides them in their reading of the picture pages. It is not difficult to imagine that before the book has been long in the home, the children will gladly spend much time reading the pictures by themselves, the older brothers and sisters guiding the younger ones.

The many full-page illustrations which are, for the most part, reproductions from the famous masters—these striking, full-page engravings being printed in sepia—add largely to the elegance and beauty of the work, and give it a stamp of refinement not otherwise to be acquired.

But this is far more than a picture book. There is scarcely a subject in the Bible which has been studied in the Sunday Schools of our country during the last fifty years but what is treated here by experts in a way that makes the book a perpetual lesson help, available for all lessons and furnishing good teaching material for all departments. The treatment of the Bible lessons is quite full and suggestive, though very simple. On this account Sunday School teachers will prize the help it presents. To many a lesson, fully prepared from other sources, a few moments spent with this book will add just the attractive feature that often makes the difference between success and failure in teaching.

Probably, however, this book will be longest remembered by both old and young because it was the magnet which drew the entire family together, day by day, with the common purpose of looking up into the Heavenly Father's face and reading together some of His wonderful words of Life. As a devotional book in the midst of the family circle at the eventide, or in the morning, it will be found of great service. The short prayer and hymn in connection with each Scripture lesson are well adapted to this purpose, and will no doubt often form a part of the regular family worship. And we doubt not in many homes where no prayers are now offered, the reading of these prayers will open the way for something further and be the means of establishing the family altar.

This is not a book for the library shelf, but for the center of the table in the living-room, and there we predict it oftenest will be found; for when its merits are recognized it will be frequently used by every member of the family. We are sure it will find its way into many thousands of homes in America, and that its proper use will leave only blessings behind.

THE BIBLE

This Book Contains:

The mind of God, the state of man, the way of salvation, doom of sinners, and happiness of believers. Its doctrines are holy, its precepts are binding, its histories are true, and its decisions are immutable. Read it to be wise, believe it to be safe, and practice it to be holy. It contains light to direct you, food to support you and comfort to cheer you. It is the traveler's map, the pilgrim's staff, the pilot's compass, the soldier's sword and the Christian's charter. Here Paradise is restored, Heaven opened, and the gates of hell disclosed. Christ is Its Grand Subject, our good its design, and the glory of God its end. It should fill the memory, rule the heart, and guide the feet. Read it slowly, frequently, prayerfully. It is a mine of wealth, a paradise of glory, and a river of pleasure. It is given you in life, will be open at the Judgment and be remembered forever. It involves the highest responsibility, rewards the greatest labor, and condemns all who trifle with its holy contents.

"This Book unfolds Jehovah's mind
 This Voice salutes in accents kind
 This Friend will all our need supply
 This Fountain sends forth streams of joy
 This Mine affords us boundless wealth
 This Good Physician gives us health
 This Sun renews and warms the soul
 This Sword both wounds and makes us whole
 This Letter shows our sins forgiven
 This Guide conducts us gate to Heaven
 This Charter has been sealed with blood
 This Volume is the Word of God."

THE BIBLE.

A BOOK OF BOOKS. Thousands of years ago it was said, "Of making many books, there is no end." If it was true then, how much more true is it in these days, when the printing press is pouring forth a ceaseless stream of books. Yet among all the books ever written, the Bible is by far the most precious.

The world is full of books of every kind and character, written by men of every land and profession, yet none of them can for one moment compare with this one Book. It records history, the oldest in the world: reaching back to the creation of all things. Many recorded events, once discredited by Bible critics as not only improbable, but impossible, have been proven authentic by the discovery, in recent years, of records and tablets buried for thousands of years in the ruins of cities and palaces of kings, who lived at the same time as the events recorded in Bible history occurred.

Many of its prophecies uttered thousands of years before have had their fulfilment in a wonderful manner, and others point still to the future. No other book presents so lofty a conception of the relation of the Creator to the human family as does the Bible: God walking, talking with and, through his Son, dying for men. Nor can any other book compare with it in its influence on and uplift of mankind.

Authors. We speak of the Bible as one book. In reality, however, it is a small library, a set of sixty-six books, smaller and larger, that have been bound in one volume. They have various authors, numbering about thirty-six in all. The oldest of these is Moses, the Hebrew Prophet and Lawgiver, who wrote about 1,500 years before Christ.

Many of these authors were unlearned men, yet there came from the strokes of their rude pens, characters immortal: everlasting characters, that stand like rocks among the waves of time; created in a few words, by a bare record of great things said and done. The latest author is John the Evangelist, who wrote the Revelation, about 100 years after Christ. So we see the Bible was about 1,600 years in preparation. No other single book has such a chronological record as this.

Country. Furthermore, it is worthy of notice that every one of the writers of the Bible, with the exception of St. Luke, was a Jew. The "Beloved Physician" alone, was a Gentile. From this we see how great a debt the whole world owes to the Jewish nation, for its wonderful contribution to the religious literature of the world.

Literature. All the literature of Greece, the most cultured of the peoples of the old world, cannot match this one book in respect to poetry, philosophy, history, or narrative. If you want vivid narrative, such as takes hold of the heart, where can you find anything superior to the story of Joseph, or that of Ruth and Naomi? What story of friendship like that of David and Jonathan, or what portrayal of a father's grief over a wayward son more touching than that of David, when he hears the tidings of the death of Absalom?

Where can the lover of poetry find sweeter strains than those of the 23rd Psalm, or the 103rd Psalm? What writer has ever soared to such heights of poetic grandeur as has Isaiah, or the writer of the book Job? Testimony abounds on every hand, to the matchless genius of Hebrew poetry, and the lofty conception that these writers enjoyed of things human and things Divine.

Teachings. And what shall we say when we come to the matter of the religious teachings that are contained in this book? Search in all the religious writings of the heathen world for anything that can be compared with the Ten Commandments. In all the world they have become the foundation of good law and government. No other code of morals in the world sets so lofty a standard nor has any other code of laws ever been framed, whose observance so enhances the common good of mankind. Jesus said the sum of the Ten Commandments is, "To love the Lord with all thy heart and thy neighbor as thyself."

The historical writings of the Bible reveal God as a God of mercy, unending in His efforts to reclaim a lost world and lift man out of sin; punishing and pardoning as men reject his counsel or repent of their wrong. Even Jonah, when reproaching God for not fulfilling his prophecy against Nineveh, said, "I know that Thou art a gracious God, and merciful, slow to anger, and of great kindness and repentest Thee of the evil." So, too, His love and mercy are revealed in the number of prophets He sent to Israel in the days of their decline, seeking to turn them from their folly and sin.

Yet still more lofty in its conception of Divine truth than the Ten Commandments is the Sermon on the Mount of our blessed Lord. Here we have the law laid down, as it applies not to the outward life only, but as it appeals to the human heart and conscience.

But His love is best revealed in the gift of His Son. In the Cross of Christ we find His plan for the redemption of a sin-cursed world. The Bible teaches there is no other way than this given under Heaven among men whereby we must be saved. From whatever point of view we regard this Book, we can say of it as David once said of Goliath's sword, "There is none like it. Give it to me."

Opposition. Now, though all that we have said (and much more) is true of the Bible, it is strange that this Book has been more attacked than any other book that has ever seen the light. More than one hundred years ago the infidel Voltaire said, "In fifty years from now the Bible will not be read any longer." Voltaire has been dead for much more than a century, yet for one who reads a word of what he wrote there are millions who still read the Sacred Word. In the dark ages, deluded men burned this book in public, and they do still in some of the darker and more ignorant lands such as South America and parts of Mexico. And yet the great Book lives on in undisturbed majesty, and influences men for all that is highest and best and noblest.

Original Languages. Originally the Bible was written in three languages, the Hebrew and Chaldee for the Old Testament, and the Greek for the New Testament. Of course the work had to be accomplished with pen and ink. In those days, therefore, the Book was most expensive and only those who were wealthy could own a copy of the Sacred Writings. With the advent of the printing press, and the use of steam, it became possible to multiply copies so cheaply that even the poorest can now procure copies of the Bible.

Translation. So wonderful has the influence of this Book proved itself that many years ago men began to translate it into other languages than those of the original manuscripts. This process has gone on (and is still going on), until today the whole of the more important parts of the Word have been translated into nearly five hundred languages. Many of these languages had first to be carefully studied and systematized, and an alphabet had to be created, so that the savage people for whom the work was done might be able to read the Word in their own tongue. For there are many tribes in Africa who had no alphabet before the missionaries came to them, and for these an alphabet had to be prepared, and the natives taught to read in their own language.

Circulation. When we come to the matter of the circulation of the Bible the figures are so vast as to be confusing. In the hundred years from 1611 to 1711 the number of editions of both Old and New Testaments was 526. The Lenox Library in New York City contains copies of 8,000 different Bibles. At this writing there are issued more than one thousand editions of the Bible each year, or double the number issued in the 16th century. The annual issue of Bibles by the British and Foreign Bible Society is over 5,000,000 copies, while that of the American Bible Society is about 2,000,000. In the last hundred years the total circulation of the Bible by the Bible Societies, has reached the stupendous figure of three hundred sixteen millions of volumes. No other book can for a moment compare with this. And the wonder of it is that as the years multiply these figures increase more and more.

Students. Finally no other one book is studied as is the Bible. Each Sunday in the world about thirty millions of teachers and scholars pore over this Book. In every land and in every tongue they come to see what God the Lord has to say to them, as shown in its pages. To no other book do so many turn from week to week for counsel, guidance, comfort and warning. The more we know of its wonderful teachings the more do we admire them. Of most books we soon weary. Who would think of reading a novel ten times? Yet there are those who have been poring over the pages of this Book for ten or twenty or thirty years, who still will say that they have not exhausted its treasures or grown weary of its presentations of truths Divine and sublime. In view of all this we may well repeat what Sir Walter Scott is reported to have said in his last illness. He asked to have The Book read to him, and when asked "What book," he replied, "There is but one Book." So of all books in the world we can say with the same significance, "There is but one Book."

THE BIBLE AN INSPIRED BOOK.

HOW INSPIRED. What do we mean when we say that the Bible is "an inspired" book? Without going into any philosophical definition of the word "inspired" it will be enough for our purpose to say that by "inspired" we mean that the prophets and apostles, in what they said and wrote, were guided by the Holy Spirit in a manner higher than that of any men of their times. Rightly to understand and appreciate this we must be sure to bear in mind that these men, all of them, wrote in times when in all the world there was idolatry, and polytheism everywhere. Before the birth of Christ, when the Old Testament prophets spoke and wrote, all the world excepting the Jews was polytheistic (that is, worshipped many gods). Men worshipped beasts and creeping things, sun, moon and stars. When Jesus was born, and all through the times of the apostles, Greeks and Romans worshipped Jupiter, Venus, Saturn, Mars, and a host of false divinities. When under these circumstances we find one set of men uniformly preaching the truth of One God, and He a Spirit, we are forced to the conclusion that they did not invent, or discover, this truth unaided by the Divine Spirit. An influence higher than anything human must have pervaded their thought and governed their speech and writings.

Heathen Writings. The moment we compare what they said and wrote with the so-called sacred writings of all other nations we see how immeasurably superior their utterances were. Take the Koran, the book of the Mohammedan world, or the Vedas, the books of the Hindu religion, or the writings of Confucius, in whom the Chinese believe, or the Zend Avesta, the book of the Sun-worshippers of Persia, and compare any of them with the Bible, and you will need no other argument to force you to believe that the Bible writers were moved by a power far above themselves, and that they received revelations from God as to the true nature of God and of the way of salvation.

Prophetic Types. That men had direct revelation from God is beyond question. The wonderful miracles of the Old Testament are evidence of that fact. The elaborate ritual and ceremonies of the tabernacle service were not the production of a people just out of slavery, nor of Moses, their leader, who was brought up in the courts of Egypt. Nor does Moses take credit for it, but declares it was after the pattern shown him on the Mount. Every part of it was a type pointing to a Kingdom that had its beginning 1,500 years later in the cross of Calvary. Even the tearing from top to bottom of the great veil before the Holy of Holies on the day of the crucifixion, was a type which betokened the fact that from that time every man had access to the Father through Christ as the High Priest of God.

Three Arguments. To put the matter more concretely, we believe that the Bible is inspired especially for three reasons:

First: Because it reveals more truth about God and the duty of man than any other book; Second: Because of the fulfillment of prophecy uttered hundreds of years before the events occurred; Third: Because of the influence it has had in the uplifting and the purifying of human society. Take these in their order.

First. Because it reveals more truth about God and the duty of man than any other book. And here let us pause to say that a book like Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress speaks much about both of these truths. But bear in mind that Bunyan got his truth from the Bible. This is true of all books that draw their truths from this Sacred Volume.

Look at the patriarch Abraham. Remember that he was brought up as an idolator. Then look at the story, and see how he was led into the worship of one true and only God. How could this have come to pass unless there had been some Divine revelation to him? Take the grand utterance by Moses when he proclaimed, "Hear, O Israel, the Lord our God is one Lord, and thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thine heart and with all thy soul and with all thy might, and thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."

At the time that this was uttered all the world was sunk in idolatry, and from whom could Moses have received this majestic truth if not from God direct? The gods of all nations at that time were for the most part represented as immoral and licentious. Yet Moses proclaims, "Ye shall be holy, for I the Lord your God am holy" (Lev. 19: 2). Such lofty and perfect morality as this, was to be found nowhere in the world at that time. It corresponds with what our blessed Lord said when He commanded men to be perfect even as their Father in Heaven is perfect. Such utterances were not only not common in those days among the men of other religions, but they are not to be found among them at all. In the midst of Roman idolatry and polytheism we find our Lord saying, "God is a Spirit, and they who worship Him must worship Him in spirit and in truth." Such a saying calls for more than mere human intelligence. It is nothing less than a Divine revelation.

The same is true with regard to what the Bible has to say about the duty of man. Here we find truth of the very loftiest kind, and in addition to this we find the way of salvation so clearly marked out that no one need fail of reaching it, if he so desires. John 3: 16 is of itself a proof of the inspiration of this book, for here we find the Gospel of salvation put in one sentence, the most precious sentence in the world, "For God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish but have everlasting life."

Second. Because of the fulfillment of prophecy uttered hundreds of years before. The first promise of the Bible for the future was the promise of a Deliverer from sin (Gen. 3: 15). That prophecy runs like a golden thread down through Old Testament times. To Abraham, God said, "In thee shall all families of the earth be blest." Jacob, in his last words, said of Judah, "The sceptre shall not depart from Judah nor a lawgiver from between his feet till Shiloh come." David, Isaiah and many of the other prophets "told before of the coming of the Just One" and almost all of these prophecies are referred to by New Testament writers as having had their fulfillment in Jesus of Nazareth. The captivity of Israel and Judah, and the destruction of Jerusalem, as well as the deliverance of the Jews from exile, was the burden of the prophecies of many of the later prophets, years before these events took place. Jesus Himself foretold the later destruction of Jerusalem and the Temple forty years before it occurred.

Then, too, we see, every day, results, conditions, and experiences which are the direct fulfillment of the prophetic teachings of God's Word, many of which teachings, from a mere human standpoint, would seem paradoxical and absurd.

Third. Because of the influence that it has had in the uplifting and purifying of human society. Think for a moment. Is there any locality fifty miles square on the face of the earth, where the Bible has not come, where you would like to live and bring up a family of children? We are all worshippers of one God. But all of our ancestors were idolators. How did the change come about that has made us worshippers of one God? Simply because the Bible came to our forefathers, and, by the Holy Spirit's power, changed them. Take out from America all that has come to us from the Bible and the best part of our civilization would disappear at once. The fact is, that the best of all that we hold dear, and that makes us what we are, has come to us from this Book. If this does not prove that it is a book of Divine origin, I do not know what would prove it.

Look again at heathen lands. What is it that has changed many of the cannibal islands into places of peace and prosperity? Is it not this Book? Did ever any other book produce such results? What is it that has transformed Uganda, in the center of Africa, from barbarism into a Christian community, where the people gather by thousands in their own churches? Is it not this Book? What is it that is uplifting Korea in these days from idolatry into the worship of one God, so that the people are fast becoming Christianized? Is it not this Book? Did ever any people in all history accept the teachings of this Book without being uplifted by it, and spiritually transformed? And is it not true that the more perfectly we obey the teachings of this Book the holier and more Christ-like our lives become? The fact is that if you could discover a city anywhere in the world where everyone regulated his life perfectly by this Book there you would find a perfect community. Between that city and Heaven the only difference would be one of place. Both would be animated by the same spirit.

Thus we have briefly stated three reasons why we believe this Book is inspired. If you want one more proof of its inspiration, just try and regulate your own life completely by its teachings and you will find that it is truly none other than the very Word of God to your own soul.

DR. A. F. SCHAUFFLER.

HOW WE GOT OUR ENGLISH BIBLE.

ORIGINAL LANGUAGE. Our English Bible is published in several translations or editions, the most prominent of which are the Authorized, or King James Version (1611), the Revised Version (1881-85), and the American Standard Revised Version (1901).

Everyone understands that our English Bible is only a translation from the languages in which the Bible was originally written.

Hebrew is the original language of the Old Testament, with the exception of a few sections that were written in the Aramaic tongue. Greek is the original language of the New Testament.

The Hebrew language of the Old Testament is simple in construction, has a very small number of words in actual use and is full of picture thoughts. It was the language of Israel during their life as a nation, but after the return from Captivity it degenerated into Aramaic.

The great sermons of the prophets and the beautiful poetry of Job and of the Psalms give us some idea of the tremendous expressive power of the Hebrew language.

The Septuagint. After the founding of Alexandria, B. C. 332, many Jews, on account of the commercial advantages and for other reasons, were attracted thither. At one time the city was said to contain 1,000,000 Alexandrian Jews.

This led to a new epoch in the history of the Bible. Greek was the prevailing language. Early in the third century B. C. the proportion of Greek-speaking Jews became so great that there was a call for the Bible in the adopted tongue. In answer to it the Hebrew Bible was translated into the Greek language (about 280-130 B. C.). Besides all the books of the Hebrew Bible it also contained several small books, now called "The Apocrypha." This Greek Bible is called the Septuagint (Seventy); because it was thought to have been translated by seventy men.

Wherever Alexander carried his conquests there the Greek language prevailed, and wherever the Jew settled there was found the Septuagint. To the wide dispersion of this version of the Old Testament may be attributed in a great measure the general expectation of the coming of the Messiah over the whole of the East and the Magi's recognition of the star which proclaimed the birth of the King of the Jews.

In the time of our Lord it was generally used and quoted by New Testament writers, especially by Paul.

It was the Bible of the early Christian Church until the conquest of Rome and until the Latin-speaking world required a translation in the Latin tongue. The early Latin translations were all made from the Septuagint.

The Vulgate. The different Latin translations current in the second, third and fourth centuries, led Jerome to translate the whole Bible (384-405 A. D.) from the original languages into splendid Latin.

His translation differed so much from the others in general use that it met with great opposition at first. However, before many centuries, it became the Bible of the Latin-speaking world and was adopted by the Council of Trent, April 8, 1546, as the official Bible of the Roman Catholic Church. With the exception of the Psalms and the Apocryphal books included in this Bible, it is Jerome's translation.

The Syriac. Some time in the second century a translation was made from the Hebrew Old Testament into Syriac for the Christians of Northern Syria. This was what might be called a translation from one sister tongue into another, and while a beautiful piece of work, was rather too freely done to convey the literal text of the original.

There are none of the Apocryphal books of the Latin Bible in the Syriac version. From this it will be seen that the early Christian Church used the Bible mainly in three versions—the Greek Septuagint, the Latin Vulgate, and Syriac, the most prominent and valuable texts.

Other Translations. As Christianizing influences reached out to other peoples the Bible was translated into their language from one of these three or four great versions of that time, hence we find the Bible in Arabic, Ethiopic, Armenian, Gothic, Slavonic, and other border languages.

The Bible was introduced into England early in the Christian centuries in one of the Latin versions of Western Europe. This was followed later by the Vulgate Latin.

Those who expounded the word, of course, had to interpret it in the language of the early English, consequently some portions of these translations in the Anglo-Saxon tongue remain to this day.

The First English. In the fourteenth century Wycliffe (1320-1384) translated the first English Bible, not from the original Hebrew and Greek but from the Latin Vulgate, a translation of a translation.

In the sixteenth century, after great opposition and trial, Tyndale succeeded in printing in Germany and distributing in England the New Testament in English, translated from the Greek (1526). His books, however, were confiscated and burned in London. Tyndale remained on the continent, and, in 1530, his translation of the Pentateuch appeared, and in 1531 the book of Jonah. He was finally kidnapped, imprisoned, strangled, and burned at the stake, October 6, 1536, because he translated the Bible into a language the common people could read. Within a year after his martyrdom a Bible containing a translation by him of all the books from Genesis to II Chronicles, inclusive, was published by authority of Henry VIII. For five centuries his version has shaped the diction and style of every other; the simple, sublime, and pure language of the authorized version is due to it. For several years Bibles issued from the presses of Europe, the most prominent being Coverdale's, Matthew's, and the Great Bible.

Opposition and Progress. Catholic opposition became aroused; Cromwell was beheaded; Bible publication was checked; while "Bloody Mary," burned at the stake many of the best men of the time, including Ridley, Latimer and John Rogers.

Queen Elizabeth's reign followed (1558-1603), and Bible translation and publication, both Protestant and Catholic, made rapid progress. The Geneva Bible, which is the first great Protestant translation, published in 1560, was the work of eminent scholars expelled during Mary's fierce reign, among whom were Knox, Coverdale and Whittingham. They settled in Geneva and were assisted in the work by Calvin and Beza.

Verses First Used. The Geneva Bible was the first English Bible divided into verses and the first to print in italics the words not found in the originals.

Bishop's Bible appeared in 1568, the Rheims New Testament (Roman Catholic) in 1582. Of all these the Geneva Bible was received with the most favor.

The Authorized Version. Early in the reign of King James I (1603-25) he appointed *fifty-four of the most learned Biblical scholars of England to produce a new and better translation of the Bible. They formed themselves into six companies, two of which met at Westminster, two at Oxford and two at Cambridge.

After several years of careful work they produced, in 1611, the Authorized, or King James Version of the Bible, the best known of all English translations. It is a model of good English and its influence largely has made the English language what it is.

Later Versions. In the 250 or more years following the publication of the Authorized Version, scholars found a large number of very valuable manuscripts of the Bible, older and nearer the lost originals than any previously known. With these came a desire for a new translation in the light of the better Hebrew and Greek texts now at hand.

At the Convocation of Canterbury, May 6, 1870, a committee was appointed, and these, with a committee from America, after ten years of conscientious and careful work, in 1881 gave us the Revised New Testament, and four years later, in 1885, the Old Testament, a translation based on the best manuscripts now known to the scholarly world. In less than six months more than four million copies were issued. The American Revision Committee, less conservative than the British Committee in the use of old English terms, phrases, etc., carefully revised this work, and, in 1901, issued the Bible known as the American Standard Revised Version.

—COMPILED.

*Fifty-four Biblical scholars were appointed by the King, but only forty-seven served in the work.

DIVISIONS OF THE BIBLE.

THE Bible is divided into two great parts, called the Old Testament and the New Testament. Between them there lies an interval of nearly 400 years.

In the word "Old" there are 3 letters. In the word "Testament" there are 9 letters. These two figures, "39," represent the number of books in the Old Testament; 3 multiplied by 9 equals 27, the number of books in the New Testament, making a total of 66 books in the Bible.

They are divided into three general classes: Books of History, Doctrine and Prophecy. In the Old Testament the first seventeen books are Historical. The first five of these are called the Pentateuch, the Greek name given to the five books of Moses.

The books of Doctrine are—Job, Psalms, Proverbs, Ecclesiastes, Song of Solomon. They are also called the Poetical books.

The remaining seventeen books are books of Prophecy. The first five, Isaiah, Jeremiah, Lamentations, Ezekiel, and Daniel, being called the Major Prophets and the remainder the Minor Prophets.

This gives us the following division of the Old Testament:

History.

Prophecy.

The same number of books of Prophecy as of History, with the five Poetical books between.

In the New Testament the books of History are the four Gospels and the Acts. The Doctrinal books number twenty-one; fourteen Pauline Epistles and seven General Epistles. Revelation is the only book of Prophecy.

This makes the New Testament division as follows:

In order to have a clear conception of the contents of the Bible it is necessary to know something about the plan of the Book as a whole.

We will find it of great value in studying a single book of the Bible if we know the writer's purpose, his main thought or theme. Many things otherwise hard to understand become clear to us when we know these or something about the writer and the people to whom or for whom he wrote.

God's word reveals His great purpose concerning the human family. He created Adam in His own image, perfect, free, sinless, with the power to choose between good and evil. Adam sinned, fell and spoiled God's plan concerning him. Then God began His great plan of redemption.

For at least 1,500 years men multiplied in the earth, and so did sin, until "God saw that the wickedness of man was great in the earth and that every imagination of the thoughts of his heart was only evil continually" (Gen. 6: 5); so God made another beginning.

Commanding righteous Noah to build the Ark, He saved him and his family while He destroyed everyone and everything outside the Ark with a great flood.

Four hundred years later God again singles out a man of faith; calls Abraham out from his kindred and his people to make of him a great nation, through whom His Word and His Son should be given to the world.

How is that nation made? One of Abraham's great grandsons is sold into Egypt. God sends a seven-year famine and Joseph's brethren go down to Egypt to buy corn. They find Joseph lord of all Egypt. Jacob and his eleven sons move to Egypt, where they increase mightily and become enslaved.

There for 200 years they are welded together in the fires of affliction until God raises up Moses, their deliverer, and they go forth out of Egypt to receive their code of laws, their organized church and priesthood, and forty years of discipline in the wilderness. Then they enter upon the conquest of Canaan and the possession of the promised land.

For more than three hundred years, during the time of the Judges, their history is one of oppression when they forgot God and deliverance from their enemies when they repented and turned again to Him.

These troublous times were followed by the kingdom under Saul, David and Solomon, when Israel's power and influence spread from Egypt to the Euphrates; their magnificent temple was built and Jerusalem became the religious center of the world.

After the death of Solomon, his son Rehoboam, reared in luxury, succeeded to the throne. Disregarding the counsel of his elders, he threatened to increase the burden of taxation, causing ten tribes to revolt and set up Jeroboam as their king. Thus the kingdom became divided into the kingdoms of Judah and Israel. From this time on, for 250 years, the kingdoms declined, through the wickedness of their kings, when the ten tribes of Israel were carried away into captivity by Assyria. Elijah and Elisha, mighty prophets of God, had sought to turn them from their evil ways.

One hundred and thirty-five years later Jerusalem was destroyed and the people of Judah carried captive to Babylon. At the end of seventy years of captivity, Cyrus, king of Persia, allowed the captive Jews of Judah to return to Jerusalem under Zerubbabel and rebuild the temple, the prophets Haggai and Zechariah encouraging the people.

Of the sixty years which follow, nothing is known. At the end of that time, Ezra the prophet and scribe, returned to institute religious reforms, and thirteen years after Ezra returned, Nehemiah returned and repaired the walls of Jerusalem. After the time of the prophets Nehemiah and Malachi the Bible is silent 400 years.

Then the long-looked-for Messiah comes, a lineal descendant of the tribe of Judah and of the house of David.

The Four Gospels are the record of His life and work upon the earth. The Acts of the Apostles is the history of the founding of the Christian Church and the spread of the Christian religion.

The remainder of the New Testament deals with doctrines of the Christian faith, excepting Revelation, which is prophetic, largely, concerning the future of the Church.

THE BOOKS OF THE OLD TESTAMENT.

The Pentateuch.

GENESIS. The word Genesis means "Beginnings." In this wonderful book we are told how this universe originated. We read, "In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth." This teaches that the world did not come into being by any chance, but that our Heavenly Father is the source of all created things. As compared with the story of the origin of all nature, as told in heathen writings, this is a most grand record, and one that satisfies the heart and the mind. Then, in Genesis, we have the beginnings of many other things. We have, for example, the story of the beginning of plant life, of animal life, of the human race. All this is told in the first two chapters. Then comes the story of man's sin, and his refusal to believe what God had told him, or to obey the commands of God. Most fortunately this is followed by the narrative of how God dealt graciously with sinful man, and gave him the first great promise, that in time God would send some One to redeem man from his sin. This is found in Genesis 3: 15. Later on in this book we find the story of the beginnings of that "Chosen People," the Hebrews, through whom God was to give His revelation to mankind, and through whom at last the Redeemer was to come. This story begins in Genesis 12, and continues through the rest of this wonderful book.

One peculiarity of the book is that the first twelve chapters cover over 2,000 years at least, while the remaining thirty-eight chapters cover the lives of four men—Abraham, Isaac, Jacob and Joseph. These are the four great patriarchs, and the study of their lives will repay any lover of the Word. More beautiful stories cannot be found anywhere in all literature.

Briefly, Genesis records the beginning of all life, of man, of sin, of sacrifice, of material civilization, of the Chosen People, and of Redemption. It has been well said that "Genesis enfolds all that the rest of the Bible unfolds."

Moses is usually credited with being the author, writing the book during the wilderness wanderings, 1491-1451 B. C.

Exodus. In this book we have the story of the enslavement of the children of Israel in Egypt, and their "going out" from Egypt through God's mercy and great power. Then follows the charming story of the birth of the babe Moses, his training in the palace of Pharaoh, his experience in the wilderness as shepherd, and of his great contest with Pharaoh, and his victory. This covers chapters 1-12. The remaining chapters tell of the giving of the law on Sinai, and the building of the Tabernacle.

Exodus is the story of a nation enslaved, delivered and set apart in the service of God.

Moses is the author. Time of writing, between 1491 and 1451 B. C.

Leviticus. So called because it records principally the laws and ceremonies of the tabernacle for the priestly tribe of Levi. Also the civil and religious laws of the people of Israel.

Its spiritual meaning is significant. It was a prophecy of things to come: a type of Christ and His Kingdom; of the Lamb of God slain from the foundation of the world. One idea, "Holiness," penetrates the whole of this elaborate ritual.

Moses is the accredited author. Time of writing, during the forty years in the wilderness, 1491-1451 B. C.

Numbers. So called because it relates the numbering of the people on two occasions, the first at Sinai in their second year in the wilderness, and the other just before the death of Moses in the fortieth year.

In brief, it is the story of the wilderness wanderings.

The book of Numbers is rich in fragments of ancient poetry, some of them of great beauty. (See Chap. 6: 24-26; 23: 8-10.)

The author, Moses. Time, between B. C. 1491 and 1451.

Deuteronomy, Which means "the repetition of the Law," consists chiefly of three addresses delivered by Moses to the people who had been born in the wilderness, in which he rehearses Israel's history after leaving Egypt, and charges them to keep the Law.

It closes with the Song of Moses, the Blessing of Moses, and the account of his death.

The book bears witness to its own authorship (Deut. 31: 19), and is referred to in the New Testament as the work of Moses. The last chapter, of course, has been added by another hand.

Time, towards the close of the forty years of wandering.

Historical Books.

Joshua. The book of Joshua is divided into three parts:

(1) The story of the conquest of Canaan (Chap. 1-12).

(2) Division of the land among the tribes (Chap. 13-22).

(3) Joshua's farewell and death (Chap. 23-24).

Commentators, Jewish and Christian, regard Joshua as author.

Judges. The first sixteen chapters is a history of the Judges of Israel from Joshua's death until Samson's; the wars of deliverance, and the political and religious decline of Israel after the death of Joshua. Chapters 17-21 record the conquest of Laish by part of the tribe of Dan and the civil war that nearly blotted out the tribe of Benjamin.

The authorship is uncertain, though probably Samuel wrote the greater part of it.

Ruth. This is a beautiful story of fidelity out of the history of king David's ancestors, connecting the time of the Judges with the monarchy and giving David's genealogy.

Date and author are quite uncertain, although it probably was written as late as David's time. (See Chap. 4: 7, 17.)

I and II Samuel. Continues the history of the Judges, telling the story of Eli and Samuel, also the establishment of the Hebrew monarchy, Saul's reign and the rise and part of the reign of David.

Samuel is the accredited author of part of the book. Much of it, however, is later than Samuel's time.

I and II Kings. The history of the kingdom during Solomon's reign, the building of the temple, the divided kingdom to the captivity of Judah and the life stories of Elijah and Elisha.

There seems little doubt in the mind of most scholars that Jeremiah was the author, and that he wrote during the period of Captivity.

I and II Chronicles. The purpose of the writer of these books seems to have been to set before the Jews a history largely of the kingdom of Judah, its prosperity under God, the sins that led to its overthrow, the Captivity and return.

The first book gives the history by sacred genealogies from Adam to David, including David's reign. The second continues the history of the kings of Judah without those of Israel down to the return from Captivity.

Ezra the Scribe is the accredited author of these books.

Ezra. Relates the return of the captives under Zerubbabel, the rebuilding of the temple; the second return of captives under Ezra, and Ezra's reformation.

Most of the book is undoubtedly the work of Ezra, though the first chapter was possibly written by Daniel.

Nehemiah. The main history covers a period of about twelve years, 445 to 433 B. C., and gives an interesting account of the state of Jerusalem at the time and the nature of the Persian government; the rebuilding of the Jerusalem walls under Nehemiah; civil and religious reforms; restoration of the temple service, etc.

The book has possibly more than one author; probably part of it is the work of Ezra. The greater part, however, is from the hand of Nehemiah.

Esther. The story of the deliverance of the Jews remaining in Persia from the plot of Haman to destroy them, showing the overruling power of Providence. God's name nowhere appears in the book, perhaps left out purposely so as to permit the reading of the book without irreverence at the hilarious feast of Purim, at which the Jews celebrated the event.

Interest is added to the story when we remember that the enmity between Haman and Mordecai had its beginning when Saul slew the Amelikites. Mordecai was a descendant of Saul's family, and Haman, of Agag, the king of the Amelikites.

Written probably as late as B. C. 444-434. The author is not known.

The Poetical Books.

Job. Stanley says: "The whole book is a discussion of that great problem of human life: What is the intention of Divine Providence in allowing the good to suffer." The book of Job is not only the most remarkable in the Bible, but it stands alone in all literature.

By some the authorship is attributed to Moses, but with no degree of certainty. The opinions of Job and his friends show a type of patriarchal religion belonging to the time of Abraham.

Psalms. A compilation of songs of praise and devotion, prayers, lamentations, expressions of faith, resignation, repentance, joy; national, historical and royal psalms—many of them referring to the Messiah. Among the Psalms there are some that are so sweet that we do well to commit them to memory. For example, the 23rd Psalm, most Christians already know. This is also true of the 103rd Psalm. Among other Psalms that are unspeakably rich and comforting are the 19th, the 32nd, the 46th and the 51st. This last Psalm is the cry of the soul convicted of sin, and its plea for pardon. How many souls have found in this Psalm the expression of their deepest feeling, who shall say?

David is the author of most of the first division (1-14), and of many of the others. The work of compiling and writing continued as late as the date of the Captivity.

Proverbs. A collection of practical rules of life, in which the teaching is largely by contrast, wisdom against folly, righteousness against unrighteousness, etc.

Principally the work of Solomon.

Ecclesiastes. A discussion of the problem: Can the world satisfy a man's need without God, and the writer's conclusion after trying it. "All is vanity" but the doing of God's will.

Solomon is in all probability the author and wrote looking back upon the experiences of his life when well advanced in years.

Song of Solomon. The evolution of a simple love story. It has received different interpretations, the most commonly accepted being, that it shows the victory of humble and constant love over the temptations of wealth and royalty.

Probably written by Solomon about B. C. 1012.

The Major Prophets.

Isaiah. Prophecies concerning Judah and Jerusalem and the surrounding nations, foretelling their doom; prophecies concerning the Messiah, the return from Captivity, and the great future of the Church.

Isaiah, a prophet of Judah, is the author, and probably wrote at two different times. The last twenty-seven chapters belong to the time of the Captivity.

Jeremiah. The first forty-five chapters are prophecies regarding Judah or connected with Jeremiah's personal history. The remaining chapters are prophecies concerning the surrounding nations, excepting the last chapter, which gives an account of the destruction of Jerusalem.

Author, Jeremiah. Part of the book is no doubt the roll which Baruch wrote down at the month of the prophet in the fourth year of Jehoiachim (B. C. 604; See Jer. 36:2).

Lamentations. Five poems expressing the prophet Jeremiah's grief over the destruction of Jerusalem and the temple, and the miseries of his people. Each chapter contains 22 verses, except the third chapter, which contains 66. In Chapters 1, 2 and 4, each verse begins with the corresponding letter of the Hebrew alphabet. In the third chapter every three verses begin with the succeeding letter of the Hebrew alphabet, hence the 66 verses. In Chapter 5 the verses are not arranged alphabetically.

Jeremiah is regarded as the author and wrote in the last days of the kingdom or the beginning of the Captivity, B. C. 629-586.

Ezekiel. Chapters 1-24 contain prophecies before the destruction of Jerusalem and Chapters 25-48 after it, in which the prophet exhorts, denounces, reproves, in the first thirty-two chapters, and consoles in the remainder. Chapters 25-32 contain a group of prophecies against seven foreign nations.

Author, Ezekiel, one of the four greater prophets; a captive in Babylon, where he prophesied from about 595-573 B. C.

Daniel. The story of Daniel and other captives in Babylon, in which prophecies concerning the then world powers and the Messianic Kingdom form an important part.

Author, Daniel. Written during the Babylonian captivity.

The Minor Prophets.

Hosea. Describes the infidelity of Israel to their God, the necessity for punishment and the final restoration of Israel.

Author, Hosea, a prophet of Israel (B. C. 784-725), prophesied in the time of Jeroboam II and succeeding kings.

Joel. A grand outline of the whole terrible scene of locusts, drouth, and invasion then impending on Judah; exhortation to repentance, fasting and prayer; with promise of deliverance and the coming Kingdom of Messiah.

Author, Joel, a prophet of Judah about 800 B. C.

Amos. Announces God's judgments upon the nations around Jerusalem, especially upon Israel: describes the condition of the two kingdoms, the coming of the Messiah and restoration of the Jews.

Author, Amos, a shepherd prophet of Israel and Judah about 808 B. C.

Obadiah. The book of Obadiah is a denunciation of the Edomites and a vision of the glories of Zion when God shall have wrought her deliverance.

Author, Obadiah, of whom scarcely anything is known. His prophecies were probably spoken between 588 and 583 B. C.

Jonah. The story of Jonah's mission to Nineveh, his endeavor to avoid it, and God's pity for the heathen.

Author, Jonah, a prophet of Israel about 820 B. C.

Micah. Describes the impending disasters coming on Judah and Israel for their sins, their final restoration and the coming of the King to Bethlehem.

Author, Micah, a prophet of Judah during the reigns of Jotham, Ahaz and Hezekiah (B. C. 758-698).

Nahum. The subject of this prophecy is the final destruction of Nineveh, in which the prophet shows the majesty of God and the certainty of His judgments against Assyria.

Author, Nahum, a prophet of whom little is known. He prophesied before 625 B. C.

Habakkuk. Consists of only three chapters, the first of which foreshadows the invasion of the Chaldeans, and the second foretells the doom of Chaldea. The third is a magnificent Psalm in which God's majesty is extolled.

Author, Habakkuk, a prophet of Judah, probably in the time of Josiah, about 630 B. C.

Zephaniah. A prophecy of God's judgments against Judah and the surrounding nations and a promise of restoration to the remnant of the Jews.

Author, Zephaniah, a prophet of Judah, of king Josiah's time (639-608 B. C.).

Haggai. An encouragement for the Jews to resume the building of the temple under Zerubbabel, after having been stopped by Artaxerxes.

Author, Haggai, first of those who prophesied after the Captivity. Prophesied in the second year of Darius Hystaspes, B. C. 520.

Zechariah. In a series of eight visions the prophet is told by the angel of the coming restoration of Jerusalem, with which he encourages the people to persevere in the building of the temple. Numerous references are made to the coming of the Messiah and His Kingdom.

Author, Zechariah, a prophet associated with Haggai, who began to prophesy two months after him, during 520 and 518 B. C. The authorship and date of the last six chapters are much disputed.

Malachi. A reproof of the evil practices of the priests of the temple and the people in Nehemiah's time, after the temple and walls had been rebuilt. Also prophecies concerning John the Baptist, and of the coming of Messiah.

Author. Nothing is known of him except what is learned from his book. Malachi prophesied about the time of Nehemiah's second visit to Jerusalem (B. C. 430-420).

It is interesting to note how many of these prophets belonged to the time of the decline of the Kingdoms and the Captivity, showing how God sought to reclaim His people from idolatry and sin.

THE JUDGES OF ISRAEL.

The first judge, Othniel, was a son
Of Caleb's younger brother,
And he delivered Israel from
The people of their mother.

And drove him from the land,
And Shamgar slew six hundred with An oxgoad in his hand.

Deborah, prophetess, arose,
With Barak went along;
They overthrew the Canaanites
And then took up their song.

When Midian camped with beast and tent,
Like locusts 'gainst them, then Brave Gideon put their hosts to flight
With just three hundred men.

Abimelech cruel three years did rule;
He called himself a king;
When on his crown a woman down
A piece of stone did fling.

Then Tola three and twenty years
Judged Israel and died;

Then followed Jair, whose thirty sons
On thirty colts did ride.

Samson the strong, the promised son,
From birth a Nazarite,
With nothing but a jawbone, slew
A thousand in his might.

Good Jephthah made a foolish vow
And killed his lovely daughter;
Slew two and forty thousand men
At Jordan's shallow water.

Ibzan next judged for seven years;
Then Elon judged for ten;
And Abdon judged for eight; his sons
Were forty kingly men.

Old Eli judged for forty years,
He being priest the while,
But lost the ark to Israëel
Because his sons were vile.

Samuel the last, the best, the child
Whom God called in the night,
Anointed Saul, foretold his fall
Who spared the Amalekite.

THE SIX PERIODS.

THE Old Testament is the oldest and most remarkable book of ancient history. Primarily, it gives the sacred record of the chosen lineage and nation of Christ; incidentally, the most important events of contemporaneous secular history. Its history is grouped naturally about six great periods, as follows:

1. Probation. The period from the Creation to the Deluge, commencing with the fall of Adam and closing with the failure of the human race.

2. Preparation. The period from the Deluge to the Exodus, tracing the movements of Providence towards the formation of the chosen nation.

3. Conquest. The period from the Exodus to the Monarchy, during which the Jewish nation fought its way into possession of the "Land of Promise."

4. Power. The period from the Coronation of Saul, the first king, to the Division of the Kingdom after the death of Solomon; the period of greatest extent and prosperity.

5. Decline. The period from the Division of the Kingdom to the Captivity of Judah and the loss of national liberty, the result of idolatrous worship and civil dissension.

6. Servitude. The period from the Captivity of Judah to the Birth of Christ, and beyond to the final extinction of Jewish nationality, forty years after the death of Christ, during which Persia, Greece and Rome were successive foreign rulers. The events of this period are taken in part from secular history.

I. Period of Probation.

Time. From the Creation, 4004 B. C., (?) to the Deluge, 2348 B. C.—1,656 years.

Place. North and east of the River Euphrates.

Events. 1. The Creation, in six periods. 2. The Fall of Man and his expulsion from Eden. 3. The succession of antediluvian patriarchs, in eleven generations, from Adam to Shem. 4. The translation of Enoch, who "walked with God." 5. The warnings of Noah for 100 years, followed by the Deluge, from which Noah's family alone was saved.

Persons. 1. Adam, the first man. 2. Enoch, the first prophet. 3. Methuselah, the oldest patriarch. 4. Noah, the builder of the Ark.

Note that the lives of three patriarchs—Adam, Methuselah and Shem—extend contemporaneously from the Creation to Isaac, more than 2,150 years. Adam was contemporary with Methuselah 243 years; Methuselah with Shem 100 years; Shem with Abraham 150 years, and with Isaac 50 years. Thus easily and accurately might have passed the story of the Creation.

II. Period of Preparation.

Time. From the Deluge, 2348 B. C., to the Exodus, 1491 B. C.—857 years.

Places. The Valley of the Euphrates, Canaan and Egypt.

Events. 1. The Dispersion at Babel in Chaldea, the beginning of diverse nationalities. 2. The call of Abraham out of Ur of Chaldea. 3. The sojourn of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob in Canaan, 2,000 years before Christ. 4. The descent into Egypt of Jacob and his family at the call of Joseph, his son, chief minister of Pharaoh. 5. The 250 years of Egyptian bondage, closing with the ten great plagues and the exodus from Egypt, the real beginning of the Jewish nation.

Persons. 1. Nimrod, grandson of Ham, reputed builder of Babel. 2. Melchizedek, king of Salem, or Jerusalem, the friend of Abraham. 3. Abraham, Isaac, Jacob and Joseph, honored as the fathers of the Jewish Nation. 4. Pharaoh, ruler of Egypt.

Contemporaneous. The successive monarchies of Chaldea or Babylonia, Assyria and Egypt.

The entrance into Canaan under Joshua in 1451 B. C. 4. The partial conquest of Canaan in twenty-five years, during which conquered lands were allotted to the Twelve Tribes. 5. The succession of the fifteen Judges, closing with Saul, the first king.

Persons. 1. Moses, the organizer and law-giver of the Jewish nation. 2. Aaron, his brother, the head of the ecclesiastical system. 3. Joshua, successor to Moses and conqueror of Canaan. 4. Deborah, Gideon, Jephthah and Samson, greatest of the Judges. 5. Samuel, last of the Judges and first of the great national Prophets.

Contemporary History. Founding of Greece, the Trojan War, Homer.

IV. Period of Power.

Time. From the coronation of Saul, 1095 B. C., to Division of Kingdom, 975 B. C.—120 years.

Place. The Jewish Kingdom, extending from the River Euphrates to the Mediterranean, and from Syria to Egypt.

V. Period of Decline.

Time. From the Division of the Kingdom,

975 B. C., to the Captivity of Judah, 597 B. C.—378 years.

Places. Canaan, Assyria, Babylonia.

Events. 1. Israel's idolatrous worship at Dan and Bethel. 2. Invasion of Judah by Shishak, king of Egypt. 3. Defeat of Ethiopia, Philistia and Arabia by Asa and Jehoshaphat, kings of Judah. 4. Siege of Samaria, the capital of Israel, by Benhadad, king of Syria. 5. Captivity of the Ten Tribes by Sargon, king of Assyria. 6. Miraculous destruction of Sennacherib's Assyrian army in the reign of king Hezekiah of Judah. 7. Destruction of Jerusalem and captivity of Judah by Nebuchadnezzar of Babylon.

Persons. Judah's good kings were: Asa, Jehoshaphat, Joash, Amaziah, Uzziah, Jotham, Hezekiah and Josiah. Israel's nineteen kings were all evil. The chief prophets in succession were Elijah, Elisha, Jonah, Amos, Hosea, Isaiah and Jeremiah.

Contemporary History. Carthage founded; Nineveh destroyed.

Contemporary History. The three great empires, of Persia, Macedonia and Rome, in succession.

ROBERT RAIKES AND THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

THE closing decades of the eighteenth century witnessed a number of philanthropic experiments in England with children of the "lower classes." These sprang, for the most part, out of pity for their degraded condition and apprehensions for the security of society, and were fruitful of good results. Only one of them went beyond the alleviation of immediate ills, and grew into a movement.

That Robert Raikes became the "founder of the Sunday School," while Moffat, Webb, Stock, Crampton and others who were engaged in the same work—some of them before him and perhaps with larger local success—did not exceed their local limitations, is due in part to Raikes' personality, but more to the special facilities afforded by his business and its connections.

Robert Raikes, whose personality has been recovered for us by his latest biographer, was born in 1726, the son of a Gloucester printer and editor, and inherited his father's occupation and position.

He is pictured as a "fair, well-looking man," above medium height, and comfortably stout, "buckish" and "stylish" in appearance, with his dark blue coat and white, buff or fancy waistcoat with silver-gilt buttons, cambric frills and ruffs, nankeen breeches, white stockings and buckles in his shoes. He was accustomed to carry a stick in his hand when it was not occupied with his gold snuff-box or the plain horn one for common use. He wore "a brown wig with a double row of curls," and a three-cornered hat.

He was a man of "gay and joyous temperament," an affectionate husband and father, of very transparent character and social instincts. In his religious views he is reported as "evangelical, with a leaning toward mysticism." He was "a good business man, steady, methodical and very tenacious of purpose," kindly and benevolent, but not without a touch of the vanity that often marks the "self-made" man.

As proprietor of the only printing press in several counties for many years, he was brought in contact with people of literary tastes and those who were socially far above him. As a newspaper man he had forced upon his attention a situation that courted investigation and which under investigation could not fail to appeal to his benevolent disposition and Christian impulses.

His attention seems to have been first drawn to the deplorable condition of the prisons, and for a number of years his efforts were put forth to make more tolerable the lot of those confined in them, especially the poor debtors. From these he advanced to the study of the degraded classes from which there was coming a continual procession "ripe or ripening for the gallows." He had come to believe that their degradation was due to ignorance and idleness, and that reformation could be secured by restraint and instruction in the rudiments of morality. After some years of fruitless efforts with them, at some time before 1780 it came into his mind to attempt the problem through the children, "filthy, degraded, with the pitiable shum-born look written all over their faces," whom he saw in the streets of the cathedral town, "spending their Sundays in sports and drinking, with lewd and brutal songs." Gloucester was the seat of the pin industry, and child-labor was largely employed. On Sunday the children who had toiled through the week were turned loose to riot in all sorts of vice.

In 1780 he began an experiment, which he pursued without publicity for three years, to see whether these degraded children "when disciplined and instructed would show the same evidences of human feelings and instincts as those more favorably situated," and whether he was right in the suggestion that had come to him that salvation might be through the children.

He is not represented as sanguine of the result, and no wonder. If contemporary accounts may be trusted, the boys he first gathered in "Sooty Alley," and paid a poor woman a shilling a day to teach, were an unpromising set. There was not much encouragement in the laughter that greeted him and his associate, Mrs. Brandon, as they passed along the street with their charges, and the cry, "Bobby Wild Goose and his ragged regiment."

But at the end of three years he was satisfied, and a great scheme of popular education began slowly to mature in his mind. Through his newspaper, and in other ways, he had secured the interest of such men as the Wesleys and Whitefield, and on November 3, 1783, the birthday of the Sunday-school as a movement, he published an editorial in his paper, and began to exploit his plans in the weekly issues, and in the popular and influential "Gentleman's Magazine." In 1784 there were five schools in Gloucester, with seventy-seven boys and eighty-eight girls, the girls uniformed in bonnets "which were provided for them after they were civilized." These schools were put under the management of a "board," and the rules for them, provided by Raikes, were aimed to secure personal cleanliness and to prevent cursing and swearing in church. Some time before 1785 he prepared and published a text-book for these schools, "Redinmadesy" (Reading made easy), whose contents were in harmony with the purpose of the Sunday-school as described by a contemporary, "to furnish opportunities of instruction to the children of the poorer part of the parish without interfering with any industry of the week days."

In four years the number of scholars in these schools in the kingdom had risen to 250,000; in Newcastle alone there were 5,000. The improvement in the morals of the children and in the conditions that produce and encourage vice and crime were remarkable.

But the new movement was not to go without opposition. It was a time of anxious fears. France was "under the shadow of the guillotine, and England was clamoring for more popular franchises." The cry was raised that the masses must be kept in their place. Even the "Gentleman's Magazine," which had been the steadfast ally of Raikes, was forced to admit to its columns in 1797 a fierce onslaught on the Sunday-school as "subversive of that order, that industry, that peace and tranquility which constitute the happiness of society; and that so far from deserving encouragement and applause it merits our contempt, and ought to be exploded as the vain chimerical institution of a visionary projector." A Scotch preacher's great objection is "the fear that they will destroy all family religion." Even the friends of the schools feared the results, and in 1788 Raikes wrote: "It seems as if I had discovered a new country where no other adventurer chooses to follow."

But there were friends, some of whom saw farther than Raikes and his plans of bringing "the savage, unruly elements of society under control and providing them with an elementary education." As early as 1784 John Wesley wrote: "Perhaps God may have a deeper end thereto than men are aware of. Who knows but what some of these schools may become nurseries for Christians?"

The second great forward step in the eighteenth century was taken in Wales, where "Charles of Bala," who had received his impulse from Rev. Griffith Jones of Llanddowvion, and had been working on independent lines, gathered adults as well as children into the Sunday-school, and centered its intent and activity in the study of the Bible. He was the first to devise and hold public meetings in the interest of the Sunday-school, so that the twentieth century ideal of many was approached, as in his care the Sunday-school "wore more the aspect of a church in orderly operation than a school."

Robert Raikes retired from business in 1802; in 1804 the "freedom of the city" was conferred upon him; in 1811 he died, after an illness of scarce a half-hour's duration. The children of his own school followed his body to the grave and sang Sunday-school hymns as they went.

He had seen his company of twelve boys grow to an army of a quarter of a million, the movement that he originated adopted in Wales, Scotland, Ireland and America. "An experiment which now looks so simple and so humble as that of trying to lure these ragged children of wretchedness to the cathedral service and paying some poor woman a shilling a day to teach them, resulted not only in a marked improvement in morals among the children of Gloucester and a general amendment of the condition of the city," but gave to the nineteenth century and the world the most potent instrument for moral and religious advancement, to be passed on to the twentieth century for a development beyond the dreams of the most sanguine.

The chronology of the book of Judges is very uncertain. The statement "the land had rest 40 years" is construed by some to mean to the end of the forty year period counting from the entrance into Canaan.

Up to the time of Gideon judges were "raised up" to deliver Israel as needed. After Gideon a change seems to have taken place (Jud. 8:22-23) and the dates given are the years of the judge and not the 40 year periods.

Some writers place the period of Samson's judgeship in the Philistine oppression of Eli's time.

The arrangement here used agrees with Prof. Willis J. Beecher's (see Dated Events of O. T.) excepting that he places the events seven years earlier.

THE CREATION OF LIGHT

BY GUSTAVE DORÉ

To write about the creation of the world is a hopeless task in view of the wonderful language of the first chapter of the Bible. It tells that the earth was formless, empty and dark. How shall a man picture darkness? The artist in representing something must depend upon actualities of form. There are no actualities in darkness. The French artist, Gustave Doré, in casting about for a figure of God—whom he had never seen—in the act of creating light, could only use the shape of a human being, and clothe Him in noble draperies, having no resemblance to ordinary garments.

We can imagine that the Divine Being had no need of something to stand on, but the invisible God could not be pictured unless He be like a man standing on something material. So Doré has drawn many forms of clouds, they being the least material of all things that we know, and still being visible. We see in the picture the shape of the globe without mountains, rivers or seas. The clouds are cleverly pictured in straight lines below and rolling forms above. On this cloud mass stands a figure whose draperies suggest wind as if the air were already stirring. With up-lifted hands he commands the light to burst forth. It is not yet the sun, but it does suggest light.

THE SCRIPTURE LESSON IS GEN. 1.

Prayer: Lord Jesus, Creator of Heaven and earth. May we be able to see Thy hand in all things about us. May we feel Thy Spirit and heart beat. May we above all remember that we are created by Thee, for Thee and in Thy image and for Thy glory. For Christ's sake. Amen.

"The angel chorus ceased their song,
And crowded in a shining throng
At Heaven's gate, to view the sight
As myriad flaming orbs of light,
Flung out and far through endless space,
Found each its own appointed place,
And on its ceaseless course began
As purposed in God's wondrous plan;
God said again, 'Tis good,' and then
The angels answered back, 'Amen.'"

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, about B. C. 4004. Place, Where God touched the earth. Persons, God, His Spirit, angels.

Scripture Setting: God Creating. God's power in creation, Isa. 40:21-31. His wisdom, Psalms 104:1-12. Order of creation, Gen. 1:4-25. Voices of creation, Psalms 19. Wonders of creation, Job 37:1-24. God's challenge in creation, Job 38:18-35. Christ the creating God, John 1:1-18. Christ's greater creation, Col. 1:9-20.

Life and Conduct Setting: Genesis is a book of beginnings, of foundations, of essentials. It is the golden gateway into the Bible temple. This first lesson gives us pictures of God and His creation. 1. Time of the creation. "In the beginning" allows all the time that may be needed, or that can be shown to be necessary. 2. Author of creation. The phrase "and God said" occurs ten times; "let there be" occurs seven times. The human conscience and consciousness accept the name God as inclusive of all the powers conceivable for a Supreme Being. 3. Method and principle of creation. We accept what Scripture says, "The worlds were framed by the word of God." Only God is a Creator, for it is a making something out of nothing. 4. Kinds of creation—seven great lines or fields of creation. 5. The perpetual law of creation. Kind from and after its kind. 6. Perfection of creation. By the fivefold statement, "God saw that it was good," and at last, he saw that all was "very good." 7. Crown of creation. This is man, made to rule the world and worship God.

HOW GOD MADE THE WORLD.

The Land, the Sea, and the Light. Can you find Chicago on the map? Yes, here it is, and it is only a dot. Your father may own a large house or hundreds of acres of land, but you can't find even a dot to show where either one is. The big round world contains thousands and thousands of homes and farms, more than anyone can count. How did they all begin to be? Well, it is a wonderful story of goodness and power. Much that we see now did not exist in these shapes and forms at first; but all the great cities and buildings and nations were made possible by what God did at first. What God did was different from anything that man can do. We call it creating because it is making something out of nothing. Man can't do that. He can only fashion things out of the material God has created. This makes it all so very, very wonderful. We learn this out of God's Word and know it to be really true. We could not find it out any other way. Many things man can find out by investigation and seeking. But he can know about creation only from God's Word, which is a revelation from Heaven. Many other things in these Bible stories may be hard for us to understand, but we believe them because God has revealed them in His Word.

Those first pictures show the things which God made the first days, when time began to be. God Himself never had a beginning and we mark time by starting when God began to create land and sea and light. These are all very necessary for all else that God created later.

God said, "Let there be Light." Napoleon is said to have replied to some skeptical officers, who had been airing their atheism, by pointing to the moon and stars: "Gentlemen, what you say sounds well, but who made those things?" Nature is constantly teaching us. There is no sinful planet; no selfish and miserly sun; no wicked and discordant stars; no rebellious winds. The sea does not refuse service; the clouds do not loiter on their errands; the hills are not penurious; the ground does not refuse to yield its harvest.—Selected.

Things That Fly and Swim. The land and sea and light do not have life, but they are necessary to life. Even after the sun, moon and stars were created the great world was still and quiet. There were grass and flowers and trees, but no living animals or birds. There was only the rustling of the leaves, the tinkling of the little streams, and the breaking of the waves on the shore. It looked very much as if it was intended for something else. And on the fifth day the air was full of birds and the waters were full of fish. If anyone had been living then what a surprise this would have been to him. All kinds of beautiful birds sailing through the air and lighting on the trees; and the fish, great and small, in the waters, were created by the God who had fashioned the world. A very wonderful thing about the birds and fish, as also about the trees and plants, was that God made them so that they would go on multiplying. Each kind would grow more of its own kind till the world should be full of them. Because of the Bible revelation concerning these things, we have no trouble about believing them.

God Made It All. In my home hangs a painting of beautiful roses. I never look at it but I think of the dear girl who painted it. It is a constant reminder of her love, though we have not met for years. In looking out upon the grand and beautiful in earth, sky and sea, I like to think, "My Father made it and pronounced it good." It draws us tenderly near the Infinite to think lovingly upon all He has made, and nature is as truly a revelation of God to us as His written word.—Selected.

Things That Walk and Creep. What a lot of them there are! The air and sea had things living and moving in them; and now the land is to be peopled by four-footed and many-footed animals. Can you tell the names of all those in the pictures? These were all created on the sixth day. On this day, too, God made all the little animals that creep and crawl and all the insects; and indeed everything on the land, except the birds, which were created the day before. Now we begin to see a reason why the world was created. How beautiful everything seems! All was so perfect that God Himself said "it was good." Again and again He looked at the work of each day, and it is said every time that "God saw that it was good." If He pronounced it good, we are sure it was really so. And all is beautiful, not only in appearance but in the harmony that existed everywhere. Sin had not come into the world to disturb and trouble. Everything had its place and did as God intended. All things receive their orders from God, and are supplied by His bounty. Plants, animals, fishes, birds, are all working for a living. God sees to it that each is successful.

A Lesson of Trust. Men must have food and raiment or perish. God has made provision for every need. He who created a body for the spirit, shall not He also make provision for that body? He who feeds the sparrow and clothes the lily, shall not He provide for the highest of His creations? Away, then, with foolish, anxious care! Do your work and do it well. Never fear, but trust God for everything. Luther said, "We are commanded to have dominion over all nature, and yet we behave so shamefully that a feeble sparrow must hold forth before our eyes and ears, teaching us to trust God, though we have the whole Bible and our reason to help us.—Selected.

What Was It All For? All that God had created thus far was good and beautiful. But God is not satisfied. He sees something more important than all else. What do you think it is? Here are birds, and fish and animals—like so many living and moving pictures—in the sea, and air, and on the land. There was one thing needed that God saw to be very important. He wanted someone He could trust, and who would be able to rule and master all that was in the world. So God formed man out of the dust of the ground. In the next story we will learn that man is very different from all other animals. The picture shows the first man God created. He never could have grown from any of the other animals, as some people foolishly think. He was perfect in every way at the very first, and all the other animals saw it and knew it. Adam gave names to all the animals, and so he was better able to rule them. God helped him in all this, and then ordered that he should have dominion over the fish and the birds, the animals, and even the insects.

Be True to the Image. At the beginning it was said, "Let us make man in our own image." Nowhere is the proof that this image, though marred, has been lost. Looking upon humanity today, God may say, "Whose image and superscription has it?" The answer should come, "God's." This being so, there is then the response, "Render unto God the things that be God's." The whole motive of the gospel of Jesus Christ is to make this ownership good. The appeal is made to man: "You belong not to yourself or to evil—you belong to God."

Quiz and Study: 1. Name as many things as you can that God created. 2. How many attributes of God are implied in creation? 3. Why is the first book of the Bible called Genesis? 4. Who wrote it, and what other books did he write? 5. When did the day of rest begin and how? 6. What three reasons does creation suggest, why we should love and worship God? 7. How many big animals can you name? Small animals? Birds? Fishes? Insects?

Challenge Text: "The heavens declare the glory of God, and the firmament sheweth his handiwork," Psa. 19: (1).

Practical Thoughts: 1. Creation shows greatest evidence of wisdom and goodness—no chance about it. 2. God is the eternal "I Am," and we face eternity, whether we think of His past or His future. 3. The Old Testament is as necessary to the New as the foundation is to a building. 4. Nature and Revelation must agree, when rightly interpreted, for both books are from the same infinite and perfect Author. 5. The Bible "is in perfect accord with known science" (Dana), but its great mission and function is to reveal spiritual truth. 6. God, as Creator, has entire and undisputed ownership of all things. 7. God is a Being of infinite power, wisdom, goodness, and is worthy of obedience and worship. 8. God's will is His Word, and will and word are one with Him. 9. Atheism and materialism are extremest folly in the light of this sublime record. 10. As to the two testaments of Scripture, we may say:

"The New is in the Old concealed,

THE SCRIPTURE ACCOUNT IS GEN. 2:1-25.

Prayer: Lord Jesus, Help us to see Thy finger marks on us and to feel the thrill of Thy breath in us. May we ever be mindful of our holy origin, and of Thy holy purpose in our creation. Grant that the homes of earth may be as Edens of blessed fellowship and worship; and made secure in and by Jesus Christ. In His name. Amen.

"And so these twain, upon the skirts of Time, Sit side by side, full-summed in all their powers, Self-reverent each, and reverencing each, Distinct in individualities."

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, B. C. 4004. Place, Garden of Eden. Persons, Adam and Eve, and God.

Scripture Setting: Man and his First Home. Man made by God, Job 10:1-2. His first home, Gen. 2:9-25. Greatness of man, Psa. 8. The offspring of God, Acts 17:22-23. Wonderfully made, Psa. 139. Re-created in holiness, Eph. 4:17-32. Man and the Sabbath, Mark 2:23; 3:6. The believer's rest, Heb. 4:1-11.

Life and Conduct Setting: Some great lessons are taught in this account of man and his home. 1. Man's creation the result of careful deliberation. The "let us" suggests Father, Son and Spirit in council. 2. Man is created in the Divine image; and therefore capable of, and responsible for, all that is Divine and God-like. 3. Man is given physical dominion over all the other creation, which explains all the marvels of discovery, invention and conquest. 4. Man is to get his food in and from the earth, because of the Divine law and by virtue of co-operating forces. His living is a perpetual miracle. 5. Man is the crowning act of God, the exponent of all that God has to reveal by flesh and blood. 6. "Man's chief end is to glorify God and enjoy His power." His business is spiritual worship and development. 7. The Lord's day is God's constant challenge and help to man to rise to his Heavenly privileges.

GOD MAKING THE FIRST HOME.

What Makes the Real Home? Did you ever try to think how many homes there are in the world? You know what your home is, and something of what it means. There are millions and millions of homes; some like yours, some possibly better, and many not so good. God built the first home and this story tells us about it. The very first thing needed, and much the most important, were two persons, a man and a woman. We have pictures of God making a man. In the first picture he is alive, but only as a beautiful animal. The second picture shows how God "breathed into his nostrils the breath of life," so that man became a living soul.

God had seen that all He created was good, but He now wanted someone who could talk with Him, love Him and understand much about what He was doing. So God said, "Let Us make man in Our own image." God is three Persons in one, and so he spoke that way. We saw that man was more powerful than all else created, and so was to rule all; but now we see that he is to have many powers that other creatures did not have. Since he is created in God's image, he must be like God in many ways. But a man alone can't make a home, however good and great he may be.

God saw that one more act of creation was necessary. He caused the man to fall asleep and he took a rib from his side and with it made a beautiful woman. He brought her to the man and she became his wife. God really married them, and they were able to talk to each other and love each other. The man's name was Adam, meaning "ground," and the woman's name was Eve, meaning "life." They two made the first real home, and from them came all other families in the world.

Man Related to God. The king of Prussia, visiting in one of his villages, was welcomed by the school children. When it came his turn to speak he thanked them for their welcome, and taking an orange, asked, "To what kingdom does this belong?" "The vegetable kingdom, sire," said a little girl. Holding up a gold coin, he asked, "To what does this belong?" "To the mineral kingdom," was the quick response. "To what kingdom do I belong, then?" asked the king. The child blushed. She did not like to say "The animal kingdom," lest their royal visitor might be offended. Then there flashed into her mind the thought, "God made man in his own image," and looking up brightly she said, "To God's kingdom, sire." The king was deeply touched. A tear stood in his eye. Laying his hand upon the child's head he said, "God grant that I may be accounted worthy of that kingdom."—A. C. M.

The First Dwelling Place. This was a beautiful garden, more of a park than a building, but it was all they needed in that warm climate. Adam and Eve were very happy in loving each other and in loving and worshiping God. I think the very first thing they did was to rest and praise God. The seventh day God had rested and so set an example for all people and for all time. God was specially pleased with the man and woman He created. Of all else He "saw that it was good," but now He "saw that all was very good."

This garden home was very large, and was named Eden, meaning "pleasure." It was not only very beautiful, as is shown in that large picture, but it furnished all that they needed to make life happy. We might know this was so when God had prepared it specially for them. When Adam and Eve first knew this large, beautiful park was to be their home, how glad they were! Doubtless the first thing they did was to walk through it and around it. I am sure, too, that they kept saying, "How beautiful it all is!" and "How good God is to us!"

The Touch of God. A gentleman visiting a glass manufactory saw a man molding clay into the great pats which later were to be used in shaping the glass. Noticing that all the moulding was done by hand, he said to the workman:

"Why do you not use a tool to aid you in shaping the clay?"

"There is no tool that can do this kind of work," replied the artisan. "We have tried a number of tools, but somehow it needs the human touch."

So nothing but the touch of God can explain the beauty and fitness of the world to be the home of man.

Trees, Trees, and the Tree. As Adam and Eve lived together in this garden they grew to be more and more like each other. All the pictures show a great many trees. We know that God would plant all the beautiful trees and shrubs in this park home. Also, He filled it with trees that would bear fruit and nuts for Adam and Eve to eat. The Bible says that the garden had "every tree that was pleasant to look at and good for food." All they had to do was to care for the grounds, trim the trees and gather the fruit and nuts. There was great abundance of everything, for God would see to that.

All this time, we do not know how long, Adam and Eve would meet God often and talk with Him. They had no thought of doing anything that would displease Him. But God wanted them to be intelligent in their goodness, and so he made a test for them. He planted a tree in the center of the garden and named it the "tree of good and evil." He told them they must not eat of that tree, for if they did they would die.

In this way, every time they passed that tree they remembered God's command, and so had a new thought about God. Also, every time they might have a desire to taste that fruit, but would resist the desire, they would get stronger and better in their own lives. It was really a fine way of testing them, and helping them to do and be their best.

"Thou Shalt not." Here is the announcement of a great principle, that human life is a restricted life, a life subjected to law; and he who confesses this subjection remains in Eden, and he who denies it is banished. As God made the ocean to roll between shores, and said to it, "Thus far and no farther," so he placed the created soul between banks, and said, "Here only may thy bright waters flow." The banks are not narrow. Human life need not be called a river, for it is as vast as the ocean, deep and strong and sublime; but it has a shore all around, and along that shore the cherubim stand, and flaming swords gleam, to banish those who cross the boundary marked all around by the finger of the Almighty.—Professor Swing.

God's Great Water Color Painting. The last picture shows us what really kept the park in all its beauty. It was the river flowing through it. Without the water from stream or cloud, all would have dried up and become brown and black. At last all the trees, shrubs, flowers and grasses would have died out. The water would keep all alive and growing and also would give the great variety of color which one sees in the garden or park. The soil and sun, the trees and grasses, are the paints God uses, but He mixes all with water, to produce the beauty, fragrance and fruitage which we see everywhere. To men and animals, and even to trees, water is as necessary as air, light and food. The way the water was kept in its place told of God's wisdom and power. The two banks held it like two great walls. The stream would flow along, watering the garden, but would not overflow to flood and destroy. Water, like fire, is a good servant but a hard master.

God's Face in Nature and In Man. There was a tradition that the face of Dante was painted on one of the walls of the Bargello, in Florence. One day an artist ordered the walls cleaned and the rubbish to be removed. Gradually the face was found, in dim outline at first, and finally in every distinct feature. God's image is in every man—obscured by neglect, defaced by sin, covered over by the rubbish of worldliness. It is the Christian's business to restore the image, both in himself and others.—J. W. Sylvester.

Quiz and Study. 1. Tell of another garden, and who suffered there? 2. What garden is mentioned in connection with Christ's death? 3. What is better than the garden of Eden? 4. How was the creation of Adam different from that of an animal? 5. How was Eve's creation different from that of Adam? 6. Why do we observe the first day of the week as Lord's day?

Challenge Text. "God created man in His own —, in the image of — created He him." Gen. 1: (2).

Practical Thoughts. 1. Man alone, the crown of creation, is the only rebel against God! 2. It is man's duty to care for the soul, and not to forget the body, the soul's casket. 3. The family and the Sabbath are the foundation stones of society and the nation. 4. Because created in God's image, (1) man is capable of being saved; (2) he is worth saving; (3) he has promise and potency for highest achievements; (4) he should use all powers and resources for God's glory and the progress of his kingdom. 5. Man and woman are co-equal and co-ordinate, each superior to the other in some respects.

THE SCRIPTURE LESSON IS GEN. 3:1-19.

Prayer: Lord Jesus, Help us to see how weak we are in ourselves, and how determined Satan is to lead us into sin. May we ever seek to know only Thy will and faithfully perform it. Keep us from parleying with sin, or thinking it is "only a little one" or only "for this once." Be Thou our Helper, Guide and Saviour. For Christ's sake. Amen.

"Deep are the wounds which sin has made.
Where shall the sinner find a cure?
In vain, alas, is nature's aid;
The work exceeds her utmost power.
But can no sovereign balm be found,
And is no kind physician nigh,
To ease the pain and heal the wound,
Ere life and hope forever fly?"

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, beginning of the race of man, perhaps about B. C. 4004. Place, Garden of Eden. Persons, Adam, Eve, Satan in the form of a serpent, God.

Scripture Setting: A Study of Sin. Man's greatest enemy, Jas. 1:1-15. Sin and death, Rom. 5:12-21. Consequences of sin, Gen. 3:17-24. All have sinned, Rom. 3:19-26. Our great adversary, 1 Pet. 5:6-11. Need of forgiveness, Psa. 51:1-19. The earth cursed, 2 Pet. 3:1-14. God's great remedy for sin, John 3:1-16.

Life and Conduct Setting: Sin is a small word, but with great issues, and therefore one of the greatest of themes. We are impressed with certain great facts about sin. 1. Two things stand out clearly: that it is disobedience to God and comes by Satan's temptation. 2. It is cunning and deceitful, seeking to undermine the character of God. 3. To try to throw it off is child's play, as every one's conscience must admit. 4. It grows rapidly to be gross, insolent, deceitful, selfish, cruel. 5. Sin is its own detective and secures its own arrest. Then God convicts it out of its own mouth. 6. Mercy in spite of sin: God will defeat sin and Satan.

HOW SIN BEGAN IN THE WORLD.

Don't Parley with the Tempter. Everyone has seen a snake of some kind. What is the largest one you ever saw, and what kind was it? Do you think a man would play with a rattlesnake, or a copperhead? No; he would kill it as quickly as he could. If it were a woman, or girl, or small boy, that saw it, the safest thing to do would be to run. Sin is far, far worse than the most poisonous snake. The only safe thing to do with sin is to kill it, or to flee from it. That snake in the picture represents sin, or Satan. One day, when Eve was alone, and walking about in her beautiful park home, she was surprised to hear the snake speak to her. She wondered at it, and stopped to listen. Satan had entered into the snake, to try to make Adam and Eve sin. He was sly, and watched for a time when Adam was not present. It was really Satan speaking through the snake. The first thing he said was, "Yea, hath God said ye shall not eat of every tree?" As much as to say, "Are you real sure about that command? There must be some mistake, for this is the one tree whereof you ought to eat. Eve should not have stopped to parley at all with anyone who found fault with God. The longer she waited, the harder it was to break away. Eve said that they had plenty to eat, and did not need the fruit of this tree, and also that they would die if they ate of it. "Oh, no, you won't," said the snake; "that is just to scare you."

Choosing the Battle-Ground. Wise commanders always seek to choose for every conflict the region where the surroundings favor themselves and impede the enemy. Sometimes they even fall back in order to reach what is for them a good place to fight. So we should do in fighting Satan. It is possible to choose such good fields upon which to meet temptation that the battle becomes much easier; the victory with faith and courage certain. The Christian home, the church of Jesus Christ, a helpful friend, these are ways by which we may get the advantage over the tempter.

"Just This Once"—"For the Good It Will Do." They were right by the forbidden tree then, for Satan was cunning and planned it so. And the snake said, "Why, if you eat of this tree you will be as gods, and know good and evil." As he pointed to it, Eve looked, and saw that it was "good for food," "pleasant to the eyes," and that it would "make one wise." Almost before she thought what she was doing, she took and ate. Sin is apt to be quickly done, for Satan knows that if one takes time to pray, or even to think carefully about it, he may decide not to sin. The picture shows Eve and the snake talking it over. Eve looks worried, because it is against God's order; but when the snake says it will be so much better for her, she decides to do it. The snake lied to Eve, but she did not know that. Her great mistake was in doing anything that was different from what God commanded, or even considering it. By eating the fruit she did begin to know evil, and know how to do it, and even have a desire to do it.

But where is the snake? It has done its work, and has glided away. So always with Satan. When he gets his wicked work started in the heart and life, he knows the wickedness will go on working of itself.

"Just this once," is Satan's plea as to wine drinking, or card playing, or dancing, or theater-going, or cheating, or any kind of sin. The sly old fellow knows that "this once" will go on repeating itself and multiplying itself day after day. And do you know, he will often send the first bad thought, or desire, into the mind by his system of wireless telegraphy? Oh, he is a sly one!

"Adam, Where Art Thou?" This is God calling, but what does He want Adam for? Why, just as soon as the snake left Eve, she hunted up Adam and told him what she had done. It was easy for him to be tempted by Eve, and so he also ate of the forbidden fruit. You see that sin not only goes on repeating itself in the one who first sins, but it goes out and gets others to sin. Satan knows this, too, so he did not need to hunt up Adam. By sinning, Eve stops serving God and begins to serve Satan. Why did God have to call for Adam? He had hidden away among the trees, for he knew that they had both done wrong. The little alarm clock called conscience, that God puts in every one, had made them afraid. They did not want to meet God, or even think of Him. But God will find them, and really for their good. First, He will punish them for disobedience, and then He will provide a way by which they may come back to love and worship Him.

Now, I want you to remember that all sin is against God. It is true that sin hurts the one who commits the sin. Then it hurts others that may be influenced to sin. It reaches out and out, tainting and defiling very many. But, at the very first, and always afterward, every sin is against God.

God's Way of Covering Sin. Cover your own sins and they will have a resurrection some time. Let God cover them, and neither devil nor man can find them. Notice the four expressions in the Bible showing what God does with sins: 1. He "puts them behind His back." 2. He has "blotted them out as thick cloud." 3. "He casts them into the depths of the sea." 4. He removes them "as far as the east is from the west." Let God handle your sins, and you may be sure they will be forgiven and remembered against you no more.—Moody.

"It Was Not My Fault." Did you ever know anyone to say that? Yes; that is a very common way for one to throw off responsibility and make excuse. I know a boy once who had broken a valuable dish, and when there was no one he could blame, he said, "Why, it just broke itself!" Now, let us see what God said to each of those connected with this first sin. God speaks to Adam first, for Adam is the head of the family. When Adam told God he was afraid, God said, "Why are you afraid? Have you eaten of the forbidden fruit?" Adam replied, "The woman Thou gavest to be with me, she gave me and I did eat." God turned to the woman and asked, "What is this you have done?" And Eve said, "The snake told me it would not harm me, but do good, and I took some and ate." Each one tried to put the blame on some one else. In doing so, each sins some more, and each shows a cowardly and selfish spirit. When sin begins, you can never tell where it will end. Then God pronounces a curse on each—on Satan first, then on Eve, and lastly on Adam. So Adam and Eve lost their beautiful garden home, and were driven out into the world. They ceased to be holy, and became wicked. And, worse yet, all their children and children's children, to the very end of time, are wicked, for the children will always take the nature of their parents. The parents' sinful nature is impressed on the soul of every child.

A Faithful Photographer. In the bank of Paris, above the desk of the cashier, there is a photographer with his camera. When desired this photographer is signaled and the picture of the man signing a check is taken. Many a forger and suspicious character has thus been caught, the photograph showing him in the very act of crime. Thus we have a lifelike picture of this first sin. So, too, sins are being photographed on human faces, consciences, souls, and on others whom we come in contact with and influence.—Dixon.

Quiz and Study. 1. Name the four steps in Eve's sin. 2. At what four gateways does sin usually enter the soul? 3. Put in three columns what the serpent said, what the woman said, what God said, and compare them. 4. What names and works of Satan are mentioned in Scripture? 5. Tell what you can of Christ's temptation in the wilderness. 6. Name three results from Eve's sin.

Challenge Text. "By one man _____ entered into the _____ and _____ by sin." Rom. 5:(?).

Practical Thoughts. 1. It is always dangerous to parley with any temptation, although seemingly trifling. 2. One sin leads to another, and one sinner leads to another. 3. To every one there is some forbidden fruit—of pleasure, ambition, appetite, desire. 4. This whole earthly life is a schooling, a trial and testing. 5. Man is more apt to fear the consequences of sin than the sin itself. 6. The work of Satan is half done when he persuades us to listen to his whispered insinuation. 7. He who would conquer sin must accept Christ, who alone can crush the serpent's head. 8. All suffer temporarily from the consequences of sin, but each may be saved eternally from the power of sin by Christ. 9. Adam stood only in his own righteousness and strength; the saved sinner stands in the righteousness and strength of Christ.

THE SCRIPTURE LESSON IS GEN. 3:1-6.

Prayer: Lord Jesus, Help us to interpret the word "brother" as Thou didst. Inspire within us a hatred of selfishness and envy, and a love of right, goodness and mercy. May we have Thy Holy Spirit to prompt us to all right services to Thee, and to help us to all right services towards our fellow man everywhere. Keep us from having the Cain face and spirit and mark, and make us followers of Abel and Abel's God. For Christ's sake. Amen.

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, B. C. 3875. Place, Outside of Eden. Persons, Cain, Abel, God.

Scripture Setting: The First Murder. Way of Cain, Jude 1:13. Works of Cain, 1 John 3:4-15. The All-seeing God, Psa. 139. Cause of murder, Gal. 5:13-21. Blood of Abel, Matt. 23:29-39. Faith of Abel, Heb. 11:1-10. Our brother's keeper, Luke 10:25-37. The speaking blood, Heb. 12:18-26.

Life and Conduct Setting: We are studying first things in the book of Genesis, which means beginnings. This is a study of the first murder. 1. For its cause we go back to the first sin in Eden. Like an angry flash of lightning is this cruel deed, but the cloud from which it comes rose from Eden. 2. Its occasion is a strife in and about an act of worship. 3. Its degree is seen in that it is while in the very presence of God, as they worship; and also in that it is after the Divine warning. 4. Its beginning just now is in the voice and act, as they "talked." No matter how Abel may have tried to avoid it, Cain lashes himself into a fury and strikes the fatal blow. 5. Its detection and exposure are by its own attempts to throw off responsibility and hide behind excuses. God makes Cain's conscience confess. 6. Its punishment is inevitable —by the conscience, by the contempt of all good people, by the very ground "crying out" against him, by the righteous anger of a just and holy God. 7. Its glimmer of hope is in the promised mercy of God. The "mark" protected him against man; the marks of the Christ invite him to a full and free salvation.

THE FIRST TWO BROTHERS.

"According to Its Kind." What kind of a tree do apples grow on? Why not on a walnut tree? Yes, God made them so. We learned that in the very first story. Again and again it is said "after its kind." That meant that the crops would always be like the seed. So it is in the case of man. The baby looks or acts like father or mother, or aunt or grandfather. But this law is more important in the world of people than of plants. It includes the inner life also. So when Adam and Eve sinned their children were sinful, and then their children's children, on and on forever. Scripture says that "all have sinned," and that the heart is deceitful above all things and desperately wicked." It is because all have come from sinful Adam and Eve. The child was "after its kind." Yes, you say, for Cain showed it in his angry talk and cruel act; but how do we know Abel was sinful? We know it by the sacrifice he brought, and we will talk about that in a few moments. After Adam and Eve were driven from their beautiful garden home, they began to see how terrible a thing sin is. Adam had to work much harder to get enough to live on. Eve also suffered as God had told her. God gave them a baby boy and they named him Cain, meaning "possession." This was the first baby in all the world. Their second baby was named Abel, meaning "breath." They grew to be men; Cain was a farmer, and raised crops of all kinds. Abel was a shepherd, and kept flocks. God used to come and talk with Adam and Eve in the garden. Now they could come to Him only by an offering on an altar. The altar was made of stones, and the offering was burned on it, as is shown in the first two pictures.

Like Produces Like. A plant or tree never forgets itself. Cheat it out of its root, and its stem remains faithful. The smallest twig put out to grow upon the arm of another tree feels the thrill of this great first law in its least fiber, and breathes loyal in every motion of its life. Just so in human plants. Boys and girls are sinful because their parents are sinful; and their parents are sinful, back and back to Adam who sinned. Only in and by Christ and His Spirit can this nature be changed.

The Right Kind of Offering. The offering that must be made first was a blood offering. This pointed to the sacrifice of Christ, whose blood would take away sin. God must have told Adam and Eve how to make the right offering, for they could not know any other way, and it was very important for them to know. This is the great lesson taught them by all the many sacrifices. They all pointed to the great sacrifice of Christ, who was to come in due time. The lamb represented Christ, who is "the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world."

Cain knew this as well as Abel, or might have known it. But he brought an offering of the "fruits of the ground" only. Abel made an offering of the "firstlings of his flock." He brought the right kind of an offering, and it was offered in the right spirit. Cain failed in both these things. He seemed to think and act as he pleased, not as God had ordered. Now we have the proof that Abel, too, was sinful, for he brought the offering for sin. God was pleased with Abel's offering, and forgave his sin. This is what is meant by accepting his offering. He could not accept Cain's wrong offering, and so Cain was not forgiven. In some way Cain knew that he was not accepted, and he was angry. His offering was large and generous, as shown in the first picture, but it was the wrong kind, and from a bad heart. Abel offers a lamb, and then prays to God that both it and he may be accepted. Cain had the same chance to know about offerings that Abel had.

He Should Have Known. What about the captain who wrecks his ship on a rock and pleads ignorance, when he had not looked at the chart in his cabin, on which the rock was plainly plotted? What about the engineer who wrecked his train because he failed to read the orders handed him? And what about you if you wreck your life and then plead ignorance, if you have not studied the Guide-Book which God has given?—Cumberland Presbyterian.

How the Face Speaks. The heart usually shows itself in the face. This is a good story as a study of faces. How reverent and good Abel looks, as he bows before the altar. Poor Cain! You can see in his face, envy, pride, anger, evil purpose, murderous hate. No one would want such a face as that. In the next picture, when they are talking, the faces are brought together. This seems to make the goodness of the one better, and the badness of the other worse. You can almost hear what they say, as face and hand are talking in the picture. Some people think they can have what they please in their hearts, and that no one can see it in the face or hand. They may conceal it for a short time, but the face soon tells on them. The next time you are on a busy corner in the city, or in a crowd, anywhere, just take a look at the faces you can see. You will see all kinds—strong or weak, bright or sullen, kind or sour, beautiful or ugly, noble or beastly, manly or tricky, holy or sinful, contented or envious, peaceful or hateful. Try it sometime, and you will be surprised at the moving picture. It will also help you to watch that your own face shall be true and good. The only way you can be sure of this is to accept Christ, who has been offered as a sacrifice for all. When He comes into the heart and life He begins to make the face beautiful.

The First Murder. As soon as the Lord saw that Cain was angry, He hunted him up and showed him that he only was to blame for his offering not being accepted; and that even yet he could repent and bring a right offering. But he would not listen or heed. He is hot with rage, and finds Abel in the field by the burning sacrifice. He begins to talk about the matter, and probably he blames Abel. We can tell that he is loud and boisterous, and we know that Abel is meek and forgiving. Perhaps Abel is saying that his offering had not prevented Cain from making the same kind of an offering. He may have said also that God alone had the right to choose one and reject the other. The last picture shows the terrible end to their conversation. The sin which began in the heart of Eve now is seen in the hand of Cain. It has grown to be murder of the worst form, the murder of one's own brother. Were they alone? Perhaps Cain thought so, but God saw the dreadful deed. He found Cain, and said, "Where is Abel?" And Cain answered, "I do not know. Am I his keeper?" Then God said, "Your brother's blood is like a voice crying to me from the ground." Then he cursed him and made him a wanderer in the earth. Cain was afraid that everyone would hate him and try to kill him. So God put a mark on him that would keep anyone from killing him. Cain and his family went to live in a land by themselves.

What Kind of a Face Are You Painting? Have you seen on a human face the forgiveness of hope? Have you seen on a human face the hate of despair? I will name the hope, which is the offspring of another human being's forgiveness, love and friendship. I will name the hate, which is the offspring of another human being's distrust, intolerance and ostracism. The heart of hate says, "There is no forgiveness for you." The heart of love says, "I freely forgive you." Ah, yes, it is the heart that paints the face.—Selected.

Quiz and Study. 1. Find seven things about Cain. 2. What four sins did he commit? 3. What are some of the "first things" in the world up to this time? 4. What other hard hearts and faces does the Bible speak of? 5. What bright and shining faces? 6. What good boy was envied and hated by his brothers, and why?

Challenge Text. "And wherefore ——— he him? Because his own ——— were evil, and his ——— righteous." I John 3: (?)

Practical Thoughts. 1. Cain's offering looked good, but Abel's was good. "Obedience is better than sacrifice." 2. Cain's chief trouble was unbelief; Abel's chief virtue was faith. 3. Acceptable worship requires a right act, a right method, a right spirit. 4. Here is the first coward, the first liar, the first murderer, the first outcast—all from that first sin of Adam. 5. Everyone, everywhere, who is in need, is our brother; most of all he who is in need of the gospel. 6. We should avoid the incentives to anger, and avoid even the appearances of evil. 7. Sorrow for the consequences of sin is not repentance; Cain had the former, but not the latter.

Prayer: Lord Jesus, Thou hast created the world of nature, and of man. Thou seest and controllest both, to work out Thy gracious purposes. Grant us faith like that of Noah, that will trust God in the darkest hours and amid the worst conditions and enemies. ### THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, B. C. 2348 Place, Some part of Armenia. Persons, Noah and his three sons, Shem, Ham and Japheth, with their wives.

Scripture Setting: Judgment and Mercy. The flood, Gen. 7:1-24. The new earth, Gen. 8:1-22. Covenant with Noah, Gen. 9:1-17. A flood of fire, 2 Pet. 3:1-18. The mercy of God, Isa. 54:1-17. Refuge in trouble, Psa. 46:1-11. The tempest stilled, Mark 4:30-41.

Life and Conduct Setting: The lesson is a striking illustration of mercy in judgment. We see in it the plan of deliverance for the righteous amid the overwhelming destruction of the wicked. 1. The plan includes the finding of a righteous man, who is so by his faith in God. 2. It keeps that man's faith bright and strong for over a hundred years, amid the severest trials and temptations. 3. It shows that God is constantly aware of the life and works both of the wicked and of the good. 4. It reveals that God takes the righteous into His counsels and makes known His purposes to them. 5. It teaches that God must and will destroy the impenitent wicked, and that they are punished even in this life. 6. God attends to every part and feature of man's deliverance for His own glory and for man's good. 7. The remarkable temporal deliverance points to the work of Christ which saves from the storm and flood of sin.

A STORY OF FOUR BIGGEST THINGS.

The Biggest Flood ever Known. We are apt to boast of big things, but it is seldom that four biggest things are found near together, and connected like these. The seven wonders of the ancient world were separated both by time and land, but these four are closely related. How big was the greatest rain storm you ever saw, or the worst flood you ever heard of? This was many, many times bigger than that. We shall learn more about it in the next story. Why did it happen?

After Abel's death, and Cain's leaving home, Adam and Eve had another son, named Seth; also many other sons and daughters, for Adam lived 930 years. Then he and Eve died, for God had said they should die, because of their sin. The world began to fill up with people very fast, and they grew to be very wicked. One man was good, for it is said of him that he "walked with God; and he was not, for God took him." He was one of the two persons who never died. In each case God honored them by calling them to be with Him. At last God said, "The world is evil, and evil continually. I will not stand it longer, but will destroy them." But there was one good family; Noah and his three sons. God told him what he intended to do, and that He would save him and his wife, also his three sons and their wives. The wicked people were to be destroyed by this great flood as shown in that first picture, but Noah and his sons, with their wives, were to be saved alive.

Believe and Go Forward. In country roads one sometimes comes to a self-opening gate. It seems to stand firm and strong across the road. If the traveler stops before getting to it, it will not open; but if he will drive right at it, the wagon wheel presses the spring, which makes the gate swing back. Whatever be the barrier or obstruction across the path of duty, if the believer pushes straight forward toward it the way will open, and God will deliver from his perplexity.

The Biggest Boat Ever Known. There was a very large ship built once, called "The Great Eastern," but the owners never could make it sail. One of the largest vessels on the ocean carries 3,700 passengers. But the ark—for that was what God named His boat—was equally large, and made to carry animals, mostly. God commanded Noah to build this ark, and told him just how to build it. God could have saved Noah and his family by a special miracle if He had wished. But he chose this way both to test the faith of Noah, and also to make it a warning to call the people to repentance. It was a long warning, for Noah was building it for 120 years. Besides the building of the boat, Noah preached to the people, for he was a "preacher of righteousness." But the people seemed to become even more wicked. They laughed and scoffed at Noah and kept on in every kind of wickedness.

At last the ark was finished. It was made so that no storm could upset it, and no water could flow into it to sink it. I expect the people were now even more ready to make fun of Noah than ever. Perhaps they said, "See how the sun shines, and not a cloud in the sky. What will you do with your big boat now?" Those who are true to God, in the face of persecution of any kind become more and more beautiful in character. Think of Noah being true to God for 120 years while all the neighbors jeered and laughed. God's Spirit must have encouraged him to keep right on doing as God told him.

The Biggest Procession Ever Known. But you are asking, "If only eight persons were to be saved, why was so large a boat needed?" It was because the animals were to be taken in also, and food was needed for nearly a year for them. The pictures show the animals coming and entering the ark in some one of the three stories. Do you wonder how the animals were gathered, and made to walk together into the ark? It would have taken an army of people to do it, and there was no one ready to help at it, so God must have directed and influenced them. He gave instinct to the birds and animals at the first so that they act in certain ways, and He could do something like that in this case.

What a long procession! There must have been thousands of species or kinds, from the big clumsy elephant to the quick moving insect. Yes, in many ways it was the biggest procession ever known. Are there any fish there? Why not? and why are the birds there, since they can fly? They were all to be male and female, one pair of each kind. Then, of the ones most needed by man, there were to be seven.

God's Care of Us. As we think of the thousands and millions of people in the world, in many countries and conditions, we may say, "It is hard to believe that God cares for them all." But we see here that he cared for the animals and birds, and even the least insects that creep or fly. The Bible tells us that even a sparrow does not fall to the ground without His knowledge. Surely, then, He cares for men and women, boys and girls, that have souls to live forever. He provides for their souls, and also cares for all their needs and wants.

The Biggest Menagerie. The largest ships can take supplies for only a few days. Here was food for man and animals, birds and insects, for almost a whole year. Some have wondered how all could be accommodated in even so large a boat. It is estimated that each species would have about 200 cubic feet. How they were all fed daily we are not told, but probably by Noah and his sons. It was lodging house, and boarding house for this strange and motley menagerie family.

God must have given a good spirit to all the animals for the selfish effects of man's sin was felt in the animal world as well. But God could make them tame and easily managed. Noah is now 600 years old, and he lived more than 300 years after the flood. Those figures almost take our breath, for we are used to 70 years as the life of man now. Here is a list of some beginning with Adam: Adam, 930 years; Seth, 912 years; Enos, 905 years; Cainan, 910 years, Mahalaleel, 895 years; Jared, 962 years; Enoch, 365 years; Methusaleh, 969 years; Lamech, 777 years; Noah, 950 years. Who is the oldest man? They were all quite long-lived. Well, after all the animals were in the ark, God shut the door, and it began to rain. The people were wicked to the very last. It kept on raining for forty days and Noah kept on praying, trusting, waiting. In his grateful heart he perhaps kept humming to himself a song, something like this:

"Yes! for me, for me He careth,
With a brother's tender care,
Yes! with me, with me He shareth
Every burden, every care.

"Yes! o'er me, o'er me He watcheth,
Ceaseless watcheth night and day;
Yes! e'en me, e'en me he snatcheth
From the perils of the way.

"Yes! in me, in me He dwelleth,
I in Him, and He in me;
And my empty soul He filleth,
Here, and through eternity."

Quiz and Study. 1. How is this flood a picture of destruction at last? 2. What is the one way of salvation from sin? 3. How is Christ like the ark? 4. What did the waters do at creation showing God's control of them? 5. How old was Noah at the flood? 6. When he died? 7. Who was the oldest man? 8. What did Moses do when God threatened to destroy Israel? 9. Who were the two men who never died?

Challenge Text. By faith — being warned — —, by things not seen as yet, moved with — prepared — —," Heb. 11: (?)

Practical Thoughts. 1. The lesson is a picture gallery of great truths; the flood, a picture of sin; the ark a picture of Christ; the procession of animals a picture of providence; floating on the waters, a picture of safety. 2. Noah like the good of all ages was in partnership with God. 3. When sin becomes general and popular, we may expect that judgment is near at hand. 4. The flood came by natural laws but God ordered it when it did. 5. "It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God." 6. The flood was universal as far as man was concerned; and the animals don't care to discuss the question. 7. Noah believed and Noah obeyed, but it was God who saved. 8. The wicked shall not defeat God's purpose to have a righteous world. 9. Nor will God let a single righteous person be destroyed.

NOAH SAVED IN THE ARK

And Noah went forth, and his sons, and his wife, and his sons' wives with him:
Every beast, every creeping thing, and every fowl, and whatsoever creepeth upon the earth, after their

And Noah

the Lord;
took

on the altar. And the Lord smelled a sweet savour; and the Lord said in his heart, I will not again curse the ground any more for man's sake; for the imagination of man's heart is evil from his youth; neither will I again smite any more every thing living, as I have done.

THE SCRIPTURE LESSON IS GEN. 8:1-22.

Prayer: Lord Jesus, Thou art the Rock unto which if we flee we are safe. Thou art the Ark into which if we come we are kept. Thou dost supply all the needs of the creatures of Thy hand. May we be held, fed, guided, guarded by Thee, and at last come to the Heaven Thou hast prepared. By faith may we enter into all the blessings Thou dost promise. For Christ's sake. Amen.
How firm a foundation, ye saints of the Lord,

Is laid for your faith in His excellent word!
What more can He say than to you He hath said,—
You who unto Jesus for refuge have fled?
“Fear not, I am with thee; oh, be not dismayed,
For I am thy God and will still give thee aid;
I'll strengthen thee, help thee, and cause thee to stand, Upheld by My righteous, omnipotent hand.”

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, B. C. 2348. Place, The Ararat range of mountains. Persons, Noah and family.

Scripture Setting: Deliverance of the Righteous. Safety of the godly, Psa. 91. Refuge in trouble, Psa. 46:1-11. Deliverance of Daniel, Dan. 3:16-28. Of Peter, Acts 12:1-11. God controlling, Psa. 2. God overruling, Job 12:12-19. Praise for deliverance, Deut. 26:1-11. God keeps his Covenant, Psa. 105:8-25.

Life and Conduct Setting: The delivering providences of God are many and marked in the Bible. This is a striking illustration of that great truth. 1. God has the righteous in constant remembrance.

He provides the ark for him, keeps him in the ark, and leads him out. 2. God makes the forces of nature his ministers of protection and help. Winds, seas, rivers, storms may be agents of destruction, and were to the wicked; but God makes them serve the righteous. 3. God uses man himself to help work out his deliverance. 4. God gives continuing hope and faith: controlling the elements in man as truly as the elements in nature. 5. God sets His own bounds and times. The deliverance was assured at the very first and completed as planned, God knows the end from the beginning. 6. God assigns new conditions and duties after the deliverance, thus leading man to gratitude, praise and worship.

A PICTURE OF SALVATION.

The Saved Animals. Is a dog or a horse any better for the Christian religion? Yes, indeed; and all other animals are, too. One reason is because it takes sin out of the world, and the world is made pleasanter in every way. Another reason is that a Christian man will treat his dog and horse better. He will be better to all the animal world. This means much, for God put all the animal world under man's care and rule. Paul says that by the gospel “the creation itself shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption.” Someone has said that you can tell when a man is really converted by the way he treats his dog or cow. So in that first picture we see not only the eight people who are saved, but also the thousands of animals, birds, insects and creeping things. All are glad to get out of the close quarters of the ark into the fresh air and the large fields. They were safe from the storm while in the ark; and now they are saved to a new life of freedom and service. It is a beautiful picture of Christ saving sinful man and the sin-cursed earth. All about were the angry waves of sin, and above were the lightnings of God's wrath, and the destructive storm of judgment. In the love and mercy of God Jesus Christ comes and is made in the likeness of sinful man, in order that he might save him from his sinful life and sinful nature.

Sermons Everywhere. Jesus preached from a lily, and from a handful of wheat, and from the stones of the temple, and from the vines, and from a coin. Lessons of faith and honor and purity and charity exhale with the morning dew. Every sunrise is a poem and every sunset the peroration of a noble discourse from God to His children. The man who feels with, and suffers with, and smiles with nature; to whom every flower and every grain of sand is a thought of God, and every leaf a note in a continuous coronation song, has an ever increasing resource from which to draw as a wise lover and leader of souls. As Goethe says, “To such there came trooping up out of the meadows and singing down out of the skies thoughts like free children of God, crying out: ‘Here we are! Here we are!’” — William Mountford.

A Church that Everyone Can Build. That second picture does not look like a church, nor even a house. But it is intended for worship, and so serves the same purpose as a church building. God taught Adam to serve Him that way, and Cain and Abel each built altars. The offering was placed on the top of the pile of stones, which was called an altar. Then the offering was burned with fire and God was pleased with it. Everything looks clean and new. God is giving man a new start and a new chance. You have noticed how clean the streets are after a great storm. The whole world was like that, after the flood storm. But it could not wash away the sins of the heart and life. Only God can do that, and He began by telling man to build an altar and make offerings. And man always has been prompted to some kind of worship. Altars are built everywhere and sacrifices are offered. This is reasonable, for man knows that creation is the work of a Supreme Being who is worthy of worship. Then his conscience tells him that he needs the help of such a Being. Because of this almost all nations and races have had some blood sacrifices to wash away sin. Another reason for worship of some kind is the gratitude one has for deliverance from danger and enemies. Also all are concerned about the future, and this, too, inspires to worship. Everyone, everywhere, should have his altar of worship and praise to God. Even a little boy or girl may build an altar to God in the heart.

The Right Way to Worship. The animals and fowls in the third and fourth pictures suggest how man is to come and meet God. You will see that they are called "clean" animals, and "clean" fowls. This is in order that they may be used as offerings. The mistake Cain made was in offering fruits and grain instead of the clean animals. The blood of the animal or fowl was to picture forth the blood of Jesus Christ, who would be the great sacrifice at last. He was pure and holy, and by the shedding of His blood it was possible for man to be cleansed from sin. Another principle of right worship, suggested by these animals, was that God should have the best. That altar, with its fire consuming the sacrifice, is much like Abel's offering. We know it must be right, for Abel's offering was accepted. The blood has been shed, which was a type of Christ's blood, which was later shed on Calvary. The fire consuming the sacrifice is a picture of the spirit of consecration every believer should have. As Noah stands and reverently thinks of God, we can almost hear him say, "Here I give my all to Thee." Noah felt specially grateful because God had delivered him and his family. All their friends and relatives had been destroyed by the flood. These eight persons were all that were left of the thousands who had lived. But we should be even more grateful, for we have had many more blessings than Noah had, and therefore we should be more consecrated.

Secret of Success. "When I looked into Gen. Booth's face and saw him brush back his hair from his brow, heard him speak of the trials and conflicts and the victories, I said, 'General Booth, you tell me what has been the secret of your success all the way through.'

"He hesitated a second, and then I saw the tears come into his eyes and steal down his cheeks, and then he said, 'I will tell you the secret. God has had all there was of me. There have been men with greater brains than I, men with greater opportunities, but from the day I got the poor of London on my heart, and a vision of what Jesus Christ could do with the poor of London, I made up my mind that God would have all of William Booth there was; and if there is anything of power in the Salvation Army today it is because God has all the adoration of my heart, all the power of my will, and all the influence of my life.'"—J. Wilbur Chapman.

The Seven-Colored Seal. When God saw how anxious Noah was to know and do the right, He was pleased. He made a covenant with Noah that He would remember him and bless him. Did you ever see a lawyer's document with the notary's seal on it? It might have been a will, or a deed, or even a contract. Well, God made a contract with Noah. It is called a "covenant," because there is so much of God in it. God blessed Noah and his sons, and gave them the mastery over every living thing, just as He had to Adam. He also gave him permission now to eat the flesh of clean animals. Then He said He would never destroy the world again by a flood. Also that seed time and harvest, cold and heat, summer and winter, day and night, should never cease. And this was the sign or seal that all this should be true: God said He would put His bow in the cloud, and when man saw it he would know that God had promised and would keep His promise. This bow was the rainbow of seven colors and appeared often in connection with a rain storm. The colors are caused by the light shining on the water, as it falls from the clouds. But the rainbow is God's voice to man, and it says, "Behold, I am here, and I will keep the waters from destroying you."

God in the Cloud and Back of It. The abiding presence of God is the heritage of every child of God. The Father never hides His face from His child. Sin hides it and unbelief hides it; but the Father lets His love shine all the day on the face of His children. The sun is shining day and night. Your sun shall never go down. Come and live in the presence of God.—Andrew Murray.

Quiz and Study. 1. There were ten great men in the early world. How many can you name? 2. What is the difference between them and Christ? 4. Name the seven colors of the rainbow. 5. How long was Noah building the ark? How long did it rain? How long did the waters continue? 6. What birds did Noah send out to test the waters?

Challenge Text. "I do set my — in the cloud, and it shall be for a — of a — between me and the earth. Gen. 9:(?)

Practical Thoughts. 1. Nature speaks of God's grace and goodness—as the rainbow, the star of Bethlehem. 2. If the believer is remembered of God he need not fear what may happen. 3. As God shut Noah in the ark, so the believer may be shut in by affliction. 4. The rainbow implies the cloud, but also the sun above it and in it. 5. The ark of salvation has been prepared by Divine direction, and all may enter in and be saved. 6. There is a "too late" in salvation, and those who refuse to come are lost. 7. "God sets his rainbow of mercy and love on every storm of sorrow, trouble or sin."

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, B. C. 2247. Place, land of Shinar. Persons, the people from different sections.

Scripture Setting: God Governing Man. God overruling man, Job 12:12-19. God's controlling providence, Psalms, 2. God vindicating His purposes, Rev. 20:1-15. In the hands of God, Heb. 10:26-39. God and human works, Rom. 2:1-13. Obey God first, Dan. 3:12-18. Prosperity of fools, Prov. 1:20-33. Unbelief limits God, Psalms, 78:34-41.

Life and Conduct Setting: The teaching of the passage emphasizes God's control of human conduct. Some of the truths suggested are the following: 1. God is the creator of all men; shown by the one language and blood. 2. Man is filled with irrepressible energy, going here and there and seeking his self-interest. 3. His constant temptation is to gratify his own vanity and pride. 4. God is watching man's movements, and planning for his truer and better development. 5. His dealing with them is often to thwart their plans and give them new conditions and opportunities. 6. The seeming limitations and difficulties may be a challenge and inspiration to larger life and work.

A WONDERFUL TOWER AND A WONDERFUL POWER.

Helping Others to Sin. If a crowd of boys get together, and one of them is bad, he is likely to influence all the rest. The testimony of wicked people usually is that they were led away by bad companions. This is one reason why the saloon and dance hall are such places of peril to young people. The worst people are found there and they are always ready to help others to sin. This is the very thing which is illustrated in the first two pictures. The people gathered together in cities, and they were growing worse and worse. After the flood, the world had come to have many people again. Of Noah's three sons, Ham was specially wicked and he was cursed by Noah. A grandson of Ham, by the name of Nimrod, was a leader among the people. He was called "the mighty hunter," and was very popular. He became a kind of king, and built many cities. Another of Ham's descendants, by the name of Canaan, was rich and popular, and became a leader. These were all wicked people, and were banded together in their wickedness. They not only became worse themselves but kept influencing others to sin.

The Pigs and Beans. The other day I saw a drove of pigs following a man. To my great surprise I saw them follow him even to the slaughter house. I said to the man, "How do you induce the pigs to follow you?" "Oh," he replied, "I have a basket of beans, and drop a few as I go on." So the devil has his beans and his crowds, and he gets multitudes to go in the way of death. All the crowded cities are strewn with the beans that tempt to sin, and filled with the multitude who sin and lead others to sin.—Rowland Hill.

Fighting Against God. That second and third picture do not look much as if they were fighting against God. It is much as people are doing today. The making of brick and building of cities and towers are good enough in themselves. But the Bible tells us the spirit and reason for this work. They wanted to make a name for themselves, and built a great city so that they would all be together. The high tower could be seen for a long distance, and all people would be apt to say, "What a mighty nation that is!" Possibly they thought this high tower, away up from the earth, would be a place of refuge if another great flood came. In all this they showed a rebellious and proud spirit. The place they chose was a fertile plain called the land of Shinar. There was no stone there, so that it was necessary to make brick. The second picture shows this and also the great furnaces where the bricks were baked. Now all seemed to be going ahead as they wished and planned. The city is built with its mansion and beautiful buildings. The tower has gone up, one, two, three, four, five, six stories. It seems to be many times higher than the tallest buildings. It seems to say to God in the heavens, "See what we can build! We intend to plan for ourselves." With many people, especially young people, this fighting against God is by indifference and neglect. But the end is just as bad, for the Bible says, "How shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation?"

Why He Failed. A little fellow came running into a railroad station just as the train drew out. "You didn't run fast enough," said a by-stander. "O yes, I did, but I didn't start soon enough," was the reply. Carelessness! neglect! Great masses of people neglect Christ. They do not reject Him. They are not opposed to Him. They simply do not feel the need of Him. They are like the man that could not roof in his house when it was raining, and when it was fair he did not need any roof. Let us remember that the most dangerous thing in life is to drift.—R. P. Anderson.

God Says to Stop. That tower was a wonderful thing for those days. It was perhaps nearly as high as some high buildings in these days. But now a more wonderful thing happens. God was watching them all the time, and He was reading their hearts. He knew what wicked purposes they had in mind. He said it would be bad for them, and for all the world for so many wicked people to be together. So he determined to put a stop to their tower building and check the bad influence on others. Perhaps they intended this tower to be a kind of temple to some idol god. If the true God said to stop building it, then all the people would know He was mightier than the false god. God speaks in many ways to man. How do you think He spoke this time? He caused the men to forget their own language, and speak words the others could not understand. In the next pictures how surprised they all seem. No one knows what others are saying, or even thinking. No one can tell to the others what he thinks or wants. Well, it would be impossible for the work to go on. In a building everything must be exact and well understood. This was God's way of saying, "Stop," and there was nothing else to do but to stop. Sometimes God speaks to one's conscience, and says "Stop."

A Good Rule to Follow. It is well to be very careful to listen to conscience. If one is in doubt about a certain matter, or course to pursue, it is better to stop until they have more light on the subject. If an amusement is questionable avoid it. A thing may be right for others; but, if doubted or questioned by you and for you, the only safe course is to stop. The conscience is given us for a guide, and if we dull or bind it then it soon will be a whip to lash us or a sharp lance to torture us.

What Happened Next? Several things happened, and they were all planned in God's purpose. For one thing the tower was unfinished. Instead of being a proof of man's greatness it stood as a monument of his folly. For another thing it kept the people from planning any more wickedness together. No longer could they help others to sin. Then it must have made them think seriously of the great God who could do so wonderful a thing. It takes a long time to learn a language usually, but God flashed this into their minds at once. Still again, it made the people divide up and go in different directions. God wanted all parts of the earth to be inhabited, and so different nations and countries were started. This unfinished city was called Babel, which means "Confusion." It afterwards was called Babylon and became a very wicked city. It became so wicked that God sentenced it to destruction. It became a heap of rubbish, with only owls and wild beasts there. See Isa. 14:14-24. To obey God is to secure blessing and happiness.

I Ought, Therefore I Can. The commands of Jehovah are themselves a basis of hope. If He bids us forsake evil, we know that we can do so. "I ought, therefore I can." God asks only what is reasonable and possible. In contrition and aspiration there are pledges of the opened gates to new and Divine life. Part of our task is negative. "Wash," "put away," "cease." We can never build our temple until we clear away the rubbish. But our real task is positive—"learn," "seek justice," "relieve." The religion of Isaiah was very practical, which is the only judgment day kind (Matt. 25).—Exchange.

Quiz and Study. 1. Who came from the East at the birth of Christ, and why? 2. When was the making of bricks an occasion of persecution? 3. What is the highest tower you ever saw, or read of? 4. What happened to the tongues of the people at Pentecost? 5. What great city was named from this town?

Practical Thoughts: 1. Man's thoughts and acts are naturally selfish and sinful. 2. The wickedness of man is increased by sinful associations. 3. The idolatry of the tower brought down the judgment of God. 4. God can work out His purposes in many ways.

Prayer: Lord Jesus, We are thankful that Thou dost not leave us to ourselves. Thou art ever planning large things for us. And Thou dost call us, call us to this larger and better inheritance. ### THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, B. C. 1926-1921. Places, Ur of the Chaldees, Haran, Canaan. Persons, Abram, Sarai, Lot, servants.

Scripture Setting: A Study of Faith. Faith of Samuel, 1 Sam. 3:1-21. Faith of Elijah, 1 Kings 19:4-18. Faith of the blind man, John 9:1-15. Faith of Zacchaeus, Luke 19:1-10. Faith of the centurion, Matt. 8:5-13. Faith of Paul, Acts 9:1-20. Faith children of Abraham, Gal. 3:7-29. Faith always obeys, Heb. 11:8-19.

Life and Conduct Setting: Faith is so prominent a trait in Abraham that he may almost be taken as a model believer. We see him to be: 1. Called and chosen of God; corresponding to the commission of the soul. 2. Complete surrender to God's claim; typical of the sacrifices the soul must make at conversion. 3. Absolute trust in the promises of God, although they seem most difficult or even impossible. 4. Careful obedience to the Divine commands; this is a vital sign of true faith, even a part of it. 5. Helpful influence and example upon all others. 6. Peculiarly blessed and honored of God; he is called the "Friend of God" and "Father of the faithful." 7. His conquest and consecration of worldly interests and possessions. All is given to him of God; but all is entered into and appropriated by his personal traits of character—as fidelity, humility, courage, benevolence, gentleness, honor, self-sacrifice. What a cluster!

GOD'S NEW PLAN TO MAKE THE WORLD GOOD.

The Altar and Tent. "Now do not open it until Christmas." This is what persons often say, when they give a present in advance. The person who gets it has it, but he does not know just what it is, nor what it means. That was the way God made a gift to Abraham. He was to have a land, but he did not know where; he was to have many descendants, but he did not know how. What did God want to do through Abram? He was going to try a new way to save the world and make it good. You remember that He made all good at first and after He created man He saw that it was "all very good." But Satan tempted Adam and Eve to sin, and so man became very bad. Then He destroyed all the people by the flood and saved one good family for a new start. After people began to increase in the earth again, they grew bad, and God scattered them from Babel to different parts of the earth, so as to keep them from being so wicked. Now it is nearly five hundred years since the flood and the world is full of people. But they are wicked, worshipping false gods and fighting among themselves. There were a few good people like Job, in the land of Uz, and Melchisedek in Canaan, who was a priest of the Most High God." This would mean also that there were others who believed as he did. The new plan was to use the altar and the tent, as shown in the first and third pictures. The altar was to show that one believed in the true God. It would also help to hold the people to the worship of the true God. The tent was to show that man should go from place to place, telling about the true God, and how to worship Him. Abraham, as the "father of the faithful," was a pioneer in that life and work; and the Bible constantly refers to his good faith as an example to others.

A Man of Great Faith. This new plan needed some one as a leader, and one who would trust God and do as He told him. God chose Abram to be this leader. The Noah plan destroyed the wicked; but the Abram plan was to separate the good from the wicked, in order that they might at last win the wicked back. Now why was Abram chosen? Well, he came from one of the good sons of Noah, whose name was Shem. Someone has said if you would make a good boy you must begin with his grandmother. So Abram had a good start, and followed the good example that was set for him. Then he kept true when many others were disobeying God. Even some of his own family went off into idolatry. God saw all this, and we may be sure that He picked out the very best man to work the new plan. When God tested Abram He found he was the right kind of a man. After he was chosen for this great work God kept guiding and helping him. Wherever he went he built, an altar, and every altar seemed to say, "This place belongs to God." It is like when our sailors find a new island, they plant the United States flag there, and that claims it as our territory. Abram came to be known as the man of faith and at last as "the father of the faithful." Take a good look at him as he sits thinking of God.

Come, "Follow Me." Pizarro once tested a company of homesick followers thus: "He drew a line in the sand with his sword and said: 'Comrades, on that side,' pointing to the south, 'are toil, hunger, nakedness, the drenching storm, battle, and death. On this side,' pointing to the north, 'are ease and safety. But on that side lies Peru, with its wealth. Choose, each man, what best becomes a brave Castilian. For my part, I go to the south.'" Our Commander went "to the south," with its suffering and death, and He calls upon us, His followers, to choose what best becomes a brave Christian.—Exchange.

Going by "Sealed Orders." Do you know what that means? Sometimes our nation will send battleships out to sea with orders locked up or sealed, and which are not to be opened until a certain time or place. Even the captain of the ship may not know what he is to do, or where he is to go. Abram had been going from place to place in that way. The battleship captain knows that the government will stand back of him in all that he does, provided he is obedient. So Abraham knew that God would keep him and provide for him. There was one thing that God told Abram that greatly encouraged him. He said that Abram would become the father of a great nation; and his children should be more numerous than the stars or the sand on the sea shore. Also God told him that He would make him a blessing to all nations. God meant that some one of Abram's descendants should sometime become the Saviour of the world. Can you tell who that was? This, too, was like a sealed order, for Abram and his wife were now old, and they had no child. Abram believed God, although he could not understand how it all could be done. That picture next to the last shows that Abram had come to have a good many servants and cattle. He was a good man and his servants were ready to obey him. It is always safe to go by God's "sealed orders."

The Profit of Godliness. Said a skeptic to a Christian: "If I should become a Christian, I may lose all I possess." The Christian replied: "If you really lose anything by it, I will make it good and give you my note for it." The skeptic was surprised, convicted, converted. Later he returned the note, saying, "No one can ever truly say that he has been a loser by accepting Christ."—M. F. Negus.

Tempted to Forget God. As Abram went from place to place he was guided by God, and he set up an altar to Him. But now when he "journeyed toward the south" it seemed to be different. We do not learn that God told him to go that way, and we are not told that he built an altar there. It was a very beautiful and fruitful land, near where that big bunch of grapes was found afterwards. Perhaps Abram was so pleased at the rich and fertile country that he forgot to seek God's guidance. Or, he may have thought that he could take care of himself in so pleasant and goodly a land. Sometimes people do think that way, when all is prosperous; and they may do it carelessly and thoughtlessly too. God did not forget Abram, but He tested him by sending a famine. Now you would think that Abram would ask God what to do. Now, he learns that there is plenty in the land of Egypt and he hurries off down there. This gets him into more trouble and he commits a worse sin, and nearly loses Sarah, his wife. Then God actually speaks to the wicked king of that land and saves Sarah, and brings Abram back again to a life of faith and trust.

A Life-long Battle. The battle between duty and inclination, between the ideal and the actual, will continue as long as the body endures. It is not an unmixed evil. In the end right is never worsted. The way that leads to holiness is long and sometimes bloody; but it always develops strength and courage. The fight for each individual will be ended only by the full and perfect choice of truth and virtue, which are always the will of God. The victory will be secure long before it is fully won. Enough for us to know that conformity to the will of God at last will be the end of strife. It is not well to be overmuch troubled when we see those whom we love fighting a hard battle against inherited tendencies and an evil environment, for the fight, however fierce, is a good sign. Those alone are to be pitied who are drifting and not resisting.—A. H. Bradford.

Quiz and Study. 1. Name three good qualities in Abram's character. 2. What three ties did God ask him to break? 3. Who else went down to Egypt, and how and why? 4. When and how did Christ go to Egypt? 5. What other name did Abram receive from God?

Challenge Text. By faith Abraham, when he was called _____ went out, _____ whither he went. Heb. 11: (?)

Practical Thoughts. 1. God tries plan after plan to reach men. Christ came "to seek and to save." 2. Abram's journey is a type of life in its obedience, separation from the worldly, trials, blessings, promises, sacrifices, obligations. 3. Everyone is increasingly obedient to God, or increasingly disobedient. 4. God speaks to man by many experiences and providences and judgments, and all for his good. 5. Regeneration is a new heart, and is the gift and work of the Holy Spirit; conversion is a new life, and is the purpose and struggle of the changed nature. 6. The Christian should take his convictions with him everywhere, and live in and by them. 7. The best and safest investment is in the things of God. 8. The believer's power is measured by his faith and prayer; all else will follow. 9. We influence our friends most and best by fidelity and loyalty, not by compromise and laxness.

THE SCRIPTURE LESSON IS GEN. 13:1-8.

Prayer: Lord Jesus, Make us pure and strong in the springs of being. Help us to have high ideals and make right choices. Cleanse Thou the fountain of the heart, and abide in us by Thy Holy Spirit. Then shall we see as Thou seest, and fulfill all Thy will. May we have the faith, love and courage of Abraham, and thus be blessed and be a blessing. For Christ's sake. Amen.

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, B. C. 1918. Places, Bethel, Hai, plain of Jordan, Sodom. Persons, Abram, Lot, the herdsmen of each.

Scripture Setting: The Worldly Believer. Godly and ungodly, 2 Pet. 2:1-9. Beware of selfishness, 1 Cor. 10:24-33. Beware of covetousness, Luke 12:15-21. Evil of strife, Prov. 17:1-14. Rule against selfishness, Matt. 7:1-12. Strife among Christians, 1 Cor. 1:1-15. Timely counsel, 2 Thess. 3:6-15. Spirit of the true believer, Matt. 5:38-48.

Life and Conduct Setting: The passage gives us a picture of the worldly believer. 1. Lot has had the advantages of true Christian fellowship. Abram had a moulding and helpful influence on him. 2. He has been prospered in material possessions, due partly to association with Abram. 3. He has a worldly sense of his rights, and maintains them in a true worldly fashion. 4. He allows the earthly and temporal things to control his choices and conduct. 5. He lives on the border line between the worldly and spiritual, with strong tendencies which pull him towards the world. 6. He does not have the abundant life, but is "saved as by fire." 7. He never rises to the possession of spiritual convictions, visions, ambitions, achievements.

A STORY OF TWO CHOICES.

"Do you see those two men?" one friend asked another. "Yes," was the reply, "and I was just noticing how different they were in looks, in language, and in conduct." "Well," said the first speaker, "they are brothers, and had the same advantages in youth. The great difference between them, which shows also in their homes and in their business, all came from one choice. In a revival service, one of them chose Christ as a Saviour, and the other rejected Him. That was long years ago, and they have been going different ways ever since." This story is about two choices which lead in opposite directions.

Back to the Old Home. Abram had been in Egypt for some time, but was now returning. We are not told that he built any altar in Egypt, but though he apparently forgot God for a time, God did not forget him. At last he is back, and he is glad, for Abram is at heart a true lover of God. He comes by day's journeys, and when he reaches Bethel the old spirit revives again and he "called on the name of the Lord." The word "journey" is itself a picture. It means to "pull up," and shows that at each trip they pulled up the tent pins and went forward. He soon gets to talk with God as a friend. Do you remember the old home, with its well-worn Bible, and the family altar where all gathered for prayer? Perhaps the very thought of it will help some one to come from the

Too Great a Price. We are living in an age in which thousands of people around us are extremely anxious to amass great fortunes. To accumulate money men wear out their strength in labor that exhausts their nerves; they grow hard and brutal and in some cases they stoop to the use of means of which they should be ashamed. In the story entitled "A Certain Rich Man" we see the gradual deterioration of a character originally fine and noble, when John Barclay sets out to become, first, the richest man in his town, next, the richest man in his state, and, next, the richest man in his country. He gains his end, crushing everyone who is weaker, ruining the happiness of those dear to him and sacrificing his own honor. It is too great a price.—Exchange.

Which Is Better—Rights or Right? Now the herdsmen of Abram and Lot stood together, and Abram is going to take a hand in this battle. Will he stand up for his rights, or will he do the right as God would have him do? Remember that Abram had a real right to this land, for God had given it to him; he was stronger than Lot, and could have taken all from him; he would have used it to a better purpose than Lot; he was older, and so had a better claim to it. But what does Abram do? He says, "Let there be no strife, I pray thee for we be brethren." Then he told Lot to choose where he would go, and he himself agreed to take what was left. Abram saw the world was big enough for them both, if they only planned it out. There were wicked neighbors looking on, and Abram knew they might mock at them for their quarreling; and such quarreling might even give them a wrong impression of the true God. Was not this a noble thing for Abram to do? Kindness and yielding will settle any quarrel, and will prevent it before it begins. The old saying is, "It takes two to make a quarrel." That fifth picture shows how successful Abram was, for they are dividing the cattle to go in different directions.

The Real Test of Character. One's ability to "keep sweet" is never really tested until he is treated with downright unfairness. There is no credit in being sunshiny while everything is sunshiny around us. Any one can be courteous, and loving, and agreeable while others are so, and while everything that is his right is being given to him. But how many of us make it the deliberate purpose of our lives to be courteous, and loving, and positively radiant of sunshine when our rights are rudely over-ridden, and we are ignored, or snubbed, or even misrepresented.—S. S. Times.

Beware of the Grasping Spirit. Those first pictures are proof of great prosperity. Both Abram and Lot have become rich. Now, it is no sin to be rich. Rather everyone should earn and rightly use all the money he can. The sin is in getting earthly possessions in a wrong way, and in using them for a bad purpose. We do not learn that Abram was hurt in heart or life by his riches. But the servants of both Abram and Lot were selfish and grasping. Lot, too, seemed to have become tainted by a spirit of selfishness and greed. It had been a good schooling for Lot to be with such a great and noble man as Abram. But he had learned other lessons in the school of prosperity. These had made him grasping and worldly, with a desire to look out for "number one." Some people are not good enough to have great riches, or even to be greatly prospered. The most of us need to pray the prayer in the book of Proverbs, "Give me neither poverty nor riches." It did not take long for these herdsmen to get into strife for the best fields, for pasture and water. That fourth picture shows one of the battles they had. You can almost hear them shouting out, "It's mine!" "No, it's mine!" Did you ever hear any boy or girl say that?

Clean Hands and a Pure Heart. "He that hath clean hands, and a pure heart!" The words were part of a psalm which had been read at morning prayers, and they had fastened themselves in the memory of a boy who repeated them over and over many times that day. He looked at his own hands, which were brown and hard from much handling of the hoe in work time and much tossing of a ball in play time.

Clean hands and a pure heart, linked together in a chain not to be broken, possessed a spiritual significance which made a sure appeal to the boy's sensitive conscience and quick brain.

Even in boy life there are subtle temptations to play with conscience, to win something for which one has not paid full value in toil and pains; in short, to gain a prize at the expense of moral purity.—Exchange.

Lot's Wrong Choice. Lot had a chance to match Abram's generous offer. He might have said, "Why, uncle, you have the better right to all this land; and surely you ought to have first choice." But Lot does not do that. He just looks around for the best and takes it for himself. It is well to be prudent and provident, and to try to get on in the world. But it never pays to be grasping, covetous and forgetful of others. Lot's choice was bad also in another way. He chose simply for worldly advantage, and did not think of his higher needs. He put himself near to wicked people, and was also fronting that way. Everything helped to take him nearer and nearer to Sodom. He had a quick eye for a sharp bargain, but he was blind and deaf to the best things for himself and his family. If our choice takes us into bad company, or a wrong business, or a sinful pleasure, or a selfish life, it is a choice like that of Lot. Lot's choice was by the eye merely, and for the present. Abram's choice was in a spirit of peace and self-sacrifice, for his higher life, for God and for the future. That last picture shows Lot pitching his tent, that means making his home, over towards those wicked cities of Sodom and Gomorrah.

Two Most Important Persons.

If U and I are cross, you see,
There's bound to be a fuss;
If U and I untidy are,
Somewhere there'll be a muss;
If U and I are selfish, mean,
Some one will suffer wrong;
If U and I rob birds' nests, why,
The world will lose a song.

Quiz and Study. 1. What four special traits in Abram's character? In Lot's character? 2. What two Christian workers in the New Testament quarreled, and why? What other two, and why? 3. What is the blessing to the peacemaker? 4. Who is the great peacemaker? Mention some of Christ's "peace" titles.

Challenge Text. "See ye first the _____, and His righteousness, and all _____ shall be _____." Matt. 6:(?).

Practical Thoughts. Here is a sure preventive of quarrels: "It takes two to make a quarrel." 2. The choice of a home is of great importance, for life is far more than mere money-making and a good time. 3. Money may be a blessing or a curse, according to the man behind it. 4. We have many blessings for the sake of the righteous people in our midst. 5. To choose evil companions is to bring us down to their level.

Prayer: Lord Jesus, Thou hast done a wonderful work for man. By Thy death, Thou hast redeemed him from sin; by Thy Spirit Thou hast given him a new nature; by Thy intercession Thou dost keep and bless him. ### THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, B. C. 1912. Place, Hebron, the home of Abram. Persons, Abram and God.

Scripture Setting: Covenant of Faith. The faith of Abraham, Rom. 4:1-13. True children of Abraham, Gal. 3:1-12. God's purposes sure, Psa. 2. God's purpose with believers, John 15:17-27. Faith winning the world, 1 John 5:1-12. Example of faith, Heb. 11:1-16. An abiding inheritance, 1 Pet. 1:1-9. A new covenant, Heb. 8:6-13.

Life and Conduct Setting: God's covenant with Abram is prophetic, typical, and made universal by the sacrifice and work of Abram's greater son, Jesus Christ. 1. The covenant is in mercy and love, starting from God and ever directed and fostered by Him. 2. This covenant is sure and steadfast, for the mighty God is pledged to make it effective. 3. This covenant is all inclusive and progressive, looking towards the redemption of the whole family of man. 4. This covenant is in and by faith, a principle and medium of co-operation that is possible to all everywhere. 5. This covenant is possible and operative in all classes and conditions of man, for it accommodates itself to man as he is. 6. This covenant is a conquering and conquest covenant, for it is in and by the power of God, as well as by His love and grace. 7. This covenant is ever new, and is perpetual in its application and operation.

A WONDERFUL PARTNERSHIP.

The Starry Host. What is the largest firm or company you ever knew of? Some are very large, having members in many states, and sometimes in other countries. These are called organizations, or corporations. Many have grown to be large and strong, and then have begun to die out. This is the story of a company that God formed, and it was wonderful in many ways. It was to continue forever, and God was to be the Head of the firm. It was to grow to be so large that no one could count all who belonged to it. God told Abram to look at the stars, or the sands on the sea shore, and he would have a picture of the great number who would join this company. They were called Abram's descendants, because they were to be like him in faith and in loving God. Every time Abram looked up in the sky he would remember this great promise of God, and the company that was formed.

So, too, when he looked at his feet and saw the sand he would see the same great promise spelled out. These signs were given Abram to strengthen his faith. He had asked God about it, that he might be real sure, for he had not even one child, and yet they were to be his children. Then Abram knew that all would be as God said, and that he was not mistaken.

How to See the Stars of Promise. Astronomers put what they call diaphragms into their telescopes, which narrow the field of vision. What for? In order to secure a sharper definition. And we have to do the same thing, to shut off a great deal, to do as a man does that is looking at a distant object. He puts his hand to his brows in order to shut out everything else, and fixes his gaze on that.

That is what we have to do. Look off, if you would look on. Look away from "the things that are seen and temporal." You will never see the stars in a street blazing with electric lamps; and you will never see Christ and His stars of promise as you ought, if your thoughts and desires and aims are all centered upon this fleeting present life.—Exchange.

The Divided Sacrifice. Then God told Abram to prepare animals, such as were to be used as sacrifices. They were a heifer, a goat, a ram, a pigeon and a turtle dove. These he divided lengthwise, separating the halves so that a person could walk between them. This was the method of making a solemn agreement between two persons. They passed each other between the divided parts, and then the given agreement was as if written in blood declaring them to be as one person. This was the beginning of those sacrifices which pointed forward to the blood of Christ. Abram was not asked to walk between, for God had made the promise to Abram, and He only needed to ratify it to him. As the writer of the epistle to the Hebrews says, "When He could swear by no greater, He swore by Himself." The birds were not divided, for one of them could be put on each side, since there were two of them. It was very important that such divided animals be kept pure and clean until the agreement was made. So Abram watches them all day, and drives away the birds of prey that might tear them or defile them. He waits patiently for God to do what He wishes to next. At last the sun is setting, the birds have gone, and God has put Abram into a deep sleep. Then God gave him that nightmare vision of the future afflictions of the chosen people. But this was to be after Abram's day. Several of these stories will treat of that. And we shall see that God overruled all their affliction.

Seeing by Faith and Prayer. What we need is the power to see—to see the chariots and horses on the mountains; to see God all about us; to see the strong, right arm of the Almighty stretched out to help us; to see that the darkest clouds and most threatening surroundings are under the all-controlling power of the Everlasting Father. And seeing this, we shall have the prophet's hope and the prophet's faith, and the prophet's trust that they who are with us are more than they who are against us. The prayer, then, that befits our lips day and night continually is, "Lord, we pray Thee, open our eyes, that we may see."—Walter Jubb.—Exchange.

The Smoking Furnace. This and the burning lamp were symbols of the Divine presence and power. The furnace fire stood for the consuming fire of God's holiness, to which sinful man could not approach. The furnace walls and the smoke were as a gracious veil, protecting the sinner, for no man could see God and live. The burning lamp, or flame of fire, was a picture of light and salvation. Both together meant about the same that the ark and the over-arching angels did in the tabernacle. God began to teach great lessons by objects and pictures. We shall find more and more of this in some other stories. In that next picture you can see the burning lamp passing between the divided sacrifices. In this way God was pleased to enter into covenant with Abram. Do you think Abram ever could forget that night, and its wonderful visions? Those pictures of the Divine presence and power and mercy were hung in his memory forever. Many a time afterward he thought of them and was strengthened and comforted. This is often the purpose of God's dealing with us. Thus to Abram the stars and the sand, the day and the night, the animals and the birds, the furnace and the lamp, would all speak of God, and of His care and love.

The Covenant Keeping God. "There had been storm, a wild sea and a dense fog, so that no one could tell where we were, and then the vessel struck the rocks," so said a lady recounting her experience in a recent shipwreck. "We knew we were in great danger, and beyond that we knew nothing; but the thing that impressed me most was the wonderful voice of the captain—calm, strong, commanding. It quieted all confusion, it gave confidence to all who heard it, it guided every movement in perfect order. We simply obeyed it, and without panic or a single outcry were transferred to the lifeboats and everyone was saved." So God is watching over and keeping all who have come into his covenant of grace.—Exchange.

The River Boundaries. The covenant is completed, and God will tell Abram just how far his land extends. The boundaries of one's farm may be shown by a tree, or stone, or spring, and so far in given directions. Rivers, mountains and seas are often the boundaries of nations. These two rivers mark the northern and southern boundaries. The Mediterranean Sea is on the west, and the great impassable desert on the East. Altogether, it is about 450 miles long and an average of 75 miles wide. This land was a passage way of the nations for commerce and for war. This often led to the oppression of the Israelites, but it also gave an opportunity to bring the true religion to the world. This is the main reason why God chose it. There is a larger meaning in all these pictures. The great body of Abram's descendants are those that are like him in faith. This small land would not hold them all, so the greater teaching is that of Jesus Christ, who is as a glorious lamp bringing light and salvation, passing between God and man in an everlasting covenant. The land of this God-loving nation is "from the rivers to the ends of the earth." The sign of fulfilment is not an outward one of stars or sand or fire, but the inner one of an indwelling Holy Spirit. The story is full of the Divine promises, the Divine mercy, the Divine power, the Divine gifts.

The Unseen Helper. Some time ago I saw a picture representing two women in great sorrow. Standing behind the chairs on which they were sitting there appeared the figure of Christ stretching out His hand over them. They could not see Him, because their eyes were dim, but He was none the less present with them. He was near in all His effulgent brightness, with all His sympathetic consolation, and with all His helpful power.

Practical Thoughts. 1. God's promises may sometimes seem to go contrary to present experiences. 2. A Divine promise is the surest guaranty one can have, for it is mightier than all obstacles. 3. Faith is weak in proportion as we forget the promise, or are ignorant of it. 4. The delays of covenant blessings may both increase the blessing and increase God's glory. 5. The sure basis of all missionary enterprises is the covenant of God, including all lands. 6. All past fulfillments of covenant promises strengthen our faith for the future. 7. God's greater and truer covenant is in and by the blood of His Son, and this is offered to all.

THE SCRIPTURE LESSON IS GEN. 18:16-33.

Prayer: Lord Jesus,, Thou hast spoken to us in Thy Word, and Thou hast encouraged us to speak to Thee in and by prayer. Help us to see how many and what great blessings are possible to us by prayer. Enlarge our hearts that we may seek the salvation of all everywhere.

May we see Jesus Christ as the great Intercessor, who thus is our pattern in prayer and who also secures answers to our prayers. For Christ's sake. Amen.

More things are wrought by prayer
Than this world dreams of. Wherefore, let thy voice Rise like a fountain for me night and day.
For what are men better than sheep or goats
That nourish a blind life within the brain,
If, knowing God, they lift not hands of prayer
Both for themselves and those who call them friend?
For so the whole round earth is every way
Bound by gold chains about the feet of God.

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, B. C. 1897. Place, Hebron. Persons, Abraham, angels, God.

Scripture Setting: Intercessory Prayer. By Moses, Num. 14:1-21. By Samuel, 1 Sam. 7:1-12. By Nehemiah, Neh. 1:1-11. By Daniel, Dan. 9:1-19. By David, 2 Sam. 24:10-25. By Christ, John 17:1-26. By the Holy Spirit, Rom. 8:11-27. Intercessory blessings, Rom. 8:31-39.

Life and Conduct Setting: This first recorded case of intercessory prayer gives us some important truths about prayer for others. 1. We pray for others only when we realize their peril; not simply know the peril but feel it. 2. We pray for others only when our life is consistent and we are in right relations with God. 3. We pray for others only when the Holy Spirit breathes upon us and moves us so to do. 4. We pray for others only when we have a true view of God's purposes, and realize His great mercy. 5. We pray for others only when our faith inspires to persistent and earnest appeal. 6. We pray for others only when we see God to be just, holy and righteous as well as merciful and gracious. 7. We pray for others only as we see Jesus Christ as Mediator and Intercessor, and make our petition in His name, and in submission to His will.

POWER OF PRAYER FOR OTHERS.

Abraham and Lot. Abraham! This is a new name; who is he? The name is new, but the person is the same Abram we have been reading about. God had renewed His covenant with Abram, when he was ninety-nine years old. At that time He changed his name to Abraham, meaning "father of a multitude." Sarai's name was changed to Sarah, "princess." Lot was changing too, not in name, but in life; but this was for the worse. At first he looked towards Sodom and pitched his tent over that way. Soon he was influenced to go clear into the city, and he and his family were right among those wicked people. Abraham was sorry, but he remained true as a friend. Lot at one time was taken captive and Abraham rescued him. Ishmael had been born in Abraham's home before this, but he was not Sarah's son.

Sometimes men had more than one wife in those days. One day about this time when Abraham was sitting in his tent door, he saw three strangers before him. He received them and gave them food. Very soon he knew that they were angels, and that one of them was the Angel of the Covenant, which means Jesus Christ. They bring the glad tidings that Sarah will have a little son ere long, whose name shall be Isaac. This means "laughter," and some think he was so named because Sarah laughed when she first heard the news. Abraham was a praying Christian, and so the angels visited him.

To Be a Praying Christian. A pastor showed his friend through the parsonage, and, opening a door into a little room at the head of the stairs, said, "This is our room for prayer. Any one of the family, or our visitors, can retire here for prayer. It is consecrated to that object, and used for no other. It is the most frequented room in the house." Jesus went up into a mountain to pray. Much more do we need stated times and places for prayer.—Exchange.

Some Terrible News. These angels had come down also to punish the wicked city of Sodom. Abraham had gone with all three, a part of the way towards Sodom, talking with the Angel of the Covenant. At last the Lord lets the two angels go on, and He waits with Abraham. The first pictures show the two angels turning away, and then going toward Sodom. One is pointing to the doomed city, and they are both greatly interested. Now while the Lord is talking with Abraham, He said to Himself, "Shall I hide from Abraham what I am going to do? No, I will tell him." He knew Abraham meant to do right in every way, so God felt that Abraham should know of this great judgment. Then He told him that the wickedness of those cities was very great, and that He would destroy them.

Now we must remember that God had spared them for a long time, and that they were growing worse and worse. To pass them longer unpunished would do great harm to many other cities and people, and God does not intend to punish any righteous people who may be there. Still it often happens that some good people do suffer when the wicked are punished. But God tells the righteous many things by which they are able to help others in trouble. And the very best kind of help is in and by prayer.

Moses prays, Amalek is discomfited; Joshua prays, Achan is discovered; Gideon prays, the Midianites are overthrown; David prays, Ahithophel hangs himself; Asa prays, a great victory is gained; Jehoshaphat prays, God turns away his foes; Isaiah and Hezekiah pray, 185,000 Assyrians are destroyed; Mordecai and Esther pray, Haman is hanged and the Jews are saved; the church prays, Peter is delivered.—Ryland.

Why Abraham Prayed. Abraham knew that Sodom was a wicked city, and was deserving of destruction. But he was thinking of Lot and his family and wondering how they might be saved. He draws near to God, not only by stepping towards Him, but by faith and love. This is the first case of serious prayer we find in the Bible, and is very interesting on that account. Abraham appeals to God's justice and says, "Perhaps there may be fifty good people in the city. Wilt Thou not spare it for the fifty?" The Lord said, "I will spare it, if there be fifty good people." This mercy of God greatly encouraged Abraham, and he continued his intercession, dropping to forty-five, then to forty, to thirty, to twenty, and at last to ten. God agrees to his terms each time to the very last. Then Abraham ceased praying, thinking either that there will surely be ten righteous people, or feeling that it would be wrong to ask God to save the city for a smaller number. The Lord went His way, ceasing to grant any more, for Abraham had ceased to ask. But Abraham had prayed because God drew near to him and showed His love and mercy.

The Golden Cord of Prayer. An Eastern king devised a way to grant an entrance to all his people, even the poorest. He hung in his bed-chamber a golden bell. To the bell was attached a golden cord which was let outside the wall of the castle until it reached the ground. When a poor man in the kingdom had any wrong for which he sought redress he did not need to go to any of the officials, and perhaps bribe them, in order to reach the king's ear. He could pull the golden cord, and the bell in the royal chamber told of a needy one outside. Thus all had access to the king. It is the same with our King. No one is shut out. No one needs to approach Him with gifts or to seek out a courtier or an official. Access is free.—World.

What Makes the Difference? That is a very striking contrast in the last two pictures. One figure is that of a person who looks good and is ready to do justly to others. The other is that of one who is hard looking and ugly, and who is ready to kill and harm others. What makes the difference? If we were to put it in one word we might say, prayer. That will both make the character good and beautiful and the life useful and helpful. No one of us would like to fall into the hands of that butcher-looking man. Then we should see to it that we do not become like that, to hurt and harm others. In the next story we learn of the escape of Lot. It shows that God answered Abraham's prayer in a way that he did not ask. God will often answer better than we dared to ask, blessing both those who pray and those for whom they pray. "The effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much."

A most fitting place for this service of praying for others is in the home—just where these stories are read. If there is prayer there for the members of the family, there will be apt to be prayer for all others, even to the ends of the earth. The good news of the Gospel is for all, and the real Christian is anxious to spread the good news in every way he can. Prayer is a mighty power in bringing others to Christ.

When one is willing to pray the Holy Spirit will show him just what to pray for. He will also show him how he may be used of God to answer his own prayers. The writer remembers that what helped him most in seeking the Saviour was the fact that a fellow playmate, an earnest Christian said to him, "I am praying for you." Soon the Saviour was found and he in turn began to work and pray for others.

The story is told of how General Booth, head of the Salvation Army, with its branches and officers all over the world from Alaska to Australia, desired to send as his annual message, one word of command and inspiration to every leader in the army. He wanted it all in one word, because it had to be cabled at great expense to the far-off places; yet he wanted it full and complete. He hesitated a long while; but the message, when it went off at Christmas time, was all that he sought for—for it was the keyword, "Others."

Quiz and Study. 1. How was Abram's name changed and what did each of the names mean? 2. What other Bible person had his name changed, and what did each of the names mean? 3. What famous Apostle had his name changed; how and why? 4. Mention any Bible prayers you can; as prayer for rain. 5. Who prayed, "Not my will." When and where? 6. Who prayed, "Father forgive them," etc.; when and where?

Challenge Text. "Wherefore He is able to — them to the uttermost, that come unto God —; seeing He ever liveth to make — for them." Heb. 7: (?)

Practical Thoughts. 1. Judgment may be long delayed, but it is sure to come at last. 2. It is a great blessing to have praying friends, for "prayer moves the arm that moves the world." 3. It is our duty to pray for others, even our enemies. 4. The closet, the family altar and the public prayer services are the hope of the world. 5. True prayer is for the sake of Christ and in His merit and by His Spirit. 6. True prayer may plead for the "impossible," for "with God all things are possible."

LOT'S ESCAPE FROM SODOM.

THE SCRIPTURE LESSON IS GENESIS 19:12-26.

Prayer: Lord Jesus, We rejoice that Thou dost make a way of escape from sin and wrath. May we be prompted to flee to the refuge that is offered in Christ. Quicken us by the pleadings of Thy Spirit and providences. Prevent us from being absorbed by worldly things, and allured by the temptations of Satan. May we break from the "city of destruction," and not turn back, nor even look back. For Christ's sake. Amen.

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, B. C. 1897. Places, Sodom, Gomorrah and Zoar, cities of the Jordan plain. Persons, Angels, Lot, Lot's wife and two daughters.

Scripture Setting: Destruction and Deliverance. Doom of the ungodly, 2 Pet. 2:4-12. End of a wrong life, 1 Sam. 31:1-13. In the hands of the living God, Heb. 10:26-39. Losing the soul, Mark 8:27-37. Presumptuous sins, Psa. 19:7-14. The righteous delivered, Gen. 7:1-24. Deliverance of Israel, Ex. 14:19-31. Danger of delay, Heb. 3:7-19.

Life and Conduct Setting: The passage has the double lesson respecting the judgment and mercy of God. 1. Judgment and mercy may appear together in a given place or time; indeed, each of these great attributes is necessary to the fullest expression of the other. 2. Mercy is the superior attribute in God's dealing with man, for at times the guilty are spared for the sake of the godly. 3. The Divine judgments are delayed in order that mercy may get in its plea and work. 4. The discipline, sacrifices and losses of life may seem to be judgments, when really they are mercies. 5. When God's merciful desires and plans are exhausted, then his judgments fall. 6. Those who accept God's mercy grow more and more like Him; those who merit His judgment become less and less like Him.

A WONDERFUL DELIVERANCE AND A TERRIBLE PUNISHMENT.

Those Angels Again. You have heard of people having "a good angel." Some think that everyone has a good angel, as a watch and guide. We know that everyone does have an inside angel, which means messenger. This inside angel is the conscience, and it is constantly saying, "Better not," or "Better do it," or "I would if I were you." You have heard the whispers of that angel many times. It is well to hear it and obey. But these angels in the first pictures are the special ones God sent to destroy Sodom. Because of Abraham's prayer they found Lot's house and knocked at the door. Lot has opened it, and is hearing what they have to tell him. Lot has been pretty good while living in such a wicked city. The Bible calls him "righteous Lot." He seems even better than he is, for all others are so very wicked. Lot kept these angels all night. They told him that the city would be destroyed by fire and urged him to warn all his friends at once and try to take them with him. He could not influence any of them. Even his sons-in-law mocked and laughed at him. The two daughters who were home and the mother thought they would go with Lot. They seem to be talking it over in that second picture. While they lingered, wanting to take some of their nicest things with them, the angels urged them all again and even grasped them by the arms and pulled them along, as in the third picture. Sometimes God asks us to be the angels to lead others to Christ.

"Come and Help Me." "Don't hesitate to speak to any man about his soul. I have been longing for 20 years for some Christian to speak to me. I believe there are thousands of men in this city who are in the same condition that I am, carrying an uneasy conscience and a great burden on their souls; not courageous enough to seek instruction, yet willing to receive it." This was the testimony of a business man when the evangelist had said that he hoped the man would not consider him intruding and impertinent.

Hurry, Hurry. At last they are outside the city walls. The angels left them a few minutes and they really act as if they wanted to go back. Perhaps they wished to urge some of their friends again. I believe it was all because Lot's wife was not altogether satisfied, as we learn later. Lot stands by himself and he shows that he has made up his mind not to go back. The girls are influenced by the mother and are likely to be persuaded. Just then the angels came back and cried out, "Here! hurry up; escape for thy life and look not behind. Escape to the mountain." This urgent warning decides them, and Lot and his wife start ahead and the girls follow. They lean forward in their haste to get away from the peril. Lot was fearful they could not reach the mountain in time, and he asked if they might not go to that city off at one side. The angels agreed to that and said that they would spare that city for them. It was afterward called Zoar, meaning "little." The other four cities were destroyed.

How About Your City. "Always speak a good word for your town," is a popular saying with business men. Jesus is our example to warn our own towns of the danger of despising religious privileges. He lays bare the sin of insensibility to religious impressions. Our condemnation at last will be in proportion to the instruction and warnings we have had. Doubtless the moral tone of Chorazin and Bethsaida was far above that of Sodom, but their punishment would be greater because they sinned against greater light and knowledge. The guilt of New York, Chicago or London is far greater than Sodom, because they have so much greater light.

Why She Looked Back. How good these angels were to stay right by till Lot and his family were out of danger. Then, too, to grant the request of Lot, so they would not have so far to go. All this is to teach that God will be as merciful and gracious as He possibly can, in order that sinful man may be helped to a place of safety. Now the rain of fire is falling on the cities and on all the plain. It was a terrible sight, and wonderful as well. Perhaps there was much noise with the strange rushing and flashing of the flames, like bursting clouds of fire. As they hurried on Lot gets ahead alone, then the two girls, and Lot's wife is behind all. That is a bad place to get, especially if one is a little weak and liable to be tempted. Anyhow, almost without thinking, suddenly Lot's wife looks back. This was just what the angels told her not to do. She doubtless kept thinking of her friends and all the fine things they had in their home. Maybe she asked herself, "I wonder if I will ever see them again?" Then she looked back, and it was because she longed to be back. The look and the love are apt to go together. The next picture shows what happened to her. There she stands still looking back, and fixed in that position. The saltish vapors falling on her crusted her over with a salt covering. Lot and his daughters went on, without knowing what had happened to her, for they dared not look back.

The Only Safe Course. There is a sermon in this looking back which may be read between the lines. The man who keeps as far from wrong-doing as possible is safe—others run a risk, be it more or less. The man who never plays gambling games never becomes a gambler. The man who never drinks never becomes a drunkard. The man who always endeavors to state the exact truth never becomes a liar. The man who never uses another's money without the owner's consent never becomes an embezzler. The man who never goes into bad company is never corrupted by bad company.—

destroyed; not only the cities, but also the trees and plants in all that country. We can see now how reasonable the plea of the angels was. To have stayed and enjoyed their home in Sodom would have been to lose all and themselves besides. Sometimes people ask if it costs anything to be righteous. Surely it does, as we might conclude when we realize the great value of holiness. It is the pearl of great price, and one is warranted in making every sacrifice to secure it. Lot brought great trouble upon himself because of that selfish grasping choice when he pitched his tent toward Sodom. As a result of that choice he is thrown with the wicked. He and his family are carried off as the spoils of war and he loses home, children, friends and life prospects. God is good to him in providentially saving his life and giving him a new chance.

This complete and terrible destruction of the cities is suggestive of the punishment of the wicked at the last. Those who persist in their selfish choices and wicked ways shall surely be destroyed. Christ based one of his most solemn warnings on this incident when he said, "Remember Lot's wife." The warning is specially to all who love the world and the things of this life; and who are ever choosing, planning for and seeking mere earthly good. And God has many ways of punishing the wicked.

A Startling Judgment. At one time an infidel went up on the Catskill mountains, and in the presence of his companions he defied God to show himself in battle. He swung his sword and challenged the Almighty to single combat. Then God sent a little gnat, so small that one could hardly see it, and it lodged in the man's windpipe and choked him to death.—Dr. Pierson.

Quiz and Study. 1. What great destruction by water did God visit on the whole world? 2. How was Peter once saved by an angel? And Paul and Silas? 3. What other "look not" do you remember in the Bible? 4. What six cities were good cities to flee to, and what were they called? 5. How many were really saved out of Sodom?

Challenge Text. "They that will be ——— fall into ——— and a snare."—1 Tim. 6: (?)

Practical Thoughts. 1. Bad company in order to get gain is sure to bring trouble. 2. The warnings of the godly are apt to be despised by the wicked. 3. We are known by the company we keep, and we become like them as well. 4. The godly accept God's way; the ungodly prefer their own way. 5. The Bible, the Lord's day, conscience, Christian friends, many providences, the Holy Spirit, are God's good angels to man. "Better not do it," even if you are in doubt about it; certainly not, if it is clearly wrong. 7. Christ is the refuge for all who will escape from sin and sinfulness of life.

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, B. C. 1871. Places, Beersheba and Mount Moriah. Persons, Abraham, Isaac, two servants, the angel.

Scripture Setting: A Study of Faith. Faith's captain, Heb. 2. Faith's weapons, Eph. 6:10-20. Faith's resources, 1 Cor. 1:18-31. Faith's obedience, 1 John 5. Faith's hope and boast, Ps. 44. Faith's achievements, Heb. 11:24-40. Faith and salvation, John 3:5-17. Faith's power, Matt. 9:18-31. Establish in the faith, Col. 2:1-9. Faith's final triumph, Rev. 19:11-21.

Life and Conduct Setting: God tries our faith for many reasons: 1. That He may increase it. 2.

That He may reveal it to ourselves and others. 3. That He may prepare us for some hard task. 4. That we may see God's grace and power. 5. That we may be inspired to gratitude and praise. 6. That other graces and gifts may be developed. 7. That we may put God first in our love and life.

If a ray of white light is passed through a prism, it is shown to have the seven colors—red, orange, yellow, green, blue, indigo, violet; so God, by His prism of trial, shows us how pure and true Abraham's faith is by revealing its seven inner properties—obedience, trust, love, sacrifice, worship, service, praise.

HOW GOD TAUGHT ABRAHAM A GREAT LESSON.

Abraham had grown to be wealthy. He had many things, such as cows, sheep, goats, asses, servants, and much silver and gold. But he loved most of all his son Isaac, for he was a special gift from God, as God had promised.

God's Strange Command. The Bible says that God tempted Abraham. This does not mean that He tempted him to sin, for God never does that. But He tested his faith, to see if it was pure and true, and also to make it stronger. And as Abraham loved Isaac more than all else, God tests him by telling him to offer up Isaac on an altar, as he would a lamb. This was a strange command, for Isaac was given as the beginning of a great nation.

But, though Abraham loved Isaac much, he loved God even more. And so he was willing to do anything God told him. He was to go to a place that God would show him. He prepares for the journey, taking with him two servants. The pictures show him as he gets ready the wood, the fire and the knife. See how willing and obedient Isaac is, as he helps his father. Abraham too is obedient, though he was sad at heart. His face shows that he is trying to think out what God means by the command. But he knows that God will not let him do wrong, and he knows too that God can even raise Isaac to life again.

Tempted for a Purpose. A young man came once to borrow $10,000 from H. B. Clafin, the New York merchant.

"Come in," said Mr. Clafin, "come in and have a glass of wine."

"No," said the young man. "I don't drink."

"Have a cigar, then."

"No, I never smoke."

"Well," said the joker, "I would like to accommodate you, but don't think I can."

"Very well," said the young man as he was about to leave the room. "I thought perhaps you might. Good-day, sir."

"Hold on," said Mr. Clafin, "you don't drink?"

"No!"

"Nor smoke, nor gamble, nor anything of the kind?"

"No, sir!"

"Well," said Mr. Clafin, with tears in his eyes, "you shall have it, and three times the amount, if you wish. Your father let me have $5,000 once and asked me the same question. No thanks; I owed it to you for your father's sake."—Selected.

Who Is the Lamb? They all four travel a whole day, and then another day. The third day they see the place afar off. Abraham tells the servants to stay here, while he and Isaac go up the hill to worship, when they would return to them. He believes that God would give Isaac back to him. When Isaac asks, "Where is the lamb?" Abraham's faith shines out in the answer, "My son, God will provide Himself a lamb." We shall see that God did do this in a remarkable way. Abraham's faith was something more than his own will and purpose. It was God working and thinking in him, and so keeping him strong and true. Abraham is called "the friend of God" and "the father of the faithful," and it was because God was first his Friend and also gave him power to be faithful.

The Electric Coils. The carbon coils are glowing with light and radiance. But the coils themselves are not light. The electricity must shine through them. So God by His love and grace and power comes into man, and makes him shine bright and strong for God. If we have faith like this, nothing is too hard for us to bear, nor too great for us to do.

At last they are at the top of the hill, Abraham builds the altar, with stones and earth, while the picture shows Isaac standing and wondering. Then, as in the next picture, Isaac brings the wood, and it is laid in order.

Now Isaac learns who the lamb is, for Abraham binds him, perhaps with the very cords which tied the wood. He is laid on the wood, as a lamb, and Abraham takes the knife to slay him. Thus far, it is as if Abraham saw a shining angel, beckoning him to come on and saying to him that all will be well at the end. And it was indeed so.

The Voice of the Angel. Abraham's faith has been tested, and as his hand is lifted to strike, God calls to him to stop; for He says, "Now I know that thou fearest God." How gladly Abraham obeys this command! See how surprised he is when he is told that God has furnished the lamb, and how rejoiced as he takes the ram and offers it in the place of his son Isaac. He calls the place of the offering Jehovah Jireh, which means, "The Lord will provide." It is as if Isaac is given back to him from the dead. It was a strong faith which believed that God would send him a son, when he and Sarah were so old; now it is a still stronger faith that God has spared that son to him. That bright picture of God's help and mercy must have cheered and inspired Abraham always afterward.

A Good Motto. It is said that in the bedroom of the great Gladstone, inscribed in the form of an arch, were these words: "Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace whose mind is stayed on Thee." And this thought of the overruling providence of God, more than anything else, enabled him to carry the immense burdens of state. So also this victory of Abraham's faith has helped God's children in all ages.

"Your faith and joy are an inspiration to all of us." So said one Christian to another, who had passed through a great trial in the loss of loved ones. The trial was like a bell or signal calling the world to see what the Christian could do and be for the Master.

The Lamb of God. After the angel told Abraham that God was pleased with his faith, he also said that God would bless him, for being so obedient; and that one day one of his descendants, through Isaac, would save the world from sin and make people fit for Heaven. He meant that Jesus Christ, who is "The Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world," would be a descendant of Isaac. Many hundreds of years after this,

Jesus was born in Bethlehem. He was the Son of God, and also the Lamb of God. This sacrifice of Isaac is a shadow picture of the real sacrifice of Jesus Christ on Calvary.

A Joyous Trip Home. When the angel left, Abraham and Isaac went down to the servants at the foot of the hill. Then all went back together to their tent homes, and they told Sarah what had happened. They were now more happy than ever, and God was greatly pleased with them.

Abraham learned some great lessons in this school of trial—that Isaac and all he owned and loved belonged to God; that they should not kill boys and men for offerings as the heathen nations did; that the commands of God are sometimes very strange and mysterious and even severe; that the only safe course is to obey the commands exactly as they are given, trusting to God to work out the right results; that "to obey is better than sacrifice," and faith is the chief thing in obedience; and that now God could fulfill His promise that salvation should come through Isaac.

Sunburst of Faith. Your mamma will tell you of a beautiful jewel called a "sunburst." This faith of Abraham is much like such a jewel. Shining in it and from it we can see obedience, trust, love, sacrifice, service, worship and praise. Even a child may have and wear this "sunburst" jewel of faith.

Quiz and Study. 1. How was Abraham's faith tried when God first called him? (Ch. 12)? 2. Whose faith did Christ commend when He raised a child to life? 3. What woman's faith did He specially commend, and how? 4. What shepherd boy had faith to fight a giant? Tell the story. 5. What are the seven steps in Abraham's stairway of faith? The pictures will help to find some of them.

Challenge Text. Although the fig tree shall not ———, neither shall fruit be in the ——— the labor of the ——— shall fail. Yet I will ——— in the Lord, I will joy in the God of my ———. Hab. (3)?

Practical Lessons for Mind and Heart. 1. All of life is a testing time, but usually every life has its one great trial—the sacrifice of its Isaac. 2. To give to God is to receive a hundred-fold back, both in kind of blessings and in degree. 3. It is the last step and act that counts. What if Abraham had failed to lift the knife? 4. "All things work together for good to them that love God." 5. The very purpose of faith is to lead us and hold us when all looks dark and hard. 6. Faith is the gateway into a life of success—faith in God, in self, in the right, in honest work. 7. True faith asks only for God's command, and then immediately obeys. 8. By a heaven-born instinct, faith knows all will be well at the end. 9. Faith is mightier than persons or things or circumstances, or even one's own fears. 10. Faith grows strong on denials, repulses, defeats and opposition. Faith never fails, for its very life is the whisper of the Infinite.

Prayer: O God, teach us to be gentle, watchful and forgiving—living peaceably with all. May our soul and life be cast in the Gospel mould. Make us grateful for blessings and thoughtful of others. For Christ's sake. Amen.

How to Live with Others.

Bring tolerance that can kiss and disagree;
Bring virtue, honor, truth and loyalty;
Bring faith that sees with undissembling eyes;
Bring all large loves and Heavenly charities.

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, B. C. 1804. Places, Gerar, Beersheba, Rehoboth. Persons, Isaac and Abimelech, and their servants.

Scripture Setting: Helps to True Success. Right motives and ideals, Prov. 3:1-18. Promise of God, Gen. 18:1-10. Maintaining good works, Jas. 1:19-27. Thoughtful of others, Jas. 2:1-13. A Christian at all times, Tit. 3:1-9. Serving God heartily, 2 Chron. 34:29-33. All-round graces, Rom. 12. True and false success, Mark 10:28-45.

Life and Conduct Setting: Here are some of the great laws of true success: 1. The law of character and parents. 2. The law of fidelity and industry. 3. The law of patient continuance. 4. The law of adaptation to circumstances and to people. 5. The law of recovering and using neglected resources ("wells"). 6. Watchful of providence. 7. The law of concentration and consecration. Isaac is a splendid illustration of the art of living peaceably with others.

A SUCCESSFUL MAN.

What large flocks and herds are seen in these pictures! They all belong to Isaac. As a lad his life was saved by the angel, and now he has grown to be a man, is married, and has been prospered in every way.

When Prosperity Begins. I think Isaac was a successful man because he was a good boy. You remember how obedient and helpful he was to his father. He must have been kind and thoughtful to his mother, also.

"I Carry the Wood." A little boy said that he loved his mother with all his strength. He was asked what he meant, and he said: "You see, we live on the fourth floor of this house, and there is no elevator, and the wood is down in the basement. Mother is busy, and is not very strong, so I carry the wood up for her. That is what I call loving mother with all my strength." I am sure Isaac was a helpful boy in the home, and so we are not surprised to find him successful as a man.

Where Prosperity Comes From. God was very good to Isaac, and this explains why he was prospered. God gave him a good father and mother, the great Abraham and the gentle Sarah. God directed Abraham's servant, so that he found a beautiful wife for Isaac. Ask your mother to tell you about it. When Abraham died, he gave all he had to Isaac. Besides this, when Isaac sowed seed God made it grow and bear a hundred-fold. In this way he came to be rich and great, and had many servants, who took care of his flocks and herds, as you can see by the pictures. Isaac believed in God and trusted Him; and God believed in Isaac and trusted him with many things.

Is that a swing in the next picture? No, it shows how they used to draw water from the wells. These wells were very necessary to supply water for the flocks and herds; and so they were very valuable. Isaac was a great well-digger. Though God blessed him, yet Isaac knew that he must do his part in order to succeed in life. Traces of the well of Jacob, and some of the wells of Isaac, are still found in Palestine by travelers.

Prosperity from God. There is no more steady and uplifting conviction than that we are constantly in the sight of God, that our hand is in His, that He is closer than a brother and, as the poet has said, "nearer than hands and feet."

It was this vision of Immanuel, Christ with us, which nerved the martyr Stephen in his supreme trial, until, under the pain and indignity of his martyrdom, his face shone like the face of an angel.

Paul was imprisoned, whipped, stoned; "but," says Dr. Jefferson, "he never winces nor falters, but sings wherever he goes."

It was because God said to his soul, as He does to ours, "My presence shall go with thee, and I will give thee rest."—Exchange.

Prosperity May Make Enemies. You would think that everyone would love Isaac, for he was so kind, so good, and so gentle. God and all good people did love him, but there were some wicked people who envied him because he was prospered so. The king of that country asked Isaac to go to another place; and Isaac did so, to avoid trouble. Here he opened up wells that Abraham had dug, but the enemy followed him and claimed that the wells were theirs. Isaac went from place to place, until his enemies stopped following him. Then God led him to a place where he found a living well, like what we call an artesian well. To stop up a well in those days was almost like setting fire to some one's house, and it was a mean thing to do. But was not that a good way for Isaac to master his enemies? They must have felt guilty indeed when they found how noble Isaac was. They did come afterward and make a covenant with him, that they would not hurt him if he would not hurt them. They saw that God was with him, and so they feared him. Thus God can overrule even the wrath and envy of the wicked for the good of His people. You remember that Christ was crucified because of the envy of the Jews, but God overruled it to bring salvation to all who will accept Him.

The Better Way. I should like to know a man who just minded his duty and troubled himself about nothing; who did his own work and did not interfere with God's. How nobly he would work—working not for a reward, but because it was the will of God! How happily he would take his food and clothing, receiving them as gifts of God! What peace would be his! What a sober gaiety! How hearty and infectious his laughter! What a friend he would be! How sweet his sympathy! And his mind would be so clear he would understand everything. His eye being single, his whole body would be full of light. No fear of his ever doing a mean thing—he would die in a ditch, rather.—George Macdonald.

More and More Prospered. One night God spoke to Isaac and told him not to fear; that He would take care of him and bless him. This was better than all the wells, and he would not have had this if he had fought and contended for his "rights." God wants us to be bold and brave for Him and for His truth, and He blesses us for such battles. But when it is a mere earthly and personal matter, God is pleased if we are yielding and forgiving and peace-loving, as Isaac was. It may be hard at the time, but we are always glad afterwards. One would much rather be like Isaac than like those wicked people who hated him and pestered him. It pays to love God and obey Him; for really God owns all things and can give whatever He pleases to those who love Him. And if we love God, we will not be saying "mine," "mine," all the time, but will be thinking of how we may help and bless others also.

Always Helping. "How did he come to be the head of the concern, anyway?" was asked about a peculiarly quiet man who forged to the front in a growing business. "Why, it was this way," was the reply. "All anybody had to do, in case of things going wrong, was to refer matters to him. He was always attentive, always cleared up the tangles, always could answer questions, always was ready to do more than he was expected to do. He wasn't ambitious; he didn't want the head place especially; but what was the use of making anybody else the head, when we had him?" That was all there was to it. His reliability made everyone depend upon him, and he became head in title because he was first the head in fact.—Selected.

Wherever Isaac lived it is said that he built an altar there. This is the same as family prayer in the Christian home, or what is called the family altar; for all the members of the family gather there to praise God for His care and to ask for daily mercies.

Some of us can remember the time when there were family altars in many homes. In this hurrying age, with many distracting cares, there is a temptation to let the practice of family worship fall into decline. This is the work of Satan, for he does not want Christ to be honored in the heart or in the home. There are many good reasons why the altar of praise and prayer should be established. God himself instituted the home, and it is right that he should be remembered in it. He alone can protect and bless it, and He waits for us to ask His favor and mercy. He promises even to come and live with those who choose and pray to Him. In Rev. 3:20, Christ says, "Behold I stand at the door and knock; if any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with Me." The door may be that of one's heart or of one's home. To set up a family altar is to open the door of the home to Christ. Jesus once said to His disciples (John 14:23), "If a man love Me he will keep my words: and my Father will love him and We will come unto him and make our abode with him." This is most wonderful, indeed, and the family altar makes it all possible. Then who can know what dangers or enemies may be near to the home or to those we love? Our very ignorance and weakness should prompt us to seek God's grace and care.

Quiz and Study. 1. In the parable of the sower in Matthew, how large was the increase from the seed? 2. What well did Jesus sit by, and with whom did He talk? 3. Mention six things God has given you, and that you are thankful for. 4. Whom did Isaac most resemble in Scripture? Of whom is he a type? 5. What boy was envied by his brothers, who sold him into slavery? 6. What man did God put a mark on, because he slew his brother for envy? 7. Read about the "coals-of-fire" way of treating an enemy in Rom. 12:8. What did Jesus say about treating one's enemies? See Matt. 5:38-48.

The Challenge Text. And he shall be like a ——— planted by the ———, that bringeth forth his ——— in his season; his ——— also shall not wither; and whatsoever he doeth shall ———. Ps. 1:(?).

Practical Lessons for Mind and Heart. 1. What was the loss of a well, or of ten wells, if God was his portion? 2. We should work as if all depended on ourselves, and trust and pray as if all depended on God. 3. God may or may not give us large earthly possessions, but real prosperity is the gift of His grace and love. 4. Every real success in life is apt to be assailed by both man and Satan. 5. We should re-open the old wells of truth, which have been filled up or covered up. 6. Isaac is prospered because he is a man of peace and prayer. 7. Personal industry and a spirit of sacrifice are the great laws of success. 8. There can be no true and lasting success without taking Jesus Christ as a Savior and friend.

GEN. XXVII: 15-20.

THE SCRIPTURE LESSON IS GEN. 27:22-40.

Prayer: O Lord, We are sinful and weak, and then more sinful. Forgive the bad bargains we make, and overrule them for good. Save us from self and sin and make us strong to do right things in a right way. For Christ's sake. Amen.

"There's so much bad in the best of us,
And so much good in the worst of us,
That it hardly behooves any of us
To talk about the rest of us."

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, B. C. 1760. Place, Beersheba. Persons, Isaac, Rebekah, Jacob, Esau.

Scripture Setting: Factors in Character Building. Right foundations, Matt. 7:21-29. Right choices, Josh. 24:14-25. Early training, 2 Tim. 1:3-14. A strong purpose, Dan. 1:8-21. First things first, Matt. 6:19-34. Right materials, 1 Cor. 3:1-15. Providence overruling, Luke 15:11-24. The wise thing to do, Eccl. 12:1-14.

Life and Conduct Setting: First. As to Rebekah we see: 1. Lack of faith in God. 2. Failing in her duty as wife and mother. 3. Spoiling what might have been a happy home. 4. Another deception and another to cover up the first. 5. Suffering for her wrongdoing. Second. As to Esau we see: 1. He did not appreciate his birthright. 2. He married heathen wives. 3. He sold his birthright for a meal of victuals. 4. He was a murderer at heart, for he purposed to kill Jacob. Third. As to Jacob we see: 1. It was prophesied that he should be first. 2. But it was wrong for him to sin in order to get the first place. 3. One lie demands another till he is completely tangled. 4. He is driven from home without money or friends.

THREE BAD BARGAINS.

How a Home was Spoiled. What a pleasant home Isaac had! I do not mean the building, for he had only a tent such as we sometimes live in when we go on a vacation. But the building or tent does not make the home; it is rather the people in it. When they are all good and love each other, how happy they are. Now here was Isaac, the good son of the great and good Abraham, with beautiful Rebekah for a wife. Ask your mamma to tell you how Isaac came to find Rebekah. Then there were two boys, twins, named Esau and Jacob. Isaac loved Esau, but Rebekah loved Jacob more, and so trouble came into the home. Then Isaac was a little lax in his authority and Rebekah was a little too ambitious, and this led to more trouble.

Home Building. "Love for all of us is an endless succession of forgiveness," says a writer who takes a sweet and wholesome view of family life. "We built our house with our smiles and tears, but mostly with our wits, which we sharpened on each other with great good feeling." The love that can give and take, that will not make mountains out of molehills, nor grave offenses out of passing moods, that refuses to carry today's small neglect or unreasonableness over into tomorrow's sunshine, that recognizes itself as very human and does not expect angels in human companions, is the sort of love the world needs. This blessed everyday affection, with the saving sense of humor that does not mistake comedy for tragedy and is able to clear the atmosphere with a laugh, does indeed build homes. It builds the strong, tender, happy family life that is at once the world's wealth and its hope.—Great Thoughts.

A Man's Bad Bargain. Jacob and Esau had grown to be men, but they still acted like boys. Esau was a hunter and Jacob was a shepherd. One day Esau came home tired and hungry and he brought no game with him. He found Jacob making some soup.

It smelled good to the hungry boy, and he asked him for some. Jacob said, "I'll give you some if you will trade me your birthright." Now a birthright was the right to have twice as much as any other child had from the parents, and the right also to be the head of the family. This belonged to Esau. Jacob was tricky and took advantage of Esau's hunger to make him sell this birthright for something to eat. Esau agreed to it, for he thought he might die and so lose both life and birthright. He liked what he could get at once, and the birthright seemed so far off. He did not stop to think what his act really meant. He was sorry enough for it, when it was too late. Many people are like Esau, for they choose some earthly pleasure even though they lose Heaven by it. A time will surely come when such people will be sorry as Esau was. When he found that Jacob had the blessing of his father, he cried out, "O, my father, bless me, even me also," but Isaac could not take the blessing from Jacob.

Bad Bargains. Once a Sabbath school teacher remarked that he who buys the truth makes a good bargain, and inquired if any scholar recollected an instance in Scripture of a bad bargain.

"I do," replied a boy. "Esau made a bad bargain when he sold his birthright for a mess of pottage."

A second said: "Judas made a bad bargain when he sold his Lord for thirty pieces of silver."

A third boy said: "Our Lord tells us that he makes a bad bargain who, to gain the whole world, loses his own soul."

I have seen a good many boys in my time who have made bad bargains. Some change the Sunday school for the street, and home for wicked company, and the Bible for books, and health for tobacco. They always get the worst of it. Boys, look out for these bad bargains.

A Mother's Bad Bargain. Rebekah was a beautiful woman, but she did a great wrong both to Isaac and to Jacob. Isaac had sent Esau to kill a deer and make a dinner for him; and he promised that he would then give him the birthright blessing. Rebekah was anxious for Jacob to have this blessing, so she planned to deceive Isaac, who was old and blind. She told Jacob to run quickly and kill two kids of the flock that she might make a dinner for Isaac. Jacob was afraid his father would know him, but Rebekah urged him on and said she would take all the blame. She dressed Jacob in Esau's clothes and put the skins of the kids on his wrists and neck to be like Esau, who was a hairy man. All this was a bad bargain, and they both suffered for it afterwards. In the picture you can see how careful Rebekah is to make Jacob look like Esau. She did this to carry out her selfish plans.

The Bishop of Cambridge once gave a lesson in "Christian grammar" to a class he was teaching. He said: "We have all learned to say in school: First Person, I; Second Person, Thou; Third Person, He.

But that is wrong in Christian grammar, so wrong that to put it right one has to turn it quite upside down. The Christian's grammar is:

First Person, He; Second Person, Thou; Third Person, I.

And 'He' means God, the first person in the first place. Then 'Thou' means one's fellow man; and 'I' myself comes last."

Rebekah and Esau and Jacob all needed to learn this lesson of putting God first and self last.

Another Bad Bargain. Jacob sinned first when he urged Esau to sell his birthright to him. He sinned again when he yielded to his mother's plan to deceive Isaac. Notice it gets easier and easier to sin. When he brings the meal and pretends that he is Esau, Isaac asks him how he was able to come so soon. Jacob said that it was because the Lord helped him. Then Isaac felt of Jacob's hands and he said, "The voice is the voice of Jacob, but the hands are the hands of Esau." To be very sure about it, Isaac asked him, "Art thou Esau?" and Jacob replied, "I am." How soon the trick turned into a lie, and how many lies grow from the first one.

"Strange that young man can't make the business go!" Yes, it was strange at first thought. He seemed to be so hard working and industrious and the business itself was one the town could afford to support. What ailed him, that trade dwindled and nobody appeared to like his painstaking work. At last the reason was discovered. People found out that he was a mere pretender, and that he was stealing the good will and trade of another firm, so they refused to patronize him.

Good Use of Bad Bargains. It was God's plan that Jacob should have the first place, for Esau was not worthy. But this was no excuse for any of the bad bargains. We should not do wrong even to help on a good work, or to secure a right end. God plans right things and He can always find right ways to do them. But if wrong ways are used as here, God can make them work out His plan. It was wrong for Rebekah and Esau and Jacob to do as they did; but God is greater than all, and He makes even their wrong acts work out His good plans.

Best Bargains in Life. What are the best things in life? They are those that last. The quiet happiness of years may be sacrificed for the pleasure of a moment, but it is a bad bargain. The enduring treasures are in the end the best. Those treasures that affect us directly are better than those that are only slightly connected with us. The life is more than meat, and the body is more than raiment. Most of all we must remember that those things that minister to our higher nature are important. Health is better than wealth; but love is better still, for it ministers to the soul. The man who has a hundred friends is as if he had a hundred hearts, for fellowship expands the soul.—Exchange.

Quiz and Study. 1. Tell some things which a boy or girl can't afford to do. 2. Jacob betrayed Isaac by a kiss. Who in the New Testament used the kiss for a worse betrayal? 3. How many instances here of lying and deception? 4. In what two ways was Jacob afterward deceived himself regarding his wife and children? 5. What mother in the New Testament had a wrong ambition for her two sons? What were the son's names?

Challenge Text. Wherefore let him that thinketh he — take heed lest he —. 1 Cor. 10: (?).

Practical Lessons for Mind and Heart. 1. It is never right to do evil that good may come. 2. God could have given Jacob the blessing without the wicked help of Esau and Rebekah. 3. No home is safe without love and the forgiving spirit in it. 4. It is the very worst policy to sell one's self to do evil. 5. Lost opportunity cannot be recovered, but one may thereby profit for the future. 6. The promise of present good often cheats us of the better and best of the future. 7. The home is a college for character building and the parents are the teachers. 8. To succeed by lying and trickery is the worst kind of failure. 9. The mother makes or mars the home, for she is its queen. 10. Better put the brakes on that tendency to cunning and sharp practice.

Historical Setting: Time, B. C. 1760. Place, Beer-sheba and Bethel. Persons, Jacob and the angels.

Scripture Setting: Gracious Visions. Vision of Daniel, Dan. 10:4-19. Vision of Isaiah, Isa. 6:1-13. Vision of Paul, 2 Cor. 12:1-10. Vision of John, Rev. 1:9-20. Vision of Job, Job 33:14-30. Vision of the prodigal, Luke 15:11-24. God a helper, Heb. 13:5-14. God a keeper, Psa. 121.

Life and Conduct Setting: This vision picture of Jacob is full of the gracious revelations of God to man. 1. God reveals Himself in spite of the human weaknesses, wilfulness and sin. 2. God reveals a way of escape from life's mistakes and troubles. 3. God reveals the future as connected with the present and springing from it by His overruling providences. 4. God reveals Himself as a God of the individual, adapting His mercy and grace to every conceivable condition of life. The pronouns “thee,” “thy,” “thou,” and equivalents are found nearly a score of times. 5. God reveals Himself as the object of worship, as worthy of worship, and as helping the soul to worship and praise. 6. God reveals himself as working with and for man in the fullest co-operation and partnership.

A DREAM PICTURE OF JESUS CHRIST.

The Lonely Wanderer. That is a beautiful hymn someone has written, “There Is No Place Like Home.” No matter how humble or how poorly furnished, home is the place of all places. But how would you like to be driven away from your home? That is what happened to Jacob, and even his own mother told him he had better go. He had done wrong to Esau, his brother, and Esau was real angry and threatened to kill him. Jacob was tricky, and always looking out for himself. He coaxed Esau to sell his birthright to him. This was a double share of the family estate that always went to the oldest son. Then he had also deceived Isaac, his father, and so secured the father's blessing. His mother had persuaded and helped him to practice this deception. She now sends him away to stay awhile with her brother, Laban—a journey of nearly five hundred miles. He has tramped nearly fifty miles, and is thoroughly tired and discouraged. The sun has set again, and he looks about for a place to sleep. He has nothing with him but a loose wrap, and a small bag with a bottle of olive oil in it, and a few things to eat. He throws himself down on the ground, and lays his head on one of the stones for a pillow. Will anybody, anybody think of him? I expect he said to himself, “Oh, how foolish I was!” Jacob knew that his own sin and selfishness had brought him there.

A Man's Worst Enemy. A man's greatest enemy is himself. All the time “self” insistently makes its selfish demands, wants this, desires that, craves the other thing, utterly blind and careless regarding the moral effect. The mortal self is unmoral when it is not immoral. Therefore Christ has taught us to deny ourselves, to say “No” decisively, finally, persistently to the demands of “self.” Now, if one is to stop thinking of self, one must fill the mind with thoughts of others. Life must have a centre—self or Christ. One may be saved from self, which is selfishness, only by a firm decision to follow in the steps of Jesus, and by seeking always to do “what He would have us do.”—R. P. Anderson.

The Heavens Opened. In that warm climate, the light fading away by degrees, Jacob lies and thinks. He may remember some of the great promises made to his father, Isaac, and to his grandfather, Abraham. Along this very way his grandfather had come once. It is a hilly country, and he may have heard the wild animals howling as he tries to sleep. He has snatches of sleep, and again and again he sees the rows of hills rising up to the clouds. At last he falls into a sound sleep. Then a very wonderful thing happens. He dreams of a ladder which reaches from earth to Heaven. Its foot is just where he lies, and it goes up, up, step by step, far into the clouds. Now there are angels moving on it, some going up and some coming down. How beautiful that all seems to him, and he may have wished that it was really for him. Suddenly he hears a voice and it comes from a glorious figure at the top of the ladder. This is none other than God Himself in the person of Christ, and He is speaking to Jacob. He can hardly believe it possible, for he feels that he has done wrong and is unworthy. But what does the Christ say from the opening heavens?

God's Way With Sinful Man. Phil had done wrong, and his mother punished him by making him sleep three nights alone in the attic. The father kept thinking of him, and wondering about him. He did this the next night, and the third night. At last he said, "Mother, I can't stand this any longer; I'm going upstairs with Phil." And he took his pillow and went softly out of the room, and up the attic stairs, and pressed the latch very softly so as not to wake the boy if he were asleep, and tiptoed across the attic floor to the corner by the window, and there Phil lay—wide awake, with something glistening in his eyes, and what looked like stains on his cheeks. And the father got down between the sheets with the boy, and their tears got mixed upon each other's cheeks. Then they slept. You know, I think that father is the best picture of God I ever saw. God couldn't take away sin. It is here. He could not take away suffering out of kindness to man. For suffering is sin's index finger saying, "There's something wrong here." So He came down in the person of His Son Jesus Christ, and lay down alongside of man for three days and three nights. That's God. And He comes and puts His life alongside of yours and mine, and makes us hate the bad, and long to be pure.

A Wonderful Promise. Here is what God said to Jacob: "I am the Lord, the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, your father. I will be your God, too. The land where you are lying shall belong to you and to your children after you." He also told him that his children, and his children's children, should spread over all lands, East and West, and North and South; and that they should be as the dust of the earth for number. And all the world should be blessed by them. God promised to go with him in his journeys, to come back with him here, and be with him always. All this was very, very wonderful to Jacob. We can see that it was to be fulfilled in and by Jesus Christ, who was to come from the family of Jacob. The ladder connecting earth with Heaven was a type or picture of Christ. The great multitude of Jacob's descendants included all those who accepted Christ as a Saviour. Those who loved and served Christ and called themselves Christians were to be a blessing to all the nations of all the earth. In the morning Jacob said, "Surely the Lord is in this place and I did not know it. This is the house of God and the gate of Heaven." He knew it was a dream, or vision, but he knew also that it was true, and that God had really spoken to him. He was in great fear, because God came near to him; but he was also very glad, and greatly comforted.

Lord, I Will Do It. Did Jacob thank God for this wonderful promise? Yes, in a very marked way. He had a bottle of olive oil with him, that he ate with his meals. He took one of the largest stones, stood it on end, and poured some of the oil on it. This was in memory of God's gracious dealing with him, and to honor Him. He did more than this, he made a solemn pledge that if God would take care of him on this journey, and give him food to eat and clothes to wear, he would give to God a tenth of all he might have all his life. This was a great pledge for Jacob to make, and showed that he was anxious to prove his love to God. He called the place Bethel, which means "house of God." This was always a dear spot to Jacob and when he came back to Canaan he built an altar there. After this wonderful dream Jacob is prospered in his journey and comes to the land of Laban, and finds a home, and works for many years for a wife. This Bethel vision and that vow "then shall the Lord be my God," were the turning points in his life.

The "I Will" of Salvation. When the Master asked the sick man, "Wilt thou be made whole?" and the invalid answered, "I will," he accepted Christ's offer of health, did he not? So when Christ offers to save us if we will let Him do the work, and we reply, "I will," we have accepted Him. Accepting Christ is simply deciding to let Him heal us of the disease of sin. He is a physician; we must follow His directions; that is all. Do not think that accepting Christ is something mysterious and hard. He is asking, "Wilt thou?" Answer, "I will," and it is done.—R. P. Anderson.

Quiz and Study. 1. Who was to blame for Jacob being driven from home? Who else? Who else? 2. How is "the ladder" a picture of Christ? 3. Name three traits in Jacob's character. 4. How far was Haran from Beersheba, and why did Jacob go there? 5. In what four ways does Christ unite Heaven and earth? 6. On what occasions did voices come from Heaven to Christ?

Challenge Text. "Hereafter ye shall see — open and the — of God ascending and — upon the — of man." John 1:(?).

Practical Thoughts. 1. Sin separates man from God, and also from his fellow man, and makes him a wanderer like Cain. 2. God can find and meet man in the most unlikely places. 3. A man may have only the ground for a bed, and stones for a pillow, and yet have Heaven open to him. 4. No life is satisfactory without the revelation and inspiration of Heaven. 5. The gracious and supreme inspiration of God's mercy is that it reveals itself to the needy and sinful. 6. "Ladder" is suggestive of many things man can and must do—as watch, walk, step, use, hold, struggle. 7. Whenever and howsoever God may speak it is becoming and important for man to hear.

THE PRAYER OF JACOB

BY DORE

Jacob was the son of Isaac, who was the son of Abraham. Jacob's elder brother, Esau, had, in a foolish moment, when hungry, sold his birthright to his younger brother Jacob, all for a dish of pottage. Esau did not comprehend the value of the Lord's promise, that the offspring of Abraham and Isaac should become a mighty nation, under the special care and favor of God.

So Esau became a wanderer. He had many children and from them came a mighty race, but they could no longer be God's people. Jacob and his great family were shepherds and as he returned to his own country, he found himself in Esau's immediate neighborhood. He naturally felt that his outcast brother would be his enemy. Jacob prayed earnestly to God for protection, saying: "Deliver me from the hand of my brother, from the hand of Esau, for I fear him, lest he will come and smite me, and the mother with the children."

Jacob was a good deal frightened by the approach of his brother when messengers, who were sent to examine the conditions, reported that Esau had a following of four hundred armed men. Jacob divided his people into two parties, placing them so that should one be destroyed, the other could escape. Also, Jacob sent important presents of sheep and cattle, with slaves, to Esau, which gifts were accompanied by many compliments and peace-making words.

This incident furnishes the artist material for a picture. It is night, the camels and the people are resting, while Jacob kneels by the shore and opens his heart to Heaven. The camels looming in huge form against the sky indicate the wandering life, and the sleeping people suggest that Jacob could find the Almighty anywhere and pray to Him. By the way, Esau's heart was not hardened, and he became very friendly with his younger brother, Jacob, who had coaxed away his birthright.

THE PRAYER OF JACOB.

PAUL GUSTAVE DORÉ. 1833-1883.

Gustave Doré was a man who, without a lesson, without a model, unable to sketch from nature, solely by the power of an inward sight and imagination unequalled, did with ease a series of works that for variety, number, and expression of dramatic power has been approached by the productions of no other man.

Born at Strasburg in 1833, the son of a civil engineer, from the earliest years he manifested ability with the pencil. At fifteen he was taken to Paris by his father. Here they saw the announcement of "The Labors of Hercules" illustrated, in the office windows of the "Journal pour Rire." Some of the proposed illustrations were shown. The youthful Gustave knew he could do better, but spoke not.

The book was as the tale of his own life to him, he had lived so intensely in its pages. The next morning in the absence of his father, he produced half a dozen pictures. Hurrying to the office of the "Journal," he shouldered his way past office boys and attendants to the presence of the director, M. Philipon, himself. Spreading the pictures before him, the boy cried as one having authority: "Behold, monsieur, that is the way the labors of the Hercules should be illustrated."

Astonished at the masterliness of the work, another editor was called to view it. Gustave was requested to draw another sketch before them. He did so. Immediately the lad was engaged for three years at a salary of five thousand francs yearly. Upon this followed a career that for productivity and distinguished honor few men have equaled.

At eighteen, he held his first exhibition in the salon of Paris. The drawings for Dante's Inferno were produced in Doré's twenty-second year, and many reckon them his greatest work.

As to all artists of consummate power, the Bible soon presented itself as a theme for his mightiest work. From Genesis to Revelation, with imaginative power and realization unequalled, the artist illustrated themes and stories that for so long have made and modelled the lives of men and women the world over. Presently various of the Bible pictures were enlarged into immense canvasses, some of them twenty feet long and twelve feet high. These, exhibited in London, and some years after in New York and Chicago, produced an impression on the religious temper of the time: a bringing home to many a personal realization of the Bible stories, such as no speaker or writer ever known had accomplished. Men and women came before the "Christ Leaving the Praetorium" and the "Ecce Homo" as before the Savior Himself—often with tears, often going upon their knees—so powerfully had the artist on his canvasses shown forth the stories of Holy Writ.

In England, Doré received the greatest honor from the good Queen Victoria, the Prince of Wales (afterwards Edward VII) and the nobility.

Doré never married. He lived in close companionship with his mother. Between the two was a deep and tender affection, in which the son shared with the mother every achievement, every triumph, every inspiration. And Madame Doré was a woman big enough to understand her son.

He received honors from both the English and French governments. In 1861 France awarded him the cross of the Legion of Honor, and in 1879 he was made a chevalier of the order. Among English speaking people the world over as well as in France and on the continent his name was well-nigh universal. Love and respect from friends innumerable were his.

But Doré sorrowed secretly over the jealous gibes and sneers of his fellow artists in France. Embittered by his success and mastery; angry that a man should be able without schooling, to do with ease what but few of them could do only with slowness and painful hesitation, they united in depreciation of his work.

His mother and friends sought vainly to rally him from despondency. In 1881 his mother died. Presently, in Paris, in 1883 her son followed her, aged fifty years.

THE SCRIPTURE LESSON IS GEN. 32:1-30.

Prayer: O Lord, Guide us through this tangled world. Help us against our besetting sins, and save us from self-seeking and self-delusion. May we learn the merciful meaning of Thy denials and refusals. May we surrender ourselves entirely to Thee. For Christ's sake. Amen.

"I know not the way I am going,
But well do I know my Guide:
With a childlike trust I give my hand
To the mighty Friend at my side.
The only thing that I say to Him,
As He takes it, is, 'Hold it fast;
Suffer me not to lose my way,
And bring me home at last.'"

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, B. C. 1739. Place, Peniel, meaning "Face of God." Persons, Jacob and his family and servants, and the angel.

Scripture Setting: A Study of Prayer. Nature of prayer, Luke 11:1-13. The Lord nigh in prayer, Ps. 145:1-21. Pray, pray, pray, Luke 18:1-8. Gideon and prayer, Judg. 6:11-24. Peter's prayer answered, Acts 9:32-43. Encouragement to prayer, Matt. 7:1-11. Urged by denial and delay, Matt. 15:22-28. Moses in prayer, Exod. 33:7-23. Daniel's prayer, Dan. 9:15-27. The Lord's prayer, Matt. 6:9-13. The Holy Spirit's help, Rom. 8:15-28.

Life and Conduct Setting: This struggle of Jacob with the angel is an object lesson of the soul's prayer relations to God. The conditions of prevailing prayer are seen to be: 1. A sense of need and peril; 2. Willingness to do what one can do himself; 3. Trusting in, and pleading God's promise and purpose; 4. Gratitude and thanksgiving for mercies already received; 5. Specific appeal and petition; 6. Alone with God and fully surrendered to Him; 7. Persistent and determined until the answer comes.

"With thee all night I mean to stay,
And wrestle till the break of day."

AN ALL-NIGHT WRESTLING MATCH.

God Prospers Jacob. What a lot of people in the first three pictures here! They are all good looking too; I wonder if they are all good. This is Jacob's family, and they are coming back to Canaan, because God told them to. They are bringing all their sheep and cattle and servants with them also. Laban, Jacob's father-in-law, did not like it at first, and went after them to make them come back. But after they had talked together, they agreed to separate as friends, for God had said to Laban in a dream, "Don't do any harm to Jacob." They were friends after that.

The Old Sin Again. As Jacob comes near Canaan he learns that Esau, his brother, is coming to meet him with a band of four hundred armed men. This makes Jacob tremble, for he remembers how he cheated Esau, and deceived both him and his father. Jacob is sorry now for his sins, but he really can't blame Esau for being angry at him. When people sin they seem to forget that God knows it, and that their sin will follow them and be an enemy to them. If they would remember that God's eye was on them they would be more careful.

"Can't God Count?" Two children were carrying a basket of cakes to their grandmother. When their eyes saw the tempting cakes their mouths fairly watered. After counting them over several times they almost made up their minds to eat just one of them. Nobody would know.

Just as they were ready to take one the little girl looked up into her brother's face, and thoughtfully asked the matter-of-fact question, "Can't God count?"

This settled the matter immediately, and all the little cakes were carried to their grandmother.

Planning and Praying. This brook you see in the picture is called Jabbok. Jacob stops on the bank to think what he had better do. At last he divides the family into two companies, so that if one is taken, the other can flee. One of his boys he is careful to put in the second company, because he is safer there. This is Joseph, the boy he loves most. Then he makes up several droves of sheep and cattle, as presents for Esau. He sends these, one after another, with servants; and tells them each to say to Esau "This is a present from your brother, Jacob." Then he prays an earnest, humble prayer—that God would protect him and his family. This is a very different prayer from the one he offered at Bethel, when he tried to make a bargain with God. The right way is to ask God to care for us, in whatever way will please Him. God can make even our enemies friendly if we ask Him. There are many things He can do for us, if we would only ask Him. He waits for us to show that we need His help and desire it. Sometimes we are afraid of what other people will say or think. But even the worst people will come to respect those who pray.

Don't Give Up. Tom was a Christian boy who had gone away to college. He was accustomed to pray at night. But when he knelt at his bed to pray his companions laughed and pelted him with shoes. Unmoved, the manly little fellow finished his prayers and stepped into bed. The next night and the next he did the same thing, but by the third evening there was no ridicule, and here and there about the room other boys who had hitherto been cowardly and had said their prayers in bed knelt down as Tom did. If you are doing a right thing, go on with it in the face of opposition. Remember the saying that "one with God is a majority."

The Mysterious Angel. After Jacob had sent away the presents to Esau, he sent his family over the brook. He remained alone to pray, and it was night. Then a strange thing happened. A man took hold of him and tried to throw him. Jacob was strong, and he wrestled with him, and held his own against him. They kept it up all night, as you see in the picture. At last the stranger touched Jacob on his thigh, as you can see, and he was made lame. He could wrestle no longer, and he knew then it was an angel of God. He was too weak to stand, but he clung to the angel. The angel wanted to go, but Jacob said "I will not let thee go except thou bless me." The angel said, "What is thy name?" He answered, "Jacob." This means "supplanter," and really was a confession by Jacob that he had been a sinner. For he had sinned against Esau and his father, Isaac, as we know. The angel knew that Jacob was sorry now, and he said, "I will give you a new name—Israel." This means "a prince of God." Jacob called the place Peniel, which means "face of God." Jacob was lame ever afterwards, but he was changed from being a shrewd and tricky man, to be good, generous and noble. This was done by the power of God through His Spirit, and is really wonderful.

Changed by the Spirit. Do you know how the costly Bessemer steel is made? The metal is placed in the melting pot and blasts of air forced up through it by powerful machinery. Before this process it lies there only a great lump of comparatively worthless metal. But after the air has been driven through its every pore and it has been fused, it becomes a new creation and is the most valuable form of steel it ever can be. So you and I need the breath of the Spirit of God to be put into us before we will ever be really worth anything for Him.

Brothers Meet Again. It is more than twenty years since Jacob left home, with Esau as his enemy. Now he meets him, and finds him friendly. I think God answered Jacob's prayer. He did even better than protect him, for He changed Esau to be a friend. Perhaps God whispered to Esau, as He did to Laban, "Don't do any harm to Jacob." They met and kissed each other, and afterwards were always friends.

Then God told Jacob to go to Bethel, where he had the ladder dream. There he built an altar and worshipped God, Who said to him again, "Your name is not Jacob now, but Israel." God promised him that he should be the father of nations. It is no wonder that he was prospered, for God told him what to do, where to go and how to act. Soon after this Benjamin was born, and Rachel dies. Isaac also dies, 180 years old, and Jacob and Esau bury him. Esau goes to the land of Edom, but Jacob stays in Canaan, going from place to place with his flocks. One of the results of his early wrong-doing was that he never saw his mother after he left home.

Quiz and Study. 1. Tell about the remarkable ladder dream Jacob had when he left home. 2. Where did Jacob go, and how long did he stay there, and why did he leave? 3. Name Jacob's wives, and how long did he work for them? 4. How many children did he have now, and name some of them. 5. Which one did he love best and why? 6. Why was Jacob afraid of Esau? 7. How did God prosper Jacob and care for him?

Challenge Text. "Ask, and it shall be ———; seek, and ye shall ———; knock, and it shall be — — —." Matt. 7: (?)

Practical Lessons. 1. True strength is not in human skill and cunning, but in knowing and doing God's will. 2. The Divine favor and blessing are of more importance than all else. 3. Prayer for temporal and family blessings leads to prayer for the spiritual and world-wide interests. 4. He who feels most unworthy is really most worthy in God's sight and most able to receive from God. 5. The crisis-battles of life are at the place and time of prayer. 6. The true prayer prompts one to do his own best planning and working. 7. When the soul confesses its weakness it is then strong in and with God. By yielding to Christ we secure Christ's love and favor. 8. Prayer at its best is the earnest exercise of one's powers of heart as wrestling exercises the physical powers. 9. Jacob conquered Esau by prayer before he won by gifts and pleas. 10. True conversion is a complete surrender and to reserve anything, however small, is to cast suspicion on one's sincerity. 11. The new name means a new heart, a new life, a new hope, a new power, a new future.

JOSEPH SOLD INTO EGYPT

BY SCHOPIN

Of Jacob's twelve sons, the two youngest were the children of one mother; whereas the older boys were not their full brothers, and, being men of mature years, had but little sympathy for these two youngest. The names of the two were Joseph and Benjamin; very sincerely loved of their aged father. They must have been very lovable lads, and of keen intellect. The older brothers were made more hostile because in Joseph's dreams he saw the older brothers his servants. So they hated Joseph. These older brothers, seeking pasturage for their flocks and herds, were abroad in the country. In the meantime, Jacob made a pet of Joseph and gave him a coat of many colors, probably a fine, oriental weave of superb pattern such as we see now in museums. Joseph was sent out by his father to visit the brothers and report to him the conditions. But the elder brothers were angry because of the favor of the father toward Joseph. When he came they stripped him of his fine coat and threw him into a dry pit, for safe keeping.

It so happened that a party of traders passed, on their way to Egypt. The brothers sold Joseph to them and they carried him off to the far-away country. In order to explain to the father his absence, they dipped his fine coat in the blood of a kid and said that a wild beast had torn him.

Our picture is by a highly trained artist, named Schopin. He was educated to paint graceful figures not always too accurately. We see Joseph in underclothing only, the traveling merchants having him in charge, and one of the brothers paying money to another group. Besides this important group, there are women sitting about full of curiosity at this event, and in the background are the usual camels and tent and all the picturesque trappings incident to such an oriental scene.

JOSEPH SOLD BY HIS BRETHERN.

HENRI F. SCHOPIN. 1804-1880.

"Ah, my son, it was so the trumpets sounded: ta-ran-ta-ra. And the drums rolled and rattled like to the thunder upon a summer evening; and the shouting of the people was as the roaring of the wind in a great tempest. Round about him rode the great cuirassiers of the guard upon their beautiful black horses—so splendid did they look. And in the midst he rode, that quiet, little proud man, so pale, with such quiet eyes, under brows that overhung them as does an eagle's when he looks at you—the great Napoleon—the little corporal himself. He that day was proclaimed emperor of the French, and that day were you born."

Round-eyed, wondering, the little French lad listened to his father's account of the great event.

Who knows the length of childhood's thought!

Some time after, little Henri's mother, coming to his father, quietly working over the clockface he was engraving, waited till the father had turned a difficult curve and with triumphant aplomb struck the last twisted chip of metal from the point of his graver, and said: "It is the little Henri. He does this; and they are pictures of soldiers."

Father Schopin put down his engraving tool, and with professional appreciation, scanned the scrawlings. "All children draw soldiers," said he. "It is the most natural thing they do, with them passing every day."

"But these are not the same as other children's soldiers," insisted the mother.

"True," reflected the father, as he noted the certainty with which the plumed warriors sat their prancing steeds, "but let us not look for too much. It is better that he be a good ornament of clock faces and content, than an indifferent painter and unhappy. Anyway, it is as the good God wills, and it keeps him from mischief, wife." And the engraver turned to his work, whistling thoughtfully.

Little Henri went to school, and between his lessons drew yet more soldiers, and with them all other things he might see in the streets of Paris. A few years more passed, and then Henri, a growing lad, was surprised by his father, in deep absorption over a sheet of paper. The father took the sheet. "And what is this, my son?"

"That is my birthday," shyly responded the lad.

Upon the sheet, drawn in charcoal, amid processionally grouped horsemen panoplied in cuirass and crested helmet, was a modest figure of an unmistakable identity that dominated the entire group. The power and movement of the assemblage was notable even to a non-critical eye.

From the drawing to the boy the father looked with a grave pride. "Of a truth, my son, this is thy birthday. Thou shalt be an artist."

Some time after, Jean Gros, the great military and historical painter, who had devotedly followed the only Napoleon through his Italian campaigns, and painted many famous pictures of them, was waited upon at his studio in Paris by the clockface engraver.

"It is my son, m'sieu," politely explained the engraver, presenting the boy, who bowed as French children do on presentation, his eager eyes meanwhile roving round the studio walls. "It is my desire that he should learn to be an artist—a painter. May I ask you to accept him as a student?"

Balancing his palette and brushes upon his left hand, the painter made a deprecatory gesture. "Much better make an engraver or a stone mason of him," he said, kindly. "He may not be heard of, but he will not be envied, and will have a better chance to be content in life."

"M'sieu, it is impossible," stated the father. "Look at this," and he handed M. Gros the boy's composition of Napoleon amid the cuirassiers of the guard.

"Ah, ah," meditated M. Gros. "Why did you not produce this first, good sir? We would not have wasted time."

Henri became a student under Gros, and took all that his master had to give him. In 1830 he gained the Grand Prix de Rome, of the Academy of Fine Arts in Paris. This is a prize given yearly to the most successful competitor in the several departments of painting, sculpture, engraving, architecture, and music. The successful contestants become the pensioners of the French government for four years. They are sent to reside at Rome in the Villa Medici, the headquarters of the French Academy of Art founded in Rome by Louis XIV. in 1666. In the same year that he gained the Roman prize, Schopin began to exhibit at the yearly salon of the Academie des Beaux Arts, and from then onward to his death in 1880, a period of fifty years, was a constant and noted exhibitor.

His most notable pictures are: "Last Moments of the Cenci" (Donai Museum), "Battle of Hohenlinden" (Metz Museum), "Jacob and Laban" (Toulouse Museum), "Portrait of Cambaceres," "Portrait of Marshal Vidal," "The Taking of Antioch" (all in the Museum at Versailles), "The Queen of Sheba at the Court of Solomon," "Jacob Going to Recover His Son in Egypt," "Joseph Sold into Egypt," and a line of pictures illustrating the legend at St. Saturninus for the chapel of the saint at Fontainebleau.

Prayer: O Lord, Give needed gifts and graces to parents and children in the home. Keep us from the little sins which may grow other sins and curses. Hold us back from all passion and hate which may bring grief to ourselves and others. Help us to endure trial, resist temptation, forgive enemies. For Christ's sake. Amen.

"We go our ways in life too much alone,
We hold ourselves too far from all our kind;

They lead us by upon 'the other side.'"

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, B. C. 1729. Places, Hebron, where Jacob lived, and Dothan, seventy miles away, where Joseph was sold. Persons, Jacob, Joseph, the ten brothers, Ishmaelites.

Scripture Setting: A Study of Sin. The sin of Cain, Gen. 4:1-15. The sin of Aaron, Num. 12:1-15. The sin of Saul, 1 Sam. 18:1-16. The sin of Haman, Esth. 5:1-14. The sin of the Jews, John 15:17-27. The sin of Judas, Luke 22:1-6. The enormity of sin, Isa. 59:1-15. The curse of sin, Jer. 17:1-11. Prayer for sin, Ps. 69:1-15. Prayer for the sinner, Ps. 51.

Life and Conduct Setting: The Scripture gives us a vivid picture of the fearful workings of sin in the heart and life. 1. Sin's home and castle: the human heart. 2. Sin's channels and agents: a parent's thoughtless love, a boy's innocent boast, evil companions. 3. Sin's antecedents and connections: the deceiver is now deceived. 4. Sin's selfish and unnatural action: selling a brother into slavery. 5. Sin's large and ugly brood: envy, jealousy, deceit, hypocrisy, conspiracy, avarice, murder (in thought). 6. Sin's terrible consequences: heart grief, terror of conscience, sufferings of Joseph. 7. Sin's failure to thwart God: is rather made to work out his purpose.

A GOOD BOY SOLD BY HIS BROTHERS.

Love and Hate. Jacob, who was renamed Israel, was living in Canaan. He had twelve children, and two of them he loved more than the others. This was because they were the children of Rachel, the wife he loved best, and who was now dead.

Of these two boys, Joseph was his special favorite. Benjamin, the other one, was almost a baby. Joseph was seventeen years old, and was with his father most of the time. Sometimes he went with the older boys, and he told his father some of the wicked things they did. His brothers hated him for this. About this time Jacob made Joseph a beautiful coat of many different colors, like princes often wore. In the first pictures you can see some of the children. At first they all look good, but after awhile the faces of some of them began to change, because they had been doing wrong. When sin gets into the heart it soon begins to show itself in the eye and face. In the group of ten you can see a difference in the faces. Jacob and Joseph look happy as the new coat is put on him. It did look a little partial for the father to dress up Joseph so, and he was sorry for it afterwards. It was right for Jacob to love Joseph, but wrong for him to show it in that way. So this made the older boys hate him. Then Joseph had some strange dreams. He told these to his brothers and they hated him still more. You can read about these dreams in the Bible. His father wondered about them and thought they might come true some time.

The Face Talks. "I didn't say a single word," said Annie Barton to her mother, who was reproving her for her unamiable temper. "I know you didn't, Annie; but your face talked." What volumes our faces tell! Some speak of love and kindness, some of anger and hatred, others of pride and rebellion, and others still of selfishness and vanity. How does your face talk?

Cast Into a Pit. Sometimes these older boys would get far away from home, taking the flocks where the grass was good. One day Jacob told Joseph to go and find them and bring him word again. Joseph obeyed, and went away wearing his beautiful coat. Neither one thought it would be so many years before they saw each other again. When Joseph had walked nearly fifty miles without finding them, a man told him that he would find them at Dothan, about fifteen miles further. See how good and glad he looks, as he sees his brothers off yonder. Are they glad to see him? No; they say at once, "See, that dreamer comes." "Let's kill him and then we will see what becomes of his dreams." So they strip his coat off as you see, and lower him by ropes into a pit; one of the wells which had no water in it. This they did because Reuben said it would be better than to kill him. Reuben hoped to come later and get him out and take him home. Poor Joseph! He pleads for his life, for his father's sake too; but those wicked men are too strong for him. They did not think then that God was stronger than they were, and He was watching over Joseph. But they let their grudge against Joseph grow and grow till it became a hate that would kill him. One comes to be very much as he thinks.

Keep Out the Bad. That bad thought has no more right in your mind than a pig in your playroom, or a snake in your bedroom. You may think you can not stop it, but you can; as it is only a bad habit you have fallen into, and you must break it, or it will break you. You must get the mastery of your own mind, and the control of your own thoughts. It will be the hardest battle you will ever have to fight, but it will be the most glorious victory you will ever win.

Price of a Boy. What is a boy worth? We know what Jacob would say about Joseph. Soon we will learn, too, what God thought. But just now we see what these men thought their brother was worth. It seems that they sat down to dinner just as if nothing had happened. They may have been eating some of the very things which Joseph had brought. Anyway, while eating they look up and see a lot of men and camels. They are merchants and they are taking spices and other things down to Egypt to sell. See if you can name those different things in the pictures. Now, Judah speaks out and says, "Let's sell Joseph to these merchants. We won't make anything by letting him die." This pleased them all. So they drew Joseph up from the pit. He seems glad to get up again where the sunlight is. He soon finds what they want to do with him. The bargain is made and Joseph is sold for twenty pieces of silver. This is about $12.50 of our money. What a price for a bright good boy! This is better than to die in a pit; and God is still watching over him. It is always better to do right, and have God with you, even if it seems hard at the time.

Reuben was not with them when they sold Joseph. He was grieved when he learned what had happened, but it could not be helped then. The only way to avoid the consequence of our wrong-doing is to keep as far away from sin as possible.

The Edge of the Precipice. A gentleman wished to engage a coachman. In answer to his advertisement, two men presented themselves. "Are you a skilful driver?" he asked one of them. "Without boasting, I think I may say I am," replied the man. "How near do you think you could drive a team to the edge of a precipice, and not run off?" After a little hesitation, he answered: "Well, I think I may say within two feet. I have done it before now." To this last question the other man said: "I never try experiments of that kind, sir. I always keep just as far from precipices as possible, and then I know I am safe." "You are just the man I have been looking for," said the proprietor; "I shall feel perfectly safe in trusting my wife and daughters to the care of a coachman who always keeps just as far from danger as possible."

Lies To Cover Lies. Now they are wondering what they will say to their father. One said, "Let's pretend that we did not see Joseph at all." To this they all agreed, even Reuben not objecting. Then they kill a kid and dip the coat in the blood and bring it to Jacob and say, "We found this coat; see if you know whose it is." Jacob burst into tears and said, "It is my son's coat; a wild beast has eaten him." Ah! Jacob killed a kid one time to deceive his father. Now his boys do the same thing to deceive him. See how sin finds one out.

At such times those people put on a coarse kind of cloth, called "sackcloth"; and in this way Jacob mourned for Joseph. His sons pretended to comfort him; but he refused to be comforted, and said, "I will go down into the grave mourning." Benjamin was a great comfort to him, and he tried to be in the place of Joseph to his father. His name means, "son of the right hand," and I think he tried to be true to his name.

The ten brothers kept the dreadful secret to themselves. God knew it also, and He knew what He would do at last. How much of sin and grief are told in those last pictures of killing the kid, staining the coat, lying to Jacob and pretending they are sorry. But of it all nothing was hidden from God.

What to Do With Sin. Are covered sins safely hidden? Are they out of sight forever? Oh, no; be sure your sin will find you out. The word is not "Be sure your sin will be found out." It may not be found out in this world, but it will "find you out." It will plague you, spoil your happiness, make your life wretched. What shall we do about these wrong things we have done? Take them to Christ, and ask Him to forgive us and cleanse us. "The blood of Christ cleanseth us from all sin."

Quiz and Study. 1. Tell Joseph's dream about the sheaves; about the sun, moon and stars? 2. Try to count up how many lies these men told in all. 3. Who could not be deceived by their lies? 4. What is the conscience, and could they hide their sin from that? 5. Who in the New Testament was betrayed and sold? By whom and for how much? 6. Who were the Ishmaelites? 7. How was Joseph a type of Christ? 8. What parable shows a similar treatment of Christ? See Matt. 21:36-41.

Challenge Text. "Be sure your ——— will find ——— out." Num. 32:(?)

Practical Lessons. 1. Wicked people will hate those who expose or oppose them. 2. The child of today may be the ruler of tomorrow. 3. Sin is often its own detective, though it may seem to be hidden for years. 4. Sin finds its way into the best families and commits the worst crimes. 5. The hardening effect of sin on the heart and conscience. 6. God makes strange acts, and even wicked people help forward His purposes. 7. The real wild beast in the story is the murderous hate of these men. 8. Jacob, who deceived many, is now himself deceived. 9. That which causes present grief may afterwards bring joy and blessing.

JOSEPH IN PRISON

And Joseph was brought down to and Potiphar, an officer of Pharaoh, captain of the guard, an Egyptian, bought him of the hands of the which had brought him down thither. And Joseph's master took him, and put him a place where the king's and he was there in the prison. But the Lord was with and shewed him mercy, and gave him favour in the sight of the keeper of the prison. And the keeper of the prison committed to Joseph's hand all the that were in the prison; and whatsoever they did, there, he was the doer of it. The looked not to any thing that was under his hand; because the Lord was with him, and that which he did, the Lord made it to prosper.

THE SCRIPTURE LESSON IS GEN. 39:1 to 40:15.

Prayer: O Lord, May we ever live as in Thy sight and be faithful under all circumstances and conditions. Even in times of darkness and trial—the prison experiences of life—may we watch for opportunities to glorify Thee and help our fellows. May we be kept pure and true and be guided day by day. For Christ's sake. Amen.

"Oh, one might reach heroic heights
By one strong burst of power;
He might emblaze the whitest lights
Of Heaven for an hour;
But harder is the daily drag,
To smile at trials which fret and fag
And not to murmur nor to lag.
The test of greatness is the way
One meets the eternal every day."

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, B. C. 1729-1718. Place, Heliopolis, one of the capitals of Egypt. Persons, Joseph, Potiphar, prisoners, prison-keeper.

Scripture Setting: A Study of a Model Young Man. The perfect pattern, Lu. 2:41-52. Divine fellowship, Acts 7:9-16. Beauty and strength, Gen. 49:22-26. High ideals and aims, Heb. 12:1-14. Faithful to duty, Matt. 25:14-30. A bright example, 1 Tim. 4:8-16. Call to young men, 1 John 2:12-21. Soul greater than prison, Phil. 1:12-26. Always a Christian, Tit. 3:1-9. A true workman, 2 Tim. 2:15-26.

Life and Conduct Setting: After Christ there is no more attractive and commanding character than that of Joseph. In his prison setting we see him as he really is. As we study his character, we see it to be: 1. Pure and beautiful. 2. Tried and proved. 3. Manly and vigorous—no "wild oats" in him. 4. Prayerful and spiritual, and therefore favored of God. 5. Patient and submissive—where many fail entirely. 6. Winning against odds—promoted even in prison. 7. Sympathetic, helpful and hopeful—making even his prison life count for himself and others.

A YOUNG MAN CONQUERING DIFFICULTIES.

Sold But Not Sold. Joseph is sold into slavery, and is brought to Egypt. How different everything seems to him here. He is interested, but he can't help thinking of his father and his old home. Still he does not whine, nor pine, nor fret. If he thought of his older brothers at all, he tried to forgive them. God was keeping watch over him. He is now a young man, full grown, and with a frank, manly face. Do you know what kept him looking so good and true? It is because he did not allow his heart and conscience to be sold. These are the real boy and man. No one can sell those except one's own self; and Joseph would not sell them at any price.

A Bright Life. Life is like a crown. It is better to weave in a bright and golden filling. And we can do it if we will. What sort of a filling are you and I weaving into the web? Dark threads or bright? Many of us grumble and fuss more over trifles than others do over puzzling knots. Each weaver has snarls to unravel, and the patterns are often intricate and uncertain, but courage, hope and persistence accomplish much, and their possessor is not apt to be of the kind that "blames Heaven for tangled ends."

Now Joseph is bought by a man named Potiphar. He was the chief police officer of Egypt, and he was said to be like "two eyes and two ears for the king." He seems to be a kind and true man, and so he is attracted by Joseph and buys him for his own servant. Joseph's fine looks and manly way are helping him already; they always do. Joseph did his very best for his new master, and soon he rose to hold the first place among the servants. It pays to keep the frowns and scowls off the face. I knew a boy who secured a good position just because he had a smiling face. Then he kept it because he was obedient, honest and faithful. And usually the good looking face means that one has good qualities within. Anyhow, the face says, "Try me and see if I will do." I am sure Joseph was that kind of a young man.

In Prison Because Good. For ten years Joseph was an honored and trusted servant. Then something happened and he was cast into prison. Was it any sin of his? No, it was rather because he did not sin. Potiphar's wife was a wicked woman, and she tried to get Joseph to be wicked also with her. This he would not do, and he bravely told her so. She was angry at him, and reported to her husband that Joseph had treated her badly. Potiphar believed the false story of his wife and had Joseph put in prison, without giving him a trial at all. In one picture you can see him being pushed into the prison. Another picture shows how some are even chained together by the feet. Joseph is put in a cell by himself, and chained by the hand and foot. We know he must have prayed, but he also stoutly resisted the temptation to do wrong.

On God's Side of the Fence. "When a boy," said a prominent member of a church, "I was much helped by Bishop Hamline, who visited me at a house where I was. Taking me aside, the bishop said: 'When in trouble, my boy, kneel down and ask God's help; but never climb over the fence into the devil's ground, and then kneel down and ask help. Pray from God's side of the fence.' Of that I have thought every day of my life since."

he is that he did not commit sin. Some are in prison because they do wrong; but Joseph was there because he did what is right. Even his face shows that his heart was right, and his conscience does not condemn him. We said that he was alone, and it is true there was no other prisoner with him. But he did have someone with him. Can you guess who it was? Yes, "the Lord was with Joseph, and showed him mercy." If he had done wrong he would be in prison justly, and the Lord could not be with him. The prison was dark looking, with barred windows and strong bolted doors, but inside it was made light by the glory of God and by Joseph's peace of conscience.

How and Why He Won. We saw how Joseph was promoted when he was a servant. Here in prison he is also advanced until he is put in charge of the other prisoners. Why was this? I think there were several reasons. In the first place, he shows a good spirit, submissive and patient. The keeper would notice that at once, so different from prisoners generally. Then Joseph always looked around to see if he could help anyone. This too would please the keeper, for he would know he would not help the prisoners to escape. By this time we may be sure that Joseph has told the keeper about the God he believes in. This would impress him most of all, and make him have great confidence in Joseph. One way he helped the other prisoners was by encouraging them. No doubt, also, he told them of his God who was able to make all things work for good. Among the prisoners were two who had been officers of the king—the chief butler, who took the king his wine, and the chief baker, who cooked his meals. These two prisoners had strange dreams and Joseph told them what they meant. He also told them that God gave him this power to interpret dreams. You can read about them in Gen., Ch. 40. The dreams turned out as Joseph told them; the chief butler was restored to office and the chief baker was hanged. The pictures show these men at their work, and the large picture is of the birthday feast of the king.

At such a time he would often pardon some of the prisoners and kill others. This feast was for all the servants of the king, and was made a joyous occasion. Joseph had asked the chief butler to remember him and speak a good word for him to Pharaoh. He told him something of his early life, and that he had not done any wrong. While Joseph trusted that God would care for him, yet he knew that God would expect him to help himself in every way he could. God has given us these powers for that purpose. This kindness of Joseph was the means of freeing him from prison after a while. The chief butler forgot to tell the king at once, but later he remembered his promise, as we shall see in the next story. So Joseph stays in prison for about two more years, making three years in all. And he was always busy—thinking, praying, helping.

The Next Duty. Work is a cure for worry. In the most unfavorable conditions there is always "a next duty." This is our "good angel." Hail it and it will bring blessing. Every trial or heavy load has the secret of strength in it. Bear it, and do the next duty. Do that, anyway. Compel yourself to do it, if necessary. Do not wait for a better time or mood.—Ex.

Quiz and Study. 1. What other young man in a strange land was cast into the lion's den for his religion? 2. What three friends like him were cast into the fiery furnace? Who else was with them called "the form of the fourth"? 3. What two dreams did Joseph interpret while in prison? See Gen. 40. 4. Can you tell about John the Baptist in prison? And about Paul and Silas? 5. What author is called "The Great Dreamer"? What did he write in prison? 6. What do you like best about Joseph?

Challenge Text. "All things work together for — to them that —." Rom. 8: (?)

Practical Thoughts. 1. Fidelity in little things and hard places will often open the door to a better position. 2. The severest tests of character are in times of opposition and persecution. 3. The best rewards are not in external things, but in heart and conscience. 4. Character is a young man's best capital; kindness and fidelity come next. 5. We should be content with what we have, but aspiring to something better. 6. True success is from God, and sometimes is greatest when least seen or known. 7. God has countless ways of working out His purposes. 8. There is always a bright side, and it is best to get in the habit of looking for it. 9. At all hazards, keep a clear conscience—one that you can talk with and sleep with.

THE SCRIPTURE LESSON IS GEN. 41:37-57.

Prayer: O Lord, Thou art wonderful in Thy character and providences. Thou hast led, sustained and protected us in trials, and hast made them be our helpers and teachers. We thank Thee for this. We thank Thee, too, for prosperity and blessing. Keep us from all self-indulgence and sinful ease. May our ideals and standards be high and true. For Christ's sake. Amen.

"Life is not as idle ore,

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, B. C. 1716. Place, Heliopolis, one of the capitals of Egypt. Persons, Joseph, Pharaoh the king, servants.

Scripture Setting. A Study of How to Get On. David exalted, 1 Sam. 16:1-23. Daniel exalted, Dan. 1:1-21. The humble exalted, 1 Pet. 5:1-11. Christ exalted, Acts 2:22-36. Exaltation is from God, Ps. 75:1-10. The godly exalted, Deut. 11:10-25. Key to exaltation, Prov. 3:1-18. Certain conditions, Josh. 1:1-9. The all-providence road, Rom. 8:18-28. The promotion pattern, Phil. 2:3-13.

Life and Conduct Setting: The exaltation of Joseph suggests some of the keys to success, or how to get on in the world. 1. The key of occasion—the need of Pharaoh and his kingdom. 2. The key of ability—able to rise to the occasion. 3. The key of character—the altitudinal force in life which takes hold on God. 4. The key of circumstances—civil position, social rank, commanding authority. 5. The key of self-poise and self-mastery—character after it is tried and proved. 6. The key of opportunity—the occasion leading up and out to yet larger fields of usefulness. 7. The key of fidelity—making good in every position and condition. 8. The key of providence—God leading, girding, beckoning, overruling, strengthening.

FROM A PRISON TO A THRONE.

A Key That Unlocked a Prison. Joseph had been in prison three years; and now we learn how he got his freedom. God has many keys by which He opens doors of all kinds. Once He made an angel His key to unlock a prison and let Peter out; so also in the case of Paul and Silas. You can read about it in Acts, chapters 12 and 16. God often uses a mother or a friend to open doors for boys and girls, so that they may be free to do better work and live better lives. The key here, that unlocked the prison door for Joseph, was made of several parts. There was the dream of Pharaoh the king; there was the kindness of Joseph when he interpreted the butler's dream; then there was the memory of this butler enabling him to tell about Joseph. I think this part of the key was a little rusty, for it did not work for two years. Then God dropped a bit of oil on it, and made it work. Pharaoh's dream was double; read it for yourself, Gen., Ch. 41. One was about seven fat cows and seven lean cows. The other was about seven full good ears of corn and seven thin ears.

Pharaoh had many wise men, but none of them could tell what these dreams meant. When the chief butler told what Joseph did, the king sent for him right away. It is wonderful how quickly people get to know about you if you can do things a little better than anyone else, or can do things that other people cannot do at all. So this prison door opened quick because Pharaoh needed just what Joseph could tell, and because God saw the time had come for Joseph to be let out of prison.

What the World Wants. A young man once came to Joseph Pulitzer, of the New York World, applying for a position. "What can you do?" said Mr. Pulitzer. "I do not know," answered the young man. "I am a graduate of Harvard; I have nothing but ideas." "Ideas! Ideas!" exclaimed Mr. Pulitzer, dropping his pen and throwing up his hands. "That is just what I am looking for. I will give you a salary of $5,000 a year if you will give me one idea by which I can increase the circulation of the World a hundred thousand copies."

The Greatest School of All. Every boy and girl goes to school. Some take a college course afterward; and all should do so who possibly can. But Joseph had been in a different kind of school—the school of trial and difficulty. He had a thirteen years' course in this school, ten years as a slave and three years in prison. Perhaps this last was a sort of high school course. Anyhow he graduated into some high qualities that fitted him for a great and useful life. Here are some of these qualities: fidelity, integrity, self-reliance, God-reliance, helpfulness, tact, patience, sympathy, master of circumstances (better than master of arts), and leader and ruler of men. There are not many boys that graduate with as good a list as that. God was his teacher all the time. Now Joseph is ready for the throne and the kingdom. We can see now how he was trained in this hard school of life. He was such a good young man that we might wonder why he was made to suffer so, but God was fitting him for a great life work. Even of Christ it is said that "he was made perfect through suffering."

is it you have so much trouble? I thought a Christian did not have any trials or troubles." The blacksmith replied: "Do you see this piece of iron? It is for the springs of a carriage. I have been 'tempering' it for some time. To do this I heat it red-hot, and then plunge it into a tub of ice-cold water. This I do many times. If I find it taking 'temper,' I heat and hammer it unmercifully. In getting the right piece of iron I found several that were too brittle. So I threw them in the scrap-pile. Those scraps are worth about a cent a pound; this carriage spring is very valuable. God saves us for a purpose, and fits us for service, as I do this piece of iron. He puts the temper of Christ in us by testing us with trial. Anyone would rather be the perfected iron for a carriage spring than the worthless iron for the scrap-pile."

Ring and Chain and Robe. Pharaoh was greatly pleased at what Joseph told him, and he at once decided to make Joseph head of all the land. He had power to do anything he wished, but he wished to do only what was right. This was a great change, from the prison to the palace, from the lonely life to the care of all the people, and from the poor clothing and food of a prisoner to the royal robes and the king's chariot. It was almost impossible for Joseph himself to believe it, but of one thing we may be sure, while all else was changing, his own principles and character were the same. He had done his duty in Potiphar's house and in the prison; so now he was able and ready to do his duty in the palace of the king. The seven fat cows meant seven years of plenty, when there would be large crops; so Joseph had great store houses built where he could store away the corn for the seven years of famine that were to come. The king also gave Joseph a new name for that country, and gave him the daughter of a priest for a wife. In these seven years of plenty two sons were born to him, Manasseh and Ephraim. Every boy and girl can live and act in such a way as to be of service in the world and so deserve the ring and chain and robe.

The Coming Boy or Girl.

"There's a niche for you in the world, my boy,
A corner for you to fill;
And it waits today
Along life's way
For the boy with a frank 'I will.'
So, lad, be true;
The world wants you
In the corner that you may fill.

"There's a niche in the world for you, my girl,
A corner for you to fill;
And a work to do

Which no one but you
In God's great plan can fill.
So, dears, be true;
The world wants you,
And your place is waiting still."

The King Greater Than the King. All the pictures illustrating this story show that some one of power and influence is meant. There is a picture of a throne, of a royal person bestowing favors, of a chariot, etc. Yes, Pharaoh is a great king; but there is One who is not seen, who is greater. That is the God of Joseph, who is King of kings and Lord of lords. We can see the shadow pictures of this greater King and His throne all the time. He it is who saved Joseph's life and brought him to Egypt; who gave him power to interpret dreams; who at last brought him out of prison and gave him favor with Pharaoh and ability to serve the people.

Quiz and Study. 1. What were the dreams Joseph had about himself, and how did they come true? 2. How many dreams did Joseph interpret, and for whom? 3. Tell about the New Testament parable when the father put a "ring" and a "robe" on his son. 4. If you were hiring a man for work, what five qualities would you want him to have? 5. Tell some ways in which Joseph was like Christ. 6. Tell some ways in which Christ was greater than Joseph. 7. Read about the dreams of the chief butler and the chief baker (see Gen., 40), and tell them in your own words. 8. Tell how Peter (Acts 12) and Paul and Silas (Acts 16) were let out of prison.

Challenge Text. "The father said to his servants, bring forth the _____ and put it on him; and put a _____ in his hand, and _____ on his feet." Lu. 15:(?)

Practical Thoughts. 1. Every good act is a seed that grows a harvest of good. 2. Joseph was tested, and therefore promoted. He was promoted, and again tested. 3. Joseph was a success as a boy at home, as a youth injured and imprisoned, and as a man of authority and influence. 4. Be ready, for you know not how soon the world will need you and call you. 5. He who gets ready for work finds that God has gotten work ready for him. 6. That promotion, or honor, was only the chance and challenge for you to do better work; now make good! 7. The world will always want the worker who can do it a little better. 8. Character is the altitudinal force of life; our conditions and circumstances are the longitudinal forces. 9. God is the God of kings, of men, of nations, of harvests; and therefore godliness is profitable. 10. God often uses strange methods and forces to accomplish His purposes. 11. Adversity often prepares for prosperity, and so prosperity may be the preparation for adversity. 12. Young man, what have you got in your hand or in your mind? What can you do?

Prayer: Lord Jesus, Fill us with Thy Spirit, so that we may always do the things that please Thee. Give us a spirit of forgiveness against any who may have wronged us. May we see Thy hand and plan in even the pains and losses of life. So lead us that we may be helpful to all. For Christ's sake. Amen.

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, B. C. 1707. Place, Heliopolis, one of the capitals of Egypt. Persons, Joseph, his eleven brothers, and the servants of Pharaoh.

Scripture Setting: A Study of Forgiveness. Love the great gift, 1 Cor. 13. The law of Christ, Matt. 5:38-48. Motive for forgiveness, 1 Pet. 2:13-25. Power of forgiveness, Rom. 12:10-21. Need of forgiveness, Matt. 18:15-25. Example of Christ, 1 Pet. 4:12-19. Forbearing and forgiving, Col. 3:9-17. Thoughtful of others, Eph. 4:20-32. Father forgives a son, Luke 15:11-24. The Christian should forgive, Gal. 6:1-10.

Life and Conduct Setting: The forgiving spirit is one of the most vital of the Christian graces, and yet one of the rarest. This beautiful story shows us many features and phases of this necessary grace. 1. It concerns chiefly those who have been at variances—all others should retire. 2. It is the special duty of the one injured or of the more favored. Others may forgive; he must forgive. 3. It demands a frank and full statement of facts—dodging and concealing nothing. 4. And yet it must be tender, generous, self-sacrificing, tactful—ever seeing the other's point of view. 5. It does all for the glory of God, and for His cause—the human advantages following are but incidental. 6. It is the climax and crown of the Christian character. This is the greatest act of Joseph's great life. 7. It is sincere, permanent and final—forgetting, as well as forgiving. As one has said, we should forgive tenderly, privately, readily, generously, in order to full reconciliation and to comfort and help.

HOW A WHOLE FAMILY WAS SAVED.

The Old Home Ties. Joseph had been in Egypt over twenty years. He must have thought of his old home, his father and little Benjamin many, many times. He has been almost too busy to send back and inquire about them, or even to let them know that he is alive. Then I think he felt that it would expose the sin of his brothers if he made himself known. But God opened the way for him in all these things.

You remember that there had been seven years of plenty, and that Joseph had stored up corn in many cities. Two years of famine had passed, and there were five more to come. This famine was in Canaan also, where Jacob and his sons lived. They heard about the stores of corn in Egypt, and Jacob sent his ten sons down there to buy corn. He did not send Benjamin, for he was afraid he might get lost or killed. He never forgot how he lost Joseph, and he still grieved for him. While God was training Joseph in the school of trial, he was training Jacob and the ten boys also in the old country home.

God's Gracious Teachers. "He's the kind of God that can change a heart like mine from all the evil there is, and make it so I can think good thoughts and be kind, and enjoy His hills and hear the birds sing again as I used to when I was a little girl," says a character in a story—one who had been a great sinner. "There were years and years when I didn't hear them little creatures singin' all around me, because my deeds were so evil. I don't reckon you know it, but sin affects you that way—takes away your hearin' for sweet sounds and your sight for what is lovely. But God kept on lettin'

His birds sing and His sun rise; He didn't put any sign on me, as folks did. He fixed things so they'd work out good for all, for He knows we'd want to come back some time, same's I've done. I don't know whether you've ever found it out, but sinners get awful tired of sinnin'."—Selected.

Too Wonderful To Be True. Just as soon as Joseph saw those ten men coming for corn he knew them. They did not know him, for he was changed by having grown to be a man, by his new dress, by his new name, by his lovely manner. He said to himself, "I will test them and see if they are better men than they used to be." Then he wanted to learn about his father. He said to them, "Ye are spies, coming to spy out the land." They had to explain about the family and where they came from. When they told him of Benjamin, he said he would prove them by keeping them prisoners till one of them went and brought Benjamin. Afterwards he said he would keep only one of them, and let the rest go back with corn for the families. He bound Simeon before their eyes and the others went back home. Before they left Joseph heard them talking about the way they had sold him into slavery. He saw they were sorry, and Joseph himself had to turn away and weep. You can read in the Bible (Gen., Chapters 43 and 44) how Joseph at last succeeded in getting Benjamin down, and about the silver cup, and the money in the sacks, the feast in the palace, and all the rest, with the earnest pleading of Judah that he might be made a slave instead of Benjamin. All this was more than Joseph could stand. He made all others leave the room, and he said to his brothers, "I am Joseph; does my father yet live?" This was like a blow to his brothers, and they fell back in fear. But he said so tenderly, "Come near to me," that they were comforted. Then he told them how God had sent him to Egypt to save the lives of all of them. The large picture shows how surprised they all are. How beautiful and good Joseph looks as he talks to them of the way God had led him. He did not mean that they did no wrong, but only that God had brought good out of their wrong doing. Then he kissed them all, beginning with Benjamin. He might have punished them all, but he was too good and great for that.

Grant's Noble Act. When General Grant was asked, "Did you take Lee's sword at Appomattox?" he replied: "No, I did not; Lee came there wearing the magnificent sword which the state of Virginia had given him, but I did not want him to surrender it to me. I sat down at once and busied myself writing terms of the surrender. When I had finished I handed them to General Lee. He read them, and remarked, 'They are certainly very generous indeed.' He then told me the cavalrymen owned their own horses, and, if they were deprived of them, they could not put in their crops. Then I gave the order, 'Take the horses home with you, for you'll need them in the spring plowing.' This is the simple story of Lee's surrender. Caesar would have had that sword; Napoleon would have demanded it; Wellington would not have been satisfied without it; but U. S. Grant was too great to take it.

"Do Not Quarrel by the Way." Joseph now sends his brothers back with food, and with wagons for his father and his goods. He intends to keep them all there with him for the five years more of famine. How glad they were to know that Joseph is not really dead, and that everything has turned out as it has! They are thinking, too, how happy their father will be when he learns that Joseph is living. Joseph gave his brothers one piece of advice which he thought they might need. That was for them to take care and not quarrel by the way. We nearly all of us need that advice, for it is the easiest thing in the world for a grudge or hard feeling to start; and then it grows and grows just like a weed.

Joseph knew, also, that we can avoid many annoying things if we try. God has made us able to get along with other people if we only will, and an old proverb says, "To be forewarned is to be fore-armed."

Mother Knows You Can. Paul said one day to his mother, "I can't help it." She was rebuking him for his quick temper and his harsh words to his sister. He seemed to think that was excuse enough, even though his name was Paul. But his mother said: "You can help it. God has given you power to help it. He has given you a will to hold your tongue in check when it would say bad or harsh words. He will give His Spirit of love and forgiveness, so that you can overlook even the harsh words of others. You can help it."

Do you know, these men could hardly make their father believe that Joseph was still living. It was all too good and too wonderful to be true. God had just taken one thing after another and put them together in such a way that it all worked out—why, better than any fairy could have done it with a wand that changed people and things. In the next story we will find out how Jacob was made to believe at last and how rejoiced he was.

How God Weaves. "All things work together for good." This word "together" is the emphatic word. At the weaver's hand are many shuttles with differently colored threads. He now thrusts in a white, a blue, a black thread. You cannot judge the purpose by the thrust of one shuttle; you must wait until he has emptied all. Nor can we judge God or His purpose by any one event, nor by any one day. We are yet on the loom. Give God time to put this and that together.—Hallock.

Quiz and Study. 1. Why was the capital city called Heliopolis? 2. How old was Joseph when he began his work for Pharaoh? Who began his greater public ministry at that age? 3. What dream of Joseph was fulfilled by his brothers bowing down to him? 4. On what two occasions did Christ weep—once at a grave and once as he looked at a city? 5. Joseph said, "Come near to me"; what invitation of Christ is like that? 6. What were Christ's first words spoken as he was crucified? Can you name any of the other six messages from the cross? 7. How many times did Peter think we should forgive? How many times did Christ say, and what did he mean? 8. What does the Lord's prayer teach about forgiveness?

Challenge Text. Forbearing one another, and — one another, if any man have a — against any; even as — forgave —, so also do ye. Col. 3 (?)

Practical Thoughts. 1. A short sin may have a long punishment, as in the case of Joseph's brethren. 2. True forgiveness is without any string to it, like "but I never can forget." 3. It is easier to forgive a wrong if you can see God's hand overruling it for good. 4. Sins have a strange way of springing up and meeting the sinner, when least expected. 5. Though God overrules the sin, the sinner is not truly excused. 6. We should get the habit of putting the best possible construction on the sins and mistakes of others. 7. Mercy is quick-sighted to see the troubles of others and quick-witted to relieve them. 8. God honors those who honor Him. 9. Position should seek the man, rather than man the position. 10. If we do not forgive we cannot expect to be forgiven, and we are not able even to accept forgiveness.

THE SCRIPTURE LESSON IS GEN. 47:1-12.

Prayer: Lord Jesus, May we remember that this life and earth are not all; but that there is a higher life and a truer home. Help us that we may choose Christ as Saviour and King, and give ourselves fully to His service. May we be less and less bound by the relations of earth, and more and more "set our affections on things above." For Christ's sake. Amen.

THE SUBJECT IN

Historical Setting: Time, B. C. 1706. Place, Heliopolis, capital of Egypt. Persons, Joseph, Jacob, Pharaoh.

Scripture Setting: Journey of Life. Years of man's life, Psa. 90:1-17. A picture of old age, Eccl. 12:1-14. David guided, Psa. 25:8-12. Paul guided, Rom. 1:7-13. Redeeming the time, Eph. 5:15-21. God's guiding hand, Luke 12:1-7. Seeking God's glory, 1 Cor. 10:23-34. Heeding good counsel, Prov. 3:5-18.

Life and Conduct Setting: The reply of the aged Jacob seems to be the key phrase of the passage. It suggests the journey of life for a study. 1. Our "Speak, history! who are life's victors? Unroll thy long annals, and say

Are they those whom the world called the victors, who won the success of a day?
The martyrs, or Nero? The Spartans, who fell at Thermopylae's tryst, Or the Persians and Xerxes? His judges or Socrates? Pilate or Christ?"

ITS RELATIONS.

instincts and desires attract us to each other, and bind us in groups, families, and communities. 2. Remarkable providences divide friends and relatives, and again unite them. 3. Honest toil is a Divine provision, and it is both a duty and a privilege. 4. The law of rivalry and the instinct of perfection are given that each may do and be his best. 5. Promotion in life and work is the beckoning hand of Providence to the worthy and faithful. 6. This life however long, is but a moment as compared with the future and is given that we may prepare for that future.

TWO KINGS AND TWO KINGDOMS.

The Joseph Kind of Boy and Man. What a difference there is between people! Here are two boys, or young men—one is polite, manly, kind, always helpful; the other is crabbed, selfish and never seeing others except to find fault. Or, it may be two girls or young women, who are such opposites to each other. Joseph was a man who could claim all those fine qualities named above, and as many more. His character is as beautiful as his picture. It must be so, for the king to trust him as he does. Pharaoh tells him to take "the best of the land" for his father and brothers, and also to pick out some good men and "make them rulers over my cattle." Thus Joseph is made the connecting link between two kings and two kingdoms. God had fitted him for this great service, but he was willing to become fitted. We can scarcely tell how much it meant for Joseph to be the mutual friend he was. As a true and loving son he brings his father to Pharaoh; and as a trusted and faithful servant, Pharaoh honors him and grants every request. Then he has told his brothers how to answer Pharaoh's questions. When they say they are shepherds, it is a confession of inferiority in the sight of the Egyptians. This secures the land adapted to their business, and also prevents the Egyptians from being jealous of them. I think any boy would like to be a Joseph kind of boy, and so grow up to be a Joseph kind of man.

Plan To Do It. When you rise in the morning, say that you will make the day blessed to a fellow-creature. It is easily done. A left-off garment to the man who needs it; a kind word to the sorrowful; a little help to brother or sister or mother; an encouraging expression to the sad—trifles in themselves as light as air—will do it at least for the twenty-four hours. And if you are young, depend upon it, it will tell upon you when you are old. Now look at the result. If you send one person away happy through the day, that will be three hundred and sixty-five in the course of a year.—Exchange.

A Worldly King and Kingdom. This is what Pharaoh and his kingdom were. Both king and people boasted of what they had and what they could do. God had favored Egypt in many ways. Often when other nations had famines Egypt would have plenty. But the Egyptians were not grateful to God for His goodness. They worshipped animals and reptiles instead of the true God. They lived in themselves and for themselves, instead of in and for God. Joseph saw this and knew it, so he was true to the God of his fathers. When Jacob came to Egypt he felt that it was only for a time. He said that they were only "sojourners" in that land; that is, visitors or strangers. He knew that the land of Canaan was their real earthly home, and that sometime they would go back to it. They were to be in Egypt, but not of it. It is a good thing that good people do go into worldly kingdoms in many ways. In this way the true God can be made known and the true religion. Joseph was like a real missionary in Egypt, and now Jacob and his family will bring much of the true religion to this heathen country.

Danger of Prosperity. It is dangerous for a man to have the fatal gift of turning everything he touches into gold. King Midas asked of Bacchus that whatever he touched should turn to gold. He broke a twig from a tree, and it became gold. His staff became a golden rod. He touched ears of corn, and they were transformed. When he reached home, he hungered. Food was placed before him, but when he took it in his hand it also turned to gold, and he would have starved in the midst of plenty, if the god had not shown him how to get rid of the gift. Possessions may easily shut out both God and Heaven.—R. P. Anderson.

Another King and Kingdom. Where is he and what is it? Well, you can see it in that fourth picture. Real kings do not always sit on thrones and wear crowns. Christ was a real king, but He "had not where to lay His head." Paul was a real king, but he was often in chains and in prison. There have been many real kingly men and women in the world, although the world did not see them as such; and they did not have the signs of worldly royalty. So Jacob is this other king, and truth, honesty and love to God and man are the other kingdom. As Jacob bows then before Pharaoh, he himself feels that he is a king. He lifts his hands and blesses Pharaoh, no doubt praying that the God of Heaven would favor him. Jacob, you remember, was to have the name of Israel, which means "prince of God." That surely is a kingly title of the very best kind. Then it was said that he should prevail both with God and men, and that is kingly quality which earthly kings cannot always claim. Jacob belongs to the Abraham class of kings, and of Abraham it was said that he should "be a blessing to all the nations of the earth." That is both a kind of kingliness and a degree of kingliness that Pharaoh never had, nor any other worldly king. Then that word "pilgrimage" looks to another life and a better country than any of earth.

"Guaranteed Under the Food Act." If a reputable firm can guarantee its food to be pure and worthy, has not Almighty God produced a food for our souls which He calls His Word and which He can absolutely guarantee under the pure food act of high Heaven? Or has He left in a miserable state of uncertainty (as some critics of His Word would have us believe) what we have hitherto believed to be His Word, and we now have to take it without His Divine guarantee and support? Has He left us lacking in the very most necessitous condition of our lives? Has He given us pure food for our bodies and not for our souls? I, for one, believe He has guaranteed His Word and thus made it possible for us to love and serve Him, and enter into His kingdom.—Exchange.

Which Is Your King and Kingdom? Those two last pictures set the two before us, as if to say, "Choose which you will have." Will you belong to the Jacob kind of king and kingdom, or the Pharaoh kind? The Jacob kind has Jesus Christ as its head and pattern. The Pharaoh kind has Satan as its head and pattern. It ought not to take long for anyone to decide that question. But many people keep hesitating. One reason is that they forget that they must choose one or the other. If one does not choose Christ he does choose Satan. There seem to be many kinds of people in the world, and many of them with good traits. But there are really only two classes at the last—the good with Christ as King, and the bad with Satan as king. Our stories are constantly showing us these two classes and asking us to choose in which class we will put ourselves. Yes, they even keep warning us to keep out of the Satan class and they keep beckoning us to come into the Christ class. Now look at Pharaoh again, and decide which king and kingdom shall be yours.

Some Good "I Wills." I will respect weakness and defer to it on the street car, in the department store, and in the home, whether it be displayed by man or woman.

I will not fail to express sympathy with another's sorrow, or to give hearty utterance to my appreciation of good works by another, whether the party be friendly to me or not.

I will look on the bright side of the circumstances of my daily life, and I will seek to carry a cheerful face and speak hopefully to all whom I meet.

I will neither eat nor drink what I know will detract from my ability to do my best work.

I will speak and act truthfully, living with sincerity toward God and man.

I will strive to be always prepared for the very best that can happen to me. I will seek to be ready to seize the highest opportunity, to do the noblest work, to rise to the loftiest place which God and my abilities permit.—New York Christian Advocate.

Quiz and Study. 1. What dream of Joseph was fulfilled now? 2. Mention some of the great events recorded thus far in Genesis. 3. How was Pharaoh superior to Jacob? 4. How was Jacob superior to Pharaoh?

Challenge Text. "Come thou with us and we will do thee ———, for the Lord hath ——— good concerning ———. Num. 10: (?)

Practical Thoughts. 1. One should not be ashamed of his family, if respectable; nor of his business, if honorable. 2. Persons of industry and energy are always in demand. 3. Plan as if you will live for years, but trust as if you will die today. 4. The "evil days" of life are due to man's sinful nature and acts. 5. Exaltation in rank should be accompanied with humility in spirit.

THE SCRIPTURE LESSON IS GEN. 48:8-22 TO 49:1-27.

Prayer: How good of Thee, O God, to go with us all the way in life's pilgrimage! We are never alone. There are no solitudes, for Thou art in the shadows, in the silences and in the full-orbed day. In Thy presence we live, and move, and have our being. Thou art our Ruler, Law-giver, Prophet, Priest and Savior. Guide, bless and keep us even to the end. For Christ's sake. Amen.

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, B. C. 1689. Place, Heliopolis and Goshen, in Egypt. Persons, Jacob, Joseph and his two sons. All the sons at his dying bedside.

Scripture Setting: The Pilgrimage of Life. A right start, Eccl. 11:7; 12:3. A right motive, 2 Cor. 5:14-19. A right grip, Job 2:1-13. A right trust, Matt. 6:19-34. A right progress, Rom. 1:16-23. A right spirit, Psalms 40:10-17. A right aim, 2 Tim. 4:1-8. A right pattern, Heb. 12:1-11. A right walk, Eph. 4:1-16. Right guide and helper, Rom. 8:14-27.

Life and Conduct Setting: We think of Jacob as the pilgrim believer, for his life had many journeys in it, and itself was like a journey. Under the thought of the pilgrimage of life we may group some helpful facts and experiences: 1. It means change and removal, for we have here "no continuing city." 2. It is attended with toils and trials—the common lot of mortals. 3. It is a period and state of association with others, furnishing opportunities to do good and to receive good. 4. It has its gracious, Divine surprises, lifting and helping one to the highest and best. 5. It may have its quiet and blessed evening time, to prepare for the last journey to "the home over there." 6. It should have its "visions splendid" both of earthly possibility and of Heavenly glory. Every life should have its Bethel dream, its Peniel victory, its Beulah glory.

SHADOW PICTURES OF JESUS CHRIST.

By shadow pictures I mean that which was foretold about Christ by holy men. The Holy Spirit helped them to say many things that Christ should be and do. I am sure Jacob was thus inspired to say what he did about his sons, and specially about Judah. But first we need to know some things before Jacob gives us these pictures of Christ.

Growing Old Beautifully. Perhaps you have seen some old people, who were cross and crabbed, and did not care for children. But Jacob was not one of that kind for we see how glad he was to welcome the children of Joseph and hold them in his arms. I think that nearly all old people get to like children. If you have a grandfather or grandmother you know what I mean. Well, Jacob had much sorrow, and had mourned about Joseph; but these last seventeen years had been happy ones, and it made him act and look happy. Not only did he have Joseph back, but Pharaoh was good to him also, and let him and his children and flocks live in one of the best parts of the land. He had much to be thankful for, and all this kept him from being cross and gloomy. And we should notice this, too, that he not only felt thankful, but said so. We say "thank you" when anyone does us a favor; and so we should thank God for all the blessings He gives us. Every moment we live is a gift from God.

Seeing By The Spirit. Jacob was quite blind now, for he was nearly 150 years old. He felt that he was about to die, and he made

Joseph promise that he would bring him to Canaan where his father and grandfather were buried. Joseph brought his two sons for Jacob to bless, placing them so that Manasseh would have the first place, as he was older, but Jacob gave the chief blessing to Ephraim. When Joseph would correct him, Jacob replied, "I know what I am doing, and this is the right way." God was guiding him now. I wonder if he remembered when he deceived Isaac, his blind father. That was not right but God made it to work out the best. Soon after this, all the sons are present to receive the father's last words. By the Holy Spirit he saw into the future and told briefly what each one should be and do. They all stood around his dying bed listening and weeping. They felt that God was speaking to them through their father. These twelve sons became the heads of the twelve tribes of Israel, and they are often spoken of in the Bible. You can read what Jacob said about each one of the sons in Genesis, Ch. 49. Do not fail to see the beautiful words about Joseph. Thus they worked for the future, and each one became what he deserved to be. So it is with us, for the future of this life, and for the Heaven to which we all want to go. Our life in the future will be much as our life is here.

Laying Up Treasures. A rich lady dreamed that she went to Heaven, and there saw a mansion being built. "Whom is that for?" she asked of the guide. "For your gardener." "But he lives in the tiniest cottage on earth, with barely room enough for his family. He might live better if he did not give away so much to the miserable poor folks." Further on she saw a tiny cottage being built. "And whom is that for?" she asked. "That is for you." "But I have lived in a mansion on earth. I would not know how to live in a cottage." The words she heard in reply were full of meaning: "The Master Builder is doing His best with the material that is being sent up." Then she awoke, resolving to lay up treasure in Heaven. What are we sending up? What kind of material are we building into our every-day life?—Selected.

The Glorious Saviour. The greatest blessing of all is given to Judah, because from him Christ should come in more direct line. For this reason all our pictures are about what Jacob said to Judah. These pictures are object lessons of Christ, and each one tells us some special thing about Him. The lion and the young lion show us that the Saviour is strong and mighty. He must be so, in order to destroy Satan and sin. Satan is a "roaring lion seeking whom he may devour"; but Jesus Christ is the "Lion of the tribe of Judah," and is master of Satan. These two lion kings met in battle, and the Christ lion conquered the Satan lion. You can read about it in Matt., Chap. 4.

The scepter stands for rule and government, and so is the picture of Christ. He is the true King of all the earth, the "King of kings and Lord of lords." And it is promised that the kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdom of our Lord and of His Christ."

The priest standing with a roll in his hand, pointing upward, pictures Christ as bringing the law of God to man. He is himself called the "Word," and he said "I am the Way, the Truth and the Life." Many prophets had been sent to make known some truths, but Jesus Christ is the last true prophet of God to make known all truth.

Greatest of all the symbols are those in the last pictures; for they show Christ as the sacrifice for sin. He is both the priest and the victim. He is the "Good Shepherd," and also the "Lamb of God." Because He gave His life on Calvary He can give life to all who believe on Him, and trust Him for salvation. As a suffering Saviour and dying for us, He becomes a forgiving and cleansing Saviour, and able to save all who come to Him.

All of these wonderful pictures of Jesus Christ are given as Jacob blesses Judah. In them and by them Shiloh comes who stands for Christ Himself. Judah also gave his name to the promised land for Canaan became Judea. Altogether there are five hundred and twenty-five names and titles in the Bible to describe Christ. These named here are some of the greatest ones. This great and glorious Saviour is able to save all who come into His love and life.

Christ Gives Life. A missionary tells a story of a young officer who was dying of yellow fever. As the physicians stood helplessly by, one asked him: "Is there anything you would like?" "Yes," he said; "put me in the other bed, that I may die in the sun." They did so, and the sun saved his life. Jesus Christ is the Sun of Righteousness, with healing in His beams; and if we put ourselves into His care, by faith in Him, we secure eternal life and shall never die.

After this, Jacob died and his body was buried in the ground. His soul went to be with the God who gave it, and with the Angel who wrestled with him. That Angel was Jesus Christ. He found there also Abraham, Isaac and others who had gone on to Heaven before him. It was a great honor for him to be welcomed and helped by the king of Egypt. But this was now a greater honor to be welcomed by the King of Heaven and earth. All who love God are so welcomed even the children; for Christ said, "Of such is the kingdom of Heaven."

"Lift Me Higher!" A child lay dying, and said plaintively: "Lift me higher! Lift me higher!" The father took the little one in his arms, and lifted her up as high as he could raise her, as she continued to plead, with failing strength, "Lift me higher!" Soon she was gone, lifted out of her earthly father's trembling arms into the bosom of her Heavenly Father. On the child's grave they cut her name and the words: "Lifted higher!" God wants us all to come up to Him, to get closer to Him, to be lifted higher into life's better things.

Quiz and Study. 1. How many of the sons of Jacob can you name? 2. Tell the story of Jacob's ladder dream. 3. The story of wrestling with the angel. 4. What was the name of the cave where Jacob was buried? Who first bought it, and who else was buried there? 5. Tell some of the journeys of Jacob. 6. What were the last words of Paul? Of Christ on the Cross? 7. Do you remember the dying words of anyone?

Challenge Text. "So teach us to number our ——— that we may apply our ——— unto wisdom." Ps. 90:(?)

Practical Lessons. 1. One of the greatest blessings is to be willing and able to bless others. 2. God is so good and just that we are safe in thanking Him in advance for all of life. 3. If our days are evil, it is altogether because we make them so. 4. Every life is a pilgrimage through earthly conditions to the great future beyond. 5. Whatever our station in life, all should be honest, faithful, obedient and true. 6. These qualities are possible at their best, only by the help of Jesus Christ and the Holy Spirit. 7. Life is made true and hopeful by the visions the soul has. 8. The God who starts life and stops it is constant in His unseen and mighty ministry for it. 9. Do not judge life by parts and stages, but wait to see the finished journey.

THE SCRIPTURE LESSON IS GEN. 50:14-26.

Prayer: O Lord, We thank Thee for the beautiful and true lives of many people. They are bright examples to us that we, too, may be and do our best. Above all, may we take Jesus Christ as our perfect pattern, who also has redeemed us by His death. Help us, oh, help us by Thy Spirit and Word. For Christ's sake. Amen.

Somebody proved a friend in need;
Somebody sang a beautiful song;
Somebody smiled the whole day long;

Somebody lived to shield the right.
Was that somebody you?"

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, B. C. 1636. Place, Heliopolis, capital of Lower Egypt. Persons, Joseph, his children and brothers.

Scripture Setting: How to Be and Do One's Best. By having God in the heart, John 14:17-23. By living in Him, Acts 17:22-31. By taking Christ as our pattern, Phil. 2:1-8. By being bold and true, Josh. 1:1-9. By standing with and for God, Rom. 8:31-39. By bearing burdens, Gal. 6:1-6. By having on the armor, Eph. 6:11-20. By battling in and for Christ, 2 Tim. 2:1-10. By helping others, Isa. 35:3-10. By a good and true character, 2 Pet. 1:1-11.

Life and Conduct Setting: How the character of Joseph shines out at all times! Different and difficult experiences seem but to furnish a life setting for this jewel of character. Whenever you see him, there is the flash and radiance of some new virtue or grace. He is the model son, brother, companion, citizen, ruler, helper, friend, Christian. 1. As a son, Joseph is loving, obedient, helpful and protective, delighting to honor his father and tenderly considerate of him. 2. As a brother, he is patient, forgiving, thoughtful, caring for and training his brothers. 3. As a ruler and servant, he is faithful, wise, tactful and commended. 4. As a Christian, he is trustful, humble, watchful of providences, serving God at all times, having an abiding and abounding faith. Verily, an exquisite character-painting hung in the portrait gallery of the world!

HOW TO BE AND DO ONE'S BEST.

We are not told much about Joseph, after Jacob's death. He lived fifty-four years longer, and we can know how he lived, judging from his past. When a man shoots at a mark, if he gets his aim right for the length of the gun, he knows how the bullet will go. So with a life; if it is held steady and true for the first part, it will go straight to the right mark. But the pictures with this story tell us some very beautiful things about Joseph.

Living Peaceably with Everybody. Joseph had been doing this all his life, and now it was easy to continue it. After the seventy days of mourning for Jacob, and after the burial in Canaan, Joseph's brothers were afraid that he would punish them for their sin. So they plead with him to forgive them. But Joseph told them he had already forgiven them and that he would continue to take care of them. Their great sin kept coming up and accusing them; and this shows that it does not pay to do wrong to God or man. But what a wonderful man Joseph was to live peaceably with all! This was true in many trying places—with Potiphar, as a servant; with the prisoners, as a fellow prisoner; with Pharaoh and all his great men; with his brothers continually; with old and young, with the bad as well as with the good. It was because he started right and had God with him all the time. If a boy or girl learns how to live right in the home, then it will be easy to live peaceably with all others. The home is a kind of little world itself, where God and our parents teach us how to live in the big world afterwards.

Seven Good Rules for the Home. 1. Mind your tongue! Don't let it speak hasty, cruel, unkind or wicked words. 2. Mind your eyes! Don't permit them to look on wicked books, pictures or objects. 3. Mind your ears! Don't suffer them to listen to wicked speeches, songs or words. 4. Mind your lips! Don't let tobacco foul them. Don't let strong drink pass them. Don't let the food of the glutton enter between them. 5. Mind your hands! Don't let them steal, or fight, or write any evil words. 6. Mind your feet! Don't let them walk in the steps of the wicked. 7. Mind your heart! Don't let the love of sin dwell in it. Don't give it to Satan, but ask Jesus to make it His throne.

Loving and Teaching the Children. That is a beautiful picture of Joseph with the two children on his knees. The children show that they like him too. This was because they felt him to be good and true. To do one's best it is necessary to be at one's best. The life will be according to the heart. Children can tell when people love them. Joseph knew what it was to have a good home, and he knew, too, what it was to lose the home, when he was only a boy. These two things made him more interested in all other boys and girls. Besides you never can tell what a boy or girl may come to be. Who could have guessed what Joseph would some day be and do?

Help the Boy to Do His Best. Humble John Trebonius, grand old schoolmaster that he was, used to take off his hat deferentially to his boys when he appeared before them, for he would say to himself, "How do I know but that among them there may be one who shall some day be a mighty man?" Even then there sat at his feet a poor boy whose name was Martin, and whose other name was Luther, who by and by with trumpet tongue was to waken the world to a new departure.

True to the God of His Fathers. What fine old men are those? Joseph's father, grandfather and great-grandfather. Can you tell their names? How Joseph loved them! The more so because they were not only great men, but good men. It is a great blessing to have good parents and grandparents. And the boys and girls of such parents should be still better for they have such a good start. It is a great advantage to be well born. Joseph proved that he was worthy of such forefathers. He is about the only person in Scripture of whom there is no bad record. He was sinful by nature, as all are, but he let God begin guiding him early; and he followed the God of his fathers. Joseph is a bright model for any boy to copy after. Joseph and Daniel were a good deal alike, and they were treated much the same in the world. We should pattern after all good men and women, especially our parents. But there is only one perfect pattern, and a good parent or friend is just to help one to become more like Jesus Christ. He came down to earth to show us how to live the best life—how to be and do our best.

Better Men and Women. Out in Oregon lives a man who is a famous fruit-grower and the publisher of a paper entitled "Better Fruit." He knows the orchard business from beginning to end, having been in it from boyhood. He takes the tree that bears only hard, sour, scraggy fruit and by engrafting it with other branches causes it to bear such luscious apples as the Jonathan, Ben Davis, etc. Not only that—he teaches others all he knows about the business. His one work in life is to produce better fruit. So Jesus came to earth to engraft His nature on the tree of humanity, and thus to grow better men and women, better boys and girls.

Facing the Future in Faith. Joseph had been doing this, too, all his life. He trusted God, and waited His time and way for everything, but now he is coming to the great future beyond this life. He said to his brethren, "I die and God will surely visit you." God had fulfilled His promises to him so many times in the past, that he has strong faith for his brethren in the future. What is that the four men are carrying? It is the coffin containing Joseph's body. They do not go to Canaan to bury it now. But he made them promise that they would take his body with them when God was ready for all the people to leave Egypt and go back to Canaan. This they did, and we will learn about that in the story of Moses. Do you know how they kept the bodies so long in those days? It was by embalming them with fragrant spices that kept them from decaying. The body was wrapped with strips of cloth and then put in a box, also prepared so that it would not decay. When it was all done it was called a "mummy," and it would keep for hundreds of years. I saw the "mummy" of Pharaoh in the British museum. This was over 3,000 years old. Some think that we may yet find the "mummy" bodies of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob in the cave of Machpelah. This burying place has been carefully guarded always. The souls of all who love God go immediately at death to be with Him. Then at last He brings each body to its own soul, for He has watched over the bodies till He is ready to raise them again.

Quiz and Study. 1. What were some early dreams of Joseph, and how did they come true? 2. What three dreams did Joseph interpret in Egypt? 3. What trait of character do you like best in Joseph? 4. What other good traits can you name? 5. What kind of Scripture vengeance did Joseph take on his brothers? 6. Tell what you can about a "mummy." 7. Look at those four men carrying the coffin, and then tell about four men who carried a sick man to Christ once. 8. In what ways was Joseph like Christ?

Challenge Text. Let no man despise thy ———; but be thou an ——— of the believers in" (what six ways?). 1 Tim. 4:(?)

Practical Thoughts. 1. One can do his best only when he will be his best. 2. One can be his best only in taking Jesus Christ as Savior and helper. 3. God alone can take judicial vengeance; the Christian's revenge is by forgiveness. 4. "I forgive, but I cannot forget," is Satan's trick to keep us from forgiving at all. 5. Joseph's body was saved for hundreds of years, but his character grows brighter and grander forever. 6. Every life has its mountain peaks of vision and its valleys of service and suffering. 7. God can make a school house out of a prison or a palace. 8. We should take God into account, and into partnership in all of our life relations. 9. "God chooses fit men; God fits chosen men."

Now there arose up a new

all manner of service in wherein they made them serve, was with rigour.

THE SCRIPTURE LESSON IS EX. 1:1-14.

Prayer: O Lord, Our life may be in affliction and bitter bondage; its way may be compassed by weakness and trials; but may we not forget Thee—Thou that setteth the stars in the heavens. Thou seest us and knowest our need. Teach us how to be patient, cheerful, trustful in the dark and hard places. For Christ's sake. Amen.

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, from the death of Joseph, 1635 B. C., to the birth of Moses, 1571 B. C. Place, Goshen, in Egypt. Persons, Pharaoh, taskmasters, people.

Scripture Setting: God's People Afflicted. Goodness and mercy of God, Isa. 54:4-17. Safety of the godly, Ps. 91. Refuge in God, Heb. 6:9-20. God over-ruling man, Job. 12:12-19. An ignorant king, Acts 7:11-19. Divine presence promised, Isa. 43:1-13. Gracious mercies, Hab. 3:1-19. All things work for good, Rom. 8:28-39. Divine care of the nation, Isa. 5:1-7. God never forgets, Deut. 4:31-40.

Life and Conduct Setting: The great truths of the passage may apply to the nation or to the individual. It is a story and study of affliction. 1. Occasion of affliction—often, as here, the effort to secure temporal good. 2. Causes of affliction—because misunderstood and prospered. 3. Motive in causing affliction—desire to get some advantage. 4. Providence in affliction—preparing man, or nation, for the Divine plan and purpose. 5. Deeper purpose in affliction; for example, (a) kept from worldly alliances; (b) fixed and settled in God's grace; (c) kept from the idolatry of the world; (d) prepared to receive the special messages of God; (e) furnishing an opportunity to exhibit the true religion to the world; (f) warning them from Egypt and awakening desires for Canaan.

HOW GOD'S PEOPLE WERE AFFLICTED.

We must think now of Jacob's descendants as the people of God, in a special way. God is beginning to build a nation that is to help Him rebuild a world. Then from this time on, we must think of this people as the children of Israel. You remember that Israel was the new name God gave to Jacob by the angel.

A Bad and Cruel King. He is called Pharaoh, but it is not the Pharaoh that Joseph served. Pharaoh was a general name given to all their kings. It was like our word king, or czar, or governor. This particular Pharaoh was called Rameses the second. This is the one whose "mummy" body was found not many years ago. The markings on the case, and the written documents inside, showed who it was.

When Jacob and his family came to Egypt, God had prepared that particular Pharaoh to welcome them, and he had done much for them as you remember. God can make even bad kings do His will, though they may not know it. Of one such king it is said, in Scripture, "I girded thee, though thou hast not known me." This was Cyrus, and one of our stories will tell of him. Altogether the Israelites were in Egypt 215 years, and they had been there now over 100 years. Egypt was a great and mighty nation, and so this bad king could do just about what he pleased. The gods they worshiped were false gods, made of wood and stone, or chosen from the animals, like the calf. Such gods could not have any power over the king or his people. But God used this wicked king for a purpose.

Reason of the Egyptian Bondage. God brought them into Egypt, that they might grow into a great nation, undisturbed by the Canaanites, whose land they were to possess; this they could not have done had they remained in Canaan. But they were not to stay in Egypt (Gen. 1:24), though if their stay had continued prosperous and pleasant, they probably would have been unwilling to leave. Their sufferings were for their good in many ways. A piece of pig-iron is easily prepared; it is melted from the ore, and cast into a block; but it is so brittle that you cannot use it where there will be any strain on it. If you wish to make it bear strains, you must re-melt, forge, refine, and weld it.

A Prospered People. Do you remember any of the wonderful promises God made to Abraham? His descendants were to grow to be like stars for multitude and like the sand on the sea shore. If you try to count the stars or the grains of sand it will help you to understand the promise. Well, the promise is beginning to be fulfilled. The seventy families that came down to Egypt have grown to be a nation. They were nearly as large as our nation was when it declared its independence. They had 600,000 fighting men alone. Can you think of some reason why they prospered so? There was the promise of God; but they must have obeyed Him, so that His promise could be fulfilled. They went to the place given them, the land of Goshen; they had a good climate and soil and had a healthful occupation; they did not have those bad sins which other nations had; they came from good stock, long lived and vigorous; they had the true God to love and worship. All these things gave them prosperity. A person, or a nation will be prospered and successful outwardly according to the goodness each has inwardly. In that group of Israelites the faces all look good. It may be because they were honest and true in purpose and spirit. Anyway, we know they obeyed the laws of the land and were friendly to Pharaoh.

The Soul Paints the Face. How does the doctor bring health to the cheek? You look on the reviving child and say: "See how his cheek begins to bloom again. What has the doctor done? Has he painted that cheek with a tender vermilion? Is this enamel?" "No; the doctor has not touched the cheek." "Then how has he made it bloom?" "By touching the life-springs, by touching the blood, by touching the heart, by touching the inner reality of things; touching that, this bloom has come." Just so it is the inner goodness of the heart which makes the face and life beautiful.

Unjust and Bitter Bondage. Pharaoh felt that he must check the growth of the people, and crush their spirit and ambition. So what does he do? He circulates an evil report that they may turn to be enemies and so bring war. That is a dreadful picture of war, with the chariot and spear and dying men. He seemed to hang that up for his people to look at to turn them against the Israelites. This king was as shrewd as he was cruel, and so he persuaded his people to hate the Israelites. He said to his lords and nobles, "Let us deal wisely." Really, it was very foolish, for it was fighting against God. The king gave command that two great cities should be built, where arms and supplies could be kept till needed. These were built in Goshen, and the Israelites were compelled to build them. This itself was hard, for they were used to caring for flocks and herds in the fields. Then there was no stone there, and they had to make brick to build the cities with. This was even a harder kind of work, such as the lowest slaves do. Besides all, he set cruel men over them, to whip them and force them to do more. Those two pictures show how cruel and heartless these taskmasters were. All this time the Israelites must have been wondering why God allowed them to suffer. I think, too, some of them kept praying that God would deliver them. Do you think God had forgotten them? Oh, no; He was just waiting for the right time to come to their help.

God Greater Than Man. Yes, we all know it, but man keeps forgetting it. This king forgot it, if he ever knew it. Even if he believed in a false god, he should know that any god is greater than man—that is, any god he would feel like worshiping. But of course, the only real and true God is very much greater than man, and greater than all men. We know this was true in this case, for it is said that "the more they afflicted them the more they multiplied." This was just because God was with them and for them. The king formed a purpose and made a plan; but the greater King had a purpose and a plan. So these two kings fought for the mastery. God was mightier and won the victory, as he always does. God can use all kinds of places and trials as schools, both for nations and persons.

"God Keeps School There, Too." "It is a rough place where he is located now," said a lady, speaking anxiously of her son, a young man whose business had taken him away from home to one of the mining towns of the West. "I should not feel so anxious about him if he were among different surroundings, but a place like that is a school for everything evil."

"Yes," admitted her friend, "but you must not forget that God keeps school there, also."

Those Egyptians in the last picture are not bad looking, but it is not enough to look as if one were good; he must also be good. They probably were better than the king and his wicked counsellors, but we know that they were not as good as they ought to be. When the king found that the Israelites grew in numbers and in power in spite of his opposition, he decided on another plan even more terrible and sinful. If you do not know what it was you will learn about it in the next story.

Quiz and Study. 1. Tell the story of the way the Israelites came to go to Egypt. 2. What family of three, father, mother and baby, went down to Egypt once, and why? 3. Name as many of the sons of Jacob as you can. 4. What great river made Egypt so fertile? 5. How old were Jacob and Joseph at death? 6. Tell some reasons why the Israelites grew in numbers so fast. 7. In the house of the Interpreter (Pilgrim's Progress), which scene makes you think of "the more they were afflicted, the more they grew"? 8. "Name four hard taskmasters of Satan over men."

Challenge Text. "When we cried unto the ——— of our fathers, the Lord heard ——— and looked on ———." Deut. 26:(?)

Practical Thoughts. 1. The people of God are a people peculiar, protected, prospered, persecuted, and providentially led. 2. Worldliness, false ambition, godless pleasure, lust, intemperance, selfishness, are some of the modern taskmasters. 3. God may allow affliction, but always to work out His glory and man's good. 4. Man's "Let us act wisely" is often supremest folly. 5. Whatever the affliction and persecution, we should trust God; that is what faith is for. 6. Times of affliction, with man, or church, or nation, are apt to be times of real prosperity. 7. Woe and also failure come to the man who fights against God. 8. The world often forgets, but the Lord remembers His people forever. 9. Satan's yoke of bondage is hard and galling; Christ's yoke of service is easy and joyous.

Prayer: Lord Jesus, We praise Thee for Thy providence and care. Thou orderest all the events of our lives and controll'est men and kings. Thou makest even Thine enemies to do Thy will and pleasure. Give unto us faith in Thy power and mercy, and enable us to glorify Thee in all things. For Christ's sake. Amen.

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, B. C. 1571-1531. Place, Probably Zoan, near Memphis (Noph).

Scripture Setting: Trained for the Lord. The child Samuel, 1 Sam. 3:1-21. The overruling God, Psa. 33:10-22. The child Jesus, Matt. 2:1-12. The Lord as keeper, Psa. 121. Moses the prophet, Acts 3:14-26. The deliverer, Isa. 49:7-12. A child trained, 2 Tim. 3:10-11. The protecting God, Psa. 27.

Life and Conduct Setting: Here is an illustration of how God finds and prepares a leader for His people. 1. The pious home is a factor. After all, blood counts when it is good blood. 2. The mother's faith is a factor; the faith that went with him from the home and into the unknown. 3. The controlling touch of God is a factor, directing mind and step and heart of that princess. 4. The godly home is a factor, to which he is providentially returned. 5. The court of culture is a factor, by which he comes into all the learning of Egypt. 6. Personal association with his people is a factor, keeping alive his interest and sympathy. 7. Even early mistakes and blunders were factors, sending him off to that desert college where he was taught of God for his great life work.

GOD FINDING AND TRAINING A LEADER.

A Babe in a Queer Boat. If you had lived in Egypt about the time of this story, you boys and your friends would probably have gone swimming in the river Nile. Quite likely you would have found the body of a baby on the shore, nearly every time you went to the river. This was because the wicked king had ordered his people to throw all boy babies of the Israelites into the river. He tried to kill them off as fast as they were born. There was a family that had a boy about three years old and a girl about ten. These were born before this cruel law of the king. A new baby brother came into that home, and then the parents knew that he might be seized and cast into the river, as many others had been. They did not dare to let the baby be seen, nor even to cry aloud. The baby's sister was told not to tell anyone about it. And they watched the little three-year-old to keep him from prattling about it. In this way the mother kept the babe hidden for three months. When she saw that she could not keep it safely much longer she said to herself one day, "I know what I'll do, I'll make a little boat and put him in it, and trust to God to take care of him." So she made a basket boat out of the rushes that grew in the river. They were tough and light, and would float. Then she covered it with pitch, to keep the water out. She put the baby in it, and hid it among the flags. The first pictures show all this.

How Moses Paid His Mother. "Mother," said a little boy, "when you get old and want some one to read to you, I'll pay you off." The child's mother read to him a great deal, especially on the Lord's day. His own efforts were so slow, he seemed to appreciate how good his mother was to him, and that some time in the future he might return her kindness. "I'll pay you off, mother," he cried with childish satisfaction. Little one, do you know the only way in which you can ever pay off mother? By loving Jesus and doing His will and preparing for Heaven, just as little Moses did.—Exchange.

A Surprising Discovery. Do you think of anything else that mother did? She was a good woman, loving her home and her children; but she also loved God, and her husband did too. I am sure they both prayed when they left that queer little boat with the baby treasure in it. This was all they could do, and I expect God told them to do this much. Now we shall see that God works for his people, making "all things work together for good." The mother had placed her daughter over yonder to watch what might happen to the babe. This daughter's name was Miriam, and her little brother was Aaron. The princess was walking apart from her lady attendants and suddenly she spied the odd looking boat. She sent her handmaid to get it and bring it to her. When opened, she found the beautiful babe, and it won the heart of the princess. It won her not only by its beauty, but by its helplessness. Then when the babe cried, its victory was complete. In love and pity she took it, although she saw it was a Hebrew child. See how the pictures show this finding of the babe.

God Controls All Things. In our restlessness over those we love, we rightly strive to environ them with the best and purest influences; but when this is impossible, when the case is beyond our control, we are too faithless of God's power in the midst of evil. We fancy that all is going wrong, and forget that He is not dependent upon helps of our choosing.

"God's in His Heaven;

—Selected.

A Quick Witted Girl. How did Miriam get there so soon, for she stood "afar off," watching? She probably came near when she saw them take up the baby. She must have seen also how kind the princess was. Now she asks, "Shall I go and call to thee a nurse of the Hebrew women?" When the princess said, "Go," Miriam went and called the baby's own mother. She took the baby to her own home, to take care of it for the princess. So she has her baby, and yet she knows that the princess claims it for her own. When older, she must bring it to the palace of the princess. But they are all happy that its life is saved, and prayer is turned to praise. Just think how God made "all things work together"—the little boat, the princess, Miriam, even the beauty and tears of the babe, the bringing of the mother as a nurse, and letting her take the babe to her own home; and thus working together the mother's prayer is answered and the child saved.

God Working for Us. God is ever on the side of the children. He planned a way of safety for the babe which would never have occurred to human sagacity; not by miraculous agencies, but by the simple, natural instrumentalities of His providence. God delights to use the weak and foolish things of this world (1 Cor. 1:27). He used a baby's beauty (v. 2), a woman's faith (v. 3), a tiny ark (v. 3), a sister's love (v. 4), a woman's heart (v. 5), a baby's tears (v. 6), the cruel king's own daughter (v. 9). "Nurse it for me," the princess said, and those words girt the babe about with safety. "Every soldier in the land grasped his weapon now for his defense. All the wealth of Egypt ministered to his wants. All the might of Pharaoh availed for his protection. The poor child of the Hebrews was the son of Pharaoh's daughter." God's love is over all. God's love is with all.—A. C. M. in Practical Commentary.

The Boy in the Palace. You have already guessed who this babe was, for you know he was the brother of Miriam and Aaron. He may have had a Hebrew name, but the princess called him Moses, for she said, "I drew him out of the water." She promised to pay the mother for caring for the child, but she was paid better wages than the princess could pay, in having the dear baby safe in her own home to train him in the Hebrew religion. When he was old enough to go to school, his mother brought him to the princess. After that Moses lived in the palace, and was given the best education that was possible anywhere. There was a famous university at Heliopolis, where the palace was, and no doubt Moses went to that. In the New Testament we are told that he was "learned in all the wisdom of the Egyptians." Moses never forgot that he was an Israelite and he may have thought often that he would like to deliver his people from their cruel bondage. But the time for that work had not come yet. Moses needed a different kind of training for the great work which God had for him to do. His love for his own people was so strong that, when he became his own master he left the palace and went to live among the Israelites. He was anxious to help them, and he tried to do it in a wrong way, as we shall learn. But all the time he was preparing for his great life work.

God's Schools Are Everywhere. God's schools are everywhere. He will not forget those committed to His care, and there is no seeming ill to ourselves or those dear to us that he may not use for education in that which is highest and noblest.—J. E. Miller.

No circumstances are so unpromising, no surroundings so rough or difficult that through them God cannot teach wonderful lessons to the souls He is training.—Exchange.

Quiz and Study. 1. Why was Moses hidden in the river? 2. What cruel king ordered all baby boys killed, and why? 3. What were the names of Moses' parents and of what tribe were they? 4. Who named the babe Moses, and why? 5. Give the names of Moses' brother and sister? 6. This babe in a basket makes you think of what babe in a manger? 7. What other king ordered all baby boys killed, and where?

Challenge Text. "By faith Moses, when he was come to —, refused to be called the — of Pharaoh's daughter." Heb. 11: (9)

Practical Thoughts. 1. God watches, cares for and loves even the babies. 2. A little girl may be an important link in the chain of God's providences. 3. No teacher is equal to a good mother for a child. 4. God has many ways of saving those He purposes to protect. 5. "Little did that princess think that she was on an errand for the Almighty that day." 6. When all is dark and uncertain then is the greater reason for prayer. 7. A difficult thing is more easily accomplished if God is active in it.

THE CALL OF MOSES

Now Moses kept the of Jethro his father in law, the priest of Midian: and he led the flock to the backside

of the

and came to the

of God, even to Horeb.
And the angel of the Lord appeared unto him
in a flame and he looked, and, behold, the bush burned with fire, and the bush was not consumed.

And Moses said, I will now turn aside, and see this great sight, why the

is not burnt. And when the Lord saw that he turned aside to see, God called unto him out of the midst of the bush, and said, Moses, Moses. And he said, Here am I. And he said, Draw not nigh hither: put off thy holy ground.

Moreover he said, I am the God of thy father, the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob. And

for he was afraid to look upon God.

THE SCRIPTURE LESSON IS EX. 3.

Prayer: O Lord Jesus, Make us quick to hear Thy call to service. May we believe that Thy call means also Thy grace and strength. May we remember all who are in need, or in sin, commending them to Thy care and love. May we be ready to work with Thee, and for Thee, for the betterment of all. When Thou callest, may we say: Here am I. For Christ's sake. Amen.

Where are my great men coming from—
The men to rule the state—
When, this old century left behind,
We've passed the twentieth gate?
My brave, broad-hearted citizens—
The strong, the good, the true—
You're drifting now—rouse up, my boys;
They all must come from you.
Don't let past glories be forgot,
Or patriotism die;
Let every boy upon my roll
Shout: "Ready; here am I!" —Selected.

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, B. C. 1492. Place, the Horeb range of mountains in Midian. Persons, Moses and the Angel of God, Who is Jesus Christ.

Scripture Setting: God calling His Workers. Abraham called, Gen. 12:1-9. Joshua called, Num. 27:12-23. David called, 1 Sam. 16:1-13. Samuel called, 1 Sam. 3:1-10. Elisha called, 1 Ki. 19:1-26. Paul called, Acts 9:1-18. God gives power, Isa. 63:1-19. Wait on the Lord, Ps. 27:1-14. God's thought of His people, Ps. 77:1-20. The presence of God, Ex. 33:7-23.

Life and Conduct Setting. We see, in this call of Moses, how God finds and equips His workers. The equipment is of many kinds. 1. A training in personal character—made faithful, humble, religious, God-fearing. 2. A training by remarkable visions and experiences—the transfiguration times of life. 3. A training by direct Divine call—the still, small voice to heart and conscience. 4. A training by the revealed purpose of God—through His manifest and beckoning providences. 5. A training by the presence of an immediate duty—call and challenge to do one's best. 6. A training by the fact of the Divine presence and help—overcoming one's weakness and fear. 7. A training by a new view of God—the great "I Am," mightier than the mightiest of earth.

GOD FINDING AND TRAINING A LEADER.

God is doing many wonderful things in the world. Sometimes He acts by His Spirit, or by an angel. But almost always He uses some person. The Bible tells us how God used even boys and girls to do some needed service for Him. Really, He wants all to be His friends and workers. Is it not a great honor that we are asked to work with Him and for Him? We should listen carefully to learn if He has called us to do any work. Sometimes He just whispers in the heart. Now we can learn how He called Moses.

Breaking From the Royal Family. Moses had grown up in the palace, and had everything he desired. He was taught, also, in all the learning of the Egyptians. That meant a great deal, for Egypt was famous for its scholars and schools. The princess, who had taken Moses as her own boy, told the wise men to teach him. He was quick and willing, and he learned a great many things. But he was not altogether satisfied. By his early training, in his real mother's home, he knew about the true God, and that the Israelites were God's chosen people. When he saw how those poor people were afflicted he said to himself, "I ought to help them, and I will help them." That was a good resolution to make, and he meant that he chose to go with his own people. Moses was about forty years old now. He was very anxious to help his people in some way. One day he saw one of those cruel task-masters beating an Israelite. He looked to see that no one was watching, and then he killed the taskmaster. He hid the body in the sand. But Pharaoh learned about it, and said that he would kill Moses for that. So Moses had to run away to another country. Moses really wanted to help his people, but he did not go about it in the right way. It is important that we do right things, and also that we do them in a right way. And it is just impossible to do wicked acts without being found out. And even if Moses had hidden the sin from Pharaoh, he could not hide it from God, nor even from his own conscience.

A Right Way to Work for God. J. Wilbur Chapman tells us that one Monday morning he was sad and out of heart; it seemed as if his work was a failure. He took a newspaper in which an address said that everything in life depended upon whether a man worked for God or whether he let God work through him. "I saw," says he, "in a minute that I had been working for God until I had worn the very flesh off my bones and was worried to death. And I knelt down and said, 'My God, I will no longer work for Thee; but here is my manhood—pour Thyself through me to men.' That altered my life."

A College in the Desert. Moses fled to the land of Midian, in Arabia. Midian was a son of Abraham, so that Moses was still among his own kindred. His first act then was to help others, and this time he did the right thing in a right way. While waiting by a well some girls came to water their father's sheep. Some rough men came and tried to drive the girls away. Moses took the girls' part and then helped them to water the sheep. The father of these girls was named Jethro, and he was a priest. He asked Moses to live with him and help him with his flocks. He also gave Moses one of his daughters as his wife. It was a great change for Moses, from the royal palace to a desert place. But God made it a great school for him. He learned many things here which he could not learn in the busy royal city. Among his teachers here were God Himself, and nature, and his own conscience, and the memory of the things his mother had told him. He learned to know himself, and how weak and sinful he was. Instead of being quick-tempered, he became the meekest of men. He became humble and grew to trust God more and more. And all the time he was doing good work for his father-in-law. In this school he learned to be industrious and faithful. These flocks in the picture and the bleak desert you see were part of the school where Moses was trained. But the best of all was that God was teaching him and God knew what he needed; and Moses was willing to be led.

My Father Knows the Way. A blind boy stood on the corner of a city street. "Shall I help you across, my little friend?" a gentleman asked. "Oh, no, thank you; I am waiting for my father." "Can you trust your father?" "Oh, yes; when he has my hand I feel perfectly safe." "Why do you feel safe?" "Oh, because my father knows the way. He can see, but I am blind."

A New Lesson By a Strange Teacher. God had other things for Moses to learn and to do. So one day he appeared to him in a strange way, and told him these things. It had been about two hundred years since God had spoken to any man. Moses had been in this desert school for forty years. I think he must have wondered, again and again, how his poor people were faring. Perhaps he had heard that one Pharaoh had died and that another was ruling. Some One else, too, was thinking of those afflicted people and planning to help them. You can easily guess who it was. God always hears the cry of the afflicted. When He was ready, and when Moses was made ready, God came to call him for his special work. That high mountain is near where Moses was with the flocks one day. He was alone, and he saw a bush burning in a strong flame, and yet it did not burn up. There were many such bushes there, but only this one was burning. He was curious to learn why, and was just going up to see when God called him: "Moses, Moses." He answered: "Here am I." Then God told him about His plan to deliver the Israelites from Pharaoh. But first He said to him, "Do not come near, but take off your shoes; for this is holy ground." This was to teach him reverence in the presence of God.

Then God told Moses that he was the one to go to Pharaoh and ask him to let the Israelites go free. This was a surprising thing to Moses, for he did not know that God had been training him for this very work. It was natural for Moses to shrink from such a task; and if he had really refused it would have been sinful. But God meets all his objections. And in the next story we will tell something of how He persuades Moses. Moses feels his littleness, but sees God's greatness and power.

The Secret of Power. A person was told of a Christian woman who had great power and influence. She said at once: "I must go and see that woman and learn the secret of her strong and useful life." She went to her, and said: "Are you a woman of great faith?" "No," was the reply; "I am a woman of little faith in a great God. I try to see the hand of God in the present, and trust Him for the future." This was the secret of her great peace and power and influence.

Quiz and Study. 1. What great king was a shepherd (1 Sam. 16)? 2. What greater king (John 10) likened Himself to a shepherd? 3. Tell about the last time God talked with man before this (Gen. 46:2). 4. How did Christ use a boy once to feed a multitude? 5. How did God use a girl to cure a king of leprosy? 6. How does the Holy Spirit speak to man? 7. What other instances can you give of God appearing in or by fire? 8. Tell how the boy Samuel was called in the temple (1 Sam. 3).

Challenge Text. "I am the ———; My ———, hear My voice and come unto Me." John 10:(?)

Practical Thoughts. 1. "Here am I," is the greatest gift one can make to God. 2. God is hearing the cry of nations, and is coming to deliver them from sin and Satan. 3. God's delays are usually because His people are not ready. 4. God reveals Himself to those who are industrious and faithful. 5. Retirement and meditation develop the strong and wise leader. 6. Calvary is pre-eminently the "burning bush" of God's providence and grace. 7. True greatness is often accompanied with humility and distrust of self. 8. To have God on our side is of more value than all the learning of Egypt, or of the world.

THE SCRIPTURE LESSON IS EX. 4:1-9, 27-31.

Prayer: O Lord Jesus, Help us to see Thee as the great "I Am"—ever living and ever present to help Thy people. May we therefore be assured to go forward in every path of duty. May Thy "Certainly I will be with thee," inspire us against all difficulties. May the cry of the afflicted and pitiful, in all the earth, be used by Thee to call us and fit us for service. For Christ's sake. Amen.

A Cheering Word.
 "Is the work difficult?
 Jesus directs thee.
 Is the path dangerous?
 Jesus protects thee.
 Fear not and falter not;
 Let this word cheer thee:
 All through the coming year,
 He will be near thee."

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, B. C. 1491. Place, the Horeb range of mountains. Persons, God, talking with Moses.

Scripture Setting: God's Wonderful Power. His wonderful works, Ps. 40:1-11. His wonderful redemption, Luke 1:67-79. He promises wisdom, Prov. 2:1-8. He makes us fruitful, 2 Pet. 1:1-8. He stills life's storms, Ps. 107:23-31. His guiding hand, Luke 12:1-7. He transforms character, 2 Cor. 3:10-18. His wonderful grace and glory, John 1:1-18. He gives courage for work, Ps. 144:1-15. He gives grace and power, 1 Cor. 15:1-10. His wonderful eye and hand, Ps. 139:1-12. His wonderful Heaven, Rev. 5:6-14.

Life and Conduct Setting: This is a striking picture of the wonderful way God is in His world, working out His purposes. In this sending of Moses, we note: 1. His wonderful long suffering, both in sparing the Egyptians and training the Israelites. 2. His wonderful mercy, prompting His people to cry unto Him. 3. His wonderful love in hearing them cry unto Him and planning their deliverance. 4. His wonderful foresight, preparing a capable leader. 5. His wonderful signs, by which He calls and encourages Moses. 6. His wonderful patience and tact in graciously reasoning and arguing with Moses. 7. His wonderful wisdom in joining Moses and Aaron in the work, and infusing His spirit and zeal into them both.

GOD'S WONDERFUL POWER.

Moses had learned many things. In the Egyptian schools he had studied a great many general branches; and in the desert life he studied about God and himself and his duty to those who suffered.

Two Wonderful Tests. But Moses needed to know more about God before he could start in his work. He was afraid the Israelites would not believe him, and would not believe that God had sent him; and he told God this. So God said to him: "What is that in your hand?" Moses answers: "The rod with which I guide the sheep." God said, "Throw it on the ground." Moses did so, and it became a serpent. He fled from it, but God said to him, "Take it by the tail." He did so and it became a rod again. Then God said to him, "Put your hand in your bosom, and take it out again." Moses did so, and lo! it was white and scaly like the hand of a leper. Moses was in great terror, for leprosy was a disease dreaded by all. But God said, "Put your hand into your bosom once more." He did so, and his hand was restored like the other. God told Moses to use the rod and serpent sign, and if that did not satisfy them to use the sign of the changed hand. If they do not believe these two signs, then take water from the river and it shall become blood. The rod and serpent sign is fully illustrated in the pictures. In these signs God was showing Moses that He was to be ever with him and to help him.

God's Eye and Hand. Watch the eyes of an oil painting and see how they follow you to any part of the room. No matter how many persons there are in the room, the eye of the portrait is looking directly at each of them. So the eye of God sees everyone in all the world. The eye of the painting only seems to follow you, but the eye of God really sees you; and then, too, God is ready with His hand to guide and help those who are trying to do His will. He says to such: "Certainly I will be with thee."

A Wonderful Promise. Still Moses hesitated. Now he objected because he said he could not speak well enough. But God replied, "Did I not make the mouth? Go, and I will teach you what to say." This was in itself a great promise. Moses pleaded once more to be excused from so great a task, and asked the Lord to choose some other man. The Lord said, "You have a brother, Aaron, who can speak well; let him help by doing the talking and you show the signs." And thus you see God furnishes Moses with another mouth so that the message might be delivered.

Moses could not object any longer, but he yielded to God's call. All this was while he was near the bush that burned. It can be seen on fire in the pictures. When the Lord was done talking with him, Moses went from Mount Sinai with his flocks. He got permission from Jethro to go and see his people, and taking his wife and sons, he started for Egypt. On the way he met his brother coming to see him. This was as the Lord had promised. They talked about the matter and each agreed to do his part. After this Moses' wife and sons returned to live with her father, and Moses and Aaron went forward in faith, confident that God would do as He promised. They knew, too, that with God's help, they would succeed.

One with God Is a Majority. "Some years ago, in Scotland, a Scotch lord gave to his old servant Donald a little farm. He called him in one day, and said: "Donald, I am going to give you that farm, that you may work it for yourself and spend the rest of your days there upon your own property." Donald, with all the caninness that characterizes the typical Scotchman, looked up into the face of his master, and said to him: "It's nae gude to gie me the farm; I have nae capital to stock it." His lordship looked at him, and said: "Oh, Donald, I think I can manage to stock it also." And Donald said: "Oh, well, if it is you and me for it, I think we will manage."

A Wonderful Partnership. This is nothing less than God joining with man for the accomplishment of a certain work. The wonder is both, in that God condescends to come into such a relation and that Moses can be made fit for such a partnership. But God plans the means as well as the end; and so Moses is gradually prepared for this high honor and this great work. No man ever had greater trials and none profited more by them. He was ambitious to do the very work which he finally did, but it was after God's wonderful training. His backwardness afterwards to undertake his mission was no less remarkable than his previous forwardness. The years of the life of Moses are, curiously, divided into three forties—the first forty he spent as a prince in Pharaoh's court; the second as a shepherd in Midian; the third as a lawgiver in Israel. How changeable is the life of men, especially that of growing, good men! Moses had finished his second forty when he received his commission to bring Israel out of Egypt. Sometimes it is long before God calls His servants out to that work which of old He designed them for, and has been graciously preparing them for. Moses was born to be Israel's deliverer, and yet he did not receive his commission until he was eighty years of age. But then he moved steadily forward in the plan and strength of God, feeling as Paul said later, "I can do all things through Christ who strengtheneth me."

The School of Obscurity. Don't be afraid of obscurity. God likes obscure people. He very often drags them out of obscurity into the light of day. Don't be alarmed. No good man can be buried alive. He will shine in his own chosen center, however small that may be. When man is most alone, God is with him. Out by Horeb, Moses was honored with this vision. It was while out on the plains, keeping their flocks, that the shepherds received tidings of the birth of Jesus. Moses saw more of God in the desert than ever he had seen in Pharaoh's court.

Wonderful Mercy. This story is all wonderful. Beginning with the wonderful name, we close it with the wonderful way Moses and Aaron were received by the Israelites. They were two men, known to only a few of the people, and coming on a great errand; but the people are ready to hear and obey. It is all the more wonderful for one of the men had fled from Egypt because he had killed a man. True there was a new king on the throne, but, no doubt, Moses was troubled in spirit, though God had told him that the people who sought his life were dead. And I wonder if God had not told the Israelites to welcome this message of deliverance? Only so can we understand it all. God was working with the Israelites even while He was persuading Moses. He can work as He pleases among men and people and kings. Some will submit and help on His plans. Some will oppose Him, as Pharaoh did, but even they are overruled to work out His own purposes. We who wish to work with and for God should be anxious only to know His will, His way and His time for doing things.

The Clock of God. His time is like the time of the tide: All the art and power of man can neither hasten nor retard its moment; it must be waited for; nothing can be done without it, and when it comes nothing can resist it. The only reason why the Lord seems to delay what He afterwards grants is that the best hour is not yet come.—John Newton.

Quiz and Study. 1. What did God mean by saying that His name was "I Am"? 2. What other names are given to God in the Bible? 3. What great work does God call the Christian Church to do today? 4. What was the last great command of Christ, beginning "Go ye"—? 5. What great event afterwards happened on this Mt. Sinai? 6. Which one of God's names means "God with us"? 7. Who said, "Lord, what will Thou have me to do," and where was he? 8. Name six great persons who have lived in the world up to Moses' time.

Challenge Text. "I will give you a ——— and ——— which all your adversaries shall not be able to ———." Luke 21:19

Practical Thoughts. 1. The person who feels his unfitness is often the most worthy. 2. God sees below the surface, and so chooses a Jacob, a Moses, a David, a Peter, a Saul. 3. What one is, counts more with God than what he does or is doing. 4. A great task is often God's way of challenging man to be and do his best. 5. The ideals and visions we have are really a gift and a work that is peculiarly our own. 7. Man's business is to obey; God is pledged to make the obedience work out His purpose. 8. "Lo! I am with you alway," is to inspire us to obey God's "Go ye into all the world and preach My Gospel." 9. The more we obey, the more God reveals His power and His glory. 10. The power of associated toil (Moses and Aaron)—"One can chase a thousand, but two can put ten thousand to flight." 11. God uses that which each one has—the rod of Moses, the sling of David, the needle of Dorcas, the lunch of the small boy, the tongue of Aaron.

THE SCRIPTURE LESSON IS EX. 7:8-22.

Prayer: Lord Jesus, May we not be deceived by the spirits of evil that seem to be true and speak truth. May we try all things by the Divine tests, and, above all, be true to Thy word. May we be kept from self-delusions, false motives and aims, and from the cunning wiles of the devil. Vindicate Thyself through us. For Christ's sake. Amen.

"In God's own might
We gird us for the coming fight,
And, strong in Him whose cause is ours
In conflict with unholy powers,
We grasp the weapons He has given—
The Light, and Truth and Love of Heaven."

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, B. C. 1491. Place, Heliopolis, one of the capitals of Egypt. Persons, Moses and Aaron, Pharaoh, magicians.

Scripture Setting: Battle Between the False and the True. False and true foundations, Matt. 7:21-29. False and true guides, 1 John 4:1-6. False and true trust, Eph. 2:8-22. False and true entrances, John 10:1-9. False and true hearing, Matt. 13:3-23. False and true relations to Christ, John 15:1-11. False and true material, 1 Cor. 3:1-15. False and true gods, Deut. 13:1-11. False and true self, Rom. 7:5-25. False and true Christs, Acts 14:11-18.

Life and Conduct Setting: Here is an acted parable of the eternal conflict between the false and the true, the right and the wrong. The devil is cunning and wages the war to the utmost limit. But God and truth are positive and unyielding. They will not enter into any alliance or compromise. The war is inevitable, and to a finish. Some modern ways in which the battle is waged: 1. As to earthly and temporal things. The devil says they are mine; God says they are mine. 2. As to the Bible. The devil says it is one of many bibles;

God says it is the only Bible. 3. As to Jesus Christ. The devil says He is a good man, who died for His convictions; God says He is God, Who died for the sin of man. 4. As to salvation. The devil says it is a good thing tomorrow; God says the only time is today—now. 5. As to prayer. The devil says it is only a good spiritual exercise; God says it moves the Arm which moves the world. 6. As to giving the Gospel to the world. The devil says God will see to that in His own good time; God says "Go ye" and do it in this generation. 7. As to personal duty to others. The devil says, "You have all you can really do well"; God says, "You are your brother's keeper". 8. As to the new birth. The devil says, "Be good and do good"; God says, "Ye must be born again". 9. As to religions. The devil says Christianity is one of many religions; God says it is the one only true religion. Thus the devil admits just as much truth as he dare, and yet leave one in real error as to the vital things. The fact is when a thing is essentially false and wrong, the more good it has the worse it is. It is vital that we get on the God side of all questions.

A BATTLE BETWEEN THE FALSE AND THE TRUE.

A Foolish and Angry King. You remember Moses and Aaron were to see the Israelites and tell them what God had commanded. They did so, and were surprised to find the people so ready to believe them. Moses especially had said that his people would not hear him. But God had gone before and made them ready. We can almost hear some of them say, "Why this is just what we have hoped and prayed for." They not only believed, but they bowed and worshiped, showing that they were thankful. The two men were greatly encouraged, and so they went to see Pharaoh. Aaron did the talking, and said, "The Lord God of Israel says to you to let My people go that they may serve Me." Pharaoh thought that their God was like the gods of the Egyptians, as animals, serpents, or the river. He was very angry and defiant, and said, "Who is the Lord that I should obey Him?" He also said, "You are idle, and are keeping the people from their work." That showed how selfish he was. He wanted to get as much out of them as possible. He was like some people living now, who plan only for the things of this life, and never plan for God and His worship. Only he was even worse, for he cruelly ordered the Israelites to find for themselves the straw used in making the brick. This took much time, and yet the taskmasters required them to make as many brick as before. The Israelites complained to Moses, and he asked God what to do. Moses himself was in great distress. They were all too hasty in judging and forgot God's promise and power. But Moses did just the right thing. He went to God and told him all about it.

Look Up, But Don't Give Up. It is easy to give up. It is more and more difficult, as the days come and go, to hold on. Such a soul can find consolation and refreshment nowhere else but in God. The royal singer points out the way of deliverance when he cries out: Why art thou cast down, O my soul? and why art thou disquieted within me? Hope thou in God: for I shall yet praise Him, who is the health of my countenance, and my God. Verily, the mighty God, the everlasting Father, is the refuge of His children.—Epworth Herald.

The Rod and Serpent Sign. Then God told Moses and Aaron to go to Pharaoh with their rod, and do as He had commanded. They did so, and when they threw the rod down before Pharaoh it became a serpent. Pharaoh said, "My wise men can do that." He called them, and it looked as if their rods became serpents. Either the old serpent, Satan, gave them power to do this, or they did it by a trick of magic. In the pictures the rods all seem to turn into serpents. The magicians are glad, and so is the king; but Moses is not troubled, for he knows that something else is going to happen. This is shown in the last picture, and was very wonderful. Aaron's rod as a serpent actually swallowed up all the other rods! This ought to have proved to the king that the God of the Israelites was the greater God. But he would not believe it. The serpent was turned into a rod again, and Moses and Aaron went away. Pharaoh was proud, as well as wicked, and he set himself to oppose Moses and Aaron. He may not have known fully that he was opposing God, but he was. The more he opposed them, the harder his heart became. All sin works that way, until at last the heart is entirely hard, and cares not for anything or anybody. That is a terrible state for one to be in. It is called also a seared conscience, for the conscience then quits whispering to one what to do, or what not to do. Conscience means "God within," and it is the guide He has put in each person, to help him do right. It is a sad day for anyone when he loses conscience and gets a hard heart, as Pharaoh had.

Who Hardens the Heart? See how Pharaoh hardened his own heart more and more; he would not obey the Lord, and the Lord let him do as he pleased. Like the blows given to a piece of iron which harden it, so each blow of judgment which struck Pharaoh hardened him the more. So, also, if you heat a piece of iron, when it grows cold, it is harder than ever; Pharaoh's heart was heated, almost melted, over and over, then grew colder and harder than ever.

The same sun has a different effect on different things; it will melt wax, and harden clay, and so the very lesson from the word of God which melts some hearts only hardens others.—Mrs. M. G. Kennedy.

Nine Dreadful Plagues. Pharaoh used to go down to the river Nile and bathe. He also worshiped that river as one of his gods. God told Moses what to do next. He had hardly begun yet; and plague after plague was to come, each one worse than the last. So Moses and Aaron met Pharaoh at the river and Aaron struck the waters with the rod, and at once they turned to blood. This lasted for seven days, and there was much suffering. All the fish died, and there was a foul smell everywhere. Only in the land of Goshen the water was pure. God was careful to protect His people. After this plague Moses warned Pharaoh that another was coming if he did not let the people go. Pharaoh steadfastly refused, and so plague followed plague, nine in all. You can read about them in the Bible. Here is the black list: (2) Plague of frogs, Ex. 8:1-15; (3) of lice, vs. 16-18; (4) of flies, vs. 20-32; (5) of murrain, ch. 9:1-7; (6) of boils, vs. 8-12; (7) of hail, vs. 22-25; (8) of locusts, ch. 10:3-6; (9) of darkness, vs. 21-23. Is not this a fearful picture of misery? It was just like the great whip of God smiting the king and his people for their wickedness. Again and again Pharaoh pretended to repent, and Moses prayed for the plague to cease. Each time he was more hardened in heart. At last he said to Moses, "Get out of my sight," and Moses replied, "Be it as you say. I will see your face no more." Moses knew of the most terrible plague of all to come, the tenth and last. Of that we learn in the next story.

Are You Like Pharaoh? I am sure some of you have been thinking, "What a wicked man Pharaoh was to refuse to obey God so many times!" Yes, he was very wicked, and every time he refused to obey he grew more wicked. When do you think it is best to obey God? The very first time He speaks. How much trouble this would save!

Who will try this week to obey mamma the very first time she speaks? If you want to do something naughty, and God's voice whispers in your heart, "Don't do that, Charlie," how soon will you obey? Right away, I hope; the very first time.—Miss J. B. Merrill.

Quiz and Study. 1. What is a miracle? 2. What miracle did Christ work at a wedding? 3. What other miracles did Christ perform? 4. What other miracles did Moses work by this rod? 5. Was it the rod, or Moses, or God, that really worked the miracle? 6. Name as many of the ten plagues as you can. 7. The Egyptians worshipped things; do you know any way we may worship things, rather than God? 8. What did Pharaoh mean when he said to Moses, "I have sinned." 9. How is one really sorry for sin?

Practical Thoughts. 1. The shifts, excuses, and lies of unbelief. 2. Christianity is a religion of peace, but it has many terrible battles to secure it. 3. These magicians have many modern successors—now scientists, now historians, now a school of philosophy, now the blatant infidels, now the religious Pharisees. 4. The devil is never scrupulous as to the means he uses to secure his end. 5. When the human and Divine conflict the only safe course is to choose the Divine. 6. The supernatural is the key to ultimate victory in religious things; and God wins there. 7. The devil is a master in hypocrisy, deceit and jugglery. 8. God's promise is the one weapon by which we defeat the devil. 9. As Moses was victor over these emissaries of Satan, so Jesus Christ was victor over Satan himself. 10. God vindicates His worker, and rebukes and silences His opponents. 11. God equips His people with His energetic and victorious truth, and inspires them to battle against all error.

THE PASSOVER

Speak ye unto all the congregation of Israel, saying, In the tenth day of this month they shall take to them every man a lamb, according to the house of their fathers, a lamb for an house: And if the household be too little for the lamb, let him and his neighbour next unto his house take it according to the number of the souls; every man according to his eating shall make your count for the lamb. Your of the houses, wherein they shall eat it. And they shall eat the flesh in that night, they shall eat it. Eat not of it raw, nor sodden at all with water, but roast with fire; his head with his legs, and with the purtenance thereof.

THE PASSOVER.

THE SCRIPTURE LESSON IS EXODUS 12.

Prayer: Lord Jesus, May we see Thee to be our Redeemer and Saviour, protecting us from death and the grave. Thou hast died in order that all may be sheltered by the blood. May soul and life have the saving marks on them. Prompt us to a careful obedience to all Thy commands that we may enter into all the promised blessings. For Christ's sake. Amen.

"In the beauty of the lilies
Christ was born across the sea,
With a glory in his bosom
That transfigured you and me.
As He died to make men holy,
Let us die to make men free,
For God is marching on."

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, B. C. 1491. Place, The land of Goshen. Persons, Moses, Elders of Israel, Pharaoh.

Scripture Setting: The Lamb of God. Ezra's passover, Ezra 6:16-22. Josiah's passover, 2 Chron. 35:1-19. Christ our passover, 1 Cor. 5:1-8. The last passover, Matt. 26:17-30. The lamb of God, John 1:29-37. Redeemed by blood, 1 Pet. 1:13-21. "Till He come," 1 Cor. 11:23-34. The throne and the Lamb, Rev. 5:6-14.

Life and Conduct Setting: The parallelism between the passover and Christ's sacrificial death is marked and striking in many ways. 1. The passover was altogether a revelation from God to and through Moses; so Jesus Christ is the "Lamb of God," revealed in due time. 2. The passover is emphatically a protection by the blood. So Jesus Christ saves by His blood. 3. The passover represented the power of God both in smiting the Egyptians and in saving the Israelites; so Jesus Christ is the power of God against Satan and for the believer. 4. The passover benefits came only to those who carefully obeyed the Divine instructions; so Christ comes only to those who accept Him personally by a heart faith. 5. The passover was to be observed perpetually, and was the greatest of all Jewish feasts; so Christ is honored and remembered in the Lord's supper which is a memorial "till He come."

A PARABLE PICTURE OF SALVATION BY CHRIST.

A Selected and Slain Lamb. Did you go to the funeral of that little girl in the house near you? It was specially sad because she was the oldest of the three children. She died one night very suddenly and all were greatly surprised. But if the oldest child, in nearly every home in the whole city had died in one night, the surprise would have been greater; and still greater if in the whole country. This is what happened in the land of Egypt long, long ago. It was the last plague punishment against king Pharaoh because he would not let the children of Israel go free. The first born of all cattle died also at the same time. The homes of the Israelites escaped and it was in a very strange way. By Moses the Lord told them to select a lamb or a kid and kill it, and mark the two side posts of the door, and the casing above, with the blood. This lamb was to be a perfect one, and carefully kept till the time appointed; and the whole assembly of the people were to be represented in the killing of it, to show that the lamb was in their place. All this was as God commanded Moses, and it was a picture of Jesus Christ, who is the Lamb of God, and who was to come and die in the place of sinful men. In this way it was possible for all to be saved from eternal death. The first three pictures show the lamb chosen and slain, and the marking of the door posts.

The Power of Sin. Sin is like a rising tide. Think of some men amusing themselves on an island which is flooded at high tide. In their play they do not notice that the water is already encircling them, that the island is growing smaller and smaller, and that in a short time they will be submerged. Thus sin creeps around a man and rises until it submerges him; and then his only hope is in one who will come and save him. Christ lifts us out of our sins. No man is saved who still wallows in evil. "Thou shalt call His name Jesus," said the angel, "because He shall save His people out of their sins."—R. P. Anderson.

Getting Ready For a Long Journey. After the animal was slain, and the blood sprinkled, the body was roasted for the family to eat. The whole family, in each case, were to be gathered in their own home. This was the last meal they were to eat in Egypt. They were to eat it hurriedly, and to eat it standing, after they were all dressed to start on a journey. As Abraham was called out to go to a land that would be shown him, so the Israelites were to go as God directed Moses. At this meal they were to eat only unleaven bread, which showed that it was made in haste, before the yeast had time to work in the dough. It was also to be eaten with bitter herbs. This meant that the meal should be taken in solemn earnestness. No one was to go out of his house that night lest he should be destroyed by the death angel. All these instructions were carefully given, and it was very important that they be heeded. They were deserving of careful obedience, for all was Divinely revealed for their safety.

Jesus Christ a Wonderful Saviour. He is marvelous, wonderful; He is in Himself a miracle. The miracles He wrought are nothing to the miracle He was if at that era and in that condition of the world He invented Christianity. Whately says, "To disbelieve is to believe." I can not be so credulous as to believe that any mere man invented Christianity. Until you show me some loving heart that has felt more profoundly, some strong brain that even with the aid of His example has thought further, and added something important to religion, I must still use my common sense and say, no man did all this.—Wendell Phillips.

A Great Cry in the Night. While the children of Israel were obeying the commands of Moses, the Egyptians were living as usual. They seemed to have no thought of danger, though warned by Moses. They went to bed as on other nights. Suddenly an agonizing cry is heard, "My boy is dead!" Then another and another, until all the air was filled with the dreadful cry in the night. The doors were bolted, and the windows barred and fastened; but the angel of death could not be kept out. Even the son of Pharaoh was killed, as well as the first born of other families. The cattle, too, were lying dead on all sides. There never was such a time of distress in that land or any other. There was not a house anywhere where there was not the death of the firstborn. The whole land was like one great funeral occasion. It all teaches that, while salvation is possible by the blood of Christ, there is no other way of being saved.

"Are You Sure?" There is a legend that on the night of the exodus a young Jewish maiden, the firstborn of the family, was so troubled on her sick bed that she could not sleep. "Father," she said, "are you sure the blood is on the door-post?" He replied that he had ordered it done. But she was not satisfied till she was carried out to look for herself; when, lo! the blood was not there. Immediately it was placed there, and she was safe and at rest.—Foster's Encyclopedia.

The Blood Sign That Saves. That picture of the death of children and animals was everywhere in Egypt, except in one part. The last picture shows the angel of death with his dreadful sword in hand, passing over certain homes. It is those which had the three blood marks. The people within those homes were safe, sheltered, and protected by the blood. The lamb represented Christ, whose blood saves man from the wrath of God. The passover lamb was slain for the people; so Jesus Christ died for all. Those who take shelter behind His blood shall be saved. When a holy God comes to judge the world, the sinner will be safe if he has taken Christ as his Savior, and has the blood mark on his heart. This sign of the blood was very prominent in all the religious service of the Israelites, as we shall see. It was the blood of the lamb that made Abel's sacrifice acceptable to God. It was the blood of the lamb that took the place of the blood of Isaac, when Abraham was about to kill him. Thus this passover lamb speaks of Christ as the great passover. Because we are sheltered by His blood the death angel passes over us, and we are given eternal life. The Israelites were told to celebrate this great event by a passover feast once a year for all time.

How Christ Saves. Christ saves us from sin, which is separation from God, by bringing us into union with God through His death on the cross. No one can enter into an understanding of that event, which so wonderfully showed the love of God for men, without entering into the spirit of the at-one-ment, the atonement. On Calvary we see Christ dying for the sins of His creatures. "This is God's love for men," says the cross. "This is God's attitude of forgiveness toward sin." What can any thoughtful, loving soul do but accept it with tears of rejoicing and with everlasting gratitude?—Exchange.

Quiz and Study. 1. In what two ways specially is Christ like a lamb? 2. Who said, "Behold the Lamb of God," and when? 3. Why is this feast called the "passover"? 4. Why was not the blood sprinkled on the door step? Heb. 10:29.

Challenge Text. "For even Christ our _____ is sacrificed _____" 1 Cor. 5: (?)

Practical Thoughts. 1. We are saved through faith and obedience, but by the blood. 2. God's mercies and blessings should be gratefully remembered. 3. Deliverance from peril is for a Divine purpose and challenges to service. 4. The mark of the blood means the salvation of the soul; its absence means the soul's death. 5. Salvation being by the blood of Christ it is abiding and abundant. 6. The believer is a soul winner in proportion as he possesses the sacrificial spirit. 7. Man cannot save anyone, but he can bring to Christ, "who is able" to save to the uttermost.

JOHN MARTIN. 1789-1854.

In the years from 1789 to 1828, there was, in England, at the very height of his power, a great Northumbrian, who, though he is unknown as a painter, yet influenced tremendously the world of art. This was Thomas Bewick, of Newcastle-on-Tyne, famed alike as a naturalist and limner and above all as a wood engraver. Thomas Bewick, in point of fact, is recognized among artists as the father of modern wood engraving.

At Haydon Bridge, near Hexham, twenty miles from Newcastle, and upon Tyneside, a lad was growing: John Martin. The boy was much attracted by the little woodcut head and tail pieces to his books, which portrayed with truth of observation and a grim humor, familiar things in the country life of North England. These, together with his drawings of British birds, were beginning to make Bewick famous. Martin fell to copying them, and, presently, inventing his own subjects. The sober Tynesiders of Haydon Bridge looked in wonder upon the lad's ability in picturing the drunken carter asleep beneath a hedge; the village toper in maudlin dignity before a group of boyish tormentors; the local squire and master of the hunt, in scarlet coat and top boots, upon his favorite weight carrier, sailing gallantly over a stiffish "bullfinch," as a stubborn and high hedge is known in the parlance of the hunting field. It was agreed that such a talent should be trained. Accordingly, the lad was prenticed to a herald painter in Newcastle.

The business of his master was the painting of coats of arms upon the panels of carriages, and occasionally a tavern sign, or a shop board for some worthy tradesman. Not infrequently the lad and his master went into the country, to some great house or old hall, there to achieve some proud blazon above a chimney piece, or on the wainscot of some family banquet hall; perchance beneath a portrait by Lely, or Kneller, or the famed Sir Joshua himself.

As might have been expected, the wonder of history grew in the lad, together with his love of country side and the greater aspects of nature.

Presently, changing his employer, he served for a time a china decorator, and from him learned much of dainty color, delicate manipulation; and, more important, the art of water color.

In 1806, he came to London. Here his accomplishment as a china painter and heraldic draughtsman stood him in good stead. By them he lived while he studied and painted his first picture for the Royal Academy, "Zadok in Search of the Waters of Oblivion," which was exhibited in 1812. In annual succession followed "Adam's First Sight of Eve," and "Clytie." In 1816, "Joshua Commanding the Sun to Stand Still" gained for him a premium of $500 from the British Institute, and an appointment as historical landscape painter to the court.

About this time, Martin produced a series of designs for Paradise Lost, of great grandeur of conception and beauty of drawing. In 1819 was completed "The Fall of Babylon," and two years later appeared his best known work "Belshazzar's Feast." "The Destruction of Pompeii," painted in 1822, is in the National Gallery, London. Between 1823 and 1832 were produced "The Seventh Plague," "The Creation," the "Fall of Nineveh," "The Destruction of Pharaoh's Host," the "Death of Moses," "The Last Man," "The Eve of the Deluge," "The Celestial City," and "Pandemonium" (these two last being painted in 1841), and the "Destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah." In the intervals of producing these monumental compositions, Martin had great delight in painting landscape in water colors, in the valley of the Thames. Some of the sweetest known interpretations of the Thames valley in the vicinity of London are from Martin's brush. He died in the Isle of Man in 1854.

EXOD. XIV: 23-27.

THE SCRIPTURE LESSON IS EX. 14:13-31.

Prayer: Lord Jesus, Thou art a God who doest wonders. Thou leddest Israel through the Sea, and didst guide them like a flock in the wilderness. We, too, need Thy shepherding and protection. Go with us as the pillar of cloud and fire. Set all the stations of our journey. Thou hast power over men and things, and Thou controllest all for the good of Thy people. Help us to rejoice in the display of Thy grace and goodness. For Christ's sake. Amen.

"Israel is saved! Stretch out the rod!"
Moses obeys the voice of God;
And wind and wave, with thund'ring roar,
Convulse the sea from shore to shore;
The water's mighty masses flow
Back to their channel on the foe,
With sudden, dreadful overthrow.

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATION.

Historical Setting: Time, B. C. 1491. Place, northern end of the Red Sea. Persons, Moses, children of Israel, army of Pharaoh.

Scripture Setting: God Delivering His People. God never forgets, Deut. 4:31-40. He supplies all need, Phil. 4:10-19. His angel mercies, Ps. 34:1-16. A way through the river, Josh. 3:7-17. Using the rod of faith, Heb. 11:22-29. He prepares the way, Isa. 30:15-21. Song of praise, Exod. 15:1-21. The Psalmist's song, Ps. 105:23-28.

Life and Conduct Setting: This remarkable deliverance shows how God works both for and by His people. He is always the efficient and sufficient force; but they are constantly the co-operating instruments. The following facts are especially noteworthy: 1. The faith of Moses, giving him perfect self-poise, and imparting itself to the people. 2. Prayer in the crisis necessary always—absolutely so here. 3. Obedience to Divine command; more a condition than a force, but it is vital as such. 4. Judgment upon the enemy; both smiting the enemy and inspiring God's people. 5. Direct revelation from God; helping the godly and hindering the ungodly. 6. The Divine character, which is favor and blessing to the righteous and a "consuming fire" to the wicked.

HOW THE SEA OPENED AND CLOSED.

This is a wonderful story, one of the most wonderful in the Bible. It shows how easily God can control both men and things; and how He can save His people and destroy His enemies.

A Marvelous Heavenly Guide. What a crowd of people are in line there! If you should try to count them it would take a very long time. There were about as many as live in a big city like Chicago. These are the children of Israel, leaving Egypt for Canaan.

You remember that Pharaoh at last almost drove them out of his land. He was very angry when the angel of God killed the oldest child in every one of his homes. But how did all this large company get started right? Moses had told them many things and this helped some. But that would not have been enough. You know how hard it is to get even a few hundred people into line to march. At the Sunday school picnic, or parade, there is apt to be confusion, with the best of plans. Well, God helped His people, and in a very wondrous way. He lifted up a great signal like a cloud. Everyone could see it, and everyone was to follow it. Then when it came night the cloud was bright as if on fire, and so it both guided them and lighted the way. Thus they traveled for three days, going when the strange guide moved and stopping when it stopped. What are those large bundles the people are carrying? God told them that when they left the land they were to ask the Egyptians to give them jewelry and other things. This was only right, for they had worked so long without pay at all. The Egyptians were so glad to have them go, that they freely gave them these things. All these things were needed too, in the long journey. It was thus easy for God to provide for His people. It was wonderful too. It is right to provide for the future ourselves in every right way that we can. But after that we can trust to God and we should not worry, and need not.

The Lord Will Provide. We are all prone to mistrust God, and to see great troubles rising up before us. Time after time have we come to the place, and either, like the women at Christ's tomb, found the trouble removed or have found that God has given us grace to overcome it. One trouble is scarcely passed until we are looking into the future for new ones, forgetting that we have a promise, good for all the days to come: "My grace is sufficient for thee."—G. B. F. Hallock, D. D.

The Guide Becomes a Guard. Do you notice that the cloud is now behind the Israelites? That is because the Egyptians are pursuing them to bring them back to slavery. On the third day, Israel saw that Pharaoh was coming with a great army. They were in much fear and complained to Moses. He told them not to be afraid for God would save them. Moses did not know just how, but he knew that God was able to protect them, and he knew also that He would do so. Just then they saw the cloud slowly move back and plant itself right in the way of the Egyptians. When God says He will guide and keep any one, we may be sure He will do it. Now another strange thing happened. This cloud was dark on the side towards the Egyptians and bright on the side towards the Israelites. See the large picture. That did not happen so; God made it be that way, to guide and guard His people. Pharaoh thought he had caught the Israelites in a trap; and it did look so, for the mountains were on either side and the sea before them. The Egyptians did not understand about the dark cloud, but they said they would wait until morning and then they would easily capture the Israelites. If we love the Lord we may be sure that He will care for us in some way.

Wait and See.

Be not swift to be afraid;
Many a ghostly thing is laid
In the light from out the shade;
Wait and see.

Better than your wildest dreams
Is God's light that for you gleams
When the morning cloudy seems;
Wait and see.

—Marianne Farningham.

Caught in His Own Trap. Pharaoh forgot that he was fighting against God. While he thought he had the Israelites fast by the mountains and the sea, God was opening a way for His people. All that night they walked through the sea, as on dry ground. You see Moses leading the way, and the great multitude following. It was wonderful, the way the waters stood up like a wall, as if God's great hand was holding them. That was not necessary, for God has only to speak the word and the waters obey Him. Waters and winds and birds obey God better than man does. And yet man, who can think and love, ought to obey far better than nature.

The Bible Is Man's Guide. God's word is like the pillar of cloud and fire and it is the only safe guide. If we obey it, we live; if we disobey it, we die.

"Hearken," "observe," "do," and "blessing shall come upon us." Deut. 28:1-2. But "if we will not hearken—to observe—to do—curses shall come upon us." Deut. 28:15. "To do is to be blessed; not to do is to be destroyed." A collision of a freight and passenger train occurred in which twenty-three lives were lost. The engineer of the freight train had his orders, obedience to which would have carried both trains through safely. He disobeyed orders and disgrace and death followed. So Pharaoh disobeyed and was destroyed.

When Pharaoh saw the sea had opened he followed with his army. See how fast they drive with their chariots. They hope to overtake Israel even in the sea. But now another strange thing happened. Early in the morning God just looked through the dark cloud, and the look terrified the Egyptians and made the wheels of their chariots fly off. Then Pharaoh and his army wanted to turn back and go home. They tried to do so, but it was too late. God told Moses to wave the rod again, and the sea closed up with great rushing waves. So the great army of Pharaoh was destroyed. Not a chariot or a man escaped. The sea which Pharaoh thought had blocked the way of the Israelites really was the trap in which he was caught. No one was to blame but himself. He said, "I have sinned," but his actions showed that he was not really sorry.

God Says, "Whoa." A Sunday school scholar was asked what God said to the sinner, and he replied, "God said 'Whoa.'" Truly God's woe means "Whoa." It was time for Pharaoh to halt before the Divine judgment came. Every one of the ten plagues was like a call of God to stop. He did not, but became more determined in sin. He found that "the wages of sin is death."

Quiz and Study. 1. What river was miraculously crossed and by whom? 2. Tell the story of Jesus walking on the sea. 3. How is the pillar of cloud like Christ or the Holy Spirit? 4. What happened when the Lord "looked on the Egyptians"? 5. What followed when Christ "looked on Peter"? also when Christ "looked around about" in the temple? 6. What was the "morning watch" and what were the other divisions of the day? 7. What last command of Christ is like God's "Go forward"? 8. Can the Church obey this as well as Israel obeyed that?

Practical Thoughts. 1. God is a sure guide and protector, before, behind, and on either side. 2. God is light and love to those who obey Him, and all such understand Him. 3. God is hidden and mysterious as the darkness to those who oppose Him. 4. When God says, "Go forward," it is safe to obey, and dangerous to disobey. So of His great commission, "Go ye into all the world." The church that disobeys it dies. 5. All the power of God may go in His mere look or word. 6. "Man's extremity is God's opportunity"; and so, often the greater the difficulty the easier the achievement. The women found that the stone was rolled away, "for it was great." 7. God is always the power; but man's faith, obedience, and prayer are the usual channels through which His power acts. 8. The religion of Christ is wholly supernatural movement for man's deliverance from sin. 9. If the unbeliever is lost he alone is responsible, for salvation is free to all. 10. God often leads in strange ways, but they are always the best ways; and man sees it to be so. 11. Not one, not one of the righteous is ever lost; not one, not one of the wicked can ever escape. 12. Conversion is like the crossing of the Red Sea; and then begins the journey to the Heavenly Canaan.

Prayer: Lord Jesus, Thou hast made all things, and for Thy use and glory. Thou are providing for Thy people wherever they may be. Thou speakest and it is done, or Thou whisperest to the laws of nature and they become Thy willing and effective servants. Help us to see Thee in nature and in life and to trust Thee ever. ## THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, B. C. 1491. Place, Wilderness of Sin. Persons, Moses, Aaron, and children of Israel.

Scripture Setting: Food from Heaven. Manna promised, Ex. 16:1-12. Manna remembered, Psa. 78:12-29. The true manna, John 6:26-44. Life-giving manna, John 6:45-65. Elijah fed, 1 Kings 17:1-16. Loaves multiplied, Mark 6:30-44. Bread from Heaven, Psa. 105:26-42. The hidden manna, Rev. 2:1-17.

Life and Conduct Setting: This great miracle teaches a double truth—that God supplies the temporal needs of His people, and that Christ is pictured as the bread of the soul. This thought is developed here by the analogy: 1. The manna comes to a sinful and rebellious people; so Christ came to a wicked world. 2. The manna is of Heavenly origin; so Christ is the supernatural gift of God to a hungry world. 3. The manna was abundant and immediately at hand; so Christ comes to all men and to the whole man. 4. The manna must be gathered daily by each household and eaten; so Christ must be appropriated personally by faith. 5. The manna is full of mystery, prompting wonders and questioning; so Christ is the "mystery of godliness." 6. The manna sustained and satisfied, as the food of the body; so Christ is the sufficient and satisfactory food of the soul.

HOW GOD FED A NATION IN A WILDERNESS.

A Land Without Food. One of the most wonderful miracles of Christ was the feeding of 5,000 men, besides women and children. There was nothing but a boy's lunch box to begin with, but Christ made it grow to be enough for all. But this story tells how God fed a whole nation for forty years, without anything to start with. There must have been over 2,000,000 people going from place to place. This wilderness land was very different from the fertile Egypt where the Israelites had lived so long. They were greatly rejoiced that they were free from the cruel king and the hard task-masters. They had been singing Miriam's song over the destruction of the Egyptian army. They had used up the food which they brought with them from Egypt. Now they are journeying in a land that produces only some grasses and herbs for their cattle. And there is very little good water. The people complained to Moses. He is good enough to change their complaint into a prayer to God. The prayer is answered, and God sends a great flock of quails that covered the whole camp. They were so plentiful that they caught them easily and all were satisfied with the meal God had provided them.

Free, but at Great Cost. A collier came to me and said: "I would like to be a Christian, but I cannot receive what you said tonight." I asked him why not. He replied: "I would give anything to believe that God would forgive my sins, but I cannot believe that he will forgive me if I just turn to him. It is too cheap." I said: "My dear friend, have you been working today?" He looked at me, slightly astonished, and said: "Yes, I was down in the pit, as usual." "How did you get out of the pit?" I asked. "The way I usually do. I got into the cage, and was pulled to the top." "How much did you pay to come out of the pit?" He said, "Pay? Of course I didn't pay anything." I asked him: "Were you not afraid to trust yourself in that cage? Was it not too cheap?" "O, no," he said; "it was cheap for me, but it cost the company a lot of money to sink that shaft." And without another word the truth of that admission broke upon him and he saw that if he could have salvation without money and without price it had cost the infinite God a great price to sink that shaft and rescue lost men.—G. Campbell Morgan.

What Is It? The quails came at night, just for the one time; for they were not the right kind of food for them to live on. The next morning the ground was covered with little round white things. These had come down from Heaven with the dew in the night. The people were greatly surprised and began looking at it. They said to each other, "Manhu! Manhu!" This was the Hebrew language and meant, "What is it? What is it?" So it was ever afterwards called "Manhu, or manna." They went to Moses about it, and he said, "This is the bread that God has sent from Heaven; gather it and eat." They did so, and liked it, for it had a flavor like honey. Moses told them that it would come every day, and there would be enough for all. This was to picture forth the Saviour who was to come. Christ Himself said, "I am the bread of life," and He told the people, that He came down from Heaven just like the manna did. Christ was to feed the soul life, as the manna fed the body.

The Ever-Ready Saviour. A man in one of our meetings was anxious to be saved, and he said, "I will go home and pray and see if I can't get the blessing." He had three miles to go, and while walking the thought came to him, "Why wait till I get home? Why not pray here and now?" So he began, "God be merciful—" And when he spoke the word "merciful" God blessed him even before he got to the word "me." He found and ate the bread of life.—Chapman.

The Law and Lesson of the Manna. There were some special laws about the manna, that were to remind the people of God, and train them to obey God. One law was that it must be gathered early, before the sun melted it. Another law was that it was to be gathered every day, and only enough for that day. Some people disobeyed this law, and gathered some to keep over, and the next day they found worms in it. This was to teach the people to trust God day by day. Another law was that on the sixth day they should gather enough for two days, so that they could rest and worship on the Sabbath day. Thus they were taught Sabbath observance even before the Commandments were given. Some disobeyed this law, and they found no manna on the seventh day. So these people had nothing to eat that day, for the others had only enough for themselves. This bread from Heaven was a constant voice from God, as if it said, "I am God; and I am thinking of you and caring for you." So it was a daily sermon on the providence and goodness of God. In these many ways also it was a beautiful picture of Jesus Christ, and the people long afterwards could understand it.

Gathering Manna For Others. How eagerly these men are picking up the manna and putting it into bags, baskets and jugs. At that rate each man will soon get enough for himself for one day. But look at that last picture. There are mothers and children sitting in their tents. Some think that only the men were allowed to gather the manna. But anyhow all could not go to the fields. Some were needed at the tent home. This suggests another great law of the manna and that was the law of distributing to others. The command was, "to take ye every man for them which are in his tent." When Christ fed the multitudes, He gave to the few, and said to them, "Give ye them to eat." For whatever reason some may be without the manna except for disobedience, those who gathered were to gather for them. The teaching is that the very blessing you receive is a call to you to get a similar blessing for those who do not have it. As the manna stands for Christ, who is the bread of life for the whole world, we can see that it expects Christ to be preached to all the world. The Christ manna may not fall in some lands like China, Japan, India and Africa; at least it may not fall there in sufficient quantity. So those who live in Christian lands should gather this Christ manna, which is the gospel, and carry it to all who do not have it. There is abundance for all, but all Christians must see to distributing the gospel to those who otherwise might not get it. What would you think of an Israelite who would not gather manna for his family? Just so with the Christian who does not help to give the gospel to the heathen. The heathen are a part of the family of man, and those farthest away are yet our "neighbors," as Christ taught.

Giving the Gospel to Others. "Others." There is no place in the world where this keyword does not fit in. There is no problem of daily living that it does not help to solve. There is no spiritual tangle that it does not aid in straightening out. There are young men and women to-day suffering from moods of doubt who need most to turn away their eyes from themselves and "do something for somebody, quick!" Self is the great obstacle in the Christian life. The less one thinks of one's self, the more one thinks about others, the surer is spiritual growth. The Lord's Prayer begins with "Our," not "My." In thought for others, in service to others, in unselfish love and cheerful self-denial, lies the secret of the saints. Any Christian can write the keyword on his heart. Any Christian can go forward in its power.—Exchange.

Quiz and Study. 1. What else was kept in the ark, besides a pot of manna? 2. When did Christ feed a multitude and how did a boy help him?

Challenge Text. "I am the living _____ which came down from _____." John 6: (?).

Practical Thoughts. 1. To complain of our circumstances, or of God's providences is to complain of God. 2. Prayer, not murmuring or complaining, is the true recourse in time of perplexity.

3. Trials are often for the purpose of testing and strengthening the faith. 4. God makes it easy, as well as obligatory, to observe His day. 5. Jesus Christ is a daily necessity for the soul, as natural food is for the body. 6. Do not worry tonight; the new day will bring its new supply of food. 7. God proves us alike by prosperity and adversity whether we will be true to Him. 8. Even our murmurings are graciously turned into prayers and answered. 9. We should seek and gather spiritual manna, day by day.

OUR DUTIES

to God

to Man

I
Thou shalt have no other gods before me.

II
Thou shalt not make unto thee any graven image, or any likeness of anything that is in Heaven above, or that is in the earth beneath, or that is in the water under the earth: Thou shalt not bow down thyself to them nor serve them: for I the Lord thy God am a jealous God, visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children unto the third and fourth generation of them that hate me; and showing mercy unto thousands of them that love me, and keep my commandments.

III
Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain: for the Lord will not hold him guiltless that taketh his name in vain.

IV
Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy. Six days shalt thou labor, and do all thy work: But the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God: in it thou shalt not do any work, thou, nor thy son, nor thy daughter, thy man-servant, nor thy maid-servant, nor thy cattle, nor thy stranger that is within thy gates; for in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, the sea, and all that in them is, and rested the seventh day: Wherefore the Lord blessed the Sabbath-day and hallowed it.

V
Honour thy father and thy mother; that thy days may be long upon the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee.

VI
Thou shalt not kill.

VII
Thou shalt not commit adultery.

VIII
Thou shalt not steal.

IX
Thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbor.

X
Thou shalt not covet thy neighbor's house, thou shalt not covet thy neighbor's wife, nor his man-servant, nor his maid-servant, nor his ox, nor his ass, nor any thing that is thy neighbor's.

THE SCRIPTURE LESSON IS THE 20TH CHAPTER OF EXODUS.

Prayer: O Lord God, We thank Thee that Thou hast spoken to man. Out from the opening heavens come Thy voice, of law, duty and obedience for the whole of life. Out of Thy heart of love Thou hast spoken mercy, forgiveness, pardon and peace by Thy Son Jesus Christ. Make our ears to hear, our hearts to love, our wills to obey, For Christ's sake. Amen.

Lo, God Is Here!

"Lo, God is here! Let us adore
And own how dreadful is this place!
Let all within us feel His power,
And silent bow before His face!
Who know His power, His grace who prove;
Serve Him with awe, with reverence, love."

Life and Conduct Setting: These ten great words of God to man emphasize man's duty to God and to his fellow man. They cover every phase and condition of life. 1. Man's duty to recognize one God and hear and obey Him. 2. To worship in spirit and truth, without idol or image of any kind. 3. To have holy reverence for the name of God. 4. To remember and keep holy the day of God. 5. To respect and obey parents and those in authority. 6. To take no human life, not even one's own. 7. To maintain right and pure relations between man and woman. 8. To take no man's property by force, or fraud, or trick of any kind. 9. To injure no one nor destroy his good name by lie or slander or half truth or gossip, or even joke and jest. 10. To covet nothing that belongs to another, for even these desires of mind and heart are sins. These ten great commands are God's life-guard for man.

GOD'S TEN GREAT LAWS FOR MAN.

Did you ever see soldiers drill? Then you heard the drill master say, "Present arms," "Ground arms," "Forward march," and many other orders. These ten commandments are God's orders to us, to show how we are to do in the marching or battling of life. God is our Commander and Drill Master. He made us, guides us, keeps us, blesses us, knows what is best for us; and so He has a right to command us. It is not only our duty to obey, as good soldiers, but it is much to our profit and pleasure every way. Every order is a soldier-like order, with a ringing "thou shalt" in it.

A Wonderful Pulpit. But I must tell you how the people first heard these orders. It was a most solemn and glorious way. We have learned of God doing many, many wonderful things; but this is almost the most wonderful of all. Think of a high mountain covered with clouds that seemed all on fire. Then remember that there are much thundering and lightning flashes; and that the mountain itself is shaking with power.

All around it are the tents and camps of the Israelites, stretching row after row; thousands and thousands of tents. Suddenly Moses told the people to wash themselves and get ready for God to speak to them. Then out from this trembling mountain, as if it were a great pulpit, God spoke these ten great laws to His people. God wanted these people to be His in a special way, and so He gave them these commandments to help them.

He said, "I bare you on eagle's wings, and brought you unto myself." As He is holy, so He wants His people to be holy and good. This they could not be without one law and one Lawgiver. Even Moses could not keep them from breaking away from the truth and the right.

Engraved by the Finger of God. God wanted to be very sure that the people would never forget these ten great orders. He not only spoke them so that all the people heard, but He wrote them on two tables of stone. This He did Himself and gave them to Moses. He meant them to be for all people for all time. They are just as much for us now as for the Israelites then. God called Moses to come up into the mount to get this two-leaved stone book. The people were glad enough for Moses to go, for they were so afraid. Moses was afraid, too, but he knew God better and so trusted himself to go. He took Joshua part way up, and then God told him to come on alone the rest of the way. Moses was there forty days and nights, and God told him many things about the way the people should live and work and worship and how they should treat one another. In that way Moses was to give many lessons to the people by type or picture of things that could be seen. We will learn more about these types in other stories. In the four corners of the commandment page are pictures of Moses going up in the mount and returning. Look at them all carefully.

A Kindergarten School. These rites and types were like a series of pictures to teach the Israelites in their childhood as a nation. The high priest was a picture of Christ. The ceremonial law was like a scaffolding around a building. The moral law is like the rafters in a building, or even like the foundation, for they are the important part of the building. Again, the ceremonial law is like the blossoms on a tree, which whisper of the fruit to come. The blossoms fall off to make way for the fruit. But the spiritual principles are permanent like the trunk and the great branches which carry the leaves, blossoms and fruit.—A. L. O. E.

Man's Duty to God. On the first stone table are four great laws or orders; and they all show what we should do and be towards God; and how we should treat Him and His purposes. The first of these orders tells us that we must worship God, and Him alone; and that we must love Him more than anything else, or anybody else. The second order forbids any kind of images in our worship. God knew that if we began to worship Him through an image we might soon begin to worship the image itself; this way the image would become a false god. The third order, or commandment, warns us against using God's name lightly or irreverently.

The fourth commandment tells us that we are to keep God's day holy, and to use it only for Him, and to help the suffering and needy when we can. God is very jealous of His holy day, and many things people do in these days are violations of this great command. We should guard this command all the more because it seems so easy and popular to break it. The wicked world is all the more wicked on that day. Even a decent respect for God, though one did not love Him, should make him most careful on that holy day. We can almost find another ten "nevers" for the Lord's day, as we did for the Lord's name. For example, on the Lord's day never go to any game of any kind; never go to any picnic; never go to any park or museum; never go riding for mere pleasure; never use God's day for your own purpose, however good, as any secular study or work; never steal God's time for mere physical rest; never neglect worship in God's house on His day unless providentially prevented.

Man's Duty to His Fellow Man. There are six of these great duties or laws. They were written on the second leaf of this stone book. The fifth commandment teaches love and obedience to parents. It is almost next to love of God. Love and obedience are shown by our conduct just as is our love to God. The way boys and girls treat father and mother will show how much they love and respect them. The home is the great school where the best lessons of life and character are learned; as obedience, faith, love, reverence, duty, sacrifice, helpfulness. As a help and spur to obeying this command God has offered the prize of long life in a good land. It is the only commandment with a prize promised, and every boy and girl can win that prize.

The sixth commandment forbids anyone taking human life—not even his own life. To commit suicide is to kill; and as God gave life so He only can take it away. Christ taught that even if we wished another person would die, that was murder in the heart, and in God's sight heart sins are the worst kind. The seventh commandment tells us to be pure and right in all our actions; and teaches us to treat all women and girls as we would our own mothers and sisters. The eighth commandment says that we must not take what belongs to another. Even if we have done it by mistake, we should at once return it. This big sin may be committed by taking even a toy, or any small thing. The ninth commandment declares that we should not be untruthful so as to hurt another person in any way. This may be done sometimes just by leaving out a little or adding a little when we are telling anything. The tenth commandment tells us to be content with what God gives us. To covet a thing is to wish it were ours. God knows best what we need, and we should trust Him, and believe that what we actually have is the best for us.

Quiz and Study. 1. Moses was in the mount forty days and nights. What are other Scripture instances of "forty days"? 2. What strange fire did Moses once see on this mountain? 3. What three reasons can you give why God has a right to order us? 4. When did God speak to Christ from the clouds, and what did He say? 5. How many "Blesseds" did Christ once speak to the people?

Practical Lessons. 1. God is Creator of all and offers to be Father of all who will accept Him. 2. God's claim on man is not arbitrary, but is based on His goodness and mercy. 3. Idolatry may be in thought and desire as really as in act. 4. Light and trifling talk is often the threshold to profane swearing. 5. We should hold the Lord's day sacred to his glory and man's spiritual good. 6. The Lord's day, the Lord's house, the Lord's book, the Lord's people are the four great factors and forces for advancing the Lord's kingdom. 7. Long life to the individual and to the nation is a logical result of obedience to parents. 8. God has put a high estimate on human life, and He alone has the right to end it. 9. Purity of act, word and desire are vital to the home and nation. 10. There are many kinds of stealing. Watch against that which is called by other names. 11. The only sure guard for the good name of ourselves and of others is a good heart. 12. To desire the good things of others is sin and may lead to more sin. 13. God's "Thou shalt nots" are simply the Divine railing between us and the pitfalls and precipices of life.

THE SCRIPTURE LESSON IS EX. 32:1-35.

Prayer: Lord Jesus, Thou hast made us for Thyself, and to worship only Thee. Give us a new vision of Thy glory and grace. Wean us from any earthly good which keeps us from loving Thee. May Thy law and will be the rule of our lives. Show Thyself in the face of Thy Son, and abide in us by Thy Holy Spirit. For Christ's sake. Amen.

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, B. C. 1491. Place, foot of Mt. Sinai. Persons, Moses, Aaron, the people.

Scripture Setting: A Study of Idolatry. Warning against idolatry, Deut. 13:1-11. A king's idolatry, 1 Kings 12:25-33. Folly of idolatry, Ps. 115-1-8. A common idolatry, Col. 3:5-13. Idolatry ridiculous, Isa. 44:10-20. Guard against it, Deut. 9:7-21. Judgment against it, Jer. 16:1-11. Idolatry punished, Rev. 14:6-11.

Life and Conduct Setting: The tendency to idolatry is natural to the sinful heart of man everywhere. A study of this great sin is as needful now as ever. 1. The cause of idolatry is in the fact of sin. The instinct of worship is present, but it seeks wrong objects and methods. 2. Incentives to idolatry are found in man's ignorance, in his surroundings, in the example of others, in the hope of imaginary good. 3. The result of idolatry is to destroy the idea of the true God and to dull the spiritual sense. 4. Some forms of idolatry are man-worship in its many forms; the worship of gold, of pleasure, of appetite, of business, of ambition. 5. The remedy for idolatry is the acceptance of the true God. Man must worship in some way, and only God is worthy. 6. The punishment for idolatry is certain and terrible. 7. The only sufficient help against idolatry is the intercession of Jesus Christ, and the indwelling of the Holy Spirit.

A GOLDEN CALF FOR A GOD.

Doing Like Other Nations. God had done all He could to keep the new baby nation free from sin. He separated this people from other nations, and gave them many blessings. He wanted especially to keep them from worshiping gods of wood, stone and animals, as the other nations did. For this reason He showed himself to them in the burning mountain, and gave them that splendid set of rules. No other nation ever had ten such good rules. The Israelites promised faithfully that they would love and obey God in all things, and keep his commandments. But after Moses had been gone day after day, for nearly forty days, the people got restless. At last they said to Aaron, "Make us gods, for as for this Moses we do not know what has become of him." This was very ungrateful to Moses, and was a sin against God. Aaron ought to have rebuked them, and explained where Moses had gone. He was left in charge for that very purpose. Perhaps Aaron thought he might become the leader instead of Moses. But a true leader will always be anxious to do as God would have him do. Anyway, he listened to the people's complaint and told them to bring their jewelry to him and he would see what he could do. He may not have realized how quickly all this would grow into great and terrible sins. No one can know when he begins a wrong course how it will turn out. The only safe way is not to begin at all.

Don't Begin the Wrong. Once there was a little fly who saw a spider's web in the corner of a room. "I'll keep away from it," he thought; "for if I should get one foot in it I might get two, and soon I would be caught altogether." Wasn't that a wise little fly?

In the same little room was a little girl who had broken a vase. Something whispered in her ear, "Hide the pieces and don't tell mother." "No, no!" said she. "If I should deceive mother once, I might again, and pretty soon I should be telling wrong stories. I won't begin." Wasn't she a wise little girl?—Mayflower.

Folly and Sin of Idolatry. How fast Moses is hurrying down the mountain side! And how serious he looks, and worried. God has just told him that the people were doing wrong things, and He said He had better destroy them all, and begin another nation with Moses. God could see them, although they were so far away. Moses pleads for the people and then hurries down to see what they really are doing. He finds Joshua waiting for him and they go on together. Soon they hear a great noise and Joshua said he thought it was a shout of war. But Moses knew it was something else and even worse. It was worse, for it was war against God. Look at that picture, and you will see for yourself. They were actually dancing and singing around that calf which Aaron had placed on a stand. They called the calf a god, and their dancing was worship! Could anything be more foolish and silly? It was sinful too; it was more like a drunken frolic. And these were grown up men, and they claimed to think and reason! And just before them was the mountain where God had stood and spoken to them. It may have been blazing with fire even yet.

The Questionable Should Unquestionably Be Avoided. A young lady gives the following reasons why she will not dance: 1. Dancing is injurious to health and usefulness. 2. Dancing will lead me into close contact with pernicious company. 3. Dancing requires a freedom with the other sex I believe to be wrong. 4. My parents would be anxious about me if I were out late. 5. Good people disapprove of dancing, and it is not safe to set myself against them. If a thing is doubtful I wish to be on the safe side. 6. Dancing has a bad name, and I mean to study things that are pure, lovely and of good report. 7. Dancing is often accompanied with drinking. 8. Drinking is a snare to young men, and I would not have anything to do with leading them astray. 9. Dancing unfits the mind for reflection and prayer, and I mean to do nothing to estrange me from my Savior.

Righteous Anger of Moses. Do you wonder that Moses was angry? He surely had a right to be, and God does not rebuke him for it. He must have felt like Christ did when He found the people buying and selling in the temple, which was intended to be a "house of prayer." His eyes blazed forth wrath and He drove the buyers and sellers out. The first thing Moses did was to dash the tables of stone to the ground. God had written the ten commandments on them with His own finger and given them to Moses. The two pictures show this! Then he finds Aaron and asks why he allowed this. Aaron said that the people brought their gold jewels and when he put them in the fire this calf came out! That was not true at all, for he himself had fashioned it into a calf. He was thoroughly ashamed of it all, and wanted to throw the blame on someone else. Many people try to excuse themselves and blame others when they are caught in wrong doing. The manly way is to confess the sin, and ask for forgiveness.

"I'll Change My Life." David Farragut was a drunken cabin boy on the vessel his father commanded. One day his father took him in a room by himself, and said, "David, what do you mean to be?" "I mean to follow the sea. I will tread the quarter-deck and command as you do." "No, David; no boy ever trod the quarter-deck with such principles as you have and such habits as you exhibit. You will have to change your whole course of life if you ever become a man." His father left him and went on deck. He was stunned by the rebuke and overwhelmed with mortification. He said to himself: "A poor, miserable, drunken sailor before the mast, to be kicked and cuffed about the world, and die in some fever hospital! That's my fate, is it? I'll change my life, and I will change it at once. I will never utter another oath, never drink another drop of intoxicating liquor, never gamble." He kept his pledge and became famous.—Boy's World.

A Terrible Punishment. In breaking the tables of stone, it was as if Moses had said to the people, "See how you have broken God's law!" Then Moses took the calf, and burned it with fire and pounded it to dust, and sprinkled it in the running stream where the people had to drink. All this is also pictured out. After that he called out, "Who is on the Lord's side?" The family of Levi ran to him, and he told them to go through the whole camp and slay with the sword everyone who had been leading in the calf worship. This was in order to save the nation. If idolatry had continued all of them would have been destroyed. So it was really a merciful act. If one did not repent he was to be slain, even if it was one's own brother. Three thousand were killed, but the nation was spared at the earnest prayer of Moses.

Quiz and Study. 1. What command was violated by the making of the golden calf? 2. What other commands were violated in the worship of the calf? 3. What are some things which people worship today? 4. Moses breaking the tables reminds us of what act of Christ in the temple once? 5. Moses interceded for the people. Who is our Great Intercessor and where is He? 6. Three thousand slain. Do you remember other times when people were punished for sin? 7. What made the face of Moses shine as he came from the mount? 8. What other cases of face-shining in the Bible? Challenge Text. "Little ———, keep yourselves from ———." 1 John 5: (?)

Practical Thoughts. 1. He who is too faithless to trust God is foolish enough to trust idols. 2. There are only two sides in this world—the Lord's side and Satan's side. Every one is on one side or the other. 3. One man, in the right with God, is mightier than a whole nation. 4. The punishment of the wicked is necessary for the protection of the righteous. 5. Our confession of faith (covenant) is tested by our life relations and conditions. 6. The great value and power of a true leader. 7. God loves to forgive the sinner but the sinner must love to be forgiven. 8. God is a Spirit, and those who worship Him must worship Him in spirit and in truth. 9. Peace of conscience and love to God are the cosmetics which make the face beautiful.

Prayer: Lord Jesus, Thou art the giver of every earthly good. Help us to use all for Thy glory and for Thy cause. Save us from being enslaved and injured by the very things Thou hast given us. Keep us from the selfish and ungenerous heart. May Thy free gifts to us inspire us to be givers, freely and constantly. Above all, may we give Thee our hearts. For Christ's sake. Amen.

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, B. C. 1491. Place, Valley at foot of Mt. Sinai. Persons, Moses, men and women of Israel.

Scripture Setting: A Study of Giving. Liberal giving, Mark 12:41-44. Giving and getting, Mal. 3:6-18. Christ's example, Luke 6:30-38. Loving and giving, 1 John 3:17-20. Blessings of giving, 2 Cor. 9:6-11. Growing by giving, Prov. 11:24-31. Giving for Christ's sake, Phil. 3:1-12. A costly gift, John 12:1-11. Giving from the heart, Matt. 26:6-16. Christ's gift to man, 1 John 4:9-19.

Life and Conduct Setting: This is a charming and beautiful picture of giving, which is also heart worship. Some of the great laws and motives for giving and service are shown or implied: 1. We should give because we have been forgiven. 2. We should give because all we have belongs to God, and is only loaned to us. 3. Because God asks for our gifts, and is pleased to receive them, our gifts are needed by Him. 4. Because the gift opens heart and life to receive other and larger blessings from God. 5. Because the gift will help herald and declare the love of God. 6. Because the gift will be used to do much more than we had planned or supposed. 7. Because the gift is seal and proof that our love is genuine. 8. Because the gift will challenge others to do and give. 9. Because the heart gift makes one like the great Giver, and brings one into fellowship with Him. 10. Because such giving is one of the best checks against a sordid, selfish and worldly spirit. 11.—

"It is in loving, not in being loved,
The heart is blest;
It is in giving, not in seeking gifts,
We find our quest."

THE POWER OF A LOVING HEART.

Hearts Made Penitent. You have heard it said, "Where there's a will there's a way." That is true, and it often explains the great difference between people. Some do so much more than others because they will to do it. This story shows that where there is a heart there is a way. But the heart must be made right before it can do anything for God. You remember how wicked the Israelites were in worshiping the golden calf, instead of God. Moses did not stop with just destroying the calf. He wanted also to take the bad thoughts and purposes out of the hearts. He could not do that, but he knew God could. So he went back to finish his pleading with God, that He would forgive the people and give them another trial. God agreed to do this, and He told Moses to come up to Him into the mount. Moses was there again forty days and nights. God told him to bring two more stone tablets, and on them God wrote the Ten Commandments the second time. These two tablets were carefully kept in a special box that was called The Ark. Now God wanted to show the people that he had forgiven them. He had Moses build a tent, far away from the camp of the people. Then He came down in a cloud and met Moses and talked with him. By this sign the people knew that God had forgiven them. They stood in their tent doors and saw it all. How good Moses was just to pray and pray to save this whole people! This was a figure of the work which Jesus Christ is doing for all who love Him. He is our great intercessor, which means that He prays for us. We can have any right thing we desire, if we ask Him for it in a right way; for He is very much greater than even Moses, and "All power is given unto Him." God wants us to give from the heart, so that we may be able to receive more from Him. Giving makes the heart grow, and the more it gives the more it has to give.

Starting the Heart Pump. What we give is as nothing to what we receive. Dr. Elder illustrates thus: "You come with an almost empty pitcher to a deep, cool well of water, whose refreshing fulness you can reach only by means of an old-fashioned suction pump. But the pump will not work; the valves are dry and warped, and you work the handle in vain. At last you pour into the pump your poor remnants of water; the shrunken valves are closed and all the fulness of that well is yours. You give a quart and gain a whole spring."

So the pouring of our scant lives into God's gives us His fulness in return. If tithes, honestly paid, will open the windows of Heaven, our whole property put at Christ's disposal and administered in His name will bring down Heaven itself into our lives.

Hearts Made Willing. Moses was told all about the tabernacle and its furniture. This was to be the house where God would meet His people. When the people learned that they might have a part in getting this house ready, they were glad. They all must have felt as Moses did. It showed in his face when he came down from the mount the second time. His face was shining so bright, the people asked him to wear a veil when he talked with them. He had been with God so long that he had the very glory of God in his face. But we know it must have come to the face by way of the heart. We are all apt to be a good deal like those we go with; and for this reason we should choose always the best people for companions. In that first picture Moses has been telling the people what God wanted. They go at once to do it, and tell the others what to do. Moses would tell a few, and they others and yet others, until all had come to know of the great work. The next picture shows the tabernacle. Our next story will be about that. There you see some of the fine robes they were to make. The twelve squares on one of them are twelve precious stones set in gold, each one having the name of one of the twelve tribes. This breastplate was the most costly, beautiful and glorious part of the high priest's robe. This was to be worn by Aaron, and would show that all these tribes, even the smallest, would be held up before the Lord. Now, it is said, "Every one whose heart stirred him up" came. But the reason was that God touched the heart, or whispered to it, and stirred it. They were sorry enough now for the past sins, and they wanted to show their love and gratitude. They may not have known it, but all such heart obedience is just like a prayer for God to continue to bless.

Give and Live.

Forever the sun is pouring gold

On a hundred worlds that beg and borrow;

His warmth he squanders on summits cold,

His wealth on the homes of want and sorrow;

To withhold his largeness or precious light,

Is to bury himself in eternal night.

To give is to live.

Something For Each One To Do. "They came, both men and women." It is also said that "Everyone whose heart stirred." Some think that each did something. The work was so great, and of so many different kinds, that there was a place and a part for each. At least, if one's heart did not stir him it was his own fault. The last pictures show some of the things which were given. It must be "free giving" when one is willing to part with that which was treasured as an ornament or keepsake. Here are bracelets, rings, earrings and tablets. These last were smooth on one side, and the bright polished surface was used as a mirror. God wants us to give the best gifts for His house and His cause. The whole cost of the tabernacle and furniture was about $1,250,000. This meant both willing hearts and many of them, to accomplish it all. And how beautiful these gifts are. Any gift from the heart is beautiful; but these are specially so, for they mean personal sacrifice. Still more beautiful they become when made into the things for the tabernacle. Purple is the royal color; blue means heaven and love, scarlet is for glory and beauty; white stands for purity; gold is always precious and valuable. They would all be glad afterward that what they did, and what they gave, helped to make all these beautiful things possible. And you notice that each one gave and did what he was best fitted for. It was all necessary.

"I Mixed the Mortar." A stranger in a city stood viewing a magnificent cathedral, admiring the genius of the architect who designed its fine proportions. An old man who was watching him drew near and inquired: "Well, sir, what do you think of it?" After listening to the stranger's expressions of praise and delight, the old man drew himself up and said, with a ring of pride in his voice: "I, sir, mixed the mortar for that building!" Had no one been willing to do the lowly work of "mixing the mortar," the beautiful building could not have been erected.

Quiz and Study. 1. What gift does God want first from everyone? 2. What else can we give Him? 3. What did Christ give for us, and why? 4. What did Christ say was "more blessed"? 5. Christ once said of a small gift in the temple that it was the largest of all. Whose was it, and why was it large? 6. What reason does Paul urge why we should "freely give"? 7. Who was it that "hardened his heart" against God? 8. How can we give to God besides helping His cause and Church? "Inasmuch as ye did it etc., ye did it unto Me."

Challenge Text. "For God ——— a cheerful ———." 2 Cor. 9.

Practical Lessons. 1. Everyone, man, woman and child, can find something to give, or do, for God. 2. One's own life, or talents, or surroundings, will suggest the best gift for him to make. 3. The commonest offering is glorified, if prompted by the Spirit, and is made for God's glory. 4. Free giving can come only from a freed heart, freed from sin and fear. 5. If one will not give, and will not give, at last he shall not be allowed to give! 6. God will show each one what and how to give and do; and He also will help. 7. We should pray to be givers and doers, or to be better givers and doers. 8. In every power, talent or faculty there is a voice whispering, "Give it to God," "Do it for God." 9. Let the heart have full swing in all your giving and doing for God, for it has a fine instinct of what is best. 10. A heart gift to God is a direct blow to Satan and his plans. 11. If you do not give, it is because you do not love. You may have fancied it was because you were not able. Not so; love always, always, finds an offering.

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, B. C. 1490. Place, before Mt. Sinai. Persons, Moses, Aaron, people building the tabernacle.

Scripture Setting: The House of God. Right foundations, Isa. 44:18-28. For God alone, 1 Chron. 15:14-28. Prayer necessary, Dan. 9. Rebuilding the temple, Ezra, 3:1-13. Right spirit and motives, 1 Cor. 3:10-23. The true sanctuary, Eph. 2:13-22. Zeal for God's house, Ps. 69:1-9. Love for God's house, Ps. 84. The more perfect house, Heb. 9:1-14. Service of the soul-temple, Heb. 13:12-21.

Life and Conduct Setting: Here in pictures are set forth the great principles underlying all true worship. Certain vital laws may be seen: 1. Law of Divine origin by revelation—not a discovery or invention by man. 2. Law of time and place—now the Lord's day in the Lord's house. 3. The law of the Divine indwelling (ark)—without which all else is hollow mockery. 4. Law of spiritual sustenance (shew bread)—by constant participation. 5. Law of prayer and consecration (incense)—effective only in and by the atonement. 6. Law of Christ's sacrificial death (altar of burnt offering)—the great central and radiating truth of the gospel system. 7. Law of the Divine order and anointing—every part of worship in reverence and in right sequence and relation. 8. Law of the Divine presence and guidance—securing and assuring all other conditions of worship. 9. Law of salvation by the steps of atonement, regeneration, prayer, communion, anointing.

BUILDING THE FIRST MEETING HOUSE.

How and By Whom Built. How many church buildings have you seen? How many do you think there are in all the world? This story is an account of the first one ever made. It ought to be interesting, and it certainly is important. The plans for the building were made by God Himself. He told Moses about them, and cautioned him to have them carefully carried out. He even said He would pick out two men and fit them to lead in the work. He gave them ideas and skill and wisdom and they taught others, so that a great many helped. This first one was called a tabernacle, because it was tent-like in appearance. It was made this way so that it could be taken down easily and carried from place to place. They carried their meeting house with them wherever they went. The floor was only the grass or sand, wherever they were commanded to set it up. It must always be set right in the midst of the camp of the people. This was so that all could come to the services, and have the benefit of it. When it was moved from place to place, only the tribe of Levi were allowed to carry the parts. Everything was very sacred, and God taught them to handle all reverently. There were two parts to the tabernacle. The smaller one was called the "Holy of holies," and had only the ark in it. This was made of hard wood and covered with gold. The cover was solid gold and was called the "Mercy-seat." Above this were two angels facing each other, their wings overspreading the mercy-seat till they almost touched each other. This was to show God's love and care. In the second picture this is covered with a mantle, for no one was to see it except the high priest, and he only once a year. This room had no window, nor lamps, but was lighted by the glory of God.

The Tabernacle a Parable Picture of Salvation.

1. The tabernacle, the house of God, its construction and meaning. 2. The brazen altar of sacrifice, before we enter the tabernacle; so only by the sacrifice of Christ we can begin a holy life. 3. The laver, still outside, showing the need of cleansing, the washing of regeneration. Expressed in baptism. 4. We enter the holy place, the church on earth, and find the candlestick, the light of God's word. 5. The table of shew-bread, signifying communion with God—the Lord's Supper. 6. The altar of incense, typifying prayer. 7. The anointing, vers. 9-11, 15,—the sanctifying influences of the Holy Spirit. 8. All this leads to the holy of holies, perfect holiness—Heaven, with the mercy seat, holding the tables of the law, the expression of a holy nature.—Peloubet.

The Holy Place. The larger room was so named, and was separated from the holy of holies by a veil. It contained the altar on which to burn incense, which was a type or picture of prayer rising from the heart to God. Here also was the candlestick with its seven lamps, to give light, and the table of shew bread which always had twelve cakes on it, to represent the twelve tribes. The cakes were changed every week, and only the priests were allowed to eat those removed. Aaron was the only high priest, made so by the sign of the budding rod. Aaron's four sons were the first priests. When he entered the holy of holies, once a year, it was to sprinkle the blood before the Lord. This was called the great day of atonement. No one saw him do this! When the priests served in the holy place the people were allowed to see them, for the curtains were lifted. The people did not go into the tabernacle to worship, as we go to church, but stood outside in what was called the outer court. At the entrance of the holy place stood the altar of burnt offering, and near it the laver where the priests washed themselves and the offerings. These are shown in the pictures, and also the people may be seen setting up the court and lifting the hangings and the curtains. The altar of burnt offering signified that only those for whom atonement had been made could enter the holy place. It included the idea of entire consecration and submission. The brazen laver stood near where the priests washed. This was made from the polished brass mirrors donated by the women.

Building the True Temple. Slowly throughout all the universe that temple of God is being built. When in any world a soul by free-willed obedience catches the fire of God's likeness it is set into the growing walls, a living stone. When, in your hard fight, in your tiresome drudgery, or in your terrible temptation, you catch the purpose of your being and give yourself to God and so give Him the chance to give Himself to you, your life, a living stone, is taken up and set into that growing wall. Wherever souls are being tried and ripened in whatever commonplace and homely ways, there God is hewing out the pillars for His temple. Oh, if the stone can only have some vision of the temple of which it is to be a part forever, what patience must fill it as it feels the blows of the hammer and knows that success for it is simply to let itself be wrought into what shape the Master wills!—Phillips Brooks.

What It All Meant. Now let us try to see what the tabernacle and its furniture meant. For one thing, this building would be saying always, "God is here, God is here." And specially so, when they remembered that everything was planned by God, and was to be very holy. Every church building in all the world is saying that today. Whenever we see a church we should remember that its walls and towers, its doors and windows, its pulpit and furniture, all spell out the great truth, "God is here." For another thing, this building would be saying,

"Your sin is atoned for." This is what was meant by the blood of the sacrifices morning and evening, and on the great day of atonement when Aaron sprinkled the blood on all things. Then, too, the goat was sent into the wilderness, a figure that their sins were carried away, away, and would never be seen again. Every church building today is saying, "Christ has died for you." He is the true sacrifice, "The Lamb of God, that taketh away the sin of the world." I can mention only one more thing, among many, and almost the best of all. This building kept saying, "Come, Come, Come." It did that by being placed right in the center of the camp; it said it also by the beautiful ark, with the golden angels over the golden mercy seat; and it said it by every article of furniture, and by every act of the priests. So, too, God's house today is just one big chime of "Comes." And the quiet, holy Lord's day is given us that we may the better hear and heed the tender and sweet invitation—"Come." No one would want to live when there are no churches. But too many live as if there were none. Can you tell why? Do you always hear and obey the "Come" of God's house?

Quiz and Study. 1. What were the two rooms of the tabernacle called? 2. Which had only one article of furniture, and what was that? What three articles of furniture were in the other room? 3. What three things were kept in the ark, and why? 4. Where was the veil of the tabernacle and of the temple, and what happened to it when Christ died? What did that mean? 5. What five different names have been given to the house of God at different times? 6. What did Christ say his house should be called? 7. What different names have been given to the people of God? 8. What name of Christ shows that he was to be an offering or sacrifice.

Challenge Text. "The spirit and the bride say —; and let him that heareth say —; and let him that is a thirst —." Rev. 22: (1)

Practical Lessons. 1. The tabernacle stood in the middle of the camp, so the church should be planted where the people are. 2. The tabernacle service was the most important duty of the Israelites, so religious duty is central and commanding. 3. The church, like the tabernacle, is by Divine order and appointment. 4. The tabernacle and its furniture pointed the way to salvation and holiness. 5. The believer should offer himself to God as a "living sacrifice," which is his reasonable service. 6. The believer is the real temple or tabernacle for the Holy Spirit's indwelling. 7. Jesus Christ in the flesh is the fulfilment of the tabernacle type, for He "tabernacled among us." 8. The house of God should be clean, pure and beautiful in all its parts and furniture. 9. The tabernacle and its furnishings taught the holiness of God, the sin of man, the way of salvation, separation from the world, consecration to God. 10. The house of God, the day of God, the book of God, the people of God, are the four great agencies for building up the kingdom of God.

THE SCRIPTURE LESSON IS LEV. 1:1-14.

Prayer: Lord Jesus, Teach us, we pray Thee, the lesson of entire consecration. As Thou didst give Thine all, even Thy life, for us, so may we dedicate all, even our lives, to Thee. Thou art worthy of our best, and Thou art calling us to Thy love and sacrifice. May Thy Spirit help us to respond. For Christ's sake. Amen.

Laid on Thine altar, O my Lord Divine, Accept this gift today for Jesus' sake.
I have no jewels to adorn Thy shrine,
Nor any world-famed sacrifice to make;
But here I bring within my trembling hand
This will of mine—a thing that seemeth small—
And Thou alone, O Lord, canst understand
How, when I yield Thee this, I yield mine all.

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, B. C. 1490. Place, Valley before Mt. Sinai. Persons, Moses, priests, worshippers.

Scripture Setting: How a Good Life Is Made. By an atoning Christ, Isa. 53. By the new birth, John 3:1-8. By true repentance from sin, Ps. 51. By forsaking all for Christ, Luke 14:25-33. By being recreated, Eph. 4:17-32. By an obedient faith, Heb. 11:8-19. By taking Christ as a pattern, Phil. 2:1-8. By the Holy Spirit's leading, Rom. 8:14-27. By service and suffering, Heb. 12:1-11. By entire consecration, Rom. 12:1-10.

Life and Conduct Setting: The burnt offering is a pictured story of the nature and blessedness of the new life. We find here: 1. The new life is made possible by the blood of Jesus Christ, the Great Sacrifice for sin. 2. Because, in and by the perfect Christ, it also may become perfect in Him. 3. It is Divinely ordered, both as to the Christ who saves and the sinner who is saved. 4. It includes forgiveness of sin, and also love of holiness. 5. It means personal and absolute choice of Jesus Christ as a Savior. 6. It calls for minute and entire surrender of one's self and possessions to the chosen Master. 7. It is conscious of the Divine approval, for it is "a sweet savor unto the Lord." 8. The new life begins on earth and grows in and by all earthly experiences, and is crowned at last in Heaven and before God.

THREE CHAPTERS IN A GOOD LIFE.

How a Good Life Begins. The burnt offering is a parable, a beautiful picture. It tells us three very important things about a good life. Everybody wants to live a good life, and here the model is given. The first thing we learn is that the good life is made possible because Jesus Christ died to take away sin. Sin hurts and spoils and makes ugly. You will notice that when the animal was killed, to be burned, the blood was saved by the priest, and then it was sprinkled over everything to show that it was cleansed. Now we know that the blood of an animal could not cleanse anything. Even the blood of a man, the best man, cannot cleanse from sin. But God intended that the blood of this animal should stand for the blood of His Son, Jesus Christ, who was to come and die for sinful men. It was hundreds of years before Christ, but God accepts this kind of blood until the real "Lamb of God" dies on Calvary. The only way a good life can begin is by the soul being sprinkled by Christ's blood of cleansing. People may be good in the home, and as neighbors and citizens, and do many good and kind things; but they never can be good in the sight of God till they are cleansed from sin. This is possible only in and by the blood of Christ. This, too, will make one better among all his earthly friends. In the picture of a herd of cattle, the man who felt his sin was to pick out the best ox and bring it for a sacrifice. By laying his hand on its head he confessed his sin and prayed for forgiveness. So it was accepted as an atonement for it was a picture of Him who alone can forgive sin. This is all so important we might call it the blood chapter, for "the blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth from all sin." This blood relationship to Christ makes one a joint heir with Him to all of His possessions. God has put away our sins for Christ's sake.

How Our Sin Is Covered. The lid which covered the ark was the mercy-seat. The blood of atonement on the mercy-seat typified the blood of Christ satisfying the demands of the law. A primary teacher asked if there was anything God could not see. "No," "No," came from every part of the room, until one little lad had the courage to differ from the rest and said, "Yes." "What is it?" asked the teacher. "God can't see my sins when they are covered with the blood of Christ." The mercy-seat was the place of propitiation, mediation, where sin was confessed, judged, atoned for and forgiven. At the mercy-seat God was revealed in grace. The blood was always a picture of Christ giving His life to save man from sin.—Selected.

How a Good Life Shows Itself. This is the second chapter, and this too is pictured out here. After the bullock was killed and the blood sprinkled as shown in the pictures, the body was cut into pieces. All was made clean and laid in order on the wood. The sacred fire was put under it and it was burned. Sometimes a part of the body was saved to be eaten by the priests, but here all was burned. This was to teach that the whole life was surrendered to God, to be used in His service. This is the true test of a good life. When the body was cut into pieces it meant that all was open before God and was given honestly to Him, for His glory. Sometimes people show their kindness to others by deeds of sacrifice, and even by giving up life; but even bad people may do that, as often soldiers may die fighting for their home and land. The act is good, though the man at heart may not be good. Here, both the act and the heart are seen to be good, and the whole body of the animal being burned shows that all one's life and powers are given to God for His glory and service. The first time an offering was burned on the tabernacle altar, God sent the fire down from Heaven. After that the priests always kept the fire burning. It was never to go entirely out, night or day. Here is a beautiful hymn which shows many ways in which we can do things which will please God. It is by Frances Ridley Havergal, who has written much on this subject of devotion and consecration:

My Sacrifice.

Take my life, and let it be Consecrated, Lord, to Thee.
Take my moments and my days,
Let them flow in endless praise.

Take my hands, and let them move
At the impulse of Thy love.
Take my feet, and let them be Swift and beautiful for Thee.

Take my voice, and let me sing,
Always, only, for my King;
Take my lips, and let them be Filled with messages from Thee.

Take my silver and my gold—
Not a mite would I withhold.
Take my intellect, and use
Every power as Thou shalt choose.

Take my will, and make it Thine—
It shall be no longer mine.
Take my heart, it is Thine own—
It shall be Thy royal throne.

Take my love, my Lord, I pour
At Thy feet its treasure-store.
Take myself, and I will be Ever, only, all for Thee.

How a Good Life is Blessed. The first chapter is the blood chapter, showing how a good life begins. The second chapter is the fire chapter, showing how a good life shows itself. This is the incense chapter, showing how a good life is praised and blessed. A good life is beautiful always. Even the people who are not good themselves are compelled to respect those who are. But God is specially pleased with all who do His will, and who really love Him. This offering is said to be "of a sweet savor unto the Lord." That means that He noticed it, and was rejoiced at it. Such a life is to God as a beautiful, fragrant bouquet would be to us. We would like to hold it, look at it, and smell its fragrant odors. Upon such a life God showers blessings of many kinds. He even urges us to be true and consecrated by promising these blessings. Read Malachi 3:10, and you will find out what God thinks of consecrated people. One thing is sure, God will never let such persons get far away from Him and be lost. He loves them and will love them to the end, and will have them ever with Him.

"Papa, Take Hold of Me." It makes a good deal of difference whether you take hold of God or God takes hold of you. Said a father: "My little girl today refused to let me take hold of her hand when we were walking together. She thought she could go alone. But when we came to a place which was slippery she took hold, first of my little finger and then, as it grew more icy, of my whole hand. As we went on and it was growing worse, she let go entirely and said: 'Papa, take hold of me.' She knew I was strong and that she could not fall unless I fell. Now," said he, "I have been slipping, slipping for the last eleven years, and the reason is that I have not put my hand into the hand of God. I have been trying to take hold of Him, but not asking Him to take hold of me. As long as He has hold of my hand I can't fall. He would have to be dethroned first. If our hands are placed in His whose throne is in Heaven, we never can fall down into hell."—D. L. Moody.

Quiz and Study. 1. How many ways has God spoken to Moses and the other patriarchs? 2. What is meant by "patriarch"? 3. How does God speak to people now? 4. Why is this book of the Bible called Leviticus? 5. Many great events happened 1492 B. C. that is before Christ. What great event happened in 1492 after Christ? 6. What great festival days did the Israelites have? Which one was like our Christmas? which like our Thanksgiving? 7. What animals were clean, and what unclean? 8. Every gift or offering had to be the very best. What does this teach as to what we give or do for God? 9. Why are we to let our good works be seen by others? Matt. 5:16.

Challenge Text. "Be ye ———, for I am the ———, your God." Lev. 11: (?)

Practical Thoughts. 1. All we have and are should be dedicated to God and His service. 2. Our gifts to God are proofs of blessings. 3. The very act of giving to God increases our ability to receive from Him. 4. Love that never has an offering is only a hollow mockery. 5. We can give to God by our influence; testimony, example, prayers, money. 6. Consciousness of our need is the best preparation for giving to God acceptably. 7. All we give or do for God's cause should be of the best we have. 8. Our gifts, like our prayers, are tested by our attitude toward Jesus Christ. 9. All may not give large sums of money, but all can consecrate time and talents.

Ye shall dwell in

That your generations may know that I made the children of Israel to dwell in booths, when I brought them out of the land of Egypt: I am the Lord your God.

THE SCRIPTURE LESSON IS LEV. 23:33-44.

Prayer: Lord Jesus, Make us thankful for Thy many mercies. May the heart of every believer be as a harp to sound praise. Keep our faces toward Heaven, and our hearts full of Thy love. We thank Thee for what Thou art, for what Thou hast done, for what Thou hast promised to do. Abide in us by Thy Holy Spirit. For Christ's sake. Amen.

"Serve God and be cheerful! Religion Looks all the more lovely in white; And God is best served by His servant When, smiling, he serves in the light, And lives out the glad tidings of Jesus In the sunshine he came to impart; For the fruit of His word and His Spirit Is Love, Joy and Peace in the heart."

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, 1490 B. C. Place, in the valley before Mt. Sinai. Persons, Moses, priests, people.

Scripture Setting: Thankful Offerings. Praise is beautiful, Ps. 33:1-22. God is wonderful, Ps. 40:1-17. Praise for redemption, Luke 1:67-79. Praise for deliverance, Ps. 18:6-17. The first fruits, Deut. 26:1-11. Like produces like, Matt. 7:15-20. Prompted by the Spirit, Eph. 5:9-13. Joy of worship, Ps. 122:1-9. Joy of fellowship, 1 Thes. 5:5-15. Joy of service, 1 Tim. 1:12-17.

Life and Conduct Setting: The feast of tabernacles teaches the grace and duty of thankful praise. Many reasons and motives are present for this: 1. The nature and character of God invite it. 2. The abounding mercies of God inspire and impel it. 3. The very ability and capacity to offer praise suggest it, and make it obligatory. The beast is not able to give thanks, and yet some of them make crude efforts to do so. 4. The act of thanksgiving fosters all those qualities which make a person lovable and efficient. 5. The lack of the thankful spirit is a serious self-confession and self-condemnation. 6. The more thankful one is the more he is blessed of God. 7. A look into one's life will discover abundant cause for thankfulness. To be thankful will invariably make one thankful.

WHY WE SHOULD BE THANKFUL.

We Should Be Thankful for Present Blessings. The feast of tabernacles is a call to thankfulness and thanksgiving. It is also an illustration of the thankful spirit by the Israelites. How many kinds of grain and fruit can you find in that first picture? How eager they are as they gather in the crops! And how loaded they are, too! It must be that the good soil yielded a hundred fold this time. This is the third of the great yearly feasts. The first was the feast of the Passover, to celebrate their going out of Egypt. It was called "Passover" because the angel of death passed over the houses of the Israelites which had the mark of the blood on the door posts. The second feast was seven weeks later, and was called the feast of harvest, for it came in the early harvest. It was also called feast of Pentecost, meaning fifty, because it was fifty days after the Passover. This third one was the feast at the full ingathering of the crops. It was like our Thanksgiving, and was a joyous time and a religious time. At each of these great feasts every man was to come to the tabernacle and bring an offering to the Lord. This festival was held five days after the great day of atonement. After that solemn service of repentance and putting away sin, they would be in much better spirit to give praise to God. They would also be much more likely to see their blessings. The reason why people are not thankful is because sin has clouded their vision, and even blinded them. Such people are much more apt to find fault and grumble and murmur. The heart is like a musical instrument, and when sin is in, the heart is out of tune. Christ alone can drive sin out. After the heart is in tune, it is quite easy for one to be thankful to God and helpful to all the persons he meets. He sees blessings everywhere, for he shares all things in Christ.

Joint Heir with Christ. A dying judge the day before his departure to be with Christ said to his pastor, "Do you know enough about law to understand what is meant by joint tenancy?" "No," was the reply; "I know nothing about law. I know a little about grace, and that satisfies me."

"Well," he said, "if you and I were joint tenants on a farm, I could not say to you, that is your hill of corn and this is mine; that is your blade of grass and this is mine, but we would share and share alike in everything on the place. I have just been lying here and thinking with unspeakable joy that Jesus Christ has nothing apart from me, that everything that He has is mine, and we will share alike through all eternity."—Sel.

We Should Be Thankful for What We Are. We have been looking at the crops God raised by the soil. They are His gifts to man. But God can raise other crops than those raised in and by the soil. These are not so easily seen in themselves, but we can see the effects and results. The pictures show some of the things which grow in man. The very gathering in of the crops teaches that we have power to look ahead and lay up things for the future. It is well to use that power to look far, far ahead and lay up treasures in Heaven. Those treasures do not perish like earthly goods. The pictures of the boughs and branches show that man can use the things God has made, and use them for His glory. Then that great picture of waving the branches tells us of several things which grow in the soil of the soul.

There is happiness of the best kind, a joyous happiness which shows in their faces and in their actions. There is fellowship, old and young meeting together in their rejoicing. There is love to God, as well as love to and for each other, for this is a religious rejoicing. These and many more things are grown in the soul. Just stop and think how glad you ought to be that you are so much more and better than a mere animal. In his body man is an animal, and the best one God made, but in his soul he stands alone; and the soul lives forever. Some people live as if they forgot altogether about their souls. We should be thankful that we have souls; and thankful, very thankful for the crops God grows in the soul—love, joy, friendship, faith, hope, forgiveness, godliness. We should be harvesting those crops, too; gathering them for use day by day in this life. Some people are so much more agreeable than others. This is because they gather in large crops of these beautiful fruits, and feed on them. The Holy Spirit will grow such fruit in any soul that will let Him do it. The list may be found in Gal. 5:22, 23. There is also a long list there of the bad things that grow in too many souls. This is Satan's harvest, and they are like weeds in a garden. God intended the soul to be a garden of beautiful flowers and fruits. All weeds should be pulled up and destroyed. We should be thankful that by the help of the Holy Spirit, who is the Gardener of the soul, we can grow so many good things.

Some Golden Praise Keys.

A bunch of golden keys is mine,
To make each day with gladness shine.
"Good-morning," that's the golden key
That unlocks every day for me.
When evening comes, "Good-night," I say,
And close the door of each glad day.
When at the table, "If you please,"
I take from off my bunch of keys.
When friends give anything to me,
I'll use a little "Thank you" key.
"Excuse me," "Beg your pardon," too,
When by mistake some harm I do.
Or if unkindly harm is given,
With "Forgive me" I shall be forgiven.
On a golden ring these keys I'll bind;
This is its motto: "Be ye kind."

We Should Be Thankful for Past Mercies.

This reason for a thankful life is shown in the very last pictures. The "booth" was a sort of shed or tent house, made quickly with whatever they could find, and covered with branches. The Israelites were to live in these sheds for a whole week. Here they were to eat, sleep, talk, study, pray and do all else that they usually did. What was the reason for this? This was to remind them of their great deliverance from Egyptian bondage. When God brought them out of Egypt He provided booths for them to live in. Now, by living in them they would be reminded of God's grace, care and protection. This was but one form of Divine goodness, but it would suggest many others. A pot of the manna was kept in the ark, and Aaron's rod that budded, as memorials of the wonderful ways God had helped them. So whichever way we look we are inspired to be thankful. As we look around us, we see present blessings; as we look within us we see wonderful powers and gifts; as we look ahead of us, we see the shining promises; as we look backwards, we see the many helpful providences; as we look above, we see a Heavenly Father, and Divine Intercessor and a mighty Holy Spirit. Really, every day should be a day of thanksgiving and praise for all that God has done.

How Our Thanksgiving Day Began. The early New England fathers, in their anxieties and trials, had often had public days of fasting and prayer for deliverance. One day when it was proposed to appoint another fast day, a farmer arose and said that he proposed that they keep a day of thanksgiving instead for the mercies they had already received. They did so, and there has never been a year since when they and their descendants have not had abundant mercies for which to be thankful.

Quiz and Study. 1. Name as many as you can of the religious feast days of the Jews. 2. When were branches of palms and trees used for Christ? Tell all you can about that event. 3. What Scripture urges us to praise and be thankful? 4. What do you know about how our Thanksgiving day began? 5. How do we know that God wants all to be happy? 6. What reasons do you have to be thankful? 7. Name some of the fruits and grains gathered by the Israelites. 8. What are some of the crops God gives us in our land? 9. What kind of trees and branches are shown in the pictures? 10. What are the nine fruits of the Holy Spirit? (Gal. 5:22-23.)

Challenge Text. "What shall I — unto the Lord for all His — unto me?" Ps. 116:(?)

Practical Thoughts. 1. Praise is a condition of prayer, and prayer is occasion for praise. 2. To fail of thankfulness is an acknowledgment of thoughtlessness, for if one is thankful he will be thankful. 3. The religious life is full of joy and blessing, and it should be made manifest. 4. The highest kind of thanksgiving is for Christ's salvation and the truest form is by consecration to His service. 5. We show that we are thankful by giving to those who are less fortunate than ourselves. 6. If God is leading, we may confidently thank Him for all things, and even in advance. 7. Our Thanksgiving day is a fitting time for reunions of families and friends. 8. The day should be guarded from degenerating into a time of mere worldly pleasure. 9. God is the source of all our blessings, and He should be specially remembered always.

THE SCRIPTURE LESSON IS NUM. 9:15-23.

Prayer: Lord Jesus, Thou art the Way, the Truth and the Life. Thou hast made very plain the way to salvation and blessedness. May we be eager to follow Thee and obey Thee. Keep us from straying in act or thought or desire. Walking thus by Thy Word and Spirit, may we have joy and peace through all of life's pilgrimage, and be led at last to Thy Heavenly home. For Christ's sake. Amen.

I seek no guide, save only Thee,
Nor ask the way Thou ledest me!
My only prayer: "Lord, may I know
The work that Thou wouldst have me do?"

If in far lands, Thou ledest me,
'Cross arid plains, or storm-vexed sea,
By pathways dark, or lone, or drear,
Clasping Thy hand, I will not fear.

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, B. C. 1490. Place, the valley before Sinai. Persons, Moses and all the people.

Scripture Setting: Heavenly Guidance. Jacob guided, Gen. 28:10-15. Israel guided, Ex. 13:17-22. David guided, Ps. 25:8-12. Paul guided, Rom. 1:7-13. God's guiding hand, Luke 12:1-7. The Spirit teaching, Neh. 9:13-20. The Spirit guide, John 16:7-15. The Spirit helper, Rom. 8:14-27. Gifts of the Spirit, 1 Cor. 12:4-10. Guided and kept, Ps. 121:1-8.

Life and Conduct Setting: The Scripture and the story suggest the Heavenly guides in the earthly pilgrimage. There are many helpful analogies, for—

"The path of life we walk today
Is strange as that the Hebrews trod;

We need the shadowing rock, as they;
We need, like them, the guides of God."

1. God furnishes many guides to man, as: the Bible, His shining providences, His Holy Spirit, Conscience. 2. All these are needful in view of the many enemies, dangers, pitfalls. 3. A true conception of life includes all these God-given guides. 4. He who has received the guidance and the guides is under obligation to lead others also. 5. It is the believers privilege to be conscious of the Divine guidance and favor. 6. There should be constant praise for past guidance, and constant prayer for future guidance. 7. All who are Divinely guided are brought safely into the Heavenly Canaan. 8. The guides of God are true to us and we should be obedient to them.

THE WONDERFUL HEAVENLY GUIDE.

Ready for the Journey. The Israelites have been camping here by the mountain of Sinai for nearly a year. God has been getting these people ready to be a nation; His chosen nation. He intends to do a great work for the world through the nation, so He prepares them for it. When He brought them out of Egypt it was like being born into a new world. They were just a baby nation. Now they are able to stand and walk, and they have learned many things about God and about themselves. Especially have they been taught as to how they should worship the true God. The ten commandments have been given, and the tabernacle has been built. It was all according to the plan God gave to Moses. In the account of all these things, the words "as the Lord commanded Moses" may be found a hundred times. This shows how important it was that all should be done just right. So in our lives, God wants everything to be right and everyone to do right.

You remember about the ark and the other furniture in the tabernacle. Also about the burnt offerings, and the great day of atonement, when one goat was slain and the other was sent into the wilderness carrying the sins of the people. All these things were pictures of Christ, who was to come hundreds of years later. The three great annual feasts—Passover, Pentecost and Tabernacles—were special times of service. Aaron was the one high priest and his four sons were priests. These each had a special dress, to show what their work was. Aaron's was very beautiful and very costly. This tabernacle was the place where God was to meet man. Before the tabernacle men built altars as meeting places—you remember Adam, Noah, Abraham and others built altars to the Lord. Later the tabernacle became the temple, and in the time of Christ they had also synagogues. In these days we call them churches. In the old world they were called cathedrals. They are all holy and sacred because they are meant to be places where God meets man. Remember this always when you go into the house of God anywhere, and so go there reverently and to meet Him.

Follow the Copy. The tabernacle was made after the plan God gave to Moses, and it was a type of Christ. Christ is our pattern, John 13:15; Matt. 11:29; 1 Pet. 2:21. We are a pattern, 1 Tim. 1:16; Phil. 4:9. "Be likeminded one toward another according to the example of Christ," Rom. 15:5, margin. A teacher gave a boy an example in arithmetic, with the printed rule. Perseveringly the boy tried, but, failing, laid his head on the desk and sobbed. The teacher sat beside him, patiently worked out the example, and showed him how. God commanded, "Be ye holy," and gave the law. But when men failed to keep it, He sent Jesus to show them how. He is the pattern for our imitation. Let us ask, in every difficult place, what John Stuart Mill is said to have asked toward the last of his life: "What would Jesus of Nazareth have done if He had been in my place?" Let us look at our Pattern and follow Him. "Do as I have done to you," John 13:15. "Those things . . . ye have . . . seen in Me, do," Phil. 4:9.

The Guide Comes Suddenly. But now all is ready to take the first journey. How and where shall they go? When a baby is able to stand and is ready to walk, the mother reaches out her hand and the baby toddles toward it. Did something like that happen to this baby nation? Yes; look at that first picture and you see a cloud over the tabernacle. That is from Heaven, and is as if God reached down His hand to be the guide. It is true that Moses had often guided them, but even he was a kind of God's hand to them, for God always told them what to do. But I think this was better than Moses, for it was direct from Heaven to the people, and it never made mistakes. Moses did sometimes make mistakes and one of our stories will tell about a very bad mistake he made. This could never make mistakes, and so the people were more ready to trust and follow it. The people did not have to ask what Moses thought, or Aaron, or anyone else. They saw what the cloud did, and each one obeyed for himself. When the cloud moved they knew it was time to follow, and when the cloud stopped they ceased their journey and set up their tents again. In the picture the cloud seems on fire, at times; this is in order that it may be seen at night. The shining will also give light to show the way. Can you think of any reason why the Israelites would welcome this guide? Had they ever seen it before? Yes; this was the same way by which they were led out of Egypt. The cloud was bright toward the Israelites and dark toward the Egyptians. Then, too, you remember that God just looked out of the cloud toward the Egyptians, and they were thrown into terror and confusion. So the cloud was to be not only a guide, but a guard. Surely they would be pleased to follow a guide that had led them and kept them in the past.

The other pictures show how they journey and how they pitch their tents again, and how they are abiding in their tents. All their movements were directed by this wonderful Heavenly guide.

Who Is Your Pilot?

Who is the pilot that's steering your bark
Over life's waters, tempestuous and dark?
Who is your pilot? Oh, who can it be That's guiding your bark to Eternity?

Who is your pilot? Your vessel is frail;
'Gainst the tempests of life it cannot prevail.
For the billows of sin will your vessel o'erwhelm
Unless Jesus, the Pilot, is holding the helm!

Who is your pilot? What storms can he brave?
Who is your pilot? Is he mighty to save?
Who is your pilot? Will winds do his will,
Or the tempests obey when he says, "Peace, be still"?

—John Richard Moreland.

The Bible Our Guard and Guide. Do we have anything like that to guide us now? Yes; we have something even better. God's word is "a lamp unto my feet and a light unto my path." And David says, "Thy word have I hid in my heart that I might not sin against Thee." The Bible is called "The Word," because it is God's word to man, telling him how and where to go and what to do, in every condition of life. As God wrote the ten commandments on tablets of stone, so by His Spirit He wrote the Bible on the heart tablets of holy men; and by them the Bible is given to the whole world. Peter speaks of this, and says it is a more sure word of prophecy; that is, a surer guide. If one obeys the Bible he is certain to see the way he should go and the work he should do. And each person may have this guide book all for himself and in himself. Isn't that better than a cloud? Then the Holy Spirit is in and with the word, and by His help we are kept willing to be led by the word, and are really given power to obey all that God commands. Besides, the Bible and the Holy Spirit guard us from all evils and all enemies. Thus you see that the Bible and the Holy Spirit are much better than the cloud the Israelites had. God guides the birds in the air, and the fishes in the sea, and will He not guide us?

Quiz and Study. 1. When was the pillar of cloud first seen, and why? 2. Why was one side dark there, and the other light? 3. Tell what you can about three wise men who were guided by a star, and what did they find? 4. What is the guide called which every one has in himself? 5. How must it be set right and kept right? 6. What is that called which guides the ship on the ocean, and what must it point towards? 7. What is the place called where we are said to meet God for worship? 8. To what place will those who love and obey God be guided at last? 9. What part of the Lord's prayer asks for Divine guidance?

Practical Thoughts. 1. In the life pilgrimage God is the leader, the Bible is the chart, the Holy Spirit is the guide, and Heaven is the final home. 2. An invitation, rightly given and followed up, is the most effective Christian service. 3. Many of those who say "I will not" are yet likely to be won by the truth. 4. God, by His providence, is seeking out a "resting place" for His people. 5. Prayer leads to praise, and praise prepares for prayer. 6. Since God leads, we may be sure that "all things work together for good." 7. Life is full of perils and enemies and temptations, and a Divine Guide and Guard are positively necessary. 8. Jesus Christ not only saves us from sin, but is our perfect Example and Guide in life.

THE REPORT OF THE SPIES.

THE SCRIPTURE LESSON IS NUM. 13:17-33.

Prayer: Lord Jesus, we are glad that Thou knowest all things, and art seeking to bring us into the large places of blessing. Thou art also showing us the best ways by which to overcome enemies and to enter into life's true successes. May we not fear the enemies or the difficulties but trust always to Thy power and grace. Open wide the gateways to our inheritance. For Christ's sake, Amen.

"Oh! thanks, and thanks a thousand times repeated!

We know your names, ye valiant, faithful two;
Your lowest words are like a song from Heaven,
Ye searched the land out better than ye knew!
When through the camp there rings a cry for 'Egypt,'

And all the tribes sway backward in despair,
We turn to you who bear the purple clusters,
For still ye say, 'Surely the land is fair.'"

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, B. C. 1490. Place, Kadesh Barnea, fifty miles south of Beersheba. Persons, Moses, the twelve spies, the people.

Scripture Setting: The Life Campaign. Put on the whole armor, Eph. 6:10-20. As a good soldier, 2 Tim. 2:1-15. A battle with self, Rom. 7:7-25. The Spirit leader, Ezek. 37:1-14. Our Heavenly helpers, 2 Kings 6:8-23. Divinely girded and guided, Psa. 18:30-40. Some past victories, Heb. 11:32-40. Personal responsibility, Rom. 6:8-15. Wise confidence, Psa. 46. The final victory, Rev. 14:1-13.

Life and Conduct Setting: Life has been shown to us as a training, in many of these stories. Here we begin to see it as a campaign of conquest. Some of the winning qualities in this life campaign are suggested by this story: 1. A spirit of conquest. One will win what he hopes and plans to win. 2. Wise and careful forelooking necessary that we may know our own strength, and also that of the enemy. 3. Following instructions. The leader may be God Himself, by His Holy Spirit, or some Moses whom God has given. 4. Rallying and uniting the forces. In the individual, the forces of heart, brain, conscience, will; in the organization, all the people, for all kinds of helpers are needed. 5. A right kind of optimism—the kind that sees the plan of God, and has a grip on the promises and power of God. 6. Ready for evil reports and objections. That means to have unshaken faith in God. Joshua and Caleb had that, and therefore they could not be moved. 7. Remember that life is a campaign, not merely one battle. You may lose many battles and yet win in the whole campaign. Don't be alarmed if you have an occasional Bull Run. You are sure to win at last.

FINDING OUT THE BEST WAY.

The Man and the Land. Here are two pictures that you are getting to know better and better. One is the man Moses, who led the people out of Egypt, the other is a picture of the land of Canaan, towards which the Israelites were led. Moses was a wonderful man, greater than any man who ever lived, unless it was the Apostle Paul. He was greater than Paul for the time in which he lived; a wonderful man, and a wonderful life, and all because a wonder-working God was with him. And here was the land we have heard so much about, and which sometime was to be the birthplace of Jesus Christ the Saviour of the world. How familiar that map is to you! This was the land promised to Abraham, Isaac and Jacob and they had so many blessings connected with it. It was the land of promise, and now Moses is here to enter it and live in it. It is wonderful how Moses kept the promised land in his eye and mind and heart. This was one thing which helped to make him strong and true. This, too, made him earnest in his intercessions for the people. He gave himself up to this one great undertaking. It is as if he said to himself over and over again, "This one thing I will do." This is the land of Abraham, of Isaac, of Jacob, the land which God had promised again and again to give to His people. And now they are coming back to take possession of that land. Though Moses never was to enter it himself yet he was constant in prayer and effort that the people he led might come into full possession.

John Knox was so anxious about his native land, and that it should be a Christian land, that he prayed, "O God, give me Scotland, or I die." Just so Moses was possessed with a master purpose to bring the people of God into the promised land.

A Faithless People. Here was the land, and God said, "Go up and possess it." If they had obeyed, God would have given it to them at once. But they were fearful, and asked that spies might be sent to learn about the land and the people. God agreed to that, just as He agreed later to give the people a king when they insisted on having one. Then God overruled this to work out good. Just as he put Moses for forty years in the shepherd life in the wilderness, to train him for his work; so now he puts this child nation in the wilderness college for forty years to train it for its great work in the world. The very best way would have been for the people to obey God and go in to Canaan at once. The next best was to submit to God's punishment, and go to school for forty years. The people tried to play truant and have their own way as we learn in the next story but God whipped them back into his school-room. Moses was submissive to God in all this matter. But how much better if they had all done as God commanded, and gone right in and possessed the land.

Do It Now. When you've got a job to do, do it now! if it's one you wish was through, do it now! If you're sure the job's your own, then just tackle it alone; don't hesitate and groan—do it now! Don't put off a bit of work, do it now! For it doesn't pay to shirk, do it now! If you want to fill a place, and be useful in the race, just get up and take a brace, do it now! Do not linger by the way, do it now! You will lose if you delay, do it now! If the other fellows wait, or postpone until it's late, you hit up a faster gait—do it now.—Intelligencer.

Spying the Land. Now Moses picked out the best men to go as spies, one from each tribe except the tribe of Levi. They went two and two so as not to be seen together and probably dressed themselves so as to look like travelers or traders. They were forty days in the work, and found out a good many things. They learned that the people dwelt, not in tents like those in the pictures, but in places that were well built, and which would be hard to take from them. The Israelites always lived in tents, for they were moving from place to place. One day two of the men came to a small stream on the banks of which were the largest grape vines they had ever seen. They cut down a branch with one large cluster on it. They said that such a cluster would be the very best way to prove to the people how fruitful the land was. It took both men to carry it, one at each end of a pole. Others brought pomegranates and figs.

The Spies' Report. At last the spies are back to camp, and the people are anxious to hear their report. The twelve spies all agreed that it was a good and fruitful land, and the things they brought back showed that. But they differed in the matter of going up to take the land. Ten of the spies said that the land was a good land: but the people are giants and we were only as grasshoppers in their sight and they have cities with walls and strongholds. Then up spake Caleb and said, "Yes, that is true, but we have God on our side, and He has promised to give us the land. Joshua agreed with Caleb and together they tried to persuade the people. But the ten declared that it was no use to try. The longer the people hesitated the weaker they became in spirit. They seemed to forget entirely the God who had led them and kept them so wonderfully. So now the very thing they came out of Egypt for, and, which is just at hand and offered to them, they fail to see and accept.

The ten cowardly spies God struck with a plague and they died. But their evil report had done its work like a poison, and had made cowards of all the people. How much better it is to see the things which God is showing us or which He is telling us to do. God commanded Caleb and Joshua by saying that they wholly followed Him. God also promised that they should both enter the promised land after awhile. All the rest of the people, over twenty years of age, should wander about in the wilderness until they died. Each one will get what he is looking for; or, as the Bible says, "According to your faith be it unto you."

Quiz and Study. 1. How far had the people come and where were they now? 2. Was God able to give them victory if they had gone in and battled for the land? 3. What makes you think He could and would? 4. What last great command of Christ begins with "Go ye"? 5. Who should we keep watch of lest he make us sin? 6. Who were dwelling in Canaan at this time? 7. How many people did Moses lead from Sinai? See Num. 1 and 2. 8. What did God send them when they murmured and complained of the manna?

Challenge Text. "Thou therefore my — be strong in the — that is in —." 2 Tim. 2: (?)

Practical Thoughts. 1. God promises blessings, but expects man to work and fight for them. 2. No matter what the giants of difficulty and opposition, just so God orders the battle. 3. Caleb believed the promise of God, and therefore had courage and power. 4. Man's bad habits may be as giants, and his sinful life as a walled city, but all may be overcome by faith in Christ. 5. The church is able to go up and possess the land, and failure is only because she does not really attempt the work. 6. Almost in Canaan, and yet through unbelief doomed to die in the wilderness; so many are "almost persuaded, but lost." 7. Our victories lie along the line of our faith and our vision. 8. One will not win the Canaan of Heaven unless he has faith in Christ as Saviour and leader. 9. If we are cowards we can't make others courageous. 10. We should stand with God whether ten or ten thousand are against us, or even the whole world.

THE SCRIPTURE LESSON IS NUM. 14:1-25.

Prayer: Lord Jesus, Keep us from following our own blind selves. Keep us from the sins of selfishness and unbelief. Open our eyes and minds and hearts, that we may see and receive Thee. Enable us to measure rightly the things that have eternal value. May we not sell our birthright for a mere mess of pottage. Give us faith, peace, joy, courage, victory. For Christ's sake. Amen.

Historical Setting: Time, B. C. 1490. Place, Kadesh-barnea, headquarters for thirty-seven years of their wilderness wandering. Persons, Moses, Aaron, Joshua, Caleb, the people.

Scripture Setting: Sin of Unbelief. A bad heart, Rom. 3:10-20. Bad teachers, Matt. ch. 3. Blinding power of sin, 1 Cor. ch. 2. Worldly spirit, Acts 19:29-40. Saul rejected, 1 Sam. 15:12-26. ## THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

as to terrible consequences. 1. It is the mother of all sins, and it makes every other sin worse. 2. It starts with a cold heart and soon ends by making a heart of stone. 3. It keeps one from the love and friendship of God all through life, and keeps him out of Heaven at last. 4. It is so subtle and flattering that it hides in many people who think themselves good, and who really are good in many ways. 5. It grows rapidly to murmur against God and to persecute the godly and righteous. 6. It often pretends to be only a desire for knowledge, and so it begins to question and cavil.

FIGHTING AGAINST GOD.

Rejecting Good Counsel. The Israelites refused to take the advice of Moses and the two good spies. These men stood in the place of God, and to oppose them was to fight against God. Their first advice was to go in and possess the land; but the people were made afraid by the report of the coward spies.

Then, when they repented and were determined to go and take the land, Moses cautioned them not to go, for God would not go with them. This also they rejected, and they wilfully rushed against the enemy and were defeated. What wicked people they were! In both cases they were fighting against God. The first picture shows Joshua and Caleb rending their outer garments. This was a sign of great indignation or of great sorrow. Sometimes it meant both indignation and sorrow, as in this case. They knew that this refusal, to obey God's command by Moses, would delay their entrance into the promised land, and probably bring punishment besides. These ten spies found just what they feared in their heart of unbelief. One will usually see what he is himself. The outside world is a mirror of the inside thought.

What They Saw and Found. "Did you observe the beautiful colors of the sunset beyond the mountains there?" asked the passenger in the seat ahead, as he rejoined his fellow traveler. "No," replied the latter, "I didn't see it at all." "Why, where were your eyes?" "Well, I had noticed several heaps of bones where cattle had died out here on the prairie, and I was counting the skeletons." What are you looking for—sunsets or skeletons, beauties or bleached bones? You are likely to see about what you look for. Indeed, there are many that say, "Who will show us any good?" but the principal reason why they cannot see any good is because they are always looking for evil. Look for skeletons and you are apt to find them, or, if not, you will think you do, which will afford the same sort of grim satisfaction.—Exchange.

Losing Their Inheritance. Joshua and Caleb make one more effort to persuade the people. They tell them about the goodly land flowing with milk and honey. The two pictures show that the expression "flowing with milk and honey" meant that the land had an abundance of all things needful for food. They also remind them of the promises of God and of His great power, and that the very strength of the enemies of the land will be given to them as food, if they only will obey. Still further they cautioned them not to rebel against God. All this was lost because they fought against Him. But, worst of all, they lost God's favor and help and guidance. The same law is at work here as in the case of Pharaoh. You remember that he hardened his heart against God, time after time, and at last it became fixed in that hardened state. So these people would not listen to reason or to pleading. They were more and more unbelieving.

Business or God. "Mamma," asked little three-year-old Freddie, "are we going to Heaven some day?"

"Yes, dear, I hope so," was the reply.

"I wish papa could go, too," continued the little fellow.

"Well, and don't you think he will?" asked his mother.

"Oh, no," replied Freddie; "he could not leave his business."

What influence will such a father exert over his children? Yet that would not, to a child, be an unnatural conclusion.

Stoning Their Best Friends. As the people had turned against Moses and Aaron, so now they turn against Joshua and Caleb. The more urgent these two good men are, the more angry the people become. At last, as you see in one of the pictures, they take up stones to stone them. God protects them by the outshining of His glory, as seen in the last picture. By this they are overawed and terrified. But they were not changed in heart. This glory of the Lord that appeared was just like the hand of God from Heaven laying hold of the people. They dare not continue to stone the good spies. It was like what happened that night at the Red Sea, when God looked at the Egyptians and threw them into confusion. In that case, it was in judgment and to destroy them, while in this case it was in mercy to restrain them from committing murder. Moses and Aaron had been praying for the people, and this glory of the Lord was in answer to their prayers.

Praying and Helping. "The happiest woman in my church," said a pastor in a suburban town, "and the most valuable in all kinds of church work, once told me the motto by which she had regulated her church life from the beginning of her membership. It was short, but to the point:

"Expect little, and do all you can."

"She called it her golden rule, and it certainly worked like a charm. Where other women are disappointed and discouraged, I notice that she goes along as blithely as possible. She never shows any hurt feelings, or indulges in any pride, or demands any praise or recognition. That is probably why she always gets it from those who appreciate good work. It is a happy motto."

"Thou God Seest Me." The ten coward spies forgot this great truth. While they were spying out the land, God was watching them, and He not only destroyed the ten spies, but is prompted to destroy all the people for being influenced by their report. And now a remarkable thing happens. Moses is moved to intercede for the rebellious nation. God had praised Joshua and Caleb, but this did not atone for the unbelief and sin of the whole people. What Abraham did for Sodom, Moses now does for the children of Israel. He thinks not of himself, but only of the good of the people and the glory of God. He urges the Divine plan and purpose and the vindication of God's ways before men. He pleads also the great mercy and long-suffering patience of God. His prayer is heard, and the nation is spared. But God punishes them by decreeing that none of those who were twenty years old and upward should be allowed to enter the land, except Joshua and Caleb. It is a grand and thrilling chapter in the wonderful life of this great man.

Getting On the Wrong Side. The Israelites were fighting against God in this matter, and Caleb and Joshua were with God. This was not the only time, but it was one of their worst sins. This was in the second year of their travels in the wilderness. Our next story is about what happened near the close of the forty years. We know only a few of the things which happened to them during all those years. But among those events are other instances of unbelief and sin.

There was the revolt of Korah and others (two hundred and fifty in all), and they were swallowed up in the earth as a punishment for their pride. This happened before all the people, and was a terrible warning. There was the jealousy against Aaron, when God showed them that Aaron was His choice for high priest. He did this by having twelve rods, one for each tribe, laid before the ark over night. In the morning it was seen that only Aaron's rod had budded like a living branch. This was the "finger of God to them." Then there was the time when Aaron and Miriam, his sister, were jealous of Moses, and God smote Miriam with leprosy. Moses prayed for her, and God healed her. She and Aaron were also cured of their pride and sin.

By all these cases of sinning we see that it was their habit to get on the wrong side; against God. God was good and merciful—whenever Moses prayed for the people; though they kept sinning, He kept forgiving.

Be Sure You Are Right. A father, mother and boy were going along the street to a certain store one day. The lad got impatient because the parents walked so slowly, and ran on ahead. Not having his parents to guide him, he missed his way and went up the wrong street. After a while he discovered he was wrong, and had to retrace his steps, and come back to father and mother for guidance. His impatience gained for him only a waste of strength, and he was glad to submit to the guiding of his parents. We make progress only when we are right and under the direction of wisdom and experience.—Selected.

Quiz and Study. 1. Why did the ten spies fear to go up and take the land? 2. What made the people change their decision? 3. When before did the glory of the Lord appear?

Challenge Text. So we see they could not—because of —. Heb. 3:(?).

Practical Thoughts. 1. Unbelief boasts of its wisdom, but it is supremely foolish. 2. Unbelief always fails in the end, and faith always wins in the end. 3. Unbelief produces grumbling and trouble; faith leads to prayer and harmony. 4. Unbelief shuts one out of every promised land and out of Heaven at last. 5. The man of unbelief is a dead weight in any enterprise. He is built on negatives and ignorance, and so fails and falls. 6. The man of faith is a power and inspiration. He is built on God and truth, and so is successful and victorious.

Prayer: Lord Jesus, Thou art Saviour, and Thou alone. Thou didst give Thy life on the cross, that sinful man might be saved. Help us to accept the life that is possible through Thy blood. May we be sheltered by the blood, cleansed by the blood, saved by the blood. For Christ's sake. Amen.

From Thy riven side which flowed,

Cleanse me from its guilt and power!"

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, B. C. 1452. Place, Kadesh-barnea. Persons, Moses, Aaron, the people. Scripture Setting: Salvation Pictures. Christ the light of the world, John 1:1-9. A Star shines, Num. 24:12-17. A sun rises, Mal. 4:1-6. Dawn breaks, Luke 2:27-32. The light of the world, Isa. 9:2-27. Christ at Jericho, Luke 19:1-10. Christ at Cana, John 2:1-11. Christ at Jacob's Well, John 4:28-42.

Life and Conduct Setting: Here is a miracleparable of salvation in a series of pictures. 1. A picture of man in thirst and unrest because of sin. Whatever the cause, and whether conscious of it or not, all men are sinful and sinning and unsatisfied. 2. A picture of the utter failure of earthly conditions to satisfy the awful thirst of sin, or even alleviate it. The world is a wilderness, stony and bare, as far as any spiritual blessings are concerned. 3. A picture of the supernatural coming of Christ to bring salvation. Christ is from above, and the direct gift of God to man. 4. A picture of the complete satisfaction Christ gives to the sinful nature of man. The water is an emblem and figure suggestive of purity, cleansing and health. 5. A picture of the fulness and freeness of this salvation—"enough for each, enough for all, enough forevermore." 6. A picture of the human agency in the distribution of salvation's blessings. 7. A picture of the ease and comfort and joy in partaking of salvation. It is only drink and live. "Oh, taste, and see that the Lord is good!"

A ROCK THAT BECAME A SPRING OF WATER.

Why the People Grumbled. They had grumbled before many times. We might almost call them the grumbling nation. That is not a very good name for a nation, nor for a man or boy. Nobody likes a grumbler, not even if he is a grumbler himself. But what made them grumble this time? They had come to a place where there was no water for themselves or cattle. Well, it is hard to be thirsty, and no water anywhere. But can you think of anything that would have been better than grumbling? You say, hunt for water. Yes, that was better than grumbling; but they had hunted and found none. How much better to have asked God about it. God had provided them with water once, soon after leaving Egypt. God had cared for them all the way. Once when Ishmael was thirsty he prayed, and God showed his mother where there was a well of water, and this saved his life. You can read about it in Gen. 21:14-19. They grumbled at Moses and Aaron. But they were not to blame, for they had only followed the cloud. So really they grumbled against the cloudy pillar—that is, against God. People that grumble are more apt to make mistakes because their minds and hearts are not bright and true. At such times they may blame their best friends, just as the people did here. If things do not seem to go just right, the better way is to ask God to change the things to suit you, or to change you to suit the things. God will know which to do.

Don't Grumble and Snarl. You often hear boys and girls say words, when they are vexed, that sound as if made up of a snarl, a whine, or a bark. Such a voice often expresses more than the heart feels. Often even in mirth one gets a voice or tone that is sharp, and it sticks to him through life. Such persons get a sharp voice for home use, and keep their best voice for those they meet elsewhere. I would say to all boys and girls: "Use your guest voice at home." Watch it day by day, as a pearl of great price, for it will be worth more to you than the best pearl in the sea. A kind voice is a lark's song to a heart and home. Train it to sweet tones now, and it will keep in tune through life.

The Magic Rod. What is that which Aaron is handing to Moses? That is the wonderful rod by which Moses has worked many miracles. You have heard of the wand of the fairies, which is said to change things or make them seem so. This was much more wonderful, for it really did change things just as God wished. The rod stood for the power and wisdom of God. In answer to their prayer, God tells Moses to take this rod and go and speak to a certain rock, and the water will gush forth. Moses obeys, and stands before the rock, and he is talking to the people:

"Hear now, ye rebels (that means grumblers), must we fetch you water out of this rock?" Then he smote the rock twice. In the second and third pictures you can see this illustrated, and the water begins to flow. The people knew that something unusual was about to happen, for the glorious light had flashed out from the cloud. They knew that was God, and they had stopped their bitter talk against Moses. What a good thing it was the people had Moses and Aaron to pray for them. You may have some good friend who is praying for you, and because of it, God may be giving you blessings or keeping you from grumbling and sinning. But it is a good thing to learn to pray for yourself, too, and for others.

How Moses and Aaron Sinned. Did the great and good Moses sin? Yes, and God punished him for it; and Aaron also. If you will read carefully what God told them to do, and then see what they actually did, you will find four ways in which they disobeyed. They spoke to the people instead of to the rock. They smote the rock instead of speaking to it. They spoke angrily just as if they did not want the people to have water. They said, "Must we fetch you water," as if they did it by the rod. In all these four ways they disobeyed God; and God punished them by not letting either of them go into the promised land. It was an instance of doing a right thing but in a wrong way. Moses had been impatient and hasty, when a young man. You remember that he killed an Egyptian taskmaster once, and had to run away to another land. But God had been training him to be meek and patient; and he had been a good scholar, for he was famous as a meek man. (Num. 12:3.) But his old nature flashed out here and his old sin trips him up. As Abraham, famous for faith, sinned from lack of faith; and as Peter, famous for courage, sinned from lack of courage; so Moses, the meekest man, sinned from lack of meekness. Satan often tempts us to sin just when and where we feel strongest. The only safe way is to trust God at all times. The rod was good in itself, but Moses seemed to put it in the place of God. So also it is a sin if we put the minister or the church in the place of God. They are both good, but they are not God. This doing right things in a wrong way or time is a common kind of sin; like using the Lord's day to study a week-day lesson, or to visit the park or museum. Now this was a severe punishment to Moses and Aaron. Here they are, just ready to enter the land of promise, and one sin keeps them out! It was severe, but God could not overlook such a sin, even in a good man, for God is no respecter of persons. Indeed, because Moses was a good man and with God so much, the sin was all the greater. God was merciful to them even in His punishment, for He took them to the Heavenly Canaan after He had first let them view the promised land from the top of a high mountain.

Keep the Lines in Repair. Man's best life is dependent upon uninterrupted communication with its source—God. He who neglects regular prayer and Bible study is like a town whose telegraph and telephone wires are down, and whose railroads and other means of communication with the outer world are cut off.—The Sunday-School Times.

The Rock a Picture of Christ. Moses has been a picture of Christ the most of the time. He could not be that here, for he sinned so. But the rock does show forth Christ smitten and crucified for us. In this way, He comes to be the Water of Life to all who thirst because of sin. Christ was scourged and smitten before He was crucified, and then when on the cross He was pierced by the spear of the Roman soldier. By dying for sinful man, Christ became the spring and source of salvation to all.

It was very strange for water to come out of a rock; so in the same way Christ is a wonderful Saviour. He is wonderful in the way He came. He is wonderful in giving life by His death; He is wonderful in His life and teachings, so different from all other teachers; He is wonderful in the plans and means for setting up His kingdom in the world; He is wonderful in overruling the wickedness of man to help build His kingdom. Thus in many ways that strange sight of water flowing out of a rock is a picture of Christ. Paul tells us that this rock meant Christ. 1 Cor. 10:4. The two last pictures are beautiful and forcible illustrations of how water satisfies thirst; and so they are a picture of how Christ satisfies the soul.

Quiz and Study. 1. How had Moses used that rod in all other miracles? 2. Was there any power in the rod itself? 3. When did Moses perform a similar miracle? (Ex. 17:1-7.) 4. Count up all the sins by Moses and by the people in connection with this miracle.

Challenge Text. "And did all ——— the same spiritual drink, for they ——— of that spiritual Rock." 1 Cor. 10:(?)

Practical Thoughts. 1. The weaknesses and sins of leaders greatly harm God's cause. 2. We should judge a man by his motive and character, and not by an occasional failure. 3. Every life has its ups and downs and its zigzag journeys. 4. In times of failure, go to God rather than to self and man. 5. That which seems an opposing rock may turn to a refreshing fountain. 6. The real source of all our sins is unbelief. 7. God does not overlook sin even in the best of men. 8. The "meekest man" yet sinned by an outburst of temper.

THE BRAZEN SERPENT

And the people spake against God, and against Moses. Wherefore have ye brought us up out of to die in the wilderness? for there is no bread, neither is there any water; and our soul loatheth this light bread. And the Lord sent fiery serpents among the people, and they and much people of Israel died. Therefore the people came to Moses, and said, We have sinned, for we have spoken against the Lord, and against thee; pray unto the Lord, that he take away the from us. And Moses prayed for the people. And the Lord said unto Moses, Make thee a fiery serpent, and set it upon a pole: and it shall come to pass, that every one when he looketh upon it, he shall live. And Moses made a serpent of brass, and and it came; to pass, that if a serpent had bitten any man, when he beheld, he lived.

THE SCRIPTURE LESSON IS NUM. 21:1-9.

Prayer: Lord Jesus, What a wonderful salvation is that which comes simply by the asking and receiving! Help us to see our need, and then to see Thy power and grace. For Christ's sake. Amen.

"There is life for a look at the Crucified One;
There is life at this moment for thee;
Then look, sinner, look unto Him and be saved—
Unto Him Who was nailed to the tree!"

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, B. C. 1452. Place, Valley of Arabah, which extends from the Dead Sea to the eastern branch of the Red Sea. Persons, Moses, the people.

Scripture Setting: God's Grace and Love. "Behold the Lamb," John 1:29-36. "God so loved," John 3:1-16. Look and be saved, Isa. 45:15-25. The only way, Acts 4:5-12. A perfect sacrifice, Heb. 9:11-28. Gift of Holy Spirit, Joel 2:21-29. The Redeemer shall come, Isa. 59:12-21. Take warning, 1 Cor. 10:1-12.

Life and Conduct Setting: The incident in its connections suggests God's providential guidance, and illustrates His gracious dealings with the sinner. 1. It is a dealing by training and teaching. This was true of the whole wilderness experience. 2. It is a dealing by pledge and covenant, leading them step by step. 3. It is a dealing by specific tests and commands, like the command not to fight their way through Edom. 4. It is a dealing by punishment and suffering which are severe and yet in mercy and for blessing. 5. It is a dealing which is intended to produce repentance, as in this case it does. 6. It is a dealing which includes a full and free salvation to all. 7. It is a dealing which makes it easy for all to accept the salvation. It is simply "Look and live." 8. It is a dealing which reveals and declares that Christ crucified is the only way of salvation from sin.

HOW GOD HELPS AND SAVES.

Serpents That Bit the People. As you look on those first pictures you see them to be very different. Almost any one would choose the first as the pleasanter place to live. But sometimes the pleasanter place is not the better one. God had led the Israelites out of Egypt into the desert because it was better for them. Just now they could not go the way they wished. And when Moses led them around another way it seemed as if they were going directly from the promised land. They murmured at this, and then began to find fault with the manna that God had sent them as food. Just think of it! God had specially provided this food, white and sweet as honey and good enough for angels to eat, and yet they call it vile and said they were tired of it and that they wanted to go back to Egypt. Do you wonder that God was angry with them? I do not think God likes anyone who grumbles and growls because he can't have things just his own way. Well, God sent a terrible punishment this time. He let the fiery snakes of the desert come into their tents and bite them. They were everywhere, and they flashed like fire as they darted here and there; and their bite was like the sting of fire, and it killed them. There had been serpents there all the time, and even wild beasts of all kinds, but God had protected the people from them. But now he let the serpents go where they pleased. This does not look like helping and saving, does it? But it was God's way, and we shall see that it was a very good way. It might be called the trouble chapter in helping people to be saved. It was very wicked to grumble against Moses and God, and the people needed to be punished. But their very punishment was graciously overruled to bring salvation.

A Death and Life Verse. One evening a lad chanced to drop into a strange church and heard the minister preach from the text, "For the wages of sin is death." The boy left the church very much worried. He had forgotten where the text was, and had forgotten the rest of it. He went home, went to his room, went to bed, but could not sleep. The text haunted him: "For the wages of sin is death." He rose, dressed himself, and tried to find the text in his Bible. Several times he started to the door of his mother's room to ask her about it, when his courage failed.

Finally he went to his mother's room, woke her at an early hour in the morning, told her the whole story, and heard from her sweet lips the comforting words: "But the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord." This brought him peace of mind, and he went back to his room, yielded himself to Christ, and slept peacefully the rest of the night.

"Take Away the Serpents!" This was the cry of the people to Moses. It was a sort of prayer and then Moses went to God and prayed that He would save the people. This might be called the sorry chapter or the prayer chapter. God loved the people, and for that reason He sent the serpents to bite them. Then they would see how sinful they were, and cry to God for help. In those three pictures we can see how the serpents followed them everywhere. The people try to escape but cannot and some are dying from the poison. So they go to Moses, and say, "We have sinned; pray to the Lord that He will take the serpents from us." Then conscience told them they had done wrong, and they are willing to confess it before God. We see no mention of Aaron here for he had died as God ordered.

Moses took him to the top of a mountain with Eleazar, Aaron's son. Then as God commanded, the beautiful robes were taken from Aaron and put on Eleazar and after that he was high priest. Aaron died on the mountain top and Moses and Eleazar buried him there.

Moses does not condemn the people nor even rebuke them, but he prays for them. Moses had learned a lesson of patience and meekness, and he did not make the blunder he made when he smote the rock. This prayer of the people and of Moses was the next step to God's help. Was it possible for the serpents to be taken away, and the poison removed from the system? Yes, and we shall see how it was done. Just so the worst sinners can be saved by Jesus Christ.

"Look and Live." A woman once came to Moody and said: "Mr. Moody, I would like to become a Christian, but I'm so hard-hearted." He replied: "My good woman, did the Master say, 'You soft-hearted people, come?' Nothing of the kind. He said: 'Come unto Me'—all black hearts, vile hearts, corrupt hearts, deceitful hearts—all." If your heart is hard, who will soften it? You can't. The harder the heart, the more the need of coming. Isn't that so? The harder, the viler, the more deceitful the heart, the more need there is for the Saviour; so come along and get rest. If you can't come as a saint, come as a sinner; if you can't run, walk; if you can't walk, creep to Him; but come."

A Serpent That Cured the People. Moses prayed that the serpents might be taken away. But God did something better. He not only called away the serpents but he told Moses how to cure the people who were bitten. How do you think it was done? It was very strange, but God had a great lesson in it for these people and for all the world. He told Moses to make a serpent of brass, and put it on a pole, and then tell all those who were bitten to look at it and they would be cured. That seemed like a queer remedy; but Moses believed God, and it turned out as God had promised. If we know that God has said a thing we can be sure it will come to pass. It is the same whether it be a promise of blessing or a threat of punishment and judgment. After that, whoever looked at that brazen serpent was cured at once. If a person could just open his eyes anywhere and look to the serpent the fiery pain left him and he could walk away strong and well. It was really wonderful, even the greatest of miracles. The lesson that was intended to be taught to them, and to all people everywhere, was that Jesus Christ the Son of God would come to earth some day; and that He would be lifted up on the cross and die for sinful men. Then whoever looked to Him, and trusted that Christ would save him, would really be saved from sin. Man is bitten by the serpent of sin; and Christ took on human nature (like a sinner though without sin himself), and died for us on the cross. We have now only to look to Him, in faith, and be saved. This is the heart-and-will chapter in salvation, or the faith chapter.

Now anyone, anywhere, can be cured of the sin bite, and sin poison if he will only "look to Jesus." In the last two pictures there is not a serpent to be seen, except the brazen serpent. And how joyous and grateful these people seem as they look and are cured. Some of them are on their knees thanking God for their wonderful deliverance. Christ himself told us what this brazen serpent meant when he said, "As Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of Man be lifted up; that whosoever believeth in him should not perish but have eternal life." When Christ says "Son of man" he always means Himself. It is all very, very wonderful; and we should be glad and rejoice that such a way of salvation is provided. The truest and very best way to rejoice is by loving and trusting the Saviour who died for us.

"Made in the Likeness of Sin." As the serpent was a "cursed" creature, Gen. 3:14, so Christ was "made a curse for us," Gal. 3:13. They crucified Him between two thieves, Matt. 27:44. They chose a robber and a murderer instead of Him, Luke 23:18. "They made His grave with the wicked," Isa. 53:9, R. V. Christ was counted as a sinner, treated as a sinner, and died as a sinner for our redemption. 2. As the "brazen serpent" was made in the likeness of the fiery serpents (v. 9), so the Son of Man was made "in the likeness of sinful flesh," Rom. 8:3. 3. As the "brazen serpent" was without poison (v. 9), so Christ was "holy, harmless, undefiled," Heb. 7:26. There was no sin in Him even while our sin was on Him. 4. As every one that "beheld the serpent of brass" was healed (v. 9), so every one that sees Christ as the Great Physician will be healed.—A. C. Morrow.

Quiz and Study. 1. How long had the Israelites been in the wilderness? 2. On what other occasions had they murmured? 3. How did the brazen serpent represent Christ?

Challenge Text. "And as Moses lifted up the ——— in the wilderness, even so must the ——— be lifted up." John 3:(?)

Practical Thoughts. 1. The greatest blessings come to be forgotten, and even despised, because common. 2. The marvelous deliverances of God are almost outranked by the marvelous unbelief of man. 3. By warnings and judgments, as well as by mercies, God would bring man to repentance. 4. The very freeness and easiness of salvation are used by Satan to keep men from Christ. 5. God shows His love to man as often in His punishment as in His mercy. 6. "If God does not answer prayers, it is not because He forgets, but because He loves."

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, B. C. 1451. Place, East of the Jordan, opposite Jericho. Persons, Moses, the people.

Scripture Setting: The Blessed Life. Christ and the blessed life, Col. 1:19-27. Love and the blessed life, John 14:15-24. The Spirit and the blessed life, Rom. 8:14-27. Grace and the blessed life, Eph. 2:1-10. Forgiveness and the blessed life, Psa. 32. Humility and the blessed life, Phil. 2:1-12. Service and the blessed life, Mark 10:35-45. Fidelity and the blessed life, Rev. 2:1-17. Benefit of the blessed life, Deut. 6:16-25. Seeking the blessed life, Deut. 5:1-21.

Life and Conduct Setting: Here, in brief form, are some of the aids to a blessed life: 1. Obedience to the Divine commands. These commands are vitally important. 2. A right attitude to God and acquaintance with His promises which inspire and enable one to do his best. 3. Supreme choice of God and His Word, and a constant love for both. 4. The Christian home is a chief agency for training the child for life and Heaven. 5. Godliness in the life both gives blessing to others and brings blessings to ourselves. 6. Gratitude for blessings received; a thankful heart will be a blessed one. 7. A reverent and continuous loyalty to God. This only will guarantee and assure the blessed life. To forsake God is to be God-forsaken.

WHAT WILL MAKE A HAPPY PEOPLE.

Hearts that Love God. Moses knew that he was to die soon, and he wanted to leave his last message to the people he loved. We know that it would be some message for their good, for his whole life had been spent in helping them. He is very anxious that they be a happy people, and he gives four ways by which they may become so. He was thinking of the whole nation, but the same rules are good for the whole world, or for any small part of the world, like a city or town, or neighborhood or school, or even a company of people young or old. You can guess easily what his first rules would be. It would have to do with God and the heart, for these are the two greatest things we can think of. The heart of even one person is worth more in the sight of God than all the beautiful things in all the world. When He says, "Hear O Israel," He means that they should give careful attention to what He is about to say. And as each person must hear for himself, it is just as if he spoke to each. "Thou shalt" means here that it is what each one ought to do, both because God commands it and because one's own conscience tells him so. Then, too, the benefits of loving God are many. Notice also that it is an "all love." God is not satisfied with a little love. It may begin that way, but He wants it to grow and grow till it fills every part of one's being. We should love with "all the heart," "all the soul," "all the might." He is the Lord our God, the only true God, and it is a great privilege that we may love Him; and it means that He has first loved us, and that He will continue to love us.

The Rosy Touch. "If I can put some touches of rosy sunset into the life of any man or woman," said George Macdonald, "then I feel that I have wrought with God."

Homes that Teach the Bible. Now we begin to see our story pictured out. Our artist could not show the heart very well, but he can show the parents teaching the children out of God's book. It is a queer-looking book, but that was the way their Bible was bound. It rolled on two sticks, back and forth to the place they wanted. All their books were made that way. That is the reason we often call a book a "volume," for volume means a roll. These four pictures show us the parents teaching the children. Even the very young boy or girl can learn of God and what God would like to have one do. That youngest one is only a few years old, but they are all very much interested. Children always like to learn about the God who made them and who loves them. In one of the pictures two of the children are reading the roll for themselves. I know a boy who had read the whole New Testament through before he was seven years old. Did you do as well as that? How careful they are to hold the roll without tearing it! The Bible ought to be treated reverently by all, for it is God's book, His wonderful message to the world. It is better not even to throw the Bible down as one might sometimes do with some book that man wrote, or to bend the covers back on each other.

Such rude actions might make one careless about the teachings of the Bible. I wonder what that father is saying to the boy, as he points while they walk together! We know that it is something out of God's great book. Can you think of some Bible verse that might fit that picture? This is a beautiful picture of a Christian home, and is just what God intended every home should be. The earthly home ought to be used to fit children and others for the Heavenly home.

"Feed My Lambs." The story of the cross has a peculiar fascination for children. A child was asked whether she would rather stay with Aunt Jane or Aunt Mary, both of whom were kind. She said, "O, I like to stay with Aunt Jane best because she always puts the cakes and tarts on a low shelf where I can get them easily." Too many talks to children are like Aunt Mary's cakes, on a high shelf. Set the cakes low.

A Christian mother led her little boy to a quiet spot, and kneeling, commended him to God. As she ceased praying the child looked into her face, with happy tears in his eyes, and said: "Mamma, I am so glad you told Jesus my name. Now he knows me, and when I come up to Heaven he will say, 'Come in, Arthur; your mother told me about you.'"

A. C. M.

Lives that Are Good and True. Now here is a picture of an arm, and another of a head. On each there is a sign which stands for God's law. Did you ever tie a string around your finger to remind you of something you were to do? Well, these signs were to remind the Israelites of the words God had spoken, His orders as to what they should be and do. God was very good to use all kinds of ways to train these people. While this is Moses talking to them, you must remember that God had told him what to say. But these signs meant also that the hand and head were obedient to the laws which the signs represented. That sign on the arm runs clear down to the fingers. It must mean that whatever that arm and hand did should be pleasing to God. How many things a hand would do in a day! All should be in obedience to God and for His glory. Paul says that even when we eat and drink we should do all for God's glory. The very fingers should be as little messengers and workers for God. That sign between the eyes means that all that one sees, or even thinks, should be good and true, and so help him to live a godly life.

Christ in the Home. The atmosphere of the home shall be full of these truths. Men will speak often of that which is of the greatest interest. Conversation is a marvelous power for culture and training. The events of the day, the deeds of ourselves and of others, can be made the occasion of moral instruction, in a concrete and vivid form. They are to great moral principles what the particles in the air are to the light, which would be generally invisible but for the objects which reflect and disperse it. The home is in its nature a university. It is a large part of the true "university extension" movement. There is something in it, if rightly used, to train every faculty of the mind. The home is like the philosopher's garden, of which he boasted to his friends. A visitor wondered, when he saw how small it was. "Yes," said the philosopher, "it is not very long, nor very broad, but, oh, it is wondrous high." Mrs. Hunt says that the Star of Bethlehem for temperance stands over the school house. The Star of Bethlehem for morals and religion stands over the home. Peloubet.

Ways of Making Known God's Laws. This is the fourth rule for making a people happy. Sometimes a family might try to be good and happy just in itself, and forget about other people. Even one person might act that way, not caring how others might get along. That is a poor rule, and really won't work. The world calls it "looking out for number one." But he who does that alone can never get the best blessings of life. Such a course is contrary to God's teaching, and for that reason we should not follow it. The last two pictures show that the laws of God should be made known to all. Every Christian home should stand for something, and should show it forth to all who pass by. The very gates leading up to the house should say in some way that the people who live here love God and obey Him, and also call on all others to love and obey. All this means also that as far as the influence of that house can go its voice should be for God and His laws. It means that when anyone went out from this home he went with a helpful message to everyone else in all the world. When Christ was leaving the earth He told His disciples to "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel." This gospel, or good news, is God's great love-letter to sinful man, and everyone who has heard of it should tell all others everywhere.

Quiz and Study. 1. What was the last command of Christ to His disciples? 2. What were the last words of Paul to Timothy? 3. Do you remember the last words of any great men? 4. What is "the commandment with promise"? 5. What does James say about the tongue?

Challenge Text. Yea ——— is that people whose ——— is the Lord. Psa. 144: (?)

Practical Thoughts. 1. The commands, warnings, judgments of God are guide-posts to the blessed life. 2. The home is as a great university, with its instructors, fellowships, incentives, ideals, worship. 3. All things are made to work for, and pay tribute to, the true child of God. 4. A person instinctively and necessarily takes on the qualities of the God he worships. 5. "Godliness is profitable unto all things," "a hundredfold in this life," etc. 6. The French nation forgot God and the terrible revolution followed. 7. God's Word is the bulwark of the nation as of the home.

THE DEATH OF MOSES

And Moses went up from the plains of Moab unto the mountain of Nebo, to the top of Pisgah, that is over against Jericho. And the Lord shewed him all the land of Gilead, unto Dan,

And all Naphtali, and, the land of Ephraim, and, Manasseh, and all the land of Judah, unto the utmost sea,

And the south, and the plain of the valley of Jericho, the city of palm trees, unto Zoar.

And the Lord said unto him, This is the land which I swear unto Abraham, unto Isaac, and unto Jacob, saying, I will give it unto thy seed: I have caused thee to see it with thine eyes, but thou shalt not go over thither.

So Moses the servant of the Lord there in the land of Moab, according to the word of the Lord. And he in a valley in the land of Moab, over against Bethpeor: but no man knoweth of his unto this day. And Moses was an hundred and twenty years old when he died: his eye was not dim, nor his natural force abated.

And the children of Israel for Moses in the plains of Moab thirty days: so the days of weeping and mourning for Moses were ended.

Prayer: Lord Jesus, We thank Thee for the godly men and women in all ages. Wondrously Thou has shown Thy grace and power. May we seek to emulate their example and so perpetuate their influence. Grant unto us a measure of their faith and power. For Christ's sake. Amen.

"And had he not high honor?
The hillside for a pall,
To lie in state, while angels wait,
With stars for tapers tall;
And the dark rock-pines, like tossing plumes
Over his bier to wave,
And God's own hand in that lonely land
To lay him in the grave."

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, B. C. 1451. Place, Mount Nebo, the highest summit of Mount Pisgah. The Israelites were encamped at the foot of this mountain.

Scripture Setting: The Called Leader. David called, 1 Sam. 16:4-13. Elisha called, 2 Kings 2:1-11. Paul called, Acts 9:1-20. Christ the great leader, Isa. 42:1-16. Laborers and leaders, 1 Cor. 3:1-15. Approved of God, 2 Tim. 2:15-22. By my Spirit, Zech. 4:1-14. A leader's prayer, Psa. 90.

Life and Conduct Setting: Here are some great lessons from a great life. 1. Mountain-top experiences fitting him for great undertakings. 2. A friend of God, and so rising to the Divine level of power and achievement. 3. Greatly honored of God in many special ways. 4. Great as a patriot, in the true and real sense. 5. Great as a statesman, holding high relation with God, and with full recognition of the claims and needs of men. 6. Great as a prophet, and as such, a type of Christ. 7. Great as a general and leader. Think of his outwitting Pharaoh, leading a whole nation out of bondage into a new land, giving laws and religion to the child nation, securing a matchless code of morals, welding and cementing the nation for military conquest. God did it, you say. Yes, and God will work through you—if you let Him.

A WONDERFUL DEATH AND BURIAL.

The Land of Promise. How familiar we are with that map picture. It has been printed millions of times, and is found in nearly all Bibles and lesson helps. It is a map of the most famous land in all the world. Moses is now having a view of it before his death. He is both sad and joyous as God shows it all to him. He is sad because he can never enter it; but he is joyous, for he knows that God will give it to the people he led and loved. I read of a large company of foreigners who were returning from the United States to their home land. How glad they were to visit it again! Some such feelings Moses had for his people, for was not this the land of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob? Before his death Moses gathered up the main parts of the law, for the use of the people. This was what we have in Deuteronomy, which means the second law. This was of constant use to the priests, and the larger law was interpreted by them at special times. Moses was anxious also that the people should have a good leader. God told him who it should be. In this way He answered the prayer of Moses. Who do you think it was? Some might guess it was Caleb, for he was so brave and good. But God chose Joshua and set him apart to be the successor of Moses. God also showed His approval by the glory from the cloud at the tabernacle and He gave some of the very spirit of Moses to him. Almost the last thing Moses did was to teach the people a beautiful song about the goodness and mercy of God. Read it some time in the 32nd chapter of Deuteronomy. Someone has called it the swan song of Moses, for it was just before his death. It was like singing at his own funeral.

"That's My Land." In 1889 delegates went from the United States to the first world's Sunday School convention in London. They crossed the ocean in the Cunard steamship Bothnia. The 300 delegates held a Sunday School Convention 3,000 miles long, with sessions morning, afternoon and evening. As we neared the end of the trip I noticed a strange looking man peering off across the waters. At last he began to sing loud and strong in the Welsh language. He was a Welshman and he had caught a glimpse of the mountains of his own dear Wales. A company had gathered about him as he sang, and suddenly he turned to them and exclaimed in broken English, "That's my land! There is no land like that under the sun."

"God Kissed Him There." This is the way the rabbi teachers describe the death of Moses. Of Enoch it was said, "He was not for God took him;" and Elijah went up in a chariot of fire. But the death of Moses was even more remarkable. God told him to come up into the mountain and meet Him. He had been with God on a mountain before, but this was to be the last talk with God on earth. The time had come for the people to go into Canaan. All the older people had died except three. God had said that none of them should ever go into the promised land except the two good spies. Moses was the third one, and he had sinned at "the smitten rock," and so could not go over. But God will show him the land. Our artist has pictured Moses standing on Mt. Nebo, where God is showing him all parts of the land. He has good eyes yet, and is strong every way, and God also helped so that all passed before him. He said to him, "This is the land that I swear to give to Abraham." If God made a pledge like that we may know it would be fulfilled. Moses knew it very well, for God had never failed in any promise He had made. Moses sees that the land is watered from the clouds, as if God had used a great watering pot whenever rain was needed. This was so different from Egypt, for that land depended on the river Nile for water for crops and cattle. This abundance of water made the land fruitful in corn, grapes, olive trees and grasses. When God had shown him all he put him to sleep by the angel's kiss and buried him there. No one ever knew where, for God "buried the grave also." Moses lived one hundred and twenty years, and his life was divided into three periods of forty years each; forty years in Egypt, forty years in Midian, and forty years in the wilderness. As the angels tenderly bear him to his hidden tomb their bright wings seem to lighten up the rocks around. The poet has said,

"And no man knows that sepulcher,
And no man saw it e'er,
For the angels of God upturned the sod,
And laid the dead man there."

"And had he not high honor,—
The hillside for a pall
To lie in state while angels wait
With stars for tapers tall.
And the dark rock-pines like tossing plumes
Over his bier to wave,
And God's own hand, in that lonely land,
To lay him in the grave."

A Mountain Top Man. As the people saw Moses go up the mountain side, they knew they were looking at him for the last time. They realized as never before how much he had been to them. For forty years they had him as a leader, and many times he had pleaded with God for them. It is hard for them to think of living without him. All through the camp of over two million people there were little groups like that in the last picture. There were times, too, when they met in larger companies and talked of what he had done. While they are weeping and mourning let us also think a little of how great a man he was. He was great in many ways, a teacher, a prophet, a law-giver, a leader, a general, a writer. In all these ways he was indeed a wonderful man. But most wonderful of all was his fellowship with God. Of him alone it is said that he talked with God face to face. Because of this friendship with God he was often spoken of as a type or figure of Christ. Each made known the law of God to man; each wrought great miracles; each stood in the place of God to men; each was greatly honored of God; each was criticised and opposed by the people; each seemed to fail in life's work at last; each died and went to Heaven in an unusual way. But Christ was only partly pictured by Moses, for Christ was sinless; Christ revealed the love of God and His grace and truth; Christ saved from the guilt and punishment of sin; Christ was Saviour and Friend of the whole world; Christ was God Himself, come down to earth.

A Light Gone Out. Moses lived so that he was missed. A newspaper tells how a traveler in Norway came to a village early one morning, and was struck by the air of gloom which pervaded the streets. Unable to speak the language, he could not ask the cause, and concluded that some sickness or financial trouble had befallen the community. As the day wore on, the houses were closed, shop windows were covered, and all business ceased. It was death then. Presently he saw the people gathering for the funeral. There were the village officials, the nobleman from the neighboring chateau, and apparently every man, woman and child in the village. "It must be some dignitary of the church or some county official," he thought. As he stood watching the crowds passing down the little rocky street, he caught sight of the face of an acquaintance. He beckoned to him: "The town has lost some great magnate, apparently?" "Ah, no; it is only a young maiden that is dead. No, she is not beautiful, nor rich, but oh, such a pleasant girl, monsieur! All the world seems darker now that she is dead."

Quiz and Study. 1. Name two other mountains connected with the life of Moses. 2. Give a mountain picture in the life of Elijah. 3. Also one in the life of Christ. 4. What great American is likened to Moses in the work he did? 5. Name five traits of character in Moses. 6. When did Moses appear to Christ, and who else was with him? 7. What great leader in the New Testament does Moses make you think of?

Challenge Text. "And behold, there appeared unto them _____ and _____ talking with them." Matt. 17: (?).

Practical Thoughts. 1. Life may be a success, though we fail of certain cherished plans. 2. One may lead others to blessings he does not attain for himself. 3. He is poor indeed and foolish who misses the Heavenly Canaan. 4. No one can predict the future from the babe in the cradle, for "every life is a shut casket of possibilities." 5. Moses dies, but his life, character and spirit live forever; and never more influential than now. 6. The power of a single man if God is allowed to mould and sway the life. 7. God buries the worker, but carries on the work. 8. The death of one man is the call and opportunity of another.

SECOND DIVISION
THE HISTORICAL BOOKS

JOSHUA ENCOURAGED

Now after death of Moses the servant of the Lord it came to pass that the Lord spake unto Joshua the son of Nun, Moses' minister, saying, Moses my servant is now therefore arise, go over this Jordan, thou, and all this people, unto the land which I do give to them, even to the children of Israel. Every place that the sole of your foot shall tread upon, that have I given unto you, as I said unto Moses. From the wilderness and this Lebanon even unto the great river, the Euphrates, all the land of the Hittites, and unto the great toward the going down of the sun, shall be your coast. There shall not any man be able to stand all the days of thy life: as I was with Moses, so I will be with thee: I will not fail thee, nor forsake thee. Be strong and of a good courage: for unto this shalt thou divide for an inheritance the land, which I sware unto their fathers to give them.

THE SCRIPTURE LESSON IS JOSHUA 1:1-9.

Prayer: Lord Jesus, We are glad that Thou knowest us altogether, and at all times. May we not fear what man can do, for we know Thou art near to help, guide and bless. May we ever be watchful to receive and obey Thy messages, in whatever form they come. It may be the hard task, but may we be able to undertake it, and so be led, encouraged and blessed. For Christ's sake. Amen.

"So, ready to do and to dare,
Should we in our places stand,
Fulfilling the Master's will,
Fulfilling the soul's demand;
For though as the mountains high
The billows may rear and toss,
They'll not overwhelm if the Lord's at the helm
While over life's ocean we cross."

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, B. C. 1451. Place, Near the Jordan fords, opposite Jericho. Persons, The Lord talking to Joshua.

Scripture Setting: Courage and Success. The motive power, 2 Cor. 5:14-19. Power of the Spirit, Acts 2:1-13. Created for success, Eph. 2:1-10. Success demanded, Rom. 14:1-10. Key to success, Prov. 3:1-18. Success or failure, Psa. 1. Success tested, 1 Cor. 3:6-23. Success rewarded, Rev. 2:1-11.

Life and Conduct Setting: Here are given some of the Divine voices calling Joshua to service. 1. "Arise, go." It was very easy and natural for Joshua to be hesitating and disturbed because of Moses' death. 2. "I have given unto you," Joshua was to enter into the plan already started. 3. "I will not fail thee." He is assured of all the power of God Himself. 4. "Be strong and of a good courage." God can not do his best work through a weakling or a coward. 5. "Observe to do all." The revealed law was His book of specifications. 6. "Have not I commanded thee?" The very power and authority of God were his by Divine investment. These six Divine voices came to Joshua with most inspiring effect.

HOW TO BE SUCCESSFUL IN LIFE.

Ready for One's Opportunity. When "the Lord spake unto Joshua" it opened up a great opportunity to him. There was a reason why God spoke to Joshua rather than to anyone else. Can you guess what it was? Yes, he was willing to hear what God had to say. Then, too, he was able to hear; able to hear not merely with his ears, but also with his mind and heart and all his powers. This is just another way of saying that he was ready to do that which God had been getting ready for him. It is a good thing when one can hear with his ears, but it is even more important to be able to hear and understand. Think of the ways in which Joshua had been getting ready for this great work. For one thing, he was born of good parents, and had good training. He was only a slave boy, but he had good blood in him. I am sure that he was faithful in all that his master told him to do. It might be that he was a messenger boy for Pharaoh. If so, he did good work always. You remember what he and Caleb did as the two good spies, and how they wanted to go right ahead and enter Canaan, and trust God for victory. That was forty years before, when Joshua was a young man, for those days God remembered, also, and He probably said to Himself, "There's a young man I'll use some time." God knows how to plan for those who wish to do His will. All through this wilderness journey Joshua was a close friend of Moses. We know how much that meant, in preparing him for his life work. Moses was a great teacher, and Joshua was quick and eager to learn. And at last Moses put his hands on him and prayed that God

Opportunities Lost. A story is told of a man who dreamed a guide took him through a corn field; every ear of corn was a precious jewel, and he went from one to the other until he came to the end of the field without picking one, when the guide said, "Opportunities lost." Are we not impressed that this world is a field of precious lives, and we pass from one to another, and with all the opportunities that are ours, we will, like the dreamer, say, "Opportunities lost." "Count that day lost whose slow descending sun views from thy hand no worthy action done."—Exchange.

Brave Amid Difficulties. "Now therefore arise, go over this Jordan." That was the call to Joshua. It would have been thought impossible by many. Look at that first picture, Moses lying dead, and think what it meant to that people. Here was the hardest thing God had commanded, and the people had lost their tried and loved leader. Joshua is asked to take this discouraged people and make an army out of them, and go over the river to conquer fierce enemies in battle. Just now, too, the river was the deepest and widest that it had been for a year, with a strong current. There were no bridges, and they had no boats. The very strongest man could scarcely swim across, without armor and arms. And even that would leave all the women and children, and the weaker men. The place God led them to was right opposite the strongest city of the enemy. And it looked as if it was foolhardy to try to cross then and there. Surely here was enough to make the stoutest heart fear. But Joshua was not discouraged. The difficulties seemed to him like so many voices calling him to go forward. Like a boy who had a hard problem, and who says to himself, "Well, I guess I'll master you." Such a boy or girl always wins; if not at first, then the second time, or the third, or the tenth. Joshua was sure he was obeying God, and that stirred him to be brave and do his best and improve opportunities, and even to make opportunities.

Now Is My Chance. General Grant, in his memoirs, tells how he secured his first promotion. He was sorry to hear, by a private letter, that a neighbor boy at West Point had failed in his examination and was coming home. Grant took time by the forelock, and, going to his Congressman, got him to promise him the first vacancy, and thus he secured the coveted place. So there is a just ambition that is the secret of true greatness. It is not by getting, through the solicitation of friends, titles to our names.—Exchange.

A Picture of What God Wanted Done. Joshua was brave and eager, partly because God had told him what he should do, and what he actually could do. The second and third pictures give some idea of this promise. This river Euphrates was the eastern boundary of the land he was to conquer. The "great sea," the Mediterranean sea, was the western boundary. Then the wilderness of Arabia, where they had wandered for forty years, was the southern boundary, and the white mountains of Lebanon were the northern boundary. This land, where Abraham, Isaac and Jacob had lived, was what Moses had seen but what he could not enter. It is pictured out to Joshua and he is commanded to go in and possess it. Joshua had shown himself brave in battle, when as commander of the Israelites he fought the Amalekites. This vision, or picture, which God gave to Joshua was like a copy set for him, and he wanted to do just as God ordered. People now have visions of what they would like to do and be. This is specially true of young people. Often this is the call of God to a life work. Sometimes it comes very early in life. If one is sure it is of God, then he should try to follow the copy, and God will help him to do it well. Even what is sometimes called an "air castle," the dream of what one would like to do, may be one way in which God is leading to one's life work. If we are in doubt about what God is picturing out as our work, we can ask Him to make us certain about it. For we should not begin anything that is not pleasing to Him.

Pictures and Dreams. Men, from the time they are little boys, see ahead of them some goal. They aspire to be president of the United States, a justice of the Supreme court, a great surgeon, a great artist or a great business man. They dream of their future and count each month as precious time to be filled with acts that shall help in the carrying out of their ambition. They let nothing stand in the way, and thus we hear of boys who have been rail-splitters and canal boys reaching the highest office within the gift of the people; of some poor little peasant who becomes a great painter.—Exchange.

Strong In and For God. That last picture shows how Joshua will conquer all his enemies. The man has lost his sword and shield and is fleeing before Joshua. This is partly because Joshua is naturally bold, but it is chiefly because God is with him and because God has chosen him to be successful and victorious in all his battles.

Look at that picture of the dead Moses again. Do you see the angels? What do they mean? They are there to bury Moses, and they are also ready to give courage and faith to Joshua. They did another thing, too, that you will learn about in the next story. Now Joshua remembered all the wonderful things God did for Moses and through him, and so he was brave amid the difficulties. I can fancy the spirit of Joshua present at the burial of Moses, and that the spirit of the great leader passed into him. What were difficulties to one who had God with him and for him? He was told that he should both conquer the wicked people then living in Canaan, and should divide up the territory among the different tribes. Joshua's name at first was Hosea, meaning "help;" but it was changed to Jehoshua, or Joshua, which means "the help" or "salvation of God." We may be sure he will succeed if he remains true to his name.

Quiz and Study. 1. What remarkable case of one prophet following another in the time of the kings? Both names began with E. 2. What martyr in the New Testament times was followed by one who helped to stone him? And who was he? 3. How long was Moses preparing for his great work? And Joshua? 4. Who were the only two old men who entered the promised land, and why? 5. Why could not Moses go there? 6. What had been the food of the Israelites in the wilderness?

Practical Thoughts. 1. Circumstances often declare the duty of the hour, and voice a call to action. 2. The believer is the true hero, and the true world-conqueror. 3. Enemies should be measured in the light of our resources and defenses. 4. The Divine command is the pledge of success and therefore the secret of courage. 5. Possession by foot-claim and hand-title. 6. God always has his Joshua to succeed Moses. 7. As Joshua led Israel through Jordan to Canaan, so Christ leads his followers through death to Heaven. 8. We win promotion by fidelity in our present position. 9. We can do our best work only where God places us. 10. Every promise fulfilled makes more certain that all other promises will be fulfilled.

CROSSING THE JORDAN

And it came to pass, when the people removed from their tents, to pass over Jordan, and the priests

ark

unto

feet of the priests that bare the ark were dipped

(for Jordan overfloweth all his banks all the time of harvest,) That the waters which came down from above stood and of the plain, even the salt sea, failed, and were cut off: and the of the covenant of the Lord stood firm on dry ground and all the Israelites passed over on dry ground, until all the people were passed clean over Jordan.

JOSH. III: 14-17

THE SCRIPTURE PASSAGE IS JOSHUA 3:9-17.

Prayer: Lord Jesus, Thou hast made all rivers and seas, and canst control them at Thy word and will. Thou canst protect Thy people on them, and even make a safe path through them. Thou sayest to the turbulent waters, "Thus far shalt thou come, and here shall thy proud waves be stayed."

Grant unto us that faith which will enable us to trust Thee in all times of trial and storm. May we sanctify ourselves that we may be glorified in Thee and that Thou mayest be glorified in us. For Thy name's sake. Amen.

There's always a river to cross,
Always an effort to make
If there's anything good to win,
Any rich prize to take;
Yonder's the fruit we crave,
Yonder the charming scene;
But deep and wide, with a troubled tide,
Is the river that lies between.

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, April, B. C. 1451. Place, near the Jordan fords and opposite Jericho. The Israelites were encamped on a broad plain from five to seven miles wide. Persons, Joshua, priests, and about 2,000,000 people, of whom 600,000 were men 20 years old and upward.

Scripture Setting: God's Helpful Guidance. Guiding by a ladder, Gen. 28:10-22. Guiding by a pillar of fire and cloud, Ex. 14:19-25. Guiding by the ark, Josh. 3:9-17. Guiding by His eye, Psa. 32. Guiding by His Word, Psa. 119:9-18. Guiding by His Holy Spirit, Rom. 8:14-17.

Life and Conduct Setting: 1. God makes and controls all forces in the world of nature, and of man. 2. Crisis times of trial and peril come to all, for every life has its Jordan, as every soul has its Gethsemane. 3. The faith that trusts God and obeys His commands is triumphant over all obstacles and enemies. 4. Conversion is like this crossing of the Jordan—a radical breaking away from the old life and a joyful entering into the new. 5. Death may be likened to this river, and it is triumphantly crossed by the believer through the power of Christ. 6. There is an unseen bridge over the Jordan of death, and the saved walk upon it by faith, prayer and obedience.

CROSSING A RIVER WITHOUT BOAT OR BRIDGE.

"What Shall We Do Now!" This must have been the despairing cry of many an Israelite just at this time. Their journey had brought them to this rapidly flowing river, now three times its usual width by the freshets from the mountains. Just beyond the river they could see the walls of the hostile city of Jericho. Yet it must be that they go forward, for this is the land towards which they have been traveling for forty years. They might have remembered the wonderful guidance at the very start, when they were led through the Red Sea. They ought to have recalled the many, many times when God had delivered them from enemies and perils. Doubtless many of them did remember all the glorious past and so were confident that God would in some way lead them now. We know that Joshua and the obedient priests had such a faith, for there is not a murmur of objection by any one of them. We shall see how the Lord helped and saved in a most wonderful way. Surely

"God moves in a mysterious way
His wonders to perform;
He plants His footsteps in the sea
And rides upon the storm."

God has so made us that all we need to do is to be true to our best selves and to Him, then we need not be worried as to what we should do.

How an Obstacle Became a Help. The desert wandering had been a bitter experience to the Israelites, but it had also been a splendid schooling for them. It was a sort of grade school, and now Canaan is to be their college course. The desert had taught them humility and trust, and had given them hope to expect great things from God. It was a time for growth and enlargement in many ways. Now they had come to the field for action, where their powers were to be tested. Israel, as a nation, was now of age, and God intended that it should play a manly part. They had an early chance to enter Canaan, but they did not have sufficient faith and courage. Now God gives them another chance, and under the leadership of the bold and dashing Joshua the nation is inspired to heroic action.

All along in the nation's history, obstacles and enemies had become helps to them. Here is another illustration of that truth. The two things which they specially feared just now were this swift, angry river and the strong walled cities of the enemy. God uses the one to overcome the other: This most wonderful miracle of cleaving a way through such a river helped in many ways. It showed that Joshua was God's chosen leader, a true successor to the great Moses; it proved that God was with His people to help them; and it struck terror and fear to the hearts of their enemies in the walled cities.

The Dangerous Rock Becomes a Help. The writer remembers visiting a famous bridge over a swiftly flowing river. In the midst of this stream was a mass of rock, which had wrecked many a vessel.

It had been the terror of river men. When at length the bridge was constructed this mass of rock was used to support the columns that upheld the bridge. That which had been an obstacle was turned into a help by the genius of man. Thus, often, God overrules our trials and enemies to give us strength and victory in the end.

A Strange Guide. By looking up the Bible references in the "Scripture Setting" you will find many ways in which God guided His people. One of the most remarkable is the one used at this time. It was the ark of which you are familiar by its mention in previous stories. The pictures give it great prominence, as it is shown in all but one of them. In the desert wanderings the guide was a pillar of cloud and fire, but from this time on that ceases and the ark takes its place. It was more spiritual as a symbol and stood for the God of all the earth. Today we have the Bible and the Holy Spirit as guides. Usually the ark was carried in the center of the camp. Now it is put ahead of the camp, and over a half a mile in advance. This was to teach the people reverence for God, and also to allow all the people to see it. It was really a command to the people to watch the ark, and act accordingly.

The God Of All The Earth. This is the real significance of the ark, and its power over the Israelites. How much that symbol meant of Divine love, wisdom, care, glory, to the true Israelite!

It is said that the Athenian orator could inspire any crowd or unite almost any differences among Athenians by calling the name "Marathon!" which reminded them of Athens' glory in the great battle. So it was not the sacred box, called the ark, but Jehovah's name that could unite Israel in the great purposes for which the nation was chosen. It was the God back of the ark who was the nation's real guide in this time of peril and opportunity.

Faith Gives The Victory. If some were timid and fearful at first, at last they are encouraged. Everything moves like clock work, and the great multitude pass over on the drained river bed. At the Red Sea the rod of Moses was the signal for the waters to divide; but here, it is when the feet of the priests step into the waters. Suddenly, as by a mighty unseen hand the waters are held back so that they look like a wall. The command is given to go forward, and the priests stand holding the ark in the very midst of the river bed till all the people are passed over. Then the waters begin to flow again, and the people realize that they are actually standing on the very land that was promised to Abraham! As "over the Alps my Italy," so with them, "over the Jordan our Canaan." And there is no retreating now, but they must go on and on, conquering city after city, and possessing the whole land. Now we can believe that all are saying, "We can and we will win." Faith may not know how God will work, but it is very sure that He will guide, deliver and save.

Steam in the Life Engine. A convention speaker once told of a visit to a locomotive round-house. "What impressed me most," said he, "was the notice: 'No engineer allowed to take his engine out of this round-house with less than one hundred and twenty pounds of steam.' I would like to paraphrase that notice," added the speaker, "for the benefit of every Sunday-school teacher in the land: 'No teacher allowed to go to his class with less than one hundred and twenty pounds of faith.'"

Quiz and Study. 1. Contrast and compare the crossing of the Red Sea and of the river Jordan. 2. A famous man in New Testament times lived and labored near the fords of the Jordan. Who was he and what was he doing? 3. Who were not allowed to enter the promised land, and why? 4. What two notable exceptions to this judicial ruling? 5. What effect on the Israelites to know that they could not go back over the Jordan? 6. What four reasons, or any of them, why the Israelites should drive out the inhabitants of Canaan? 7. What scenes on river or sea do you recall in the life of Christ?

Practical Truths. Difficulties and trials have two great uses—to reveal God to us and to draw us to God. 2. The fact of God's presence with us is proof of His advance work for us. 3. What God has done for His people is a prophecy of what He will do. 4. As the Lord is God of the whole earth, therefore His people should seek to win the whole world to Him. 5. Jesus Christ, greater than Joshua or Moses, is to guide us to our promised Canaan. 6. There never would be any entrance into Canaan if there were no departure from Egypt. 7. We cannot please God, nor serve Him acceptably without personal purity and faith. 8. Heaven, like Canaan, is a place which some shall not enter, and which others shall not lose.

THE SCRIPTURE LESSON IS JOSH. 4:4-24.

Prayer: Lord Jesus, We thank Thee for holy times and places. We thank Thee for the memorials of Thy grace and power. Help us to be true to the call of all the monuments of grace. By the glorious deliverance and by the mountain-top experience, may we be taught, and may we also teach those who come after us. For Christ's sake. Amen.

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, B. C. 1451. Places, the Jordan fords, opposite Jericho, and Gilgal, near Jericho. Persons, Joshua, priests, and the twelve picked men.

Scripture Setting: Memorial Lessons. Good to give thanks, Ps. 92:1-15. Memorial of mercy, 2 Tim. 1:12-18. Unto children's children, 1 Sam. 15:1-6. For Jonathan's sake, 2 Sam. 9:1-13. A fragrant memorial, Phil. 4:10-22. The Gospel memorial, 2 Cor. 5:17-21. A memorial land, Deut. 6:10-13. A memorial ancestry, Heb. 11:32-40. Memorial institutions, Ex. 21:2-6. God's wonderful works, Ps. 40:1-11.

Life and Conduct Setting: The subject is suggestive of life memorials. These break into several kinds or groups. 1. Personal memorials, as one's birth, conversion, marriage—any great life experience. 2. Family memorials, as reunions, death of any member, etc. 3. Church memorials, as baptism, the Lord's Supper, Christmas, Easter, any crisis time in the history of the local church. 4. National memorials, as Thanksgiving Day, Fourth of July, Decoration Day. 5. Scripture memorials, as those of Noah, Abraham, Jacob, Moses. 6. World memorials, as the Crusades, the Magna Charta, war of independence, the Reformation, abolition of slavery, etc. It is a great privilege, and a greater duty, to study life, and the world's progress, by its great memorial occurrences and experiences. The Bible itself, the church and the Lord's day are great memorials of God's goodness and mercy.

A NATION'S MEMORIAL.

Twelve Picked Men. They look like men that can be depended on. Joshua knew what he wanted and he knew how to select men. These men were from the twelve tribes, one from each. But what were they to do? It was an important work, and some would think it a dangerous one. They were to go before the ark to the middle of the river and stay there by the ark until all the thousands of people had crossed over. There were the surging waters heaped up on either side, but they were to be the last ones to go over. Can you think of anything that made them feel safe and strong? Yes, Joshua had ordered them, and they had confidence in him. But still better than that, the ark was with them, and they knew that meant the presence and power of God. Some things that are hard to do, and which seem unreasonable or even impossible, are made possible and easy if God is with the worker. "All things are possible with God." The ark is not seen, for it was always kept covered when out of the holy of holies. But they knew it was there, and so they did not fear. What an honor it was to be selected for such a work! It must be that, like Joshua, these men had been faithful at other times and in other work. It pays always to be faithful, wherever one is, for then he is apt to be chosen to do important things. One should be faithful in the home, at school, at his work, in every place where God puts him.

How Picked Men Are Made. One of the Lawrences, of Boston, once said: "I would not give much for a boy who does not say 'we' before he is with us a fortnight." The boy who says "we" identifies himself with the concern. Its interests are his. He sticks up for its credit and reputation. He takes pleasure in his work and hopes to say "we" in earnest. The boy will reap what he sows if he keeps his grit and sticks to his job. You may take off your hat to him as one of the solid men of the town.

Each One Doing His Part. That is the lesson in the third picture. Each one has a stone on his shoulder. We see six of them, and the others are following. Did you ever hear the words, "Put your shoulder to the wheel"? That teaches the same truth. Each one is expected to do his part to make things go. All working together can do very much more than when each one does as he pleases. The Bible says somewhere "One can chase a thousand and two can put ten thousand to flight." The two working together in battle can do five times as much as when working separately. But what are these men going to do with the stones? Joshua told them to take stones from the very middle of the river and build an altar on the other side in Canaan. This was to be a memorial of the wonderful miracle God had wrought, in dividing the river Jordan.

It was necessary for each one to do his part, both in carrying the stones out and then in placing them together to stand as a memorial. Paul says that "all things work together for good," and it is also true that all persons in a given class or organization must work together to secure the greatest good.

Are You a Lifter or a Shirker? Two men were working together. One, who was a Christian, spoke frequently to his companion, who was not a Christian, concerning the claims of Christ and the church upon his life. But when there was any work to be done, the Christian man was not always willing to do his full share, and the non-Christian man noticed this tendency to shirk. It naturally displeased him. Turning abruptly to his companion, when they came to the next heavy task, he said: "You say that you are a Christian?" "I do," was the reply. "Then lift," he said. It was a cutting rebuke, but one that was deserved. The man who will not do his full share of lifting in the world's work, who will not do faithfully as unto the Lord the common tasks, is not a consistent Christian. Real Christianity makes a man a better workman, a better neighbor, a better citizen. It lifts up and sanctifies all life and makes the commonplace truly great.

A Young Class in History. Did you ever attend a memorial service in the cemetery on decoration day? Perhaps someone told you why the graves were strewn with flowers. And you may have learned something of some of the battles and generals in the great war to save our Union. You may have seen Bunker Hill monument or Washington's monument, or his tomb at Mt. Vernon. If so, you had questions to ask and some older person answered them for you. These children in the fourth picture are wondering about this queer pile of stones and asking questions. I think they are saying, "Where did these come from? How did they get here? What are they for? What do they mean?" Suppose we try to give names to these six young scholars. There's Paul Pry, pointing with both hands, and just behind him is Tommy Think, and next to him is George Findout. Then there is Jane Wonder, the little girl with big eyes. The last two are Mary Look-again and Ruth Asking. I am sure they will learn all about those stones before they get through with them, for they are in dead earnest. They really do not need a teacher, but if anyone comes along they will be sure to pepper him with questions.

The Sermon in Stone. That pile of stones is a text for a sermon. I think it would not be difficult to find some great event in the history of the Israelites for each one of the stones. All their national life was directed of God, but some things stand out more prominently than others. We cannot name all of them, but here are a few to show what we mean by great events: The going of Joseph into Egypt, by which the family of Jacob was saved in the time of famine and then was favored so that it grew into a nation. The going out of Egypt under Moses and the miracles by which Pharaoh was compelled to let them go. In that one period there was almost enough for all the twelve stones. The pillar and cloud as a guide was just like the hand of God reaching out from the heavens. The crossing of the Red Sea showed the wondrous power of God. The passover, the manna, the ten commandments written by the finger of God, would all be worthy to be singled out for special mention. While the stones would commemorate particularly the crossing of the Jordan yet all the other wonderful facts led up to that and are necessary to the complete sermon.

A Great Memorial: Lincoln's Gettysburg Speech. Four score and seven years ago our fathers brought forth on this continent a new nation, conceived in liberty, and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal. Now we are engaged in a great civil war, testing whether that nation, or any nation so conceived and so dedicated can long endure. We are met on a great battlefield of that war. We have come to dedicate a portion of that field as a final resting place for those who here gave their lives that that nation might live.

It is altogether fitting and proper that we should do this, but in a larger sense, we cannot dedicate—we cannot consecrate—we cannot hallow this ground. The brave men, living and dead, who struggled here, have consecrated it far above our poor power to add or detract. The world will little note nor long remember what we say here, but it can never forget what they did here. It is for us, the living, rather to be dedicated here to the unfinished work which they who fought here have thus far so nobly advanced. It is rather for us to be here dedicated to the great task remaining before us—that from these honored dead we take increased devotion to that cause for which they gave the last full measure of devotion—that we here highly resolve that these dead shall not have died in vain—that this nation, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom, and that government of the people, by the people, for the people, shall not perish from the earth.—A. Lincoln, November 19, 1863.

Quiz and Study. 1. What great memorial days do we have as a nation? 2. What special memorial days do you have in your family? 3. What famous monuments have you ever seen? 4. What memorial service did Christ establish for His church? 5. What twelve men in Christ's time are suggested by these twelve?

Challenge Text. We have heard with our ———, O God, our ——— have told us what ——— thou didst in their days. Psa. 44:(?)

Practical Thoughts. 1. "We can do it," for we belong to the God-led people. 2. The memorial idea appeals to the mind and imagination, and so is the gateway to knowledge. 3. Neglect, indifference, and forgetfulness shut us out from many blessings. 4. A memorial day or experience or object is a perpetual call to love and loyalty. 5. The great truths of the Bible are even greater because of the element of mystery in them. 6. Christ's resurrection, the Lord's Supper, Baptism, are constant witnesses to God's power, grace and redemption. 7. The Lord was present in power, but Joshua was very careful to obey all commands.

Prayer: Lord Jesus, We thank Thee for the faith that overcomes and gives the victory. May we ever live in such nearness to Thee that we may have this faith which is true and strong. ## THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, B. C. 1451. Places, Gilgal, and Jericho, on the west side of Jordan. Persons, Joshua, priests, armed soldiers, people.

Scripture Setting: A Study of Faith. Faith's Leader and Captain, Heb. 2. Faith's weapons, Eph. 6:10-20. Faith's achievements, Heb. 11:24-40. Faith's victory, 2 Chron. 20:14-25. Faith's way of doing, 1 John 5. Faith's power, 1 Cor. 1:18-31. Faith's boast, Ps. 44. Faith's song of praise, Isa. 25.

Life and Conduct Setting: The capture of Jericho gives us one of the very best pictures of winning victory through faith. It is a lesson we all need to learn, especially in this boastful and achieving age. Here we see: 1. Faith's one and only law—the law of obedience to the Divine command. 2. Faith's use of human agency and appliances, as if all depended on that. 3. Faith girding and toning herself for the conflict, by the passover observance. 4. Faith's patient continuance. The world may laugh or deride, but faith knows what will be the result and never tires. 5. Faith's vision and instinct, for she looks out from the hills of God. 6. Faith's courage and unity. All acted together because all believed alike. 7. Faith's complete victory. "Every man went up straight before him and they took the city." Each doing his part, with God working through all, will take the city, the nation, the world for Christ.

WONDERFUL CAPTURE OF A GREAT CITY.

A Strange Plan. Everything was very strange and wonderful in the taking of Jericho by Joshua. The plan was very different from anything that man would have thought of. After the Israelites had entered Canaan, they observed the Passover first, and worshipped God. They were encamped before Jericho, but they waited to learn how God would have them take it, for it was a city with high and strong walls. The very plan was given in a wonderful way. One day Joshua was thinking and planning, and suddenly a man with a drawn sword stood before him. Joshua asked him who he was, and he replied, "I am come as Captain of the army of the Lord." Then he told him just how to do in order to conquer the city. Joshua knew this must be the Son of God Himself, and he was greatly encouraged. He told the people the plan, and the next day very early they began to carry it out. The first pictures show how they were to start. The armed men went ahead; then followed the seven priests, each with a ram's horn for a trumpet. After them came the ark, borne by the priests, and last of all the people, without any arms of any kind. They were to march around the city once a day for six days, and on the seventh day they were to march around it seven times. This they did, day after day, coming home to their tents each night.

Power of "Again and Again." The great wall is not affected apparently by one, or a few, impacts of the battering ram, but it falls at last. "Why did you persist in following me and speaking to me so many times?" asked one who had recently accepted Christ. "Because all the preceding invitations were not enough." Many fail to capture Jericho because they encircle it only six times.

A Strange Warfare. What a singular army this was, so different from the usual kind! Their arms were strange, too, for they did nothing but blow on the rams' horns day after day. This is what God had told them to do, and they were careful to obey Him. That ram's horn was their gun, and the constant blowing of this strange trumpet-gun must have seemed very mysterious to the people of Jericho. At first they probably laughed at it, but as it continued day after day, they grew to wonder and question and fear. The armed men, with swords, bows, spears and shields would keep the people of Jericho from any public assault against Israel. God intended to teach his people that the victory was altogether by His power. He had said, "See, I have given into thine hand Jericho, and the king thereof." Whatever plan is used God still gives the victory, but they could see it to be so more easily in this strange warfare.

All Things Work Together. "Everything is against me!" is a very foolish saying. The Bible tells us that everything works together for good to the true Christian; so to keep asserting the contrary is a sign of both a weak faith and a weak character. The common lot is—the common lot, with its share of difficulty, its proportion of obstacles, its continual gifts of opportunity and chances of blessing, and all taken together they work out good.

A Strange Power. Soon the six days were over and on the seventh day a great change was to take place. Instead of only going around the city once, Joshua ordered his people to go around seven times, and at the seventh time, when the priests were blowing with their trumpets, above the noise they heard these words, "Shout, for the Lord hath given you the city." How the people shouted, and the priests blew a louder blast than ever with their trumpets and the walls before them shook and then fell crashing down, so that the people could go right in the city, for they were on every side, you remember, marching in procession. Did you ever watch a man open his big, iron safe? There is no keyhole for a key. He only turns the knob this way and that way, and possibly another way, and then "click," and it opens. He was very careful to do it all just right, and then he was able to get into the safe. This city of Jericho was a good deal like such a safe. All the turning and marching and trumpet blowing and shouting were parts of God's plan to break down these walls. God could have made the gates open if He had chosen; but He intended to destroy this wicked city, so He caused the walls to tumble down. As you look at the city, with its strong high wall and then see it in another picture, all broken and open, you are wondering what did it. No great machine was used, and the Israelites had not come up to the wall even, nor shot an arrow against it; and yet the wall is flat. This was clearly the work of God, as He had promised Joshua.

God's Great Power. What means God used for overthrowing the walls of Jericho no one can know. If an earthquake, the forces had been silently preparing for a long time. Others have suggested that "God knew the keynote of that wall; it was struck, and it fell." This does not seem probable, as no one ever yet has overthrown a city wall in this manner, and probably never will, but there are some very interesting illustrations of such a power. Not many evenings ago, says Harper's Young People, while a young lady was singing, the glass shade on a gas burner broke, frightening the singer nearly out of her wits, and, though the chandelier contained nine glass shades, the one immediately in front of where the lady stood was the only one broken. Her voice, which was loud and strong, had shattered the glass. This seems strange, but it is not less strange than true. But whatever the explanation, it was the finger of God.—Peloubet.

A Strange Command. Joshua was told to destroy the city utterly, man and child, and even the animals. Only Rahab and her family and friends were to be spared. This was because she had helped the spies and because she had asked them to protect her. They are true to their promise and she and all with her are saved. Can you think of any reason for this strange command? One reason was, because these people were very wicked and they deserved to be destroyed. God had been patient with them, but they had grown worse and worse. Then the land was to belong to the Israelites, entirely, for God had promised it to them. They were not even to share it with others. Again, these people worshipped idols, and God wanted to keep His people free from that great sin. The only way was to destroy every trace of the old life and old ways. So you can see that there were good reasons for this strange command. It was enough that God did it, for all He does is right, but He also wants all to know why His acts are right. Another part of this command was that the Israelites should not take and keep anything they found in the city, for God would punish them if they did. This, too, was to show that they were to be entirely separated from these wicked people. They were not to use anything that had ever been used by them. Still another part of the command was that all the silver, gold, brass and iron should be consecrated to God, and put in His treasury. Joshua was very particular about all these things, and cautioned them again and again. He pronounced a terrible curse on any one who should even try to rebuild that city. You may be sure that this wonderful triumph, at the very beginning of this warfare, was a great inspiration to the Israelites and a great terror to all their other enemies.

Duty Made Easy. No duty that comes to us is too hard. We can do what God means us to do. The foes that attack us today and that seek to make us swerve from the path are our own thoughts, our fears, our doubts. Let us silence those traitors within the citadel and do the work that lies at hand, building "over against our house."

Quiz and Study. 1. What happened to two blind men near Jericho in the time of Christ? 2. When did God make prison doors swing open to deliver an apostle? 3. What other times in the Bible is the number seven used? 4. What did the ark stand for, and why was it carried in the center?

Challenge Text. "By _____ the walls of _____ fell down after they were compassed about _____ days." Heb. 11:(9)

Practical Lessons. 1. God helps those who help themselves. 2. Divine gifts impose responsibility, demand sacrifices, involve struggle. 3. Faith argues from what God is and from what He promises. 4. The insight, foresight and far-sight of faith. 5. The faith force is that by which the Gospel wins its victories over the powers of earth and hell. 6. The necessity of each one being in place and in action, to secure the full victory. 7. With faith, the simplest means are effective; without faith the most complex and complete machinery is useless. 8. Conversion is the expulsion of sin from the soul; and this is by faith.

Prayer: Lord Jesus, Thou alone canst keep the heart pure and clean. Thou alone canst make it so. THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, B. C. 1451. Places, Plain of Jericho, near Bethel. Achan was stoned to death in the valley of Achor, between Gilgal and Bethel. Persons, Joshua, Achan, men of Ai, army of Israel.

Scripture Setting: A Study of Covetousness. Tempted through riches, Deut. 8:11-18. The great refusal, Mark 10:17-22. Warning against covetousness, Luke 12:15-21. Covetousness of Saul, 1 Sam. 15:1-9. Fate of the covetous, Luke 16:19-31. Covetousness of Gehazi, 2 Kings 5:20-27. Covetousness of Ahab, 1 Kings 21. Covetousness of Judas, Matt. 26:6-16. Covetousness of Ananias, Acts 5:1-11. Evil of covetousness, 1 Tim. 6:9-19.

Life and Conduct Setting: The sin of covetousness is one of the most subtle and deadly of all sins. Some of the leading characteristics of this sin are seen in the case of Achan: 1. It may be committed by the good and prosperous. Achan was of the tribe of Judah and was not in need. 2. It may be committed while in the very act of doing God's work. 3. It may bring harm and disgrace to very many others. 4. It is apt to lead to other sins. 5. It may be committed in a moment, and apparently without warning. 6. It may not serve any practical purpose, but only feed the base desire for the things of others. 7. It brings remorse of conscience and the judgment of God.

A SIN OF THE EYE AND HAND.

A Wedge of Gold. How it flashed, as the sunlight fell upon it! There was also the silver and that beautiful garment with gold threads in it. I think Achan was a bold soldier and had gone ahead of the others into this home of a rich man. Now he is tempted! "The real owners of these things are gone; probably killed. They are not doing anybody any good. Nobody will see me, I need them for myself and family." All this Achan could say to himself in a moment.

Before he has time to think of the warning of Joshua he takes things and hides them. He may have continued fighting, and even harder than before, but this does not take away the stain and guilt of sin. The two hundred shekels of silver would be equal to $100, the wedge of gold about $30, and the beautiful robe was of great value. We call this a sin of the eye and hand, for by them the sin is committed outwardly. But the sin was first committed in the heart. When he is discovered he confesses that he "coveted" these things. Sin begins in the heart and runs out in many ways by the eye, the ear, the hand, the foot. The best way is to stop it at the very start and ask God to forgive even the thought of it or desire. If Achan had not let his eye and hand sin, he could have asked God to forgive the "coveting" of the heart. This would have saved the nation from disgrace and himself and family from death.

What Kind of a Boy Are You? When I see a little boy slow to go to school, and glad of every excuse to neglect his books, I think it is a sign that he is a dunce.

When I see a boy or girl looking out for "No. 1," and disliking to share good things with others, I think it is a sign that the child will grow up a selfish person.

When I see a child obedient to his parents, I think it is a sign of great future blessing from Almighty God.

When I see a boy fond of the Bible, and knowing it well, I think it is a sign that he will be a good and happy man.

Nothing that is really worth having will come to you if you do not earn it.—Ex.

"Thou God Seest Me." Achan forgot the command of God, and he also forgot the eye of God. He was alone and yet not alone. Very soon it happens that man also knows of his sin for these first pictures show the very things which Achan stole and also show Achan after he is caught. If we could see his face it would show shame and grief. But how did he get caught? God has many ways of finding out sins and sinners; and sometimes he lets the sin tell on itself. He did so partly this time, and it came about in this way. Joshua had planned to take another city, and the spies he sent to find out about it told him that it was a small city and weak. Joshua did not ask God what to do, but sent a small army to take the city, which was named Ai. His army was defeated, and thirty-six soldiers killed. Then Joshua asked God why it was, and God told him that there was sin among the people. He also told him how to find out the guilty person. He rose up early in the morning and cast lots, as God had told him, and the very tribe and family and man were discovered.

God Reads the Heart. The modern dentist seats you in his chair. He hands you a little lump of something, and asks you to hold it with one finger against the inside of your jaw and shut your mouth. Then he turns upon you a series of electric sparks that rattle and snap like a bunch of firecrackers. In five seconds he says to you, "Please take out that film." So the "something" was a film, was it? He proceeds to his dark room, and in a few minutes returns with a picture of your whole dental skeleton! God will do even more than that. He will show you your innermost thoughts.—Ex.

Sin Hurts Many. Achan was alone when he sinned, and he thought he would keep his sin to himself and his own family. The things were hidden in his tent and perhaps all the family knew of it. We see already how that hidden sin had hurt the whole army and nation, and by it thirty-six soldiers had been killed. That large picture shows the further effects of his sin. His boys and girls are compelled to suffer because of the father's sin. Even the cattle and sheep are tainted because of it, and all are ordered to be destroyed. This was to teach the Israelites that God hated disobedience; and by that terrible warning he wanted to keep the others from such sins. One reason a sin hurts so many people is because it starts so many other sins. Just look at Achan's sin and you will see what a whole family of sins came from it. There was the sin of idolatry, for he loved these things better than God. He stole the things for they did not belong to him; and so he broke the eighth commandment. His sin led to the death of fellow soldiers, and so he broke the sixth commandment. His sin led to the defeat of the nation, and in this he harmed all the people.

God's Searchlight. Have you ever seen a searchlight? Thrown from the bow of a vessel, it lightens the landscape for yards in every direction, showing all the inlets and bays, crags and crevices. Shining from the front of a carriage, it illumines the road in every direction, revealing the hills and hollows, the smooth places and the rough. Such a light is the eye of God. It "runs to and fro in all the earth," and nothing is hidden from its penetrating gaze.—Ex.

"The Wages of Sin Is Death." This is what Paul said long after, and it is always true. Sometimes the punishment comes swift and terrible, as in this case. One thing has followed another, and in a few days Achan and his family are destroyed and his property also. By their law he himself was to be stoned to death; and afterwards all were burned with fire. The heap of stones over his ashes served as a warning to all Israel for a long time.

Sometimes the punishment is not so soon; but it always comes in some way and at some time. The very word "sin" means a "missing of the mark," and shows that it is a mistake. Satan tries to make people believe that sin is a good way to succeed quickly. It sometimes looks so, but it never is so. Then Paul's word teaches that sin brings the judgment of God against the soul. This is spiritual and eternal death. The only way to escape that is by believing in Jesus Christ and repenting of all sin. His blood cleanses from sin and saves from death.

God Punishes and Yet Forgives: Every thought, word or deed is a seed. We reap what we sow. "They that plow iniquity, and sow wickedness, reap the same" (Job 4:8). If we have judged others, judgment waits for us (Matt. 7:2). If we have "considered the poor" we shall be "delivered in time of trouble" (Psa. 41:1), and shall "inherit the kingdom" (Matt. 25:34). To sow righteousness is to reap mercy (Hos. 10:12). To sow the wind is to reap the whirlwind (Hos. 8:7). Law is inexorable. God's government never changes. We need to see God in government as well as in grace. God in grace forgave David for being "unequally yoked" with a heathen woman; God in government permitted the issue of that unrighteous marriage to rise up against his father and attempt to take his crown. God in grace forgave the stealing of the "one ewe lamb;" God in government took away the tiny babe the loving father held in his arms. God in grace forgave the secret sin; God in government inspired the record which has exposed it to the gaze of the world for three thousand years. God in grace forgave the murder of Uriah; God in government permitted the secret resentment of Ahithophel, the grandfather of Bath-sheba. God in grace forgave the weak father the fond indulgence of his boy; God in government punished with a horrible death the son who transgressed on account of his father's laxity. God in grace says, "Though your sins be as scarlet they shall be as white as snow" (Isa. 1:18); God in government says, "Be sure your sin will find you out" (Num. 32:23). God in grace says, "I will remember their sin no more" (Jer. 31:34); God in government says, "Whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap" (Gal. 6:7).—Practical Commentary.

Quiz and Study. 1. What man and wife in the New Testament fell dead because of covetousness and lying? 2. What heathen king said to Moses, "I have sinned"? 3. What one of Christ's disciples said "I have sinned" after he had betrayed Him? 4. What is true sorrow for sin, and how shown?

Challenge Text. For the love of ——— is the root of all ———. 1 Tim. 6: (9)

Practical Thoughts. 1. A community or nation is responsible for the sins it might prevent. 2. Judgment and punishment are intended to show man his weakness and prompt him to repent. 3. Prayer is sometimes the best action, and action is sometimes the best prayer. 4. Gold and worldly goods need to be consecrated in order to be safe. 5. One may confess his sin, but it may be too late to escape its penalty. 6. Those who share in the sin are partakers also in the guilt and punishment.

Prayer: Lord Jesus, We thank Thee for the bright faith Thou dost awaken in human souls. We thank Thee that they, too, become centers of faith and power, dynamos of spiritual energy. May we catch the spirit of all such, and so give hope and courage to others. For Christ's sake. Amen.

Don't say "I can't," but say "I will," if you would reach the goal;
Don't even say "I think I can"—"I hope"—for Fate will dole
Her favors out most grudgingly to one who weakness shows—
To him who can be veered about by every wind that blows.
Just set your teeth together hard and say, "I'll do or die!"
Then stand your ground and trust—aye! trust; but don't forget to try.

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, B. C. 1444. Place, Gilgal, Israel's first place of camping in Canaan. Persons, Caleb, Caleb's friends, Joshua.

Scripture Setting: Spiritual Conquest: Power with God, Isa. 62:1-12. Power of prayer, Gen. 32:24-32. Divine favor and blessing, Deut. 28:1-14. Spiritual equipment, Phil. 4:4-13. As a good soldier, 2 Tim. 2:1-15. Conquest of self, Rom. 7:7-25. Divinely guided, Psalms. 18:30-40. Present arms, Eph. 6:10-20. The old promise, Deut. 1:19-36. Faith in God, Psalms. 37:1-11.

Life and Conduct Setting: Here are some splendid laws of spiritual conquest: 1. Law of the Divine purpose—basal, comprehensive, inspiring. 2. Law of personal experience—keeping the vision fresh and strong for God's good time. 3. Law of fidelity to the right—winning by the courage of his higher convictions. 4. Law of Divine favor—showing that God's eye and hand are upon those who are faithful. 5. Law of conscious faith and power—leading him to say, "I can, I am, I will." It is true modesty to have faith in one's self because of faith in God. 6. Law of recognized claim and ability. This follows logically from the preceding laws. People say, "Yes, he can do it, and he deserves it." 7. Law of actual achievement. Faith is an achievement, but it leads to the literal possession by hand and foot and life. Even the struggle incident to possession is in victorious assurance.

HOW "I CAN" WINS HIS WAY.

Holding On. People are divided into two classes—the "I Cans" and the "I Can'ts." Caleb belonged to the "I Cans," and was among the first and best of the whole family. One of the strong winning qualities in a boy or man is the quality of holding on. When he see a good thing, or even dreams of it, he sticks to it till he gets it. When Caleb was a young man, he had a feeling or vision that he could drive out those giants, and capture Hebron. He tramped all over that country when he and Joshua and the ten other spies went to spy out the land. He and Joshua said even then, "We can take it"; "We can take it now." But the ten cowardly spies persuaded the people that they had better not try. How would you like that kind of a name, "Better-not-try"? or, "I Can't"? (It is better to write it "i can't," a little, cowardly i.)

Well, if you choose that name, or even act it, you will probably never be heard of again. Those ten cowardly spies are never mentioned by name again, but Caleb and Joshua are known and read about even to this day. Their faith and courage and obedience flash out like beautiful banners, saying to all others, "Come on; we can do it." For forty-five years Caleb held on to his early vision and purpose. Look at that picture of the wilderness and of Moses and remember that Caleb has held on through all these experiences.

Keeping Sweet. Did you ever hear of a "sour" person? It may be because he has been disappointed in some way, or has been wrongly treated by some one. Anyway, he is grumpy and grouchy, now and then snarling like some animal, and always looking gloomy and sour. You can look Caleb all over, and look through the whole forty-five years and you can't find a sour streak or a gloomy line in him. Whenever you meet him he is fresh and bright and cheerful. Even if one did not know him, he would be apt to look around after he had passed and say to himself, "I wonder who that man is?" Or, he might say, "That's the kind of a man I need to manage my business." Why, even when Caleb was talking about that old experience as a spy, he spoke of the ten spies as "my brethren," and he never criticised them bitterly. And yet they are the very ones who prevented him from winning at that time. I'll tell you what I think helped him to keep sweet. He kept ever before him that heart-vision of victory. His name means something like that, and he was true to his name. You know that a person will be outwardly in act a good deal as he is inwardly in vision. If he is little and mean in his heart, he will be sour and mean in life; if he is large and grand and noble in his heart, he will be good, true, and noble in his life. Caleb kept sweet, and this was one of his winning qualities.

How to Keep Happy. A. J. Gordon met an old man one day going to the place of prayer. "Aged friend," he said, "why should an old man be so merry and cheerful?" "All are not," said he. "Well, then, why should you be merry?" "Because I belong to the Lord." "Are none others happy at your time of life?" "No, not one, my friendly questioner," said he; and his form straightened into the stature of his younger days, and something of inspiration glowed upon his countenance. "Listen, please, to the truth, from one who knows; then wing it round the world, and no man of three-score and ten shall be found to gainsay it—the devil has no happy old men."—A. C. Morrow.

Faith in God and Self. Plenty of people have faith enough in self, and far too much. That makes a selfish, or self-proud person. Caleb had faith in himself, but it was after his faith in God, and because of it. He was an "I Can" man, because he knew that God can and will work for him and through him. You remember that when he said that they could go in and conquer the land it was because they "wholly followed the Lord," and on condition of such obedience. And now he is strong, and boasts in his strength, for he knows that God is with him as in earlier life. God does not grow old, or tired, or weak, and if he chooses to work through an old man he can do so. Caleb's faith was strong forty-five years before, but it was even stronger now. He had seen the power of God in wondrous ways and on many occasions. One will be strong just as his faith is strong. Caleb has kept his faith in God and in himself, so that he is able to bear burdens and master his enemies, as the pictures show. Such a faith is a splendid winning quality.

An All Heart Faith. Caleb means "all heart." Break a piece of red glass painted some four hundred years since, and it will be found as red in the middle as on the outside; the color is not only on it, but in it and through it. Whereas, now (A. D. 1660) all art can perform is only to fix the red on one side of the glass, and that ofttime so faint and fading that within a few years it falleth off, and looketh piebald to the eye. I suspect a more important mystery is much lost in our age; viz., the transmuting of piety clean through the heart, that a man become inside and outside alike. Heart perfect: oh, the finest of wares! All his days: oh, the largest of measures!—Fuller.

Watching For Another Opportunity. Caleb did not sit down and mope when the people refused to go in and possess the land. He said to himself, "I'll have another chance some time, and I'll win that Mount Hebron yet." So he waited and waited, and waited, and at last he made the opportunity himself. He just pushed in, and told Joshua what he would like, and what he could do. This was right, for it was what God had planned and promised. There are two kinds of acts it is well to avoid. One should not give up too easily, nor should he push in rudely where he does not belong. Caleb avoided both these extremes. He does not want an opportunity for an easy time, though he was really entitled to it. Rather, he asks for a chance to show what he can actually do. Now Canaan had been conquered largely by the skill and courage of Joshua. But there were a few strongholds yet in the hands of the enemy. Hebron was one of them, and one of the most difficult to take. Caleb says, "Hebron is what I want. Let me have a chance to win it." He knew there were giants there, for he had seen them when he went there as a spy. But to him the giants were just like a challenge to fight. He wanted to measure strength with them, just as David wanted to go out against Goliath. Hebron, dear old Hebron, was where Abraham had lived and where the patriarch fathers were buried. I think Caleb dreamed of Hebron, thought of it, longed for it, lived in it, and for it, and kept saying, "Some day I'll have Hebron." At last he boldly makes his opportunity and wins it. See his eye flash and his hand wave as he drives out those wicked giants!

Quiz and Study. 1. How many years since the Israelites entered Canaan? 2. What cities and kings had been captured? 3. What reasons can you give why God destroyed the Canaanites? 4. Give the names of the Canaanite tribes. 5. What had Caleb and Joshua done together as young men? 6. Who had lived at Hebron, and who was buried there? 7. Name a few modern men, strong and hopeful in old age. 8. Give modern instances of courage and faith. 9. What other Bible characters were like Caleb? 10. Who is our Joshua to give us our inheritance?

Challenge Text. "I can do ——— through Christ who ——— me." Phil. 4:(?)

Practical Lessons. 1. The good young man does not always die. 2. Caleb did not sow wild oats as a youth; so now he is vigorous, happy, respected and ambitious. 3. Faith and fidelity always bring large returns in God's time and way. 4. The "big four" of character and life are Conscience, Courtesy, Conviction, Courage. 5. The Christian accepts God and refuses the devil; the sinner accepts the devil and refuses God. 6. A delayed blessing is often an enlarged blessing. 7. Positive and unyielding in matters of conscience; gracious and considerate in matters of judgment, make the ideal and enarming character. 8. Believe as if all depended on God, and fight as if all depended on you.

THE CITIES OF REFUGE

The Lord also spake unto Joshua, saying, Speak to the children of Israel, saying, Appoint out for you of refuge, whereof

I spake unto you by the hand of Moses:
That the slayer
that any person unawares and unwittingly may thither: and they shall be your refuge from the avenger

of blood.
And

when he that doth flee unto one of those cities shall and shall declare his cause in the ears of the of that city, they shall

unto them, and give him a place, that he may dwell among them.

THE SCRIPTURE LESSON IS JOSH. 20:1-9.

Prayer: Lord Jesus, We thank Thee that Thou art a sure refuge for the penitent sinner. Thy shed blood atones for all. Thy pierced hand invite all the sin-stained of earth. Thy heart of pity and love cries "Come unto me." Thy power is great to welcome, bless and keep. By Thy Spirit speed us to Thy saving grace, and help us on life's way. For Christ's sake. Amen.

"Haste; for thy life escape; nor look behind. Ever in thrilling sounds like these. They check the wandering eye, severely kind, Nor let the sinner lose his soul at ease. Then onward yet a step, thou hard won soul, Though in the church, thou know thy place, The Refuge farther lies,—there seek thy goal, There breathe at large; o'erpast thy dangerous race."

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, 1445 B. C. Place, Shiloh, 17 miles northwest of Jerusalem. This was the religious capital of the nation. Persons, Joshua, elders, people.

Scripture Setting: A Refuge from Sin. A refuge needed, Rom. 5:1-21. A refuge sought, Psalms 142:1-7. A refuge in God, Psalms 91:1-16. Refuge through Christ, Heb. 9:12-28. Refuge conditional, Isa. 33:15-24. A refuge offered, Heb. 6:10-20. Invitation "Come," Matt. 11:25-30. Refuge sure and full, Rom. 8:1-18.

Life and Conduct Setting: The city of refuge is a beautiful and striking picture of Christ as a Savior. Here are some of the analogies: 1. The city of refuge was appointed and equipped of God; true of Christ. 2. The city of refuge was universally needed; true of Christ. 3. The city of refuge was a full protection to those who fled to it; true of Christ, and even more so. 4. The city of refuge also provided fellowship and support; true of Christ in larger degree. 5. The city of refuge was easily accessible; true of Christ, for He is immediately accessible. 6. The city of refuge was for all until the case could be looked into; Christ is a refuge for all, even the worst of sinners, and He is such forever if only they flee to him. 7. The city of refuge was for Jews and the accepted stranger; Christ receives all everywhere. "Whosoever will may come."

A PICTURE OF HOW JESUS SAVED.

Who Killed That Man? This is the question that is asked continually. People are killed in many ways, and it has always been so. That second picture is an illustration of what is happening all the time. We call them accidents. Any morning you open the daily paper you can read of some such accident. Every once in a while and oftener we read of scores and hundreds being killed. And it is right to ask who is to blame, and to try to correct the bad system, and punish the bad people. Life is of great value. Even animal life is more and more protected. All good people are glad for the work of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals. But still more valuable is human life. No one is allowed to take his own life. So it is right and just to ask, "Who killed that man?" It is right, too, to look up and hunt out and punish all who are guilty. But there is another kind of life, and another kind of guilt, and another kind of punishment. The soul life is of far greater value than the life of the body. It is a greater sin to sin against the soul life. It is even a commoner sin, and it kills the soul. God is asking, and asking sharply, "Who killed that soul?" Sin is killing souls, and many are killing their own souls. "All have sinned, and come short of the glory of God." There is none good, no, not one.

"Thou Art the Man!" Every one knows Victor Hugo's beautiful poem, La Conscience, the story of Cain fleeing away before the eye of God. He walks thirty days and thirty nights, until he reaches the shores of the ocean. "Let us stop here," says he. But as he sits down his face turns pale; he has seen "in the mournful skies the eye at the same place." His sons, full of awe, try to erect barriers between him and the eye: a tent, then a wall of iron, then a tower and a city; but all is in vain. "I see the eye still," cries the unhappy man. At last they dig a tomb; the father is put into it. But Though overhead they closed the awful vault, The Eye was in the tomb, and looked on Cain. • —Reuben Saillens.

Some One Else Must Die. If you had an expensive toy, or a beautiful pet animal, and someone destroyed it, you would feel that that person should be punished. That feeling exists in all people. It is what we call the sense of justice. It is stronger when the sin or wrong is greater. It is strongest of all against one who has killed another. What is that man running for, and so fast? It is because of this very principle of justice. The Jews had a rule that the man who killed another must be killed. The person who was the nearest relative to the one killed must avenge him. He was called the "avenger of blood," and it was his duty to kill the man who had killed his brother or relative. It was a disgrace for him to refuse to do it. This man running knows that the "avenger of blood" will be after him immediately. In the next picture you can see him with a dagger in his hand. He was carrying out this principle of justice. If someone is killed someone must die for it. Justice said that the man who did the killing is the one who should die. This was called a "balancing of the blood account." Now the same principle holds against one who takes the soul life. The "avenger of blood" is after him. His own conscience is an avenger; God's holy law is an avenger; God Himself is an avenger, for He can not look upon sin to excuse it at all. The soul has sinned, and someone must die. Scripture says, "The soul that sinneth it shall die."

Now He Is Safe. We left the man running. But where was he going? The Jews had six cities which they called cities of refuge. If a man who had killed another could flee to one of these cities, he would be safe. The first picture shows us one of those cities. It was a quiet religious city that belonged to the Levites. The best people lived there, and a man would be sure to get justice and good treatment. In the third picture the man has just entered the gate, and he knows that he is safe. The "avenger of blood," with his drawn dagger, dare not come near the city wall. There were broad, open roads leading to these cities, and they were located in different parts of the nation, and on high hills. A man could usually run to one of them in a half day or so. Then there were signs up along the way which said, "Refuge," "Refuge," so there would be no danger of one missing the way. These cities sent out young men to meet the man running to try to keep the "avenger of blood" from killing the man. What a beautiful picture all this is of Jesus Christ, the city of refuge to one who has sinned against his soul! Someone must satisfy the avenger of blood, and Jesus Christ says, "I'll die for the sinner." The very names of these cities picture out Christ as holy, burden-bearer, friend, stronghold, lofty, bright, exceeding joy. These are just what one would need if he were running for safety. But he must run, and quickly, to escape the "avenger blood." God saves the sinner, but He can save him only in and through Jesus Christ; for Christ's death alone can satisfy a holy law. Can you think of the many roads that lead to Christ? There are the church, the Sunday School, the Lord's day, the Bible, every Christian, every good friend, every helpful providence, and in them all God is sending out His Holy Spirit to help by showing the way and urging one on.

"This Is the Way." God has done all he can to aid and draw men to Jesus. Now, beloved, I think this is a picture of the road to Christ Jesus. It is no roundabout road of the law; it is no obeying this, that, and the other; it is a straight road: "Believe and live." It is a road so hard that no self-righteous man can ever tread it; but it is a road so easy that every sinner who knows himself to be a sinner might by it find his way to Christ and Heaven. And, lest they should be mistaken, God has sent me and my brethren in the ministry to be like hand posts in the way, to point poor sinners to Jesus; and we desire ever to have on our lips the cry, "Refuge, refuge, refuge." Sinner, that is the way; walk therein, and be thou saved.—Spurgeon.

Welcome Home at Last. Study those last three pictures. There is a trial going on in one of them. When the man reached the city he was safe at the time. But he must prove that he was innocent, and did not intend to kill anyone. If he could not prove that, he was turned over to the "avenger-of blood" after all. If he could show that he did not mean to kill, but that it was an accident, then he lived in the city of refuge until the death of the high priest. After that he could go home in safety. The last pictures show him coming to his home city, and to the family and friends who welcome him. How joyous they all seem, as well they may be! He is not only safe, but he is freed from the blame of killing his fellow man. Now we see how much better Christ is than the city of refuge. It is only a picture of Christ, but no picture can show fully Christ's work and help. The one who has sinned against the soul life is not only safe in the Christ refuge, but he is freed at once, and even though he sinned wilfully. Christ stands in his place, and Christ's perfect righteousness is His protection and defense. Nor does he need to wait until the death of the high priest, for Christ is the sinner's High Priest, and he has already died, and is now in Heaven praying for him. Then, too, our Christ-city of refuge is free for all the world. "Whosoever will may come." And He is right at hand, and one may "step over the line" and be in Christ in a moment. It is only "look and live." This is a beautiful picture of Christ, and it shows Him to be a wonderful, wonderful Saviour. He stands saying to all, "Come unto me—come, come, come."

Quiz and Study. 1. What instructions had Moses given about the cities of refuge? Ex. 21:12-15. 2. In what three ways were these cities a picture of Christ? 3. In what three ways was Christ superior to the picture type? 4. Give the names of the six cities, with meaning of each. See Teacher's Bible.

Challenge Text. "Look unto me and be ye —, all the ends of — —." Isa. 45:(?)

Practical Thoughts. 1. Every sinner, and even every sin, has an avenger. 2. Here is a parable of conversion: (1) It implies a sense of danger and sin; (2) it supposes a knowledge of Christ; (3) it necessitates a fleeing to Christ; (4) it hinges vitally on a heart acceptance of Christ. 3. "Christ is not an arbitrary, but a necessary, city of refuge from sin." 4. God's day, God's book, God's house, God's people, God's gracious favoring providences, are all helpful forces to guide the sinner to the Christ refuge.

JOSHUA RENEWING THE COVENANT

Now therefore put away, said he, the strange which are among you, and incline your heart unto the Lord God of Israel.

And the people said unto

The Lord our God will we serve, and his voice will we obey. So Joshua made a covenant with the that day, and set them a statute and an ance in

And

these words in the book of the law of God, and took a great and set it up

there

that was by the sanctuary of the Lord. And Joshua said unto all the people, Behold, this stone shall be a witness unto us; for it hath heard all the words of the Lord which he spake unto us: it shall be therefore a witness unto you, lest ye deny your God. So Joshua let the people depart, every man unto his inheritance.

THE SCRIPTURE LESSON IS JOSH. 24:14-29.

Prayer: Lord Jesus, We rejoice in Thy covenant of grace. When Thou couldst swear by no greater Thou didst swear by Thyself. Now we are invited into this covenant in and by Thyself. Help us to be willing to receive from Thee and work for Thee. May we also be able to persuade others to begin or renew this covenant relation to God through Christ. May Thy Holy Spirit give guidance and strength. For Christ's sake, Amen.

"As due by many titles, I resign Myself to Thee, O God! First I was made
By Thee and for Thee; and when I decayed,
Thy blood bought that, the which before was thine;
I am Thy son, made with Thyself to shine."

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, B. C. 1426. Place, Shechem, between Mts. Ebal and Gerizim. Persons, Joshua and the people.

Scripture Setting: Serving God. First things first, Matt. 6:19-34. Source of power, Ezek. 37:1-14. The right spirit, 1 Cor. 13. Some true laws, Phil. 3:1-17. Complete consecration, Rom. 12. Living for Christ, Phil. 1:8-21. The Holy Spirit helping, Rom. 8:15-27.

Life and Conduct Setting: In his farewell address Joshua urges many reasons why the Israelites should worship and serve God. 1. Because God commands it. This command is not only in the Bible, but in conscience and nature. 2. Because man must worship some god, and no other is equal to the God of Israel. 3. Because of the many great deliverances, providences and blessings. 4. Because of the holy character of God—commanding and deserving man's best. 5. Because fellowship with God and all righteous people inspires and fosters worship. 6. Because of the covenant of grace, assuming all needed help to man. 7. The successes of all the past inspire to service and even the failures of the past show the necessity of service and worship.

HELPING OTHERS DO RIGHT.

First, Do Right Yourself. The true general says to his soldiers, "Come on boys." He chooses to be and do what he seeks to persuade them to be and do. Joshua was that kind of a general. Hear him: "As for me and my house we will serve the Lord." That has the ring of the true general in it. Study that second picture and notice how good and brave Joshua looks. He is an old man now, but he has a young and courageous spirit. And he wants to be helpful to his own family and to the whole nation. He can do it best by being true and good himself. This is very important in all our soldier life for God. You would not think much of good advice if it is not first obeyed by him who gives it. The parent or Sunday School teacher who lives right can more easily influence others to be and do right. The boy or girl who has chosen God to worship can urge others to choose the same God. In such matters it is right for one to say "I," and to write "I," and it is not selfish or proud. The next time you see the pledge of your young people's society put "I" in at every place the society is mentioned. You are the one to live up to that pledge. Here's a good motto for each of us: "As for me, and my class, my friends, my school mates, we will love Jesus Christ and serve Him."

"I Must Keep My Pledge." A tiny boy was having such a good time with his blocks when his mother said, "Come, dear, it is time to put the blocks away and get ready for bed." "Oh, mamma," begged the child, "let me stay a little longer—just till the clock strikes again." It only wanted fifteen minutes of seven, so the mother said, "If you will stop cheerfully when the clock strikes I will let you play on." He promised. It seemed only a minute to the busy block builder when the clock on the mantel told the hour of seven. The dear child looked up in surprise, shut his lips tight, drew a long breath, and then said as cheerfully as he could, "I didn't think it would strike so soon, but I must keep my pledge."—A. C. Morrow.

Which God Shall It Be? Why, you ask, is it a choice between gods? It should not be, but it is. Look at that first picture and ask yourself if you want to worship something like that. Those are idols of the olden time, and the shapes and forms suited their ideas. If you were to picture out some of the modern idols, one would be a silver dollar, another would be a pleasure party, another a wine glass, another just a picture of one's self. Do you know that more people worship self than any other false god? But whatever or whoever has one's love before God, that thing, or person, or act, is his idol. He worships it rather than God. If one thinks more of a friend, or even of a father or mother, than he does of God, that, too, is just like idol worship. Not to choose the true God, is to choose some false God. Satan tries to show people that this is not so, but Satan is a deceiver and a liar, as the Bible tells us. Therefore, each one must decide for himself which god it shall be. One cannot choose God and other gods. God will not have any rival or partner god. He alone is the true God, and He alone must be worshiped. And the choice must be a deep and strong one, reaching to the whole heart.

A Good Test. Take a blank sheet of paper. Rule

it. Write God's name above one column and Satan's name above the other. Weigh deliberately, impartially, each service. Write honestly in one column the reasons why you should serve God and in the other all the reasons why you should serve Satan. Then deliberately determine to serve God. Write your name to it and stand by it. I knew of a young lady who did that and she was surprised at the result. She filled the God column full and did not find a single reason for the Satan column. Then she began to love and serve the Savior.

Come and Go With Us. Joshua was a good leader and so he was a good pleader. In that third picture he shows that. If we could see the faces of the people I am sure we should see that they were interested.

The very way they stand, and their lifted hands show that they are. The one man whose face we can see has hardly made up his mind, but he will do so pretty soon, for he will not want to be left alone. One reason God gets His people together and keeps them together is that they may more easily win others. The same reason holds for having a young people's society. If there are ten to twenty members in a society it is just like so many voices saying "Come." It is easy for a boy or girl to come and join a good live society and also join Christ by choosing to love and serve Him. By the way, if you belong to a young people's society try to make yourself count one by voice and life and influence. Be a Joshua kind of member. Don't let yourself get lost in a society.

And remember this, that the more you do for Christ and others, the more you are helping and blessing yourself. It is the great law of the new life. What often seems the greatest sacrifice, to carry out the covenant of grace, may result in greatest personal enjoyment and satisfaction. We may not understand how it is, but we know that God has ordered it so. That which seemed a cross is found to be a crown; that which seemed a yoke about the neck is a garland of beauty or a chain of pearls.

A Self-Help Covenant. When a weary, selfish heart comes to the Saviour, the Saviour meets his need by saying: "Take my yoke upon you." "But, Lord, he is tired and weary already; another yoke will crush him." No, no; he has just been carrying himself, and himself only, and that is the heaviest of all loads, heavier than any one man can bear. But strange it is, that if he adds another burden, his own burden will become light. That is the mystery of grace, that the burdens of a selfish man are lightened by adding more. "Take my yoke upon you." And what yoke is that, Lord? "The yoke of other people's needs—the burdens of the blind, and the deaf, and the lame, and the lepers—the burdens of other folks' sorrows; put them on to thy shoulders—take my yoke upon thee—increase thy burden, and thy burden shall become light, and instead of weariness thou shalt find rest."—J. H. Jowett, M. A.

Choose Christ Now. Joshua persuades the people to choose God, and they say, "We will, we will." This was not only because Joshua was a good man, but also because he gave good reasons. He gives at least ten good reasons why they should cast away the false gods and choose the true one. He looks back over the past twenty-five years and shows what God has done. No wonder they were quick to choose such a God! He wants the choice to get into their heart, mind, conscience and will, and so he speaks of it again and again. Then he wants to bind them to their choice. This is the reason he writes it in a book, and sets up a stone memorial. These stones would remind them of their vow. All this helps to make them thoughtful and choose right and stay firm in the right. We have all the reasons they had for a right choice and many which they did not have. As you think of Christ the Son of God, of His work and teachings, and how He died for us you will be reminded that we have even greater reasons why our choices should be right ones.

Christ Is All and in All. A king once said to a particular favorite, "Ask what thou wilt, and I will give it to thee." He thought to himself, if I ask to be made general I shall obtain it; and if for half the kingdom he will give it to me. But I will ask for something which will bring all these other things. So he said to the king, "Give me thy daughter to be my wife." This made him heir to all the king had. So by choosing Christ we become heirs to all the wealth and houses of the Father's Kingdom.—Sayles' Scriptural Anecdotes.

Quiz and Study. 1. Name six great miracles God had wrought for the Israelites. 2. What three stone memorials have been erected? 3. Mention three traits of character in Joshua. 4. What are some of the ten reasons for loving and serving God? 5. What other special reasons because of Christ and His work?

Challenge Text. Choose you ——— whom ye will ———, Josh. 24: (?)

Practical Lessons. 1. True worship is a matter of choice, not force; conscious and decisive choice is its sign, seal, life, power. 2. Blessings and curses, here and hereafter, are according to our choices. 3. Man is a worshipping being and to fail to choose the true God is to choose a false god. 4. Choose God today, for it may be your last day; you will never have a better time; it is God's now. 5. Remember that not to choose to do right is to choose not to do right. 6. Choice may seem a little thing, but our whole future may turn on it. 7. Abraham, David, Daniel, Paul are notable examples of choosing and serving God.

THE SCRIPTURE LESSON IS JUDGES 2:1-23.

Prayer: Lord Jesus, We confess our sin and weakness. We break from Thy covenant, and give ourselves to the power of Satan. Rescue us, we pray Thee, by Thy providence and grace. We rejoice that Thou dost follow us, even unto the land of the enemy. Free us again from the taskmaster of sin. For Christ's sake. Amen.

SIN.

Who lie with me, no rest may find;
Who eat with me, no nourishment.
They flee; I follow close behind,
Till soon their way to mine is bent.

Both Love and Hate are slaves to me,
Shame is my diadem, Death my rod;
And this my task, while worlds shall be—
To ruin man and frustrate God.

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, from 1426 to 1095 B. C. Places, Joshua died at Timnath-serah, and Shiloh was the religious capital. Persons, there were fifteen judges, beginning with Othniel and ending with Samuel. The one woman, Deborah, served with Barak.

Scripture Setting: Backsliding and Repentance. Presumptuous sins, Psa. 19:7-14. Proud and vain, Rom. 11:11-20. Defiant wickedness, Isa. 5:18-24. Moving towards Sodom, Gen. 13:1-13. Repent, repent, Ezek. 14:6-11. Return, return, Jer. 2:14-19. Confess, confess, Jer. 7:1-9. He will heal, Hos. 14:1-9. He will save, Matt. 14:22-33. He will welcome, Luke 15:11-24.

Life and Conduct Setting: The whole period of the judges suggests some of the difficulties and helps in a life of godliness. 1. Such a life has many and constant temptations from the true and the good. Evil companions, worldly surroundings and innate tendencies keep drawing from God. 2. Afflictions and judgments are a merciful provision to check, arrest and restore those who have wandered. 3. Special leaders are raised up from time to time, to help and deliver the godly. 4. The worship of snakes, stones and animals has its succession in the modern forms of idolatry, and both are equally foolish, futile and sinful. 5. The worst form of idolatry is that which claims the form of genuine worship, without its essence and power. 6. Persistence in sin demands and receives persistence of the Divine judgments.

SIN'S HARD TASKMASTERS.

Breaking a Solemn Promise. Did you ever make a promise, and then break it? You felt mean over it. Have you pledged to help in the Young People's Society, or in the church, and yet failed to live up to it? That follows you, and haunts you continually, and seems to say, "There's that boy, that girl, who broke the pledge." Did you ever hear a person say that such a one's note was protested at the bank? That means that he promised by note, in writing, to pay money, and then failed to have enough in the bank to meet the note. All these are bad enough, and no one wants to be guilty of any of them. But here is something worse. What is that first picture about? The people of God serving false gods! And yet they had promised solemnly to Joshua and to God that they would be true and loyal. Just think of it, they are in the "promised land," and yet breaking the promise! God was true to His promise, but they forgot and neglect theirs. Can you tell how this happened? It is partly because they were once slaves in a land of idolatry, and so the old spirit and teachings kept influencing them. It is less than seventy years since they were delivered from that Egyptian bondage. Then they had been careless about teaching their children. The new lot of boys and girls had come to be men and women. They are described as "another generation that knew not God." I expect they looked on the worship of their fathers as "old foggy" religion, and they decided they would be "up to date" and modern in their worship. And, worst of all, they had let the idol worshipers stay in the land when God had told them to destroy them. Idolatry is the worship of anything else except the true God; and it is a bad root which grows all kinds of sin. Well, they decided to change gods, and to follow the common worldly motto, "When in Rome do as Rome does." I think this is a better way to put it: "When in Rome, show Rome how to do that which is right."

To Stop Is To Drop. This is true of a pledge or promise, just as it is of a top or a bicycle. The top that spins stands erect. The bicycle that keeps going also keeps standing. Just so, to keep a resolution at work is to keep it alive and bright. To stand still in the doing of right, is to go backward. Keep going forward and you will keep growing stronger.

The God Who Never Failed. In this period of over 300 years, there were at least fifteen times when the nation broke their promise to God. But God never broke His even once. And during all the previous history God never failed. Think of the many, many wonders He did in fulfilment of His promises. Think of all which that second picture suggests. And even when the people went over to false gods, God would try to win them back. He was even better than His promise. He raised up these fifteen judges to deliver the people from their enemies. This story is a sort of bird's eye view of the whole period. God had said by an angel, "I will never break my covenant with you," and He never did. Do you know why? Because God made the covenant with His Son, Jesus Christ, on behalf of the people. "When He could swear by no greater He swore by Himself, saying, surely blessing I will bless thee," etc. This was His great covenant with and for Abraham. It is very wonderful, and this it is which makes absolutely certain the salvation of all who accept this covenant of grace. Jesus Christ performs our part of the covenant for us. Read about it in Hebrews, sixth chapter. Therefore it is said, "Nevertheless the Lord raised up judges," etc. That "nevertheless" is a gracious, golden word, and illustrates how God finds ways and times and leaders to help His people even when they are rebellious and sinful. Some of our stories will tell about the wonderful things these judges did. How ungrateful, foolish and wicked for these people to rebel against a God who had never, never failed in His promise to them. God never fails to keep His promise. Do you know any people nowadays who break their promises to Him? And is it not even more ungrateful and foolish and sinful? Even the sins and idolatry of the Israelites were made to be teachers to them. Their enemies were as "thorns" to drive them to the right way.

Gods that Lead to Sin. The true God is holy, and seeks to make man holy. The false gods are really no gods, and they make their worshipers even more sinful than they are. The people did not realize that fully, when they changed from the true God to the false gods. To look at those three pictures showing the false gods, one might think only of how foolish they are. If that were all, we might pass it with a laugh, and as a joke on those who worship them. Think of bowing down to a calf, or an image! But the great trouble is that one grows to be like the thing or person he worships. And as these false gods were wrong in fact, and represented that which was wrong and sinful, so their worshipers became sinful. Some people say it does not make any difference what you believe—that is, what you worship—just so you live right. True enough, but if one's belief is wrong, and his worship is wrong, his life will be wrong, and he can't help it. It is also true that if one does not have a right belief, and the right God, he will have a wrong belief and a false god. The very worship of these false gods included some of the worst sins. This helped to make every worshiper sinful.

The Devil as a Paymaster. Do you remember the old taskmaster, in the Egyptian bondage? Well, sin's taskmasters are even worse. Satan promises many pleasant things to those who serve him, but he never lives up to his promise. God never fails, but Satan always fails. "The way of the transgressor is hard." Those two last pictures give an idea of the troubles, disappointments and defeats which come to those who leave the true God and go after false gods. It is said that God's anger was hot against them. This was because He controls even the acts of wicked men. When God ceases to restrain the wicked, then they become as "thorns" and "snares." When His people forsake Him, God withdraws His protection. The very fact of worshipping false gods would be apt to separate and divide the tribes. The single true God, and the one place of worship, helped to unite the people and inspire them with sympathy for each other. We can hardly think of any misfortune so great as for the wicked to be turned loose to spoil and defile those who have cast off the true God. They are like so many dogs, or wild animals, springing on them to bite and devour. We must remember that while "God is love," He is also "a consuming fire" to those who are rebellious and wicked. It is terrible to think of the heart of God hot against one, and the mind of God, and His hand, His power, His providences, all against one. But this is the case when the devil is taskmaster and paymaster. "The wages of sin is death."

Quiz and Study. 1. How many judges were there in all? Who was the one woman judge? 2. Name some of the enemies who fought against the Israelites. 3. What judge pulled down a big heathen temple with his hands? 4. What judge used pitchers and lamps in battle, and won a victory? 5. Who was the last judge and the first prophet?

Challenge Text. "Take heed — lest there be in any of you an — of unbelief, in departing from the — —," Heb. 3: (1).

Practical Thoughts. 1. To cease to fight the enemy is the first step towards surrender to him. 2. The Christian should be in the world, and go into it, but not be of it. 3. Evil will not tempt him who is in the path of duty and in the performance of duty. 4. The very sins we commit are apt to furnish the punishments suitable. 5. All God's dealing with man is to bring him to penitence and salvation. 6. The journey from earth to Heaven is seldom in a straight line, but usually by zig-zag advances. 7. In the times of greatest decline God finds someone to be a nation's leader and helper. 8. God's gracious "nevertheless" comes to every man and nation again and again. (See pages 15 and 21.)

THE SCRIPTURE ACCOUNT IS JUDGES 4 AND 5.

Prayer: Keep us, our Father, loyal to Thee. Let not the world have dominion over us. If need be, send the discipline of trial and sorrow that we may be made to feel our dependence upon Thee. And with hurt send healing that the bones which Thou has broken may rejoice. In the name of Him who was ever loyal to Thee, Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

For Right is Right since God is God,
And Right the day must win.
To doubt would be disloyalty;
To falter would be sin.

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, Twelfth century probably 1344 B. C. Place, Northern Israel. The camp of Israel on Mount Tabor; the camp of Jabin on the bank of the Kishon. Persons, Deborah, a prophetess; Barak a soldier; Jabin, King of Canaan and Sisera his commander in chief. Joel a Kenite who slew Sisera.

Scriptural Setting: Israel oppressed, Judges 2:11-23. Delivered by Othniel, Judges 3:8-11; delivered by Ehud, Judges 3:12-30; delivered by Deborah and Barak, Judges 4 and 5; delivered by Gideon, Judges 6-8; delivered by Jephthah, Judges 11 and 12; delivered by Samson, Judges 13 to 16.

Life and Conduct Setting. 1. Disloyalty to God insures a heavy penalty. There is no peace, saith my God, to the wicked. 2. This is as true of the nation as of the individual. They are turned to destruction, all those who forget or forsake God. 3. But grace is ever offered to the contrite and repentant. His name was called Jesus because He was to save people from their sins. 4. God can still work deliverance for his people. Humanly speaking, Barak and Deborah had no chance against Jabin. But God made the heavens an ally of Israel and Jabin was defeated. 5. God helps men by means of men and women who will work with him for the redemption of the world. Barak and Deborah were not of much account in the eyes of the Canaanites, but they changed the history of the world.

WOMAN IN THE NATIONAL LIFE.

A Disloyal Nation. Israel was fickle in her allegiance to Jehovah. By turns she had bursts of loyalty and then long seasons of indifference and disregard. The insistent refrain of the book of Judges is, "And the children of Israel again did evil in the sight of the Lord." Well, that is not so unlike the rest of human nature.

Our Own Case. The American Church, like the Jewish Church, has its periods of indifference and disloyalty, followed by an outburst of revivals and of flaming enthusiasm.

Israel was tempted just as every nation has been tempted by the love of pleasure, of soft living, of self-indulgence. She yielded just as every other nation has yielded. "They forsook the Lord God of their fathers—they followed other gods—they served Baal and Ashtaroah (deities of the native tribes)—they ceased not from their own doings nor from their stubborn ways—they took the daughters (of the heathen) to be their wives and gave their own daughters to the sons (of the heathen) and served their gods." In short, they abandoned the peculiar straitness of living which was to be their unique contribution to the civilization of the world and conformed to the wickedness of the people they were to improve.

A Distressed Nation. God, however, was not easily discouraged. As often as Israel departed from Him he sent judgments upon them to bring them back. In the words of the historian, "He delivered them into the hands of spoilers, and he sold them into the hands of their enemies, and they were greatly distressed." Even the judgments of God are kind, just as they are true and righteous altogether. We should remember this.

The Common Experience. The prodigal son was brought back to the father's home and heart by the bitter experience of the "far country;" and many another who has wandered in the labyrinth of sin has found direction and deliverance by the sharp experiences of want, of trial, or of sorrow.

Israel was in a bad way. Her enemies were bitter and merciless; they were also numerous and strong. Israel had weakened herself until she was practically helpless. The different tribes were jealous of each other. Apparently they could not unite to resist a common enemy. They had no strong figure to whom they could look for leadership. And as for equipment, there was not a shield or a spear to be found among them.

A Delivered Nation. God sent judgment upon Israel, but He also sent help in view of their possible repentance. "When the children of Israel cried unto the Lord, the Lord raised up a deliverer." That is God's way. He calls to the sinner to return; He sends help to make the return possible and easier. That is the mission of Jesus. In the case of the oppression of Israel by the Canaanites, God made use of four widely different agencies: (1) Deborah, a fearless and devout woman, who had already made reputation for herself as a court of final resort in settling family and neighborhood disputes; (2) Barak, a soldier, brave and energetic, but without much faith in his people's patriotism; (3) Jael, a zealous and fierce partisan who put Israel's welfare above the rites of hospitality, and (4) the elements—wind and rain, lightning and thunder, confusion on the earth and terror in the sky. It was apparent to Canaan, as to Germany in the world war, that God was not always on the side of the heavy battalions.

The Battle. It was a religious war. This was the secret of Deborah's success in appeal. She said nothing about warriors or chariots or military discipline or strategy. She summoned Israel in the name of Jehovah—the Jehovah in whom Moses had triumphed, by whom Joshua had brought down the mighty, who had given victory to Othniel and Ehud. It was just the appeal to quicken glorious memories, and out of glorious memories to inspire courage, hope, daring, and unconquerable zeal. Barak, himself a soldier, saw that this was the place, not for the soldier, but for the prophet. It was good sense, not fear, that made him say to Deborah, "If thou wilt go with me then I will go, but if thou wilt not go with me then I will not go." The outcome justified his judgment. Israel was aroused, the fainthearted were made strong, the doubtful were made enthusiastic, the cry of "God with us" put a new spirit into the nation and the Canaanites were routed. "The Lord discomfited Sisera and all his chariots and all his host—there was not a man left."

The Hymn of Victory. A graphic account of the whole incident is given in the Song of Deborah (Judges 5), which displays not only "a highly developed poetic art but poetic inspiration of the highest kind." In vigorous strains blessing is invoked upon "The governors of Israel who gave themselves willingly," and judgment announced upon Meroz because "she came not up to the help of the Lord against the mighty."

Seeking Their Own. What a vivid picture is that of the Reubenites debating the part they should play in the struggle and finally deciding to stay by their sheepfolds and contentedly listen to the bleating of the flocks! And what can surpass the tragic intensity of the two passages with which the song closes—the murder of Sisera by Jael and the anxious waiting of Sisera's mother for her son's return!

Jael and Sisera. When the tide of battle turned against him, Sisera sought safety in the land of Jael, the Kenite, a partisan for Israel with a bitter hatred of the God-defying Canaanites. It is true she urged upon him the shelter of her home; it is true she took advantage of his necessity; it is true she drugged him before killing him; it is true her act was a betrayal of the most sacred and most treasured conventions of Oriental hospitality. What is to be thought of her and her conduct? Are we to judge her by the standards of our twentieth century Christian morality, or by those of her own time, twelve hundred long years before Christ came? Or is it, after all, to be a question of the terms we employ? Our own day makes the distinction between "treachery," the meanest of sins, and "strategy of war," justified and approved by the strictest of moralists. Let Jael have the benefit of the doubt and leave her to the judgment of God and of her contemporaries. Deborah and Israel thought well of her, and it is very certain that even the Canaanites would have regarded her as a resourceful and determined foe.

Value of Co-operation. The prime condition of social and national progress is co-operation. There is a familiar legend among the Persians of a bird Juftak which has only one wing. On the wingless side the male has a hook and the female a ring. Only when joined together can they fly at their best. We are members one of another. When Israel fought together she was victorious.

The Anxious Mother. For a beautiful interpretation of the passage in Deborah's song depicting Sisera's mother looking out at the window and crying through the lattice "Why is his chariot so long in coming?" see the poem by Helen Coale Crew in her "Aegean Echoes":

O mighty Baal! Route his enemies
And sweep them all into the Kishon's wave!
O set the sun and stars to guide his course
And send him safely home to Harosheth,
With song triumphant for his mother's ear.

Long at the lattice have I kept my watch.
My women, wearied by the vigil's length,
Are half asleep, their heads upon their knees.
Why is his chariot long in coming home?
Why tarries still my son so late, so late?

Quiz and Study. 1. How did Israel come to be in trouble? 2. Does disobedience to God always bring trouble? 3. Was Israel justified in subduing Canaan by force of arms? 4. Is there such a thing as gain from affliction? 5. Does it always mean that God is displeased when poverty, sickness and death are visited upon people? 6. What did Jael do and what is to be thought about her conduct?

Practical Thoughts. 1. God keeps watch over America as he did over Israel. 2. God does not "play favorites." When Israel sinned she suffered. 3. Suffering accompanies sin as the shadow follows the sun. 4. But God furnishes men to help not to harm them. 5. Some things excusable in Israel in the twelfth century B. C. are inexcusable in the United States in the twentieth century A. D. 6. Happy the man and the people who take God's correction cheerfully and become the better for it.

THE SCRIPTURE LESSON IS JUDGES 7:1-23.

Prayer: Lord Jesus, Thou art the conquering One, and Thou dost inspire Thy followers with a victorious faith. Enable us to see Thy signal and hear Thy call in any battle of life. By the cross and by Thy Holy Spirit may we enter into abiding victory. For Christ's sake, Amen.

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, B. C. 1222. Places, Gideon's home was at Ophrah, his army was gathered at the foot of Mt. Gilboa. Persons, Gideon and his three hundred soldiers.

Scripture Setting: The Christians' Fight. The faith principle, Heb. 11:17-45. The weapons, Eph. 6:10-20. Prayer and sword, Isa. 37:21-38. The Divine order, Psa. 37:23-40. Triumph through weakness, 1 Cor. 1:18-31. Certain victory, 1 John 5:1-21. Final reward, Rev. 3:11-22. Power from God, Zech. 4:1-10.

Life and Conduct Setting: From this acted parable we learn important conditions of spiritual warfare. 1. The Divine call and commission. Conversion is one's enlistment in the army of the

"When flits this cross from man to man,
Vich Alpine's summons to his clan,
Burst be the ear that fails to heed!
Palsied the foot that shuns to speed!"

Lord. 2. Divine guidance. As with Gideon, so with the believer there must be the Divine presence. 3. Learning from the enemy. So the believer learns much from the world, the flesh and the devil. 4. Assurance of victory. However great the enemies, Christ is greater and will prevail. 5. Personal interest and action. The picture is full of God, and also full of Gideon. The believer is under call to use his powers to the fullest extent. 6. Wise leadership and co-operation. Much depends on this in all spiritual battling. 7. Boldness and daring. These gave Gideon his name. So the name Christian implies every trait possessed by Christ. The believer is an outspoken and out-acting enemy of Satan and his forces.

A SMALL ARMY WINS A GREAT VICTORY.

A Queer Soldier Test. Did you ever visit an enlisting camp when they take in soldiers or sailors? One important thing is the testing process. The men are measured, weighed and examined to see if they will make good soldiers. Just so God was testing the army for Gideon. A great host has come against the Israelites "as grasshoppers for multitude." The Israelites prayed to God for help, and God answered their prayer by calling Gideon to be their general. Gideon gathered a large army of 32,000 soldiers. This he thought was small enough, for the Midianite army numbered 135,000. First, Gideon tested himself to be sure that he was fit to be the leader. You can read about the sacrifice test and the double test by the fleece in Judges, chapter six. It is an interesting story by itself.

The Lord also encouraged Gideon. He said to him, "Go down to the Midianite camp at night and take your servant with you." In the darkness Gideon came near the outside of the camp and heard one soldier telling another of a strange dream he had. He said, "I saw a cake of barley bread come tumbling into the camp of Midian and it overturned a tent." And the other soldier said, "This is nothing save the sword of Gideon. God has delivered Midian into his hand." Then Gideon was assured that the victory would be his. Then the Lord tested the army.

The first thing God said was, "You are too many. Let all go back home who wish to." Twenty-two thousand went; there were 10,000 left. God said these were still too many. So he told Gideon to bring them all down to the river to drink. Those who lapped up the water with the hand, as a dog would lap with his tongue, they should be put by themselves. There were just 300 that drank water that way, and God said that these 300 should be his army. The first pictures show all this—the dog lapping, the man on his knees, the men lapping with their hands, and the men on their knees, drinking with their hands.

"Speed You!" An eastern courier, hastening across the country, growing thirsty for water, will stop beside the stream and stand with one leg stiff and the other slightly bent and with head thrown back, dash the water quickly into his open mouth and hasten on. So the three hundred drank; all eager, earnest, prudent, watchful, self-forgetful. They could not lie down in self-indulgence. The body craved water, but the soul cared only for the battle. Thus was the body "kept under" (1 Cor. 9:27). So were the three hundred proven.—Exchange.

Taking God at His Word. Now we see what that queer test meant. It showed that men who drank that way, almost drinking as they ran, were men in dead earnest; men who had faith and consecration; men who would obey God and Gideon. Then in it all, God wanted to teach His people again that He could save them by a few soldiers against even the largest army of enemies.

In all work for God, in small things as well as great, the most important thing is the spirit of the worker. God wants man, more than He wants men. Of course He wants all to come if they will, but each must come with his whole heart and whole life. God never wants half-hearted people, nor half-time people. Gideon, standing there by the burning altar is a picture of the whole 300 men. They are all men who will take God at His word and do what God commands. The seventh and eighth pictures show the difficult task God gave them to do. The tents show the great army of the Midianites. That soldier is one of the guards that watched before the tents. The guards are all just fresh from sleep and ready to do their best work. But God is leading the Israelites, and the Midianites are surprised and terrified by the wonderful thing which now happens.

"Bring the Company to the Colors." During our civil war a brave ensign got in advance of the faltering line. The flag was in danger of being captured. The captain called out, "Bring the colors back to the company." Then a brave soldier dashed forward shouting, "Bring the company up to the colors." And soon that flag was surrounded by a hundred fearless hearts. "So we may lower God's standard and bring it down to the level of our unbelief. Or we may bring our faith up to the great and glorious standard of his mighty promises. Let us follow the example of the faithful Gideon and his three hundred and have the faith of God."

Trumpets, Pitchers and Lamps. What strange weapons for soldiers! God had instructed Gideon what to do, and Gideon had told his men about it. Their business was to obey and it was God who would make the enemy fear and flee. Gideon had divided the 300 men into companies of 100 each. He led one company and he told the others to watch him and do exactly as he did. If a single soldier failed now it would spoil the whole plan. It needed men who were obedient and quick. We see, too, how important now was faith in God and in Gideon. If they had not had strong faith they might have said that those weapons would amount to nothing against swords and spears and shields. But God was teaching them and He could win victories with strange weapons as well as by few men when His people were loyal, obedient and consecrated.

The three pictures next to the last show how these weapons did the work. The trumpets are sounding loud and shrill, and on all sides suddenly the pitchers are broken to bits. You can see the pieces falling to the ground there. Then the 300 bright lights that had been concealed in the pitchers flash out in the midnight darkness. The men had been separated, so that each trumpet and torch seems to the Midianites to represent a whole large company, or band. The sight of seemingly overwhelming numbers terrifies and frightens them into a panic, which results in utter defeat.

Faith and God Did It. No exploits are so illustrious as those which have been achieved by the heroes of faith. More wonderful, I dare say, is it that Gideon with three hundred unarmed men should discomfit a much more numerous host, than that Alexander, with a well-appointed army of expert soldiers, should overturn the Persian empire. —J. Barrow.

The Secret of Victory. It was truly wonderful the way Gideon conquered that great host. But the important lesson for us to learn is how we may conquer the enemies we meet. The Gideon name and achievement have been an inspiration to God's people in all ages. The organization known as "The Gideons" is an illustration of the influence of this inspiring chapter in Jewish history. We, too, may win in life's battles if we have a winning faith in the God of battles. From the time the angel called Gideon to be the deliverer of Israel he was careful to follow the orders God gave him. Again and again he might have been tempted to try some other way or wait until some other time, but he felt that his one work was to obey. He trusted God to give such results as might be pleasing to Him. The name and fame of Gideon are growing more and more illustrious, and scarcely any picture in the whole Bible is more stirring and thrilling than that of Gideon standing in the night before a great army waiting for the moment when he should blow his trumpet and shout.

Need of Careful Obedience. "In obedience to God's will, follow Him universally without dividing; uprightly without dissembling; cheerfully without disputing, and constantly without declining; this is following the Lord fully." Two gentlemen were walking together one dark night. One said to the other, who knew the way, "I shall follow you so as to be right." He soon fell into a ditch and reproached his friend that he had fallen. "You did not follow me exactly, for I kept free," was the answer. Then the man realized that it was a side step that had caused his fall.

Quiz and Study. 1. What kind of weapons did Joshua use to conquer Jericho? 2. What did Moses use to open the Red Sea with? 3. What ever instrument may be used, who is the real power? 4. How large was Gideon's army at first, and what two tests were used to reduce it? 5. Who is famous in secular history with an army of 300? 6. Why did God choose only three hundred?

Challenge Text. "Not by might, nor by ———, but by my ———, saith the Lord, Zech. 4: (1)."

Practical Thoughts. 1. Little things often test the character, life, courage, discipleship. 2. "A good cause, a good calling, a good conscience will make a good courage." 3. Faith turns prophecy into history and outmatches the armies of the world. 4. By fidelity in the lower station we are fitted and called to the larger work. 5. God graciously strengthens the faith of His people by special providences and by answers to prayer. 6. God's people are to be measured rather than counted. 7. One man by prayer and faith may inspire a whole church.

THE DEATH OF SAMSON

And Samson said unto the Suffer me that I may feel the pillars whereupon the house

standeth, that I may lean upon them.
Now the house was full of

and all the lords of the Philistines were there; and there were upon the about three thousand men and women, that beheld while Samson made sport. And Samson called unto the Lord, and said, O Lord God, remember me, I pray thee, and strengthen me, I pray thee, only this once,

O God, that I may be at once avenged
of the Philistines for my two eyes. And Samson

of the two middle pillars upon which the house stood, and on which it was borne up, of the one with his right hand, and of the other with his left. And Samson said, Let me die with the Philistines. And he with all his might;

and the

upon the lords, and upon all the people that were therein. So the dead which he slew at his death were more than they which he slew in his life.

THE SCRIPTURAL LESSON IS JUDGES 16:21-31.

Prayer: Lord Jesus, Keep us from pride of strength and of life. Make us to seek after Thy strength and do Thy will. May we not run into temptation or dally with the tempter. When we fall wilt Thou lift us up, and enable us to get the victory over self and Satan. For Christ's sake. Amen.

One vast effort, and 'tis done.
Prayer is answered, victory won;
Samson wears the martyr's crown,
Dagon's temple tumbles down;
Priests and people, lords and all,
Buried in that mighty fall.

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, B. C. 1224 or 1096. Places, Samson was born at Zorah, and died at Gaza. Persons, Samson, Philistines, lad, lords and people.

Scripture Setting: Life Contrasts. Secret of failure, Judges 16:4-20. Secret of strength, Psa. 68:17-35. Counsel of fools, Eccl. 7:1-12. Counsel of wisdom, Prov. 4:1-8. Avoiding temptation, Jas. 1:1-15. Overcoming temptation, 2 Pet. 1:1-8. A Christian at all times, Tit. 3:1-9. Warning against pride, Matt. 23:1-12. Overruling human action, Job 12:12-19. True strength, Eph. 6:1-10.

Life and Conduct Setting: Some very instructive life lessons come to us from a study of Samson. 1. His early successes and promise. Few had better equipment and opportunity. 2. His fatal weaknesses—distrust of God and trust in self. 3. His shame and humiliation—led away by a wicked woman into most foolish sin. 4. His coming to himself like the poor prodigal, whipped into conviction by chagrin, repentance and suffering. 5. His punishment for sin really from God, but instrumentally by the Philistines. 6. His opportunity to redeem himself—graciously given by God's Spirit prompting to prayer. 7. His glorious triumph in death—"snatching victory from defeat."

TRUSTING SELF OR TRUSTING GOD.

Selling One's Self to Do Evil. What a strong looking man that is in the first picture. He might have been as good as he was strong, for it is said of him, four times "the spirit of the Lord came upon him." But he sold himself to do evil. And do you know, I think it was partly because he knew he was so strong. He felt that he could do anything he pleased. He pleased to toy and dally with temptation, and at last he fell. Read the wonderful story of his birth, his many exploits and fatal mistake (Judges, Chap. 13 to 16). You have heard of Hercules, the strong man, but Samson was stronger, the strongest man that ever lived. The first three pictures show how he was punished for his foolish sin. They show three things which always follow a sinful life. You will remember them if we call them in order blinding, binding, grinding. Sin always blinds first, then binds as a slave, and then both grinds the sinner and makes him grind for his cruel master, Satan. How much better and easier and more blessed is the service for Christ, the rightful Master. Samson means "sun hero," and he started out as a real hero for God, fighting the Philistines, who had been the dreaded enemies of the Israelites for forty years. He was intended for great things all his life, but he played foolishly with temptation, and so was snared as in a net. The fourth picture shows how he is made weak. He was to be strong by taking a solemn vow called the Nazarite vow, to abstain from wine drinking, and from touching any dead body, and specially by never being shaven. God was his real strength, but these were to be signs that he obeyed God. He sold himself to a cunning and crafty woman, and she had his locks cut off. Then his enemies tortured him.

Watch and Run. In the ancient Grecian stadium stood three pillars, one at the starting point of the race, one midway, and one at the goal. On the first was carved the inscription: "Show thyself a man." On the middle pillar were cut the words: "Speed you." On the goal pillar were the words: "Stop here." The most important pillar was the midway pillar. The head runner very often became overconfident. A glance at the inscription on the middle pillar would show the racer or the contestant that the race did not depend upon fortune. Life's great race, the goal for which we are striving, is not to be reached through chance.—Exchange.

A Battle of the Gods. Isn't that a queer looking thing for a god? It is half man and half fish, and so it is called Dagon, which means "fish god." Now when the Philistines caught Samson they boasted that their god was mightier than Jehovah, the God of the Israelites. They made a great feast to their god, and brought Samson there to make sport with him. Samson had always been "jolly and joking," giving riddles for the people to guess; so now they will joke and jest with him. They treat him as they would an animal to do tricks for them. They remembered, too, how he had killed many of their people, as in the picture when he is slaying thousands with the jaw-bone of an ass. They want to take revenge now by torturing and mocking him. But don't you see it was really a test of gods, and a battle between their Dagon and the true God? Now we will see which is the mightier of the two gods.

Gold or God. A gentleman said to another with whom he was riding, as they passed a fine mansion surrounded by beautiful fields, "What is the value of this estate?" "I don't know what it is valued at," his friend replied, "but I know what it cost its late owner." "How much?" "His soul." Then he continued: "The owner was once a Christian man. But as business increased, he gave less attention to religion and more to business. The cares of the world gradually choked the word. He began to neglect the Bible. Secret prayer was given up. The family altar was forgotten, as they did not have time to pray, owing to the rush of work. The owner ceased going to prayer-meeting. As he grew older, he loved money more, became more miserly, and began to hoard up his savings. He bought this large estate, built this mansion, which he never finished, sickened, and died. Just before he died, he mournfully said: 'My prosperity has been my ruin.'"

Blind and Yet Seeing. There are two kinds of eyes, the natural eyes for seeing things outside, and the spiritual eyes for seeing things as God sees them. When Samson lost his natural eyes his spiritual eyes began to see clearly again. He had been letting those inward eyes get weak and blind. We may also say now that he sees because he is blind. That sounds queer, but you see what I mean. We may be sure that Samson was thinking, and thinking hard, while sin was blinding, binding and grinding him. It is a good thing when one wakes up enough to think away down deep in his soul. A sinful person loses himself and is thoughtless; and when he begins to think he finds himself, and we say he comes to himself. So Samson began to come to himself. He saw how foolish he had been, and now he repented. What was God doing? He was making his hair grow and he was giving Samson new strength. How good God is to give us another chance, and another, and so many new chances if only we are sorry for our mistakes and our sins. Even the hard punishments for sins are meant to be as God's whips to bring us back to Him, just as in the case of Samson here. As he stands there in the temple court where the main columns must be that support the great building, he keeps thinking, and at last a plan flashes into his mind. I think God flashed it, for He does that often. The plan was to pull over the two main pillars and so destroy the building and kill many people. He says to himself, "I feel as if I could do it. I can do it, if God will help." Then he prays to God, "O Lord God, remember me I pray thee, and strengthen me I pray thee, only this once, O God." Isn't that a pleading prayer, and with the true ring to it? When one prays like that you may expect something will happen. Surely now Samson's spiritual eyes are open and he sees God.

Time for One More Battle. History records that, at the battle of Marengo, the French troops were beaten and flying from the field, when Napoleon rode up to the head of the army, crying out, "There's time for one more battle." By the magic of his enthusiasm and courage he changed defeat into magnificent victory. So did Samson; and so may every follower of Christ, the Commander who has never lost a battle. Then, face about, and take your place where you belong. Whatever the failure or defeat you can yet win a victory.—J. H. Batten.

Praying and Pushing. Samson had been doing what he could to carry out his plan. After the Philistines had sported with him awhile he asked the boy who led him around to take him to the strong pillars of the house, as if he wanted to rest by leaning against them. You see the boy there, leading him, and in the next pictures are various scenes of what followed. There is a group of the lords and ladies rejoicing over the capture of Samson, their great enemy. There is a picture of a large roof where thousands were gathered. Then the three pictures of Samson and the two main columns. How strong he looks, as he bows with his great shoulders and pushes with all his might! God comes into him and the great building falls and thousands of Philistines are killed. This was according to the purpose of God that these wicked people should be destroyed. If they were left alone they would destroy God's people. After this great victory in answer to prayer, it was many years before the Philistines tried to rule over the Israelites again. Do you notice the two words "Prayer and Push?" They ought always to go together. To pray without pushing or to push without praying does not do much good. Samson prayed and pushed with all his might. All great and good enterprises have been successful by earnest prayer and sacrificing effort.

Quiz and Study. 1. Who sold his birthright and tell about it? 2. When did a lad help Christ feed a large crowd? 3. What parable is the story of a young man "who came to himself"? 4. What other kinds of false gods are there? 5. What other Bible women tempted others to do wrong? 6. Tell what you can of the Nazarite vow and life.

Challenge Text. "Be strong in the ——— and in the ——— of His might," Eph. 6: (?)

Practical Thoughts. 1. Samson was more blind when he saw than when he lost his eyes. 2. The lad was the unconscious actor in this tragedy of life. 3. The dying prayer of Christ and Samson contrasted. 4. Trouble is often a means and a motive to repentance. 5. The true believer may stumble and fall, but always rises again. 6. The greatest privilege of the believer (prayer) may be exercised in his greatest extremity and weakness. 7. Samson's fall was due to a heathen wife and wicked companions.

And Ruth said,

me not to leave thee, or to return from following after thee:

for whither thou goest,
I will go; and where thou lodgest,
I will

thy people shall be my

there will

the Lord do so to me, and more also, if ought but death part thee and me. When she saw that she was steadfastly minded then she left speaking unto her. So they two went until they came to Beth - lehem.

And it came to pass, when they were come to that all the city was moved about them, and they said, Is this Naomi?

THE SCRIPTURE LESSON IS RUTH 1:14-22.

Prayer: Lord Jesus, We thank Thee for Thy providences which meet us at life's crossroads. We thank Thee for the impulses Thou dost stir within us by Thy Holy Spirit. May we be ready to choose as Thou wouldst have us do. Lead thou us into the blissful future, by the gateways of right choices. For Christ's sake. Amen.

"I see not a step before me as I tread the days of the year,
But the past is still in God's keeping, the future His mercy shall clear;
And what looks dark in the distance may brighten as I draw near.
"So I go on not knowing. I would not if I might;
I would rather walk in the dark with God than go alone in the light;
I would rather walk with Him by faith than walk alone by sight."

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, B.C. 1222-1182. Places, Moab, east of the Dead Sea, and Bethlehem, in Judah. Persons, Naomi, Ruth, Orpah, people of Bethlehem.

Scripture Setting: Right Choices. The true wisdom, Prov. 3:1-18. Mary's choice, Luke 10:38-42. Necessity of choice, Matt. 6:19-34. Choose now, Heb. 3. Choosing for service, Josh. 24:1-16. Choice of the disciples, John 6:53-69. Difficulty of choice, Matt. 19:16-22. Why halt ye? 1 Kings 18:19-39. Moses' choice, Heb. 11:25.

Life and Conduct Setting: This picture of the three women is the thrilling heart of the book of Ruth. The great truth taught is the importance of choosing the people of God, or the importance of right choices in life. 1. Opportunity is given for right choices. Again and again this opportunity comes; now a last time. 2. Sacrifices are needed in order to right choices. A choice is a most choice thing, and one must pay the price for it. 3. Right motives must be back of right choices. Ruth was won by the beautiful character of Naomi, and she is led to choose her religion also. 4. Earnest purpose is necessary for right choices. Notice that Orpah chose also, but she did not have purpose to be true to it. 5. The masterful power of a right choice. Any choice is strong if it really roots in the will; but a right choice has the very power of God in it. 6. Blessed results in right choices. Ruth lost some things but gained some better things. This is true in every right choice. 7. The greater unexpected blessings. By marriage with Boaz, Ruth is put in the ancestral line of David and Christ.

POWER OF A LOVING CHOICE.

Mother Makes the Home. Mother, home, and Heaven are three queen words in human life. Of these "mother" is very important, for "home is where mother is," and the true mother leads to Heaven. In order to understand that first picture you should read the beautiful story in the book of Ruth. There are only 85 verses in the whole book, and it can be read in a few minutes. This and Esther are the two book-stories of the Bible,—wonderful stories of two splendid girls, Ruth and Esther. Ruth is one of the ancestors of king David, and also of David's greater King, the Lord Jesus Christ. Esther is the saviour of the nation that God chose as His peculiar people. Each book is rightly named for its heroine. Be sure to read both of these charming stories in the Bible.

As you read Ruth, you will find how true it is that mother makes the home. The mother's name is Naomi, which means "the lovable." That is a good start towards making a home, for love is the power that makes all good persons and things. Naomi was true to her name. When the father said we must go to Moab to make a living, Naomi goes. When the father dies, and her two sons die, the mother still makes the home for her daughters-in-law. During the ten years' stay in Moab, Naomi had been true to her God and to her religion. Her godly character and beautiful life were shining constantly through her love, and her daughters-in-law had come to love her. God has been watching over her all this time, and when she learns that there are good harvests again in the land of Judah she longs to get back to her Bethlehem home.

Right Choices for Life. A choice may sometimes seem to be a little thing; but the whole life may turn on it, as a door swings on the hinge, or as a boat is guided by a rudder. That was true of Ruth's choice. In that first picture we can see Orpah going away to her Moab home and friends. She loved Naomi, but she loved her heathen gods better. She kisses Naomi and leaves her. Naomi has been a true missionary of the true religion in that heathen land, but the best missionary cannot influence everyone to make right choices. Even Christ could not persuade all to believe in Him, and follow Him.

Ruth made great sacrifices in order to this right choice and she did not know then how much better it was for her to choose thus. She chose because she felt it was right, and that the God of Naomi was leading her. So she not only chooses Naomi, but she chooses her religion and her God. All her future is decided by that one choice and how much it meant to her, you will see a little farther on in the story. The four pictures all show how deep and strong and lasting her choice was. She decides everything and casts in her lot with Naomi. Her home, her people, her God, even her burial place are chosen by Ruth. You see how hard this was for Ruth, but she sees it to be right and so she does it. Then she is glad she has chosen.

Who Is your Friend? You have been wondering why Naomi said to Orpah and Ruth, "Go back my daughters, to your own mothers and home land, and may the Lord deal kindly with you." I think she wanted them to be sure, very sure, that they really chose to go with her, and especially she wanted them to choose between gods and between religions. When it came to that, you see Orpah could not do it. If Orpah had come without this real deep choice, she never would have been satisfied and Naomi never would have felt happy and free with her. A real friend must be a friend of one's Christ and a believer in one's religion.

Ruth is such a friend to Naomi, and so we see them going on the way together. How happy they seem each with an arm around the other! You can hardly tell which is mother and which is daughter, for love like that keeps people young and makes them look quite alike. If you will look up the "Challenge text" you will see how important it is for true friends to be agreed.

Now we are choosing friends all the time. God has given good mothers to many of us, and good homes, good Sunday schools, churches and young peoples' societies; yes, and many good people about us. This is to make it easy for us to choose good friends. Be sure you go arm in arm with those who are good, that is those who love God and follow him. Paul said to the Corinthian Christians, "Be ye followers of me, even as I am of Christ." A boy or girl is soon known by the company he or she is with. See to it that you choose right friends, for this will mean much to you in life.

Choose Only the Best. A famous artist said he would never allow himself to look at an inferior drawing or painting, to do anything that was low or demoralizing, lest familiarity with it should taint his own idea, and thus be communicated to his brush.

There is everything in holding a high ideal of your work. Hold the idea of excellence constantly in your mind, for whatever model the mind holds the life copies. What we think, that we become. Never allow yourself for an instant to harbor the thought of deficiency, inferiority.

Reach to the highest; cling to it. Take no chances with anything that is inferior, whether it be as to your work or your friends.

What Came of One Choice. Poor Orpah! we never hear of her again. The last we saw was her back as she went away to her false gods and her heathen friends. But Ruth! How beautiful her face and life and all her future! This is because she let God shine into her heart, and shine out through her life. That one choice of hers was the best thing she ever did. It was a hard thing, when she thought of sister, and mother, and friends and native land. But she knew that it was the right thing to do. And God so worked all things that he made it to bring great joy and happiness and friends and a new home and a chance to be of use in life. Just think of the life companionship with Naomi, and think, too, of what joy she brought to Naomi. True friends both give and receive blessings. Ruth could never have found such a friend in her Moab home. When they came to Bethlehem, God guided them so that they found a way at once to get a living, by Ruth gleaning in the fields. This led to Ruth's meeting Boaz, a relation of Naomi. Boaz was a godly man, and he was pleased to see how this heathen girl had chosen the true God. Soon he found that he loved her. Then he married her, according to the laws governing relatives. Naomi lived with them and was happier than ever. Boaz and Ruth had a son whom they named Obed. This Obed was the father of Jesse, who was the father of David, the shepherd boy, who became king. So Ruth, the Moabite girl, became the mother of kings and and one of the ancestors of Jesus Christ, the King of kings; and all because she made that one right choice! The last picture makes us think of all these things, for Bethlehem was where Jesus was born hundreds of years afterward.

Quiz and Study. 1. Why had Naomi gone to Moab, and what had happened to her there? 2. Why did she now wish to return to Canaan? 3. What two young men in the Old Testament chose each other as friends? 4. What two in the New Testament?

Challenge Text. "If the Lord be God ——— Him, but if Baal then ——— him." 1 Kings 18: 9

Practical Thoughts. 1. The same pleas influence some to accept Christ, and some to reject him. 2. Important that we choose right companions and a right home. 3. Naomi an unconscious foreign missionary. 4. The Christian life in its fellowships, providences, principles, destiny. 5. Decided choice of Christ is the gateway into the kingdom of life and Heaven. 6. Your fidelity and love will win another and another to Christ. 7. Providence works for Ruth, and Ruth works with Providence. 8. Homes and human relationships are God-given opportunities. 9. Fit into God's plan, and all the wheels of life will run smoothly.

RUTH AND NAOMI

BY P. H. CALDERON

There was an Israelite of Judea and Naomi his wife, living in the country of Moab; whither they had gone because of the famine in Judea. Naomi's husband died, and his sons married women of Moab; the one named Orpah, the other Ruth. In the course of time, the husbands of these two also died in Moab, leaving Naomi and the two daughters-in-law alone.

The famine in Judea being ended, Naomi, the Jewess, resolved to return to her own country. She had urged the two daughters-in-law to stay in Moab, their native land. So Orpah kissed her mother-in-law and returned to Moab. But Ruth clung to her Jewish relative, saying the words which have become to many races through many ages an expression of tenderness and love:

"Intreat me not to leave thee, or to return from following after thee; for whither thou goest, I will go * * * Thy people shall be my people, and thy God my God * * * where thou diest there will I die and there will I be buried."

The painter, Calderon, who lived in England, has painted this scene very beautifully, showing the mountainous country of Moab, with its nearly naked hills. In the immediate foreground stands tall Naomi, the Jewess, and young Ruth, embracing her older friend, and uttering her vows of attachment. Beside them is a massive rock to which clings the cactus, suggestive of the dry, hot land where they have been living. The artists who paint oriental subjects are fortunate in being able to arrange flowing draperies in a graceful way. Naomi wears a dark scarf about her head and her garment is heavy and solid looking, whereas Ruth's is of much lighter material with more ornamentation. The tenderness of the young woman's face, full of pleading, and the kindly expression of the Jewish woman are beautifully expressed.

A short distance away waits Orpah, the other daughter-in-law, her little package of personal property rolled up ready for departure. She has her veil drawn over her head, darkening her face, as if the artist would give the impression that she was in a somewhat sinister position and not an example of exaltation of feeling. The lonesomeness of the locality is in keeping with the lonesomeness of Orpah and contrasting with the exaltation of Ruth.

PHILIPPE HERMOGENE CALDERON. 1833-1898.

In the literary and ecclesiastical history of Spain, the name of Calderon is a prominent one. In turn, borne by witty men of letters, able and statesmanlike clergy, princes of the church or humble cures, alike able in their respective places, there was handed down with it, to a humble Spanish clergyman temporarily stationed at Poitiers, in France, a great tradition of achievement and romance from Spain.

When at last, a son came to the Rev. Juan Calderon and his wife, what more natural than the lad should take from his father, a love for all manner of old world histories, and rather more than a merely scholarly regard for the great themes of the Bible.

Determined that his son should have his chance, and perceiving that the boy held no special affection for letters or the church, the father brought Philippe Hermogene to London, and placed him in the art school of Mr. J. M. Leigh, in Newman Street.

In the late Georgian and the early Victorian era, the Leigh school under many names, has figured in more than one great novel of the Victorian period and from it have come some notable painters.

It is rarely that an artist deems the incidents of his life to be of such importance as to consent to make a first hand, direct record of them. The following self-revelation, from a letter written by Calderon to a friend, bears the keener interest therefore.

He writes:

"I was very fond of drawing from my earliest years, but I did not begin studying till 1850, when I was sent to Mr. Leigh's in Newman Street. After painting from life for some time, there, I went to Paris, and was admitted to the studio of M. Picot, where I studied for a year. Before that time I had scarcely ever 'drawn' from life, but always painted (often by gaslight). At Picot's, I was not allowed to use my brush at all, and was rigidly kept to drawing from a model from the head down to the toes. On my return to London I painted my first picture, 'By the Waters of Babylon We Sat Down and Wept,' which was exhibited at the Royal Academy in 1852. After this, I painted chiefly portraits for some time, and only began exhibiting regularly in 1857."

Mr. Calderon's greatest strength and most splendid conceptions have been mainly imaginative historical pieces. Among the most famous of these are "Her Most High, Noble, and Puissant Grace" (1866); "The British Embassy at Paris During the Massacre of Saint Bartholomew" (1863); "Joan of Arc" (1877); "The Renunciation of Saint Elizabeth of Hungary" (1891). "Ruth and Naomi," is one of his important biblical pictures.

It has been wittily said of Calderon's work that he thought like an Englishman and painted like a Frenchman.

THE SCRIPTURE LESSON IS 1 SAM. 1.

Prayer: Lord Jesus, We thank Thee for godly parents, and homes consecrated by prayer. We rejoice at all the holy influences and agencies which have gone out from the home and the Church. Let Thy peace and blessing ever abide upon the homes of our land. For Christ's sake. Amen.

"The bravest battle that ever was fought—

Shall I tell you where and when?

On the maps of the world you will find it not;

'Twas fought by the mothers of men."

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, about B. C. 1142. Place, Shiloh; Samuel was born at Ramah. Persons, Hannah, Eli, Samuel.

Scripture Setting: Prayer and Home Life. Faith and prayer, Matt. 28:18-22. Obedience and prayer, 1 John 3:13-24. Boldness in prayer, Heb. 4:1-16. Wholeheartedness, Jer. 29:1-13. Importunity, Luke 11:1-12. Without fainting, Luke 18:1-8. Beyond what we ask, Eph. 3:14-21. Not in our way, 2 Cor. 12:7-10. Prayer answered, Acts 4:23-31. The promise sent, Isa. 30:19-26.

Life and Conduct Setting: We have here a beautiful picture of a Christian home: 1. The whole family faithful at the services of God's house.

Their fidelity is suggested by the words "sacrifice," "vow," and "yearly." 2. The mother's dominant religious influence planning the future of her boy. 3. Training the young by persuasive authority so that a religious habit is formed. 4. Remembering the prayer and vow and answering the one and honoring the other. 5. The home shown to be the basis of the church, and of the state. 6. The mother projecting herself into all the future by her consecration of her boy. 7. The double Divine purpose in the establishment of the home, the glory of God and the good of the world.

POWER OF A PRAYING MOTHER.

A Child of Prayer. We all know that mother can do almost anything. This is because she loves, and lives for those she loves. When she loves God also and prays to Him she can accomplish far more. Love and prayer go together easily, and it was so in the case of this good woman. Her name was Hannah, and she was the wife of a Levite whose name was Elkanah. This man had two wives. His other wife had children and made sport of Hannah because she had no child. Hannah was sorely grieved, but she was as patient as she could be. She showed a good spirit, very different from that of the other wife, and told the Lord her troubles. One day she was moved to ask the Lord to give her a baby boy, and she promised to let him live in the temple, and serve there when he grew up. Children were considered a great honor and a gift from God. God heard Hannah's prayer and sent her a little boy. She called him Samuel, which means "asked of the Lord." God gave her several other children, but Samuel was the best, and was the best known of all. Our next story will tell about his early life in the tabernacle. All the pictures in this story are given just because of this one prayer of Hannah. The fifth one shows her praying.

A Thankful and Joyous Heart. What do those first two pictures mean? They tell us that Hannah was grateful because God answered her prayer. Sometimes people pray and do not watch to see if the prayer is answered. Others may see the answer, and forget to thank God for it. Hannah did not belong to either of these classes. Why, she was thankful even before the answer really came, for it is said that, after she prayed so earnestly, "she went her way, and did eat, and her countenance was no more sad." That was because she believed that God would answer her prayer in His own time and way. That kind of faith is true praise and thanksgiving. Every child of God may have it, too, for he can know beforehand that God will do the very best for him. He will either answer the prayer exactly or he will give something better. Hannah knew this, and so she was thankful, and these first pictures show the offerings of praise she brings to the tabernacle.

The second chapter of 1 Samuel gives the beautiful song of praise that Hannah sang about this time. The Holy Spirit must have whispered it to her, for it is full of great truths about salvation. That fifth picture might be as she looked when she sang this song. She seems so beautiful and joyous, and Eli the high priest sits and listens to her. The Holy Spirit can make the heart that loves God just like a harp to send out the music of praise. That second picture looks like a dead animal. Well, it is the skin of one, and is the way they made bottles in those days. The skin was cleaned and dried, and all the openings tied except one, which was the mouth of the bottle.

The "Morning-Glory" of the Home. The finest compliment we have ever heard told to a woman was by her husband, who said in speaking of her: "We always think of her as a morning-glory, because she looks so bright and cheery and pretty at the breakfast table." How many breakfast tables are presided over by women who make an effort to be dainty? And there are a great number who are at once untidy and even uncleanly to look at. The many devices of science in these days, make it more and more possible for the wife to be as the beautiful "morning-glory" even in the kitchen and dining room.—Exchange.

The Worship of God's House. We worship by going to the house of God, for the preaching service on Sunday or for the Sunday School, or for the prayer meeting. In those days they came to the tabernacle with their offerings. Here the priests are killing the bullock, getting it ready for a sacrifice. We have already learned that when the blood was shed it was usually a picture of Christ shedding His blood for sinful man. When the animal was burned, it pictured the willing consecration of the one who brought the sacrifice. Every part of service pointed to Christ, and was intended to teach that Christ would some time come to save and bless. Now that Christ has come, we bring our praise and prayer and worship directly to Him in His house. Sometimes we come confessing our sin, which is like the sacrifice for sins; and sometimes we bring praise and thanksgiving, which is like the other offerings without blood.

The place of worship was first an altar of earth or stones piled up. This was what Adam had, and Noah, and Abraham and others. Then the tabernacle was given by God to Moses, and that was used during the wilderness life. The ark in the tabernacle represented God Himself. After the Israelites came into the land of Canaan they had a holy house built where all men and boys could come once a year for sacrifices. Later the beautiful temple of Solomon was built. In the time of Christ there were also many places called synagogues, where the people came together for worship. Now we have meeting houses or churches for our services.

How She Did It. The mother of a large family, all of whom were eminent in church work, was asked to tell the secret of her influence over her children. "I have none," she said, "only that I never allowed my children to get away from religious influences. I do not scold or preach,—I simply expected them to be at Sunday-school and at church as I expected them to be at school on week days. I took it for granted that the child has a religious side, as he has a mind capable of development, and I kept him from the very start under the influences most likely to bring his soul to its best."

The Boy in the House of God. In the last picture we see Hannah bringing little Samuel to Eli the high priest. Hannah is pointing to Samuel and saying to Eli, "For this child I prayed, and therefore also I have lent him unto the Lord." That shows how very grateful Hannah was. She thanked God for Samuel, and then gave him back to God, just as she had promised. How old would you guess Samuel to be? We can not know exactly and so have to guess at it. Some say he was about three years old, the age when the mother ceased nursing the child. Others think the "weaning" refers to the time when the lad could go alone, and could safely be committed to the care of others. This would be at the age of seven years. Still others believe he was eleven or twelve years old when he was brought to stay with the high priest. Anyhow, he was only a young boy, and now by his pious, praying mother he is to be taught specially in all that has to do with God's house and worship. This was a great sacrifice for a loving mother to make; but Hannah did it because she loved God more than her child. It is something like the missionaries who go to foreign lands and leave their children in their own home land to be educated. People can do that only when they love God and desire to obey Him. God can and does take care of such children, just as He took care of Samuel here. Every year when the family came to the house of God to worship Hannah brought a linen coat for Samuel. This was called an ephod, and Samuel wore it when he was helping about in the temple.

Who Calls Ministers and Missionaries. Certainly it is God by His Spirit, but He uses fathers and mothers in Christian homes. The home is the place where the largest number of boys and young men decide to become ministers. Of 410 candidates in our churches one year, 287 decided to study for the ministry before they entered college, 85 while they were in college, and 35 after leaving college. Religion in the home is the surest and strongest influence to turn our boys and young men into the ministry. The probabilities of a young man's deciding to enter the ministry decrease as he leaves parental influences for college, and decrease still more as he leaves college for contact with the world. What a responsibility is thus laid on the home!—Christian Observer.

Quiz and Study. 1. What New Testament mother prayed for her sick daughter? 2. What widow's son was raised to life by Christ? 3. What did a fond mother ask Christ to give to her two boys?

Practical Thoughts. 1. Children are among God's best gifts. 2. The mother is the most potent force in training the child. 3. We should early influence the child for religion and the house of God. 4. Every child of a Christian home should be dedicated to God. 5. The child may be consecrated even in early youth. 6. The child imbibes religious truth by the very surroundings and atmosphere of the home. 7. Religious influence may be exerted before the child is born. Our Christian development ought to be of immense advantage to our children.

THE SCRIPTURE PASSAGE IS I SAM. 3:1-20.

Prayer: Lord Jesus, As a little child Thou didst come to our earth, and take on our human nature. May we ever have the child-like spirit, by which alone we can fully apprehend Thee, and enter into Thy Kingdom. May we all be children of the light and wilt Thou call us by name that we may become members of Thy household, here and hereafter. Teach us the value and opportunity of childhood, and stir us to earnest care and love for the child. By Thy Holy Spirit move upon the hearts of many young men and young women, calling them to be consecrated workers for Thee and for the world. For Thy name's sake. Amen.

“Wanted! Young feet to follow
Where Jesus leads the way,
Into the fields where harvest
Is rip'ning day by day;
Now while the breath of morning
Scents all the dewy air,
Now, in the fresh, sweet dawning,
O follow Jesus there!”

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, B. C. 1134. Place, Shiloh, the religious capital of Israel. Persons, Samuel, 12 years of age, and Eli, high priest and judge, now 78 years of age.

Scripture Setting: Boys of the Bible. Boy of promise—Isaac, Gen. 21:1-5. Boy of providence—Joseph, Gen. 39:1-6. Boy of prayer—Samuel, 1 Sam. 1:24-28. Boy of destiny—David, 1 Sam. 17:40-51. Boy of the captivity—Daniel, Dan. 1:8-20. The boy king—Josiah, 2 Kings 22:1-7. The boy preacher—Timothy, 2 Tim. 1:1-11. The boy deity—Jesus Christ, Luke 2:40-52.

Life and Conduct Setting: 1. The believer's vision of God will be according to his faith and obedience. 2. The Lord is constantly calling unto men by providences, judgments, blessings, by parents, churches, ministers, by His Word, His Holy Spirit, His work. 3. Those only can live the true life, who, like Samuel, respond to the Divine call and surrender all to the Lord. 4. Our dull human nature often fails to discern the Lord's call and presence. 5. God calls some to a mission of mercy and blessing, and others to a mission of judgment and wrath. 6. A single boy or girl may be the making or unmaking of a nation or of a generation. 7. Parent and teacher should remember that the child needs repeated calls to enable it to hear and understand. 8. Men still demand the Divine credentials in those who seek to be spiritual teachers and leaders. 9. As is the boy, so usually will be the man.

THE MAKING OF A TRUE MAN.

The Voice and Touch of God. At the first, God tenderly took Adam, the clay man He had formed, and breathed into him the breath of life. In some such sense He deals with every human soul as He starts it on the road to manhood. He, as it were, breathes Himself into every individual, at the very beginning of life. If we could realize it, we should see that God graciously surrounds each living soul with influences and agencies for good. The fancy that each soul has its good angel, is true so far as God's interest in us is concerned. But this interest is for a purpose, calling the soul to the performance of duty. This is true in the case of Samuel. He is to be the mouthpiece of God to reprove Eli for not punishing his wicked sons. By the way, these same sons of Eli had favorable conditions which apparently Samuel did not have, for they were in the line of the priesthood, and their father was himself the high priest. We shall see why they failed, but it was not because God had not surrounded them with good influences. Samuel, too, had pious parents, but he was in constant danger of being led astray by these bad boys of the high priest. But he was held and guided by the voice and touch of God.

The “Here-am-I” Spirit. Samuel had it, and the sons of Eli did not have it; and this made all the difference in their destiny. In order to the making of a true man, there must be the touch and voice of God, and there must be the readiness of soul to respond. As God comes to the soul, so the soul must come to God. It is not true that the sons of ministers usually go wrong, but just the opposite is the rule. When they are bad there is some other reason for it, as in this case the laxness of control by the father.

Samuel seems to have been a young people's society of one member. He was a good pupil and an earnest worker, as the record shows. One night when Eli was asleep, and Samuel lay in his own bed not far away, Samuel heard a voice calling him, “Samuel, Samuel.” He thought it was Eli, and he sprang out of bed and ran to his master. Eli said he had not called him and told him to go back to bed. Again he heard that voice calling, and yet a third time. Each time he was quick to respond, as a right kind of a boy should be. He did not murmur, nor sulk, nor argue, nor ask why, but was prompt and obedient. The third time he came to Eli; the priest told him it was God calling him, and that he should reply, “Speak, Lord, for Thy servant heareth.” So Samuel did, and the Lord told him how Eli's sons had done wickedly, and that He would punish both the sons and the father. In the morning Eli urged Samuel to tell him what the Lord had said, and Samuel told him all, for the Lord had not said that he should keep it secret. In all this Samuel was a true "here-am-I" boy, ready, alert, obedient, faithful.

How We Can Help God. George Macdonald tells the story of a little child, who one evening, gazing at the red, the green and the gold of the sunset sky, said he wished he were a painter, so he could help God paint the sky. God asks no help in the painting of His clouds and sunsets, but He does ask help in putting touches of beauty and grace into immortal lives—lives which shall shine when the brightest colors in the glowing west have faded away.—J. E. Hicks, D. D.

Strength In Weakness. Poor Eli! How he is made to suffer for his fatherly weakness. His failure to reprove and punish his sons was due to his kindly nature perhaps; but it brought sorrow to his life; and was the worst thing for the sons. In another story you will learn how they were all punished many years later. But let us remember the many good qualities of this great and good man. Let us not judge him by the speck in his character, but rather by the perspective of his whole life. The real test of a character is shown by its spirit when reproved. The bad character defends and excuses itself, and accuses others—seeking to throw the blame on someone else. The really good character will confess the sin, and submit to the punishment. Here Eli says, "It is the Lord; let Him do what seemeth Him good." Was that not a beautiful spirit to show, even when it was a mere boy who has reproved him. But he knew that the Lord had used the boy to bring the message.

Faithful in Many Things.—Eli had many good qualities. He was amiable and kind. "You cannot find one vulgar sin in the venerable high priest." "We find in Eli's treatment of Samuel not rivalry, but nobleness, magnanimity." "He was not self-obtrusive; he was no self-seeker." "Look at his interest in the ark of the Lord! Look at his submission to God!" Eli placed the honor of God and His Kingdom beyond his own most precious interests, as is shown by his supreme care for the ark in the day of his calamity (1 Sam. 4: 13, 18). "The Bible holds him up as a great man of God."—Joseph Parker.

"The Boy Is Father of the Man." You may have heard that remark, and it seems strange; but there is great truth in it. It means that the boy will grow and show the same qualities in his manhood that he had in his boyhood. Sometimes people say of a boy, "You will hear of him some day," which means about the same thing. Well, this was true of Samuel, and all the people said that Samuel "was established to be a prophet of the Lord." "Established" means that he was faithful enough to be worthy of being a prophet. "Samuel" means "asked of God," for his mother had prayed that she might have a son. He was true to his early training and to his mother's prayers. One remarkable thing about him is that he was the last of the fifteen judges, and the first of the prophets. It looks, too, as if he was the very best of the judges and one of the best of the prophets. It was largely because he was so good and true and faithful as a boy. He was ready for the task and duty which each day and each hour brought to him. When a boy does that, he is training himself for all the duties of life.

Culture of the Daily Task. Beyond all books, beyond all class-work at the school, beyond all special opportunities of what I call my "education," it is this drill and pressure of my daily task that is my great schoolmaster. My daily task, whatever it be, that is what mainly educates me. All other culture is mere luxury compared with what that gives. That gives the indispensables.

Yet, fool that I am, this pressure of my daily task is the very thing I so growl at as my "drudgery"!

Our prime elements are due to our drudgery,—I mean that literally; the fundamentals that underlie all fineness, and without which no other culture worth the winning is even possible.

These, for instance,—and what names are more familiar? Power of attention; power of industry; promptitude in beginning work; method and accuracy and despatch in doing work; perseverance; courage before difficulties; cheer under straining burdens; self-control and self-denial and temperance,—these are the prime qualities; these the fundamentals.—W. C. Gannett.

Quiz and Study. 1. Name as many of the judges as you can (see page 15). 2. How many in all, and who was the first and who the last? 3. What woman was a judge, and what did she do? 4. What seven good qualities in the boy Samuel? 5. What New Testament boy had a praying mother and grandmother?

Practical Truths. 1. God knows each person by name, and even the hairs of the head are numbered. 2. The careful training of a child is the best culture and training for a parent. 3. The parent and the home are the greatest factors in the making of good and true men. 4. Even a child may be of great service to God. 5. Of 120 clergymen, 100 ascribed their conversion to their mothers. 6. One may seem good in many ways, but really be bad at heart; another may make serious mistakes but really be good at heart. 7. Youth is the time to choose Christ, and childhood is the most fruitful field for Christian work, for the largest number of conversions occur between the ages of 11 and 16. 8. If we sin, we should submit to the reproof of God, even though it is voiced by the lips of a child. 9. The calls of God are almost countless—as by the conscience, by His providences, by His day and book and church and people, by His constant love and by His Holy Spirit.

THE SCRIPTURE LESSON IS 1 SAM. 4:1-18.

Prayer: Lord Jesus, Thou hast set the pattern for life. May we strive to follow the copy. May we be not merely good, but better; may we be not merely better, but best. Thy grace and love are given to make us grow better and better unto the perfection that is promised in Jesus Christ. As parents and teachers make us wise and true and strong. For Christ's sake. Amen.

—Van Dyke.

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, B. C. 1141. Place, Shiloh. The battle was fought not far away. Persons, Eli, the messenger; Hophni and Phineas, people of Israel, Philistines.

Scripture Setting: Parents and Children. God in the home, Eph. 6:1-9. Faithful to trusts, Luke 12:35-40. Helping by example, Phil. 3:14-19. By encouragement, Isa. 35:3-10. Helping by prayer, John 17:13-19. Making a Christian, Eph. 4:1-6. Helpful conversation, Phil. 1:22-30. Holy adornings, 1 Tim. 2:8-15. Vices to shun, Eph. 5:1-14. Graces to cultivate, Rom. 8:1-15.

Life and Conduct Setting: An awe-stricken company is this that is gathered at the city gate, around the lifeless body of Israel's judge and priest. What are some of the solemn teachings of the occasion: 1. God will certainly and severely punish for sin. The fact of faith, nor the holding of high position, will protect none. 2. Punishment is of two kinds—in wrath against the impenitent, in mercy against the penitent. 3. God may allow even His own cause and Kingdom to suffer on account of sin. 4. God will hold the parent responsible for the religious training of the children. 5. The immense and deplorable result from a single sinful act and a mere omission of duty. 6. The believer is never sin-proof, though there should be an increasing aversion to the sinful habit and tendency. 7. The punishment for sin does not imply that the sin is unforgiven. Eli's neck was broken, and his heart was broken, but his soul was saved. Any believer may be temporarily punished but no true believer can be finally lost.

HOW A FOOLISH FATHER WAS PUNISHED.

Two Bad Sons. "Whose boy was it?" This is the question that is often asked when some crime is committed by a boy or young man. Some people like to say that the boys of good parents and even of ministers are apt to turn out bad. It has been shown, again and again, that this is not true. The rule is that good parents have good children. God intended it to be so, and His plan does not fail in the main. If there are exceptions it must be that the parents were not so good as they should be. That was the case here. These two bad men were sons of a minister. The minister's name was Eli, and he was called a priest then; but his work was like that of a minister of today. It may surprise us that both of his sons were bad, but we find the reason in the poor and weak way in which Eli trained them. When he learned of their wickedness he did not punish, or even rebuke them. So at last, as we shall see, he himself was punished with them. Someone must suffer always when sin is committed. If we might prevent the sin, and do not, then we are partly to blame, and must share in the penalty. Eli had been warned by a prophet, and also by Samuel, so he had no excuse. You can read about it in 1 Sam., chapters 2 and 3.

Is This Your Home? We have in this country today something like nineteen million Protestant church members, and, counting five persons to every home, some four million Christian homes. It is estimated that only one Christian home in eight has a family altar, and most of us will agree from observation that that estimate is sufficiently high. Place these Christian homes in a row that do not have a family altar and we would pass through three million five hundred thousand homes before we would hear the sound of a father's voice at a family altar, and from these homes one hundred and fifty thousand young men, having reached twenty-one, go out annually, never having heard a parent's voice in prayer at a family altar. Is your home in that row?—Exchange.

A Disastrous Battle. The Israelites had many enemies in the land, as you know. One of the strongest nations was the Philistines. They had fought them many times. God had helped His people against them often. He always did unless their sin prevented. But when they sinned He could not do otherwise than punish them. Still He tried to make even the punishment keep them from sinning more and more. One battle had been fought, and the Israelites lost 4,000 men. They fought again, and this time their loss was 30,000 soldiers. That would make quite a big army itself. What do you think was the trouble? The first two pictures show the Israelites defeated and fleeing from their enemy. The third picture is of the ark, and they had that with them.

You remember how they were able at times to overcome in battle when they had the ark. Ah, that was just the one reason why they failed this time. They had taken the ark without asking God. It is always dangerous to begin a battle, or to begin any work, without first finding how God wants it done. Then the wickedness of Eli's sons is partly the reason of their weakness and failure. They were priests and their wickedness was all the more a national sin. Probably the taking the ark to battle was because these wicked priests suggested it, or at least allowed it. But the bad example of anyone may influence and weaken many others.

She Killed the Meeting. "There isn't any use in my going to meeting any more," said a young girl. So she stayed at home. Soon her mother and brother quit going. Her example made several other young people feel the same way about it; their influence in bringing others ceased; and the result was that the older workers who regularly went to prayer meeting found it harder and harder to keep a young element in the meeting, though they tried their best. With so many links loosening and falling away, the chain became weak. Every link counted. The girl did not think so; but she was wrong, as her own case proved by its results.—Selected.

An Anxious Watcher. That man running is hurrying to bring the news of the battle. The man sitting on the stone bench is Eli, and he is waiting for someone to bring the news. He has feared the worst all the time. He did not like it when the people rushed off with the ark. He knew that God had not commanded it. Then he knew of the wickedness of his sons, and this troubled him. Also, in his own conscience, he must have felt that he was responsible for much that was taking place. It is said that "his heart trembled," and surely there was enough to make him trouble at the center of his being. But when sin begins it always makes one weak at the center. It hurts conscience and heart and will, and these are the forces that are needed in every battle of life. Doesn't he look pitiful, as he sits there thinking and fearing? If he had been real sure that he had done all he could he need not have looked so worried and troubled.

For forty years Eli had been judge, and for a good many years now his wicked sons had continued as priests. The lax habits have weakened him and he cannot change now, for he is nearly one hundred years old.

Two Ways of Dying. "My work is done," said the Countess of Huntington, at eighty-four. "I have nothing to do but to go to my Father." It was remarked to one, "I fear you are near the other world." "Fear it, sir?" was the quick reply. "I know I am; but blessed be God, I do not fear it, I hope it." In sad contrast to these was the remark of a man of the world, when one observed that his hair was sprinkled with gray. "I wish you would not make that remark," he said, "it puts me in mind of growing old, a subject of which I cannot bear to think. I would rather be the most miserable pack-horse in this world than to be an angel in heaven."—Selected.

The Fatal News. The runner has reached the city now, and he finds Eli. He is telling him all that happened. That splendid army that you have seen in one picture is all broken and scattered. The ground is covered with the dead, as shown in another picture. Thirty thousand lay killed in heaps and singly just as they fell. I wonder if two of those dead bodies we see are the bodies of Hophni and Phinehas, for the runner has just told Eli that his two sons are dead. Eli is greatly grieved over that, we know. The runner tells him also that there was a great slaughter, and the army was destroyed. This, too, is very sorrowful news to Eli, but he is waiting to hear about something else. Can you think what it is? Yes, he is wondering what has happened to the ark of God, and he is waiting for news about that. Eli was a good man at heart, and was most anxious for the honor of God. All else is as nothing compared to that. The mistake he made was in not being more concerned for the glory of God earlier. So it is a very sad ending of a long life that is shown in the last picture. When the runner told him that the ark was taken, Eli fell from his seat backward and died at once. He felt that "the glory had departed from Israel." The news is indeed fatal both in the terrible tidings it brings and the dreadful result to Eli, the judge of the nation. Eli was a good father, but not good enough. Shiloh also suffered, for the ark, which the tribe of Ephraim held for 340 years, was set up in another place. We will hear about it later.

Quiz and Study. 1. What famous Bible king had a bad son and watched for news of him? 2. When was the ark—the means of victory in battle? 3. How do we send important messages today? 4. Give other cases of good parents having bad sons. 5. Give instances of bad parents having good sons.

Challenge Text. "His ——— made themselves ——— and he ——— them not." 1 Sam. 3:(?).

Practical Thoughts. 1. A child neglected is a sorrow started for the parent. 2. The boy who sows "wild oats" will reap the harvest of a wicked manhood. 3. A child has no greater heritage than godly parents. 4. One's goodness should be strong enough to influence others. 5. The parent's responsibility is specially important and constant. 6. Even the most solemn services of God's house are useless unless God Himself be in them. 7. When God withdraws his care and guidance even the best people run into sin and trouble.

And Samuel spake unto all the house of Israel, saying, If ye do return unto the Lord with all your hearts, then put away the strange and Ashtaroth from among you, and prepare your hearts unto the Lord, and serve him only: and he will deliver you out of the hand of the Philistines. Then the children of Israel did put away Baalim and and served the Lord only. And Samuel said, Gather all Israel to Mizpeh, and I will for you unto the Lord. And they gathered together to Mizpeh, and

and

before the Lord, and fasted on that day, and said there, We have sinned against the Lord. And Samuel judged the children of Israel in Mizpeh.

Prayer: We thank Thee for the great and good men Thou hast given to the world. They have been strong to do Thy will because they have been obedient and have had Thy Spirit in them. May we seek to follow them in our life and influence. May we, too, be obedient to the Divine will in Christ and be filled with the Holy Spirit. In Christ's name. Amen.

"Do thou but sow;
God sendeth sun and rain to bless the land;
The seed thou scatterest with patient hand
Shall spring and grow.
Do thou but sow;
In faithfulness our God His word will keep;
His promise is of old that thou shalt reap
If thou shalt sow."

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, B. C. 1114. Places, Samuel's home was at Ramah. The gathering of the people was at Mizpah, near Jerusalem. Persons, Samuel, all the people.

Scripture Setting: The Man and the Nation. Moses, Aaron, Samuel, Psa. 99:1-9. The just judge, Deut. 16:16-22. Asa as reformer, 2 Chron. 15:1-15. Jehosaphat's rule, 2 Chron. 19:4-11. Gather the people, Joel 2:12-32. Blessing of the upright, Prov. 11:1-12. The Lord's help, Isa. 44:1-8. The Lord's deliverance, Psa. 85:1-13. Power of prayer, Rom. 8:26-39. Prayer for rulers, Psa. 72:1-20.

Life and Conduct Setting: The real teaching of this passage is the benefits of right relations with God. Repentance is the keyword, and here is the fine cluster of blessings: 1. Repentance enables one to see and know himself. When one finds God, he finds himself. 2. Repentance challenges and quickens all one's powers; he thus gets himself at his best. 3. Repentance secures renewed Divine fellowship, which sin had broken up. 4. Repentance invites and obtains the Divine interposition. God waits, and waits, in order that He may help. 5. Repentance is followed by an infusion of new courage and all the martial graces. 6. Repentance inspires to hearty and sincere thanksgiving. Only the penitent can see God's hand in the blessings they receive. 7. Repentance is the condition, yes, the very gateway of all kinds of benefits—personal, social, domestic, national. True repentance is about equivalent to true religion; at least it is fundamental and vital in all religions.

HOW A GOOD MAN SAVED A NATION.

What Became of the Ark. The Philistines who captured the ark in battle were a wicked people, and worshiped false gods. One of their gods was Dagon, the fish god. They had a temple in which it was kept. One day, when they came in to worship, they found their god fallen down on its face. They set it up in place but the next morning it had fallen again. This time both its head and hands were cut off. Then they knew that it was because of the ark of God, which they had placed in Dagon's temple. Soon after this a great sickness came upon the people of Ashdod, where the ark was, and many died. The ark was taken to Gath, another Philistine city, and the people there were made sick. So for seven months the ark was kept by the Philistines, but all that time the Lord sent trouble upon them. Their wise men said they had better send the ark away.

They told them to make a new cart and put the ark on it and hitch two cows to the cart but shut up their calves at home. They said that if the cows should go away from their own calves to the land of Israel that would be a sign that the Lord made them go that way. They did this, and the cows took the ark straight into the land of

The Only Safety. Having presented the vivid contrast between good and evil, having set up the danger signals, the writer points us to the guide post that leads to safety, and from the remainder of the chapter we learn that the only security is in the diligent keeping of ears, eyes, heart, lips, feet and hands from evil. Companionship extends not only to persons. The ear should not keep company with coarse jest; impure pictures are imaged by the eye, until they become a man's lifelong companion. Unclean thoughts may be entertained by the heart until they gain permanent dwelling; the lips are soiled by association with lewd and profane words; the feet make acquaintance with the public dance hall and are lured to destruction, while the hands touch many an unclean thing until familiarity with the evil makes them close companions.

Israel, to a city called Beth-shemesh. The people were glad to get the ark back, and the Levites took it from the cart. Some men who wanted to see the ark came and looked into it, and many of them died for their sin. Then the ark was taken into the house of a man named Abinadab, where it stayed for many years.

The Greatest Foreign Missionary. The Bible is our ark today, and it brings salvation and blessing wherever it goes. In a single year one society sent out nearly seven millions of Bibles or parts of Bibles. More than 1,500,000 copies of the Scriptures went out to China, and of these nearly 99 per cent were sold, while 356,000 Bibles were circulated in Korea and 305,000 in Japan. In India, including Burma and Ceylon, the circulation rose to 780,000. Multiply this by ten and we get somewhat near the enormous output of the Word of God in the world. It blesses nations, homes, individuals wherever it goes.—Selected.

Strange Gods. In these first pictures we see some more of the strange gods of the Philistines. Their chief gods were Baal and Ashtoreth, but they had many others. By little and little the Israelites began to get used to seeing such gods. Then they began to think that they might be real gods. After some time a few Israelites chose to worship idols instead of the true God. That was very strange, when we know how they had been warned against it, and when they knew how much God had done for them. But more and more of the Israelites went over to idol worship. At last nearly the whole nation had become idolaters. Was God forgetting them? By no means; He is always true to His people. He tries to keep them from evil ways, and seeks to win them back when they sin. In this case He let the Philistines oppress them for many years. At last they could stand it no longer, and they cried to God for help. Then He helped them.

God Engrafting Goodness in Man. If you will walk with me into the garden, I will show you a Mountain Ash in full bloom; but on the top of it you will see a strange little cluster of pear blossoms. A twig from a Seckel pear tree was, two or three years since, engrafted there. Up to a certain point of a certain bough, the rising fluids came, under the law of the Mountain Ash, and there they found a gateway guarded by an angel that gave them a new commandment, "Thus far Mountain Ash, beyond Seckel pear," and if in October you will walk in the garden with me, I will show you among the scarlet berries bending heavily toward you, the clustered sweetness of the Seckel pear.

Just so God, by the death of Christ, engrafts his goodness in man, and He guards it and helps it to bear fruit.—Selected.

A Praying Judge. All these years Samuel had been trying to lead the people back to the worship of the true God. They would not listen to him until God had punished them severely. Now they are willing to leave the idols, and God sends Samuel to tell them what to do. He wants to be sure that they are sincere, and He wants to teach them also that all their trouble is because they had left the true God, and were worshiping gods who were false. He said to them, "If you will return unto the Lord with all your hearts, then put away the strange gods and Ashtoreth."

It was fortunate, or rather providential, that they had such a man to counsel them at this time. God was keeping Samuel for just this work; keeping him from getting discouraged, and fitting him more and more for the work. Samuel was like a Luther as a reformer, or like our Lincoln, who saved our nation.

Power of a Godly Life. A missionary in India was so feeble mentally that he could not learn the language. After some years he asked to be recalled, frankly saying that he had not sufficient intellect for the work. A dozen missionaries, however, petitioned his Board not to grant his request, saying that his goodness gave him a wider influence among the heathen than any other missionary at the station. A convert, when asked, "What is it to be a Christian?" replied, "It is to be like Mr. —," naming the good missionary. He was kept in India. He never preached a sermon; but when he died, hundreds of heathen, as well as many Christians, mourned him.—Jennie L. Noble.

The Best Standing Army. Those two last pictures do not look much like an army, but they mean a better power and a mightier power than any army. They showed the people in their worship of God, and in their public confessions and vows. The taking up of water and pouring it out on the ground was a very solemn act, and full of meaning. It meant that they would have nothing more to do with the idol gods, for their vows were "as water spilled on the ground, which should not be gathered up." It meant that they poured out their souls to God, as they poured out this water. It meant that they fully confessed their sins and entirely forsook them. It meant their entire dependence on God, and trust in Him. Now can you see anything like a standing army in all this? Well, we have the promise that if we honor God He will honor us. We know also that God rules among the nations. He can keep and protect those who trust Him. But in this chapter we are told how God destroyed their old enemy, the Philistines. It was while the Israelites were sacrificing at this very time. The Philistines thought they would steal up on them and gain a victory, but "the Lord thundered with a great thunder," and so scared the Philistines that they were easily driven away in a panic. It is said also that "the hand of the Lord was against the Philistines all the days of Samuel." Isn't that a pretty good standing army? The very best way for a nation, as for a person, is to serve God and do right, and then we may be sure God will do right, and give protection and blessing.

Quiz and Study. 1. What other memorials do you remember in Scripture? 2. Describe the ark and tell what it means. 3. What "strange gods" do people have in these days? 4. What other instances of intercessory prayer do you remember? 5. Who is the Great Intercessor, and where is He? 6. Mention four qualities in the character of Samuel. 7. What two great offices did Samuel hold?

Challenge Text. "Righteousness exalteth a —, but sin is a — to any people." Prov. 14: ( ).

Practical Thoughts. 1. God punishes His people, but does not forsake them. 2. God not only pardons those who confess sin, but mercifully helps them to confession. 3. Good rulers, judges and men are the bulwark of a nation. 4. The steps toward God are confession of sin: forsaking sin, prayer, obedience. 5. National prosperity is conditioned on the sincere reform of the people. 6. Real success of man or nation, is in character, justice, purity, usefulness. 7. Prayer as a power and a defense moving the hand that moves the world. 8. Cumulative influence of a godly life. 9. God works for His people, and through them. 10. Repentance and confession must go before reformation and prosperity.

Prayer: Lord Jesus, Teach us to be content with our lot in life. May we know that thus Thou canst do the best for us, and the most for us. Keep us from envy and jealousy and foster in us faith and trust. Above all, may we be kept from aping the world, and longing after worldly things and ways. May we rather set our affections on things above. For Christ's sake. Amen.

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, B. C. 1075. Place, Ramah, birthplace, residence and burial place of Samuel. Persons, Samuel, his two sons, and elders of Israel.

Scripture Setting: An Earthly King. Forsaking God, Jer. 2:4-19. Confidence in princes, Psa. 118:1-9. Weary of God, Isa. 43:20-28. My people rebel, Psa. 81:1-16. A king desired, Acts 13:16-24. Authority of rulers, Rom. 13:1-10. The divine King, Psa. 2:1-12. The king of kings, Rev. 4:1-11. Result of forsaking God, Jer. 18:1-17. Self-destruction, Hos. 13:9-15.

Life and Conduct Setting: Cover it up as they may, and perhaps persuade themselves to believe otherwise, the real essence of this popular unrest was a rejection of God. Some of the reasons, then as now, are given: 1. It was provoked by Samuel's weakness and ambition in appointing his sons as judges and retaining them when unfit. 2. It was suggested and fostered by the customs of the people about them. 3. It was made easy by the sinful and selfish tendencies of their own hearts. 4. It was gradual, beginning in a decline of the worship of God and passing on to grosser acts. 5. It was divinely allowed in order to expose their sinfulness to themselves, and impress it upon them. 6. It was mercifully accompanied with one and possibly more, who was true to God, and who faithfully warned the people of the results that would follow their rejection of God.

DOING AS THE WORLD DOES.

Bad Sons Again. Did anyone ever tell you what your name means? Names nearly always mean something good and right. Thus Beatrice means "to make happy"; Emily means "energetic"; Charles means "noble." Samuel had two sons with very good names. One was Joel, meaning "Jehovah is God"; the other was Abiah, meaning "Jehovah is my father." Boys who had such names ought to have been good, but they were not good men. I think they started right as boys, for Samuel remembered the mistakes Eli made, and he not only gave his boys good names but also gave them good training. We are not told that Samuel was to blame, as was true in the case of Eli. Anyhow, these boys grew to be bad men, for after Samuel appointed them assistant judges they proved to be wicked. When a case came before them they decided it for the one who had money to pay. That was bribery and it is the worst kind of sin, in a judge, and is wrong in anybody.

We hear of bribes nowadays and sometimes it is called "graft." No good person has any respect for one who commits a sin of that kind. Say, they do not look like bad young men, do they? Well, you can't always tell just by the looks and that picture may have been taken before the bad lives showed in the face. They are sure to show in time, though, for "be sure your sin will find you out." Now find out what your name means, and see to it that you live up to it. Yes, and you can even live beyond it, and put some good new traits in it. This will be a call to others who may be given your name. Your parents have given you a good name, but you, only, can give yourself a good character.

"They All Do It." Those are fine looking men in that first picture, and you would think they would do only what was right. But just think what they are asking Samuel! The third picture shows what it is. They want a king. They forget that they have the very best King even now—One who is the King of kings. They give two sham reasons why they want a king, and the real reason slips out while they are talking. One of the sham reasons is that Samuel is getting old. That was the poorest kind of a reason, especially when thinking of a judge. Samuel was about sixty years old, just able to do his best work as a judge.

The other sham reason was that Samuel's sons took bribes. It was right for them to complain of this but wrong for them to make it a reason for rejecting God. They should have asked God what to do or asked Samuel to ask God. God had intended to give them a king; but this was the wrong time and way. Now the real reason slipped out when they used the words "like all the nations." They wanted to do as others did, the wicked nations around them. One's real reason for doing anything is apt to slip out as he talks, and so people often know a person better than he knows himself. It is a good habit, for a young person especially, not to talk too much. This habit of doing because others do it is a dangerous habit.' Do right even if you have to stand alone.

The American Boys at Oxford. By the Cecil Rhodes scholarship fund, one American boy in each state can have a three-year course at Oxford if he can pass the tests. It is said that the first company that went over—at least some of them—decided they would not fall in with the custom of wine-drinking and tobacco smoking. They formed a group, or club, to oppose those customs. They did not believe in the silly maxim, "When in Rome do as Rome does." They preferred to be known as intelligent and independent and as taking the motto, "Wherever you are, do the right and be manly and true."

A Choice of Gods. When the people asked for a king they urged it chiefly so that they could have a leader in war, and to go out in battle. They forgot that God had done this very thing in a wonderful way. He had led them out from the strong hand of Pharaoh, He had taken Jericho for them, and they had never failed when they followed His directions.

They also forgot that in asking for a king they really rejected God as king. They may have thought that they could have a king and yet keep God, for they asked Samuel to name someone for king. This would be like some people who fancy they can worship God through idols, through nature, or in other ways.

But this is to break the second commandment, which forbids idols, and so also the asking for a king was really to put God in second place. So you see that it was really a choice between gods. The Bible says, "Choose you this day whom ye will serve," which shows that one cannot serve both. And Christ said in the great Sermon on the Mount, "Ye cannot serve God and mammon." When Samuel told God what the people wanted, God said that they were committing the same sin their fathers had committed again and again. And now He decided to cure them in the same way as He had once or twice before.

He Chose His God. In the Tate Gallery, London, hangs a magnificent painting by the late George Frederick Watts, R. A. So beautiful is it that it has been selected as one of the few to be photographed and placed in the rotunda as a masterpiece. It represents a young man, life size, elegantly attired in the flowing robes of the Orient, adorned with gold chain and embroidery, but having his face turned away, his head bowed low and an inexpressible look of sadness and sorrow characterizing the whole figure, even the long, delicate jeweled fingers hanging listlessly at his side. Below are the words, "For he had great possessions."

A Wicked Prayer Answered. Do you remember what God did when the people were tired of the manna, and prayed for flesh? Yes, God sent a flock of quails, and the people ate until they were sick; and besides that, the very answer to the prayer brought blindness and leanness of soul. So here, God tells Samuel to grant their request. Samuel was much worried when he went to ask God about it, and he was still troubled at this strange answer. But he did as God commanded, for Samuel had kept true to God in all his ways. Even while the ark was kept hidden for years, so there was no service in the tabernacle, yet Samuel built an altar at Ramah, and sacrificed there.

You can't keep a good man from worshipping God even if he is not near enough to go to some church. He will have a little service of his own. It was a good thing this was so, for Samuel now is the only one to counsel and help the people. God told him to warn the people by giving them full notice of what a king would do. Among other things he would make their sons drive his chariots and work in his fields and make their daughters his cooks and bakers.

He would take the best of their land for himself, and their cattle and sheep also; and at last they would cry out for the trouble and bondage that would come upon them. Did this change their minds at all? No, but they cried out the more, "We want a king! We will have a king!" "All right," said Samuel, "you shall have a king." The next story will tell us how a king was chosen.

Quiz and Study. 1. What other judge had bad sons, and why? 2. What famous king had a very bad boy, and why? 3. Had God planned a king for the Israelites? Deut. 17:14. 4. When before this did the Israelites want to do like other nations? 5. What kind of government did the people now have? What did they have at first? 6. Who really governed them all the time? 7. What is it safe to do when one is displeased or troubled? 1 Pet. 5:7. 8. How do people reject God now?

Challenge Text. "It is better to trust in the ——— than to put confidence in ———." Psa. 118: (9).

Practical Thoughts. 1. The best men, and the best counsel are often rejected. 2. A right thing may be asked for at a wrong time and in a wrong way. 3. The voice of the people is not always the voice of God. 4. The worst punishment may be an answer to one's prayers. 5. The dangerous power of worldly example. 6. A good father may have bad sons. 7. An excuse for a given course is not always a reason. 8. The only sure protection against a selfish and wilful prayer is the clause, "Thy will be done." 9. "They all do it" is a common excuse for conduct, but it is unworthy of a Christian, who has already promised to do as God does or as He orders. 10. One may plead custom, pleasure, convenience, necessity, hypocrisy in others, or what not; but the real reason for sin is one's own sinful heart.

SAUL CHOSEN KING

And when Samuel had caused all the tribes of Israel to come near, the tribe of Benjamin was taken. When he had caused the tribe of Benjamin to come near by their families, the family of Matri was taken, and Saul the son of Kish was taken: and when they sought him, he could not be found. Therefore they enquired of the Lord further, if the man should yet come thither. And the Lord answered, Behold, he hath

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, about 1075 B. C. Place, Mizpeh, where the people were assembled. Persons, Samuel, Saul, and the people.

Scripture Setting: God Ruling and Overruling. The Lord reigneth, Psa. 97:1-12. The throne of kings, Prov. 16:1-15. Gives human government, Rom. 13:1-7. A king in anger, Hos. 13:4-11. Granting man's request, Psa. 106:1-15. The King of glory, Psa. 24:1-10. The King of kings, Psa. 2. Gifts to the king, Matt. 2:1-11.

Life and Conduct Setting: The scripture lesson presents a striking instance of God's hand in human government. 1. This nation God has formed and led, up to this time. 2. In its rejection of Him, He is yet present in their counsels and plans for them. 3. He controls in the selection of a king and constitution. 4. When the best is declined and rejected He supplies the next best. 5. He secures the largest possible efficiency and prosperity in spite of national sins and mistakes. 6. He overrules the period of their indifference and wandering to discipline them in righteousness and for usefulness.

FROM THE FARM TO THE THRONE.

How God Guides Us. The way God brought a king to Samuel's notice is quite a story in itself. It also shows how God can make even a little or unusual thing be the connecting link in working out His purposes. You remember that the Israelites kept crying for a king until God told Samuel to grant their request. They acted like spoiled children that will have their own way. If they had proposed to do right with just as strong a will, how much better it would have been for them! There was a young man named Saul, son of a rich farmer by the name of Kish, of the tribe of Benjamin. His asses had strayed away, and Saul, with one of the servants, was sent to find them. When they were over near Ramah, where Samuel lived, the servant said to Saul, "There's a man of God living here, who can tell hidden things. Let's go and ask him about the asses." So they did, and Samuel saw them coming.

Now, the day before, God had told Samuel that such and such a man would come to see him, and that he was to be the new king. To make it sure, God whispered to Samuel again just now, "That's the man I told you about yesterday." So Samuel told Saul that the asses were found, and asked him into his home. Saul and the servant stayed all night, and in the morning Samuel delivered God's message to Saul and anointed him as king, by pouring oil on his head. Then Samuel called the people together to elect a king by lot. He knew, and Saul knew, who it would be, but Samuel wanted the people to see and know that God had really chosen Saul. The lot selected the tribe and the family and the man. And note this—he was a busy, faithful man.

God Calls Workers, Not Shirkers. God never goes to the lazy or the idle when He needs men for His service. When God wants a worker, He calls a worker.

Moses was busy with his flocks at Horeb. Saul was busy searching for his father's asses. David was busy caring for his father's sheep. Elisha was busy plowing with twelve yoke of oxen. Nehemiah was busy bearing the king's wine cup. Amos was busy following the flock. Peter and Andrew were busy casting a net into the sea. James and John were busy mending their nets. Matthew was busy collecting customs.—Christian Observer.

A Good Sign in Youth. When they began casting lots, Saul hid away, for he knew the lot would fall on him. There was a large pile of baggage belonging to the people who had come up to this assembly, and Saul hid in there, as you see by the first picture. He was a big man, and he could not quite cover himself up. When it was known that the lot pointed to Saul, they began to look for him. I suppose they wondered why he was not seen at once, for he always stood head and shoulders above everybody. Was Saul shirking and unwilling to be king? No; but he felt that he was unworthy, for he was only a farmer youth, and belonged to the very smallest tribe. It was a good thing he was from the tribe of Benjamin, for the two strong tribes would not be so apt to be jealous.

Saul's modesty and humility were good signs, also, for such people always do the best work. But it must be true modesty and humility, not the false kind, which refuses to do what God asks. Some people are really unworthy, and yet push themselves forward. That is wrong, we all know. Some people say they are unworthy, and refuse to do what God asks. That also is wrong. Some people feel that they are unworthy, but are willing to try to do what God asks. That is the kind of persons who do the best work.

Two Good Signs in a Boy. "Sir," said a lad, coming down to one of the wharves in Boston, and addressing a well-known merchant, "have you any berth on your ship? I want to earn something."

"What can you do?"

"I can try my best to do whatever I am put to," answered the boy.

"What have you done?"

"Chopped wood for nigh on two years."

"What have you not done?"

"Well, sir," answered the boy, after a moment's pause, "I have not whispered in school once for a whole year."

"That's enough," said the gentleman. "I hope to see you master of it some day. A boy who can master a woodpile and bridle his tongue must be made out of good stuff."—Selected.

How God Helps Those Who Try. At last some one spies Saul in the pile of baggage, and two men run to bring him. Even two men could scarcely have brought him unless he had been willing. But when he knows the people want him, because God has chosen him, then he comes. Now see how God helps him to undertake this great work. God gave him a fine, large body, and that meant a good deal more those days than law. See him stand among the others! He must be nearly seven feet high. He has a good face, too, and his very looks show him to be modest and humble.

But God did something better for him. He gave him "another heart." This does not mean a "new heart" in the sense of loving God, but a mind and purpose fitted to his new work. God changed him from a farmer to a man who was able to lead others and so keep the nation united and strong. While all the people insisted on having a king, yet God kept control of all things, and even appointed the king and made him able to do the work. God helped again by giving the new king a good counsellor in Samuel. He drew up a constitution for Saul, and helped him in every way. Then the people are rejoicing over the new king, as the last picture shows. This was because God influenced them to approve the decision by lot. Altogether it looks as if everything was coming Saul's way. It was a splendid start in life.

Will He Make Good? While nearly everything was favorable to Saul, a few people found fault. Almost always there are some who will grumble at the best plans and best men. These people said, in a sneering way, "Can such a man as this save us?" I suppose they meant this farmer from the little tribe of Benjamin. Do you know how Saul answered that? In two ways: In the first place, he was silent; "he held his peace." That is a fine answer on many occasions. The good thing about it is that it gives one a chance to think out what he really ought to say. And nearly always one finds that silence is the very best thing, and he is glad of it. Then when one is silent his enemy hardly knows what to think, or how to act further. So the silent man or boy has his enemy in his power in a measure.

But Saul answered that sneer in another way. He made good by actually saving the nation in time of battle. The Israelites were attacked by the Amorites, and Saul raised an army of 330,000 soldiers and gained a great victory over them. We do not hear of any more sneers against Saul. He has made good, and has come to his kingdom. In the larger and higher sense, did he make good? That will be seen in another story.

Built to Make Good. Jack had been sent on an errand, runs the story, and he came to a fence across the lane that he traveled. "I am put here to stop boys," said the fence, "you must turn back or go around." "But I am built to climb fences," responded Jack, and he went over the fence and on his way.

Are there difficulties in the way of your church work, of your Christian life? Certainly; but you were built to overcome them.

Quiz and Study. 1. Who was discovered by lot and stoned, and for what? 2. How did God help Moses to lead his people from Egypt? 3. How did God help Solomon to be a king? 4. What humble men have come to high positions in our land? 5. How did a prophet try to hide when God told him to preach against a wicked city? 6. What boy sent to find his brothers was sold by them, and how did God overrule it? 7. Tell what these persons were doing when God called them—Moses, David, Elisha, Nehemiah, Peter, James, John, and Matthew?

Challenge Text. "Give therefore, Thy servant an understanding _____ to _____ Thy people." I King 3:(?).

Practical Thoughts. 1. Good men may have bad children, but the rule is good children. 2. God may yield to our low or wrong request, because we are not fitted for anything better. 3. A man is measured not by his size or family, or outward conditions, but by his inward spirit. 4. God is preparing workers for His work in all departments of life. 5. The power of a good man's influence and prayer. (v. 22.) 6. God is the God of nations as well as of individuals. 7. The best rulers are found by prayer and search. 8. Man may cast God off, but God does not cast man off, unless he persists against Him till death.

THE SCRIPTURE LESSON IS 1 SAM. 12:1-25.

Prayer: Lord Jesus, We are often amazed and rejoiced at what Thou canst do by one man—a Moses, a Samuel, a David, a Paul. Help us to see that it is Thy power and grace and Spirit working in the heart and life. May we each be able to say with Paul, "I can do all things through Christ." For His sake. Amen.

"I count this thing to be grandly true,
That a noble deed is a step toward God,
Lifting the soul from the common clod
To a purer air and a broader view.
We rise by the things that are under our feet
By what we have mastered of good or gain,
By the pride deposed and the passion slain
And the vanquished ills that we hourly meet."

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, B. C. 1095. Place, Gilgal, in the Jordan valley. Persons, Samuel and the people.

Scripture Setting: True Service of God. Service described, Matt. 6:16-29. Service reasonable, Deut. 10:12-22. Service commanded, Josh. 24:14-28. True spirit's service, Hos. 6:6. The true motive, Rom. 11:21-36. The true laws, Phil. 3:1-17. The true consecration, Acts 20:17-38. The supreme qualification, 1 Cor. 13.

Life and Conduct Setting: This is a great lesson on the true service of God; like the farewell address of Joshua (Josh. 24:14-29). About the same truths are emphasized in each address. 1. Nature of the service required. It is (1) positive and uncompromising; (2) humble and reverent; (3) with confession and contrition; (4) sincere and hearty. 2. Duty of serving God a privilege, but more; it is a duty, a high and holy obligation, that cannot be waived or ignored. 3. Motives for serving God. We mention (1) the command of God, (2) gratitude for blessings, (3) fear of punishment, (4) prospect of self-interest, (5) character of God. 4. Helps in serving God. (1) Help from fellow Christians; (2) help from past successes and failures; (3) Divine love and many favoring providences, which enable the believer to overcome obstacles, difficulties and enemies.

PLEADING WITH AND FOR A NATION.

Heroes of the Past. It is a great thing to have heard a great speech by a great man on a great occasion. The last words of any friend are very impressive. But they are made much more so if specially significant for any reason; the last words of Moses, for example, or of Joshua, or of the Apostle Paul, or of Jesus Christ. These are practically the last words of Samuel, who was perhaps the greatest man next to Moses in the history of the Israelitish nation. It is true he was active for some time after this, both by word and work, but this was his last public utterance. That first picture shows to us the one man who is greatest in all Jewish history; and greatest we may believe in all history. We except Christ, for He was both God and man. Moses and Aaron are associated together in the work of delivering the people from bondage. Moses was the Washington of the new nation. Yes, he was more than the Washington; he was also the Lincoln, and the Grant and the Webster. Moses was so inspiringly great because God was with him and in him, and because he was willing that God should use him as He wished.

What God Can Do With One Man. It is said that D. L. Moody once heard a man say that the Lord had never yet had a chance to show what He could do with one man. No one had been found with sufficient consecration, energy and self-sacrifice. Mr. Moody was stirred by the remark, and was prompted to resolve in his own mind that he would try to supply this lack. He sought and prayed for some time that he might be fully submissive to the Lord's will. At last he surrendered to God, and the glorious work of his life was the result.

It Is the Life That Counts. Samuel is speaking with his lips, but he is also speaking with his life. Indeed, his word would not have had much weight unless the people believed in his character and conduct. He himself knows this, and so he says to them, "Behold, here I am; witness against me before the Lord, if I have done wrong in any way." They replied, "Thou hast not defrauded us, nor oppressed us." Now they are ready to listen attentively to all he has to say. Do you know where Samuel's good life and character began? It was when his godly mother dedicated him to God and His service. Then it was when he heard the call of God in the tabernacle, and said, "Here am I." He did not know what God intended to do with him as a man; but he did know what God wanted him to do as a boy. He did that faithfully, and then kept doing more and more as God opened the way. That is what God asks of us all.

The True Life Must Have a New Heart. We may teach and train and discipline men, and succeed in restraining them from gross improprieties of conduct, and may develop in them a commendable morality; this is important, but it is not religion. A man may be moral and upright in life, and may even observe the forms of religion, and do many things required of Christians, without possessing the spirit of the Master. Christ said to Nicodemus, "Ye must be born again." This is as true now as when Christ uttered it. This is the starting point in all true Christian character and life; without this everything else will be in vain. Be careful that you do not build on the sand.—Exchange.

Calling God to Witness. This is a wonderful thing Samuel does now. Look at the whole picture, and see if you do not think so. There is a harvest scene and the men busy gathering in the grain. The next picture a great rain storm. This was a very unusual thing, almost unknown in harvest. Samuel tells them it is coming and that it is because he asks the Lord to send it. Then he tells them that this will be the sign that they did wickedly in asking for a king. That wickedness was in the sight of the Lord, as all wrong acts are, for He sees and knows all things. But if the rain comes as Samuel says, the people will be convinced that they have sinned. That picture of the king shows something of what the ruler will be. But even if he is a fairly good ruler he cannot be equal to God. Besides, when they demanded another king it was really rejecting God and saying that they wanted another kind of king. Samuel had warned the people when they first asked for a king and now he warns them again. He tried to keep them from the sin altogether; but failing in that, he now tries to keep them from other and worse sins. He was like Moses in his love and care for the people. A good leader and one who fears God is the very best safeguard a nation has. That is very much better than armies and battleships, for a good leader has God with him and for him.

All Can Have This. It was said of a saintly brother in a certain church: "When he prays, I know he sees God." It may be given to each of us to have a similar realization of God's presence—that He is, and is the rewarder of them that diligently seek him. There is a beautiful modern theory which tells us that the Christ in every man is shown in his good acts. If we have a kind and loving impulse, it is the Christ in us which gives it. If we thirst after righteousness; if we long and labor to correct the wrong; if we bear patiently persecution for principle; these indicate that Christ is present within us.—Exchange.

Ready for a New Consecration. The witness of God was clear and strong, both as to the character of Samuel and the warning he brought. It is said that "all the people greatly feared the Lord and Samuel." This means a fear which prompted them to a true desire to worship God and obey Him, in all that Samuel told them to do. This is partly shown in the last picture. Then in the very next verses we are told that the people asked Samuel to pray for them, that this sin might not be their sin. He promised to do so, and he also told them that God would forgive them and bless them, provided they followed Him. So this new consecration was a kind of "declaration of independence" from this old life and old sins, and a pledge to be true to God, and let Him rule in every part of their life and work.

Samuel knew that such a new consecration would mean hard fighting, and that many things would hinder and tempt them. This is always the case. Our forefathers had to fight eight long years after they had declared their independence. So with these people, they had to battle with the old life which kept clinging to them in the habits they had formed. The people about them were idolators, and by them they would be tempted away from the true God. Other temptations and obstacles would arise constantly. All this would require courage and devotion. Like Joshua before him (Josh. 24) Samuel sought to spur the people to definite resolution and action by presenting the difficulties in the way. But it is also true that there were many ways by which the people would be encouraged to be loyal to their new consecration. The very fact of the dedication would help to hold them steadily in the right way.

Samuel, too, was a great help to them. Even when he became too old to lead them in person, yet his life and influence helped greatly to inspire and strengthen them. The consciousness that their consecration meant blessing and benefit to themselves and others would be a constant spur to fidelity; like the spirit of that woman missionary who chose a certain section of the city as her field because it was so dirty, needy and sinful. But best of all, God was present to aid them in their new consecration. The blessings He bestowed would of themselves stir them to gratitude and service. The old slave who was freed by her new owner preferred to stay and work for her new master, for she said, "He saved me." And God helps also directly. Here we see His warning voice lifted against the dangers that are near. Here, too, is His promise of future good: the declaration that He will not forsake His chosen people. In view of all these things, some of which they either knew or felt, they are persuaded to enter into this new consecration.

Quiz and Study. 1. Why was it sinful for the Israelites to ask for a king? 2. Why did Samuel grant their demand? 3. What two farewell addresses in the Bible before this? 4. What was Christ's farewell message? 5. What five conditions of success in verses 14, 15?

Practical Thoughts. 1. God is the God of nature and of nations, as well as of individuals. 2. Man is urged to fidelity by mercies received, by the judgments threatened, and by the covenant pledge of God. 3. The peace and prosperity of God's people rest on the Divine name, honor, and purpose. 4. There is no true worship and service without the heart. 5. To exalt God is to exalt one's self. The people feared the Lord and Samuel.

THE LESSON TEXT IS I SAM. 14:1-23.

Prayer: Help us, our Father, to rise against the enemies which seek the destruction of what is dear and precious and godlike in us and in ours; and may we, in a perfect trust in Thee, fight the good fight with all our might, knowing that those that be with us are more than those that be with them. Through Jesus our Captain and our Lord. Amen.

O Jesus, I have promised
To serve Thee to the end.
Be Thou forever near me,
My Saviour and my Friend.

I shall not fear the battle
If Thou art by my side,
Nor wander from the pathway
If Thou wilt be my guide.

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, Tenth Century (Probably 1087) B. C. Place, Valley of Michmash, north of Jerusalem, in the territory of Benjamin. Contesting Parties, Israel under Saul; and the Philistines, a coast tribe of warlike characters. Persons, Saul, King of Israel; Jonathan, his son; An armor bearer, unknown.

Scripture Setting: The Philistine Oppression, 1 Sam. 13:16-23. Jonathan's Strategy, 1 Sam. 14:1-10. Surprising the Philistines, 1 Sam. 14:11-15; The Philistines in Panic, 1 Sam. 14:16-23. Saul's Superstition, 1 Sam. 14:24-30. Greediness and Its Penalty, 1 Sam. 14:31-41. Saul's Magnanimity, 1 Sam. 14:42-45.

FIGHTING TO THE BEST ADVANTAGE.

The Hour. It was an unhappy hour for Israel. Saul had not yet established himself in the confidence of the people. The tribes had established among themselves only a loose and uncertain federation, quite as likely to array themselves against each other as against the common enemy, and more than likely, when evil threatened, to put their own interests above the common good. The Philistines, on the other hand, were united in an earnest and even desperate defense of their land from the encroachments of an alien and aggressive people and were bringing to bear upon the enemy all the resources of an ingenious and warlike training. They were measurably successful, too. They had disarmed Israel and taken the iron workers captive, so that there was no smith found throughout the land. The Israelites went down to the Philistines to sharpen every man his share, his coulter, his ax and his mattock. As in the days of Deborah, there was neither sword nor spear found in the hands of any of the people save the rude equipment which Saul had managed to scrape together for a small band of specially selected warriors.

Is Might Right? The Philistines believed in the supremacy of might. "God," is an old saying, "is on the side of the strongest battalions." The symbol of Germany is a feeble figure of heroic size bearing a sword. The symbol of America is a female figure bearing a torch. Germany proposed to rule the world by force, America proposes to rule the world by ideas.

The Man. In this company was Jonathan, eldest son of Saul, and at this time in the ripeness of young manhood. Already he was famous for his strength, his swiftness of foot, his skill in the use of arms, and his daring. He was dear alike to his father, who confided to him his plans and cares; and to his people, who stood between him and harm when by lot he was set apart for death for transgression of the ceremonial law. There is no more attractive personality in Old Testament history, uniting in himself the dauntlessness of the warrior and the gentle kindness and shrinking modesty of the woman. From the time of his first appearance to his death in battle, he is presented as the paragon of friendship, the devoted and loyal son, the intrepid soldier, the loving and generous prince, the high minded patriot, and the darling of the nation.

The Adventure. Jonathan was restless. He thought something should be started, and he was willing to start it himself. At all events, he would experiment. Anything was better than doing nothing. Summoning his armor bearer, he said: "Come, let us go over to the garrison of these uncircumcised; it may be the Lord will work for us, for there is no restraint to the Lord to save by many or by few." What a comfort these words have been to the faithful in all succeeding generations! They are of the very essence of religious faith.

The reply of the armor bearer is indicative of a brave and loyal heart, "Do all that is in thine heart; turn thee and behold I am with thee according to thy heart." With a spirit of that kind one could chase a thousand, and two put ten thousand to flight. The two succeeded in their adventure beyond even reasonable expectation. As they showed themselves in the open the Philistine guard began to banter them. "Look here," they cried to one another, "the Hebrews are coming out of the holes where they have been hiding themselves." Then to the two adventurers they cry in derision: "Come up, won't you? We should like to make your acquaintance." Singularly enough, this was the sign Jonathan had decided upon as Jehovah's warrant for further advance. So in splendid and contagious confidence, Jonathan said to his armor bearer, "Come up after me, for the Lord hath delivered them into the hand of Israel."

God in Human Affairs. Jonathan was undaunted because God was at his right hand. God still has a care for the world. A great soldier said it was not the French, nor the British nor the Americans, nor bread, nor munitions. It was God who won the war. The Germans had "God with us" on their belts and caps, but not in their hearts.

The Rout. The outcome was, to us, astonishing, some would say miraculous. In old time fighting by a people who were more than ordinarily superstitious, anything was likely to happen. Anyway the record states briefly and vividly that Jonathan climbed up upon his hands and upon his feet, and his armor bearer after him: and before the Philistines really knew what was happening twenty of their men were killed before their eyes and stones and arrows were being poured upon them as from a host. The panic which followed is not difficult to account for. Thinking themselves secure in the rocky fastness, the Philistines might easily conjecture that nothing but supernatural agencies could have enabled the Hebrews to overcome the difficulties of the passage. And who could war against the gods? This of itself would be sufficient to demoralize them and make their hearts as water. But if two could make the ascent, might there not be others with them? And what could a small outpost do in the face of numbers? "There was trembling in the host and in the field among all the people—and it was a very great trembling—And behold the multitude melted away and they went on beating down one another."

What One Man May Do. The recent world war saw quite as marvelous things happen. Single handed an American soldier terrorized a group of German soldiers and because he was unable to walk he compelled them at the point of his automatic to construct a litter and carry him into camp.

God and War. War is not God's way of furthering human progress. But God makes plain his love for man by using war to further human progress. No one can read the history of the recent world war without feeling that though God did not prevent the war—perhaps could not, speaking morally—yet He directed the outcome for the welfare of the world if only the world will learn its lesson and do its duty. Men did not win the war; neither did bread, nor coffee, nor sugar, nor doughboy, nor Britain, nor Frenchman, nor Italian. God won the war, and if the nations of the world can only be induced to be rightly exercised thereby it will be made clear that God can make the wrath of man to praise him and out of bitter experience bring greater glory and permanent blessing.

The Opportunity of Youth. Jonathan was young. The fate of the world lies with the young. Let no man despise youth. Jonathan was the human instrument by whom the Lord saved Israel. He was the first of his day to strike the blow for national freedom. He did it in a spirit of perfect trust in God. Nor did he say, "If God wants Israel free he will do it without my help." He said, "God wants Israel free and He wants me to help Him free Israel." That is the only proper temper for a man who wants to do a man's work for his fellows. Indeed, God will not work alone that way. If man will not work for men, then God can do nothing for them. But any man, young or old, rich or poor, wise or unwise, who, seeing something to be done that is worth doing and gives himself to it, will find God his indefeasible ally at once and always.

Do the Next Thing. Doing good work for the world is, in the main, doing the thing you are set to do with all your heart. Jonathan was a soldier. He perfected himself in the arts of the soldier. He disciplined the body to be the servant of his will; he cultivated surpassing skill in the use of the bow and of the sling; he pondered the problems of strategy, which, after all, is just acquiring a knowledge of the other man's ways of thinking and doing, and he taught himself to be afraid of nothing.

Quiz and Study. 1. Who were the Philistines? 2. To what condition of powerlessness had they reduced Israel? 3. Is victory always with the swift and with the strong? Give instances to the contrary. 4. Is war ever right and when? 5. Is there such a thing possible as "civilized" warfare? 6. What has one to say about the use of poison gas, unrestricted submarine warfare, and treachery? 7. Has war ever made any important contribution to the progress of civilization?

Practical Thoughts. 1. Life is a constant fight of the higher nature against the lower. Our hope of victory is in our alliance with God. 2. In a venture of difficulty it helps amazingly to have good company. For the Christian, Christ is always at hand. 3. The church membership might be to the minister what the armor bearer was to Jonathan. 4. What inspiration it would be to any leader if his followers should say, "Do all that is in thine heart, behold I am with thee according to thy heart." 5. Doubtless God could get the world saved without men, but he manifestly proposes to work through men.

SAUL REJECTED AS KING.

THE SCRIPTURE PASSAGE IS I SAM. 15:1-31.

Prayer: O, Lord, Thou who hast the power to lift up and to cast down, to receive and to reject, may I heed and be helped by so great a failure as Saul. It is a fearful thing for the humblest of us to forsake Thy Word and Thy way. Give us the attentive ear, the responsive mind, the obedient heart. Amen.

"The tumult and the shouting dies;
The captains and the kings depart:
Still stands Thine ancient sacrifice,
An humble and a contrite heart.
Lord God of Hosts, be with us yet,
Lest we forget—lest we forget!"
—Kipling.

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Much of the First Book of Samuel was drawn from early historical poems, such as Hannah's Song of Thanksgiving, The Song of the Bow, and David's Dirge (2 Sam. 3). Its title, Samuel, not only indicates he wrote, probably, the first twenty-four chapters, but is an admission that the soul of Samuel was the soul of the true kingdom of Israel during most of Saul's reign. Time, uncertain, 1079-1065 B. C. Place, Gilgal.

Scripture Setting: Saul and the Sin of Self-Seeking. Israel seeking a king, 1 Sam. 9:10-20. Seeking after Saul to proclaim him king, 1 Sam. 10:17-25. Saul seeking the death of David, 1 Sam. 19:1-10. Saul seeking death by suicide, 1 Sam. 31:1-10.

Life and Conduct Setting: The passage presents life as the kingdom over which God calls the individual to rule. 1. We become true priests and kings unto God by taking and keeping the oath of obedience. 2. He who holds highest authority is least his own; must yield fullest obedience and largest service. 3. No one act brings rejection and disaster, but accumulations slowly pile and start the avalanche. 4. The royal registers hold many names of men who failed to rule a people, being ruled by their own pride. 5. The failure of one life carries down to ruin a whole family and greatly retards the progress of Christ's Kingdom.

THE VICTOR IN BATTLE BECOMES THE VICTIM OF VANITY.

Point of Contact: How awful is that tragedy in which the hero turns out to be the villain. How dramatic are some of the scenes in real life when by the false turn of the hand the character that was supposed to be clothed with glory is pushed from the stage of action amid the hisses of the disappointed beholders.

King Saul was an heroic figure; he moved upon a broad stage; he was the favorite of an applauding people. But it was not a mere Samson that the times demanded. A moral and religious character was required, and here Saul failed. For a time Samuel supported him and David inspired him. But the very block out of which he was carved was defective. His call had come in middle life while he hunted his father's mules. He was anointed and suddenly became "another man." Yet not altogether. He was only half-converted, half-roused. He was still looking for stray animals, preferring a well-stocked farm to the Divine approval. It is a tragedy to find one's self a king in station, yet feel one's self a mule driver in spirit.

Betrayed by the Bleating Behind the Bars. "What meaneth this bleating of sheep in mine ears, and the lowing of the oxen which I hear?" Something surely was the matter with Saul. On the day they were to announce him king he hid behind the stuff. The prophet Samuel was constantly hunting him up, dragging him into the light, summoning him to duty.

If Saul furnished the example of a sudden conversion in middle life then Samuel is the example of a great saint who grew up from childhood to old age under the steadying influence of an early religious vow and a great moral purpose. Over the child Saul stood Kish his father, greedy for wealth. Over the child Samuel stood Hannah his mother presenting her child in prayer to God. Time only revealed which parent produced the stronger soul. It was Samuel who anointed Saul; who gave him the command, "Go and smite Amalek, and utterly destroy all that they have;" who said afterwards to the trembling, deceitful king, "God hath rejected thee."

Samuel knew no half measures, no half remedies. When the helpless Agag crouched at his feet and begged for mercy because Saul had spared him the prophet hewed him limb from limb, believing his heathen body was a better victim for the justice of God than the fat carcasses of the sheep Saul spared for sacrifice. The senseless bleating of sheep and lowing of cattle roused the indignation of a man like Samuel, for they revealed a weak king dallying and loitering in the face of God's explicit command.

A Monarch's Motive Unmasked. "Behold, to obey is better than sacrifice, and to hearken than the fat of rams." Though to Saul belonged the credit of his own victory, yet God had forbidden him to retain the spoils. The king, who was a fine judge of cattle, noticed how sleek were the oxen, how fat the sheep, and to save them from slaughter he invented an excuse for disobeying God. No doubt he intended to use some of them for a sacrificial thanksgiving, but since there were so many he reasoned that there would be little harm in keeping a few for himself. He wished to make a splendid show of his own triumph.

Josephus says Agag was saved because of his stature and beauty. The tall and beautiful Saul would enhance the attractiveness of his own beauty by dragging at his chariot wheel the mighty captive king. In his chariot at the head of a great procession he rides under a triumphal arch which Jerome says was made of olives, and myrtle, and palms. But a lone prophet with flowing robes halted the proud procession. The king argues and pleads, but the prophet pronounces a curse on his disobedience. God will find no delight in the burnt offerings of formal worship when the heart of the worshipper is full of disobedience and vanity.

Saul snatches at the prophet's mantle as Samuel turns to go. Saul would hold on to the empty form of religion when the spirit of religion was fleeing from the presence of his selfish greed. As Samuel went down the road alone he "mourned for Saul." His soul of honor was already gone; he might as well have been dead. Saul the once victor is Saul the rejected, defeated by his own vanity. How are the mighty fallen!

The Neglected Word and the Rejected King. "Because thou hast rejected the word of the Lord, He hath also rejected thee from being king." God was now done with Saul. He had been weighed in the balance and found wanting. It is not well that men should fail, but having failed some good, no doubt, is gained by asking, Why did they fail? The very spring of Saul's public defeat and his private despair is indicated in his words to Samuel, "God is departed from me." But God would not have departed from him if he had not first departed from God. Too much did he leave God out of his estimate of the forces that bore upon his life. He wanted to preserve the best of the sheep since they had material value, but he neglected to preserve the best that was in his own life because he did not appreciate spiritual values. After him was to come a king who prayed and meditated upon God's Word. Hear David say, "Show me Thy way, O Lord; teach me Thy paths. Then shall I not be ashamed when I have respect unto all Thy commandments."

The Fitness that Survives and Supplants Disobedience. "The Lord hath rent the kingdom of Israel from thee this day, and hath given it to a neighbor of thine, that is better than thou." This startling announcement that his reign is soon to end struck Saul into deadly earnestness. He seized the mantle of the prophet as if to retain him, and as Samuel parted from him the garment was rent. Thus was the kingdom to be rent from the hand of Saul. There was stamped upon him that day the mark of Cain, the visible expression of the Divine displeasure. Saul knew from that hour his successor was selected, a neighbor that was better than he was. His degradation and rejection made him the more bitter towards David who was to succeed him, as we will see.

In many ways David was more worthy of the royal honor and power. Though David also sinned, he did not attempt, like Saul, to deceive Samuel, but breathed forth his sorrow and penitence in a psalm of wonderful beauty. Through a genuine repentance David found both peace and pardon, while Saul, confronted by guilty facts, tried to shift the responsibility upon the people, and to his disobedience he added hypocrisy. All the sinner's plausible excuses will fail; God's hail will sweep away our refuge of lies. The record of the facts will be heard like the bleating of the hidden sheep. Whenever we disobey God's law, whether it be a law of health, of morality, of industry, or of honesty, we become incompetent for the best places; we are brushed aside to make way for some neighbor who is a better man.

Quiz and Study. 1. Why were the Amalekites so severely punished? Why did Saul save their king? What was the excuse Saul offered for saving their cattle? 2. When did Samuel condemn a priest for neglect towards his sons? Why did he slay Agag, though Saul had spared him? 3. What was lacking in Saul's preparation for sacrifice? How did he try to exalt himself through his victory? What did he lose? 4. In what ways was David a better man than Saul?

Challenge Text. "The — of the — is an —: how much — when he bringeth it with a — mind." Prov. 21:1(?)

Practical Thoughts. 1. Moral conduct means more to God than ceremonial form. 2. The four weak chariot wheels on which Saul tried to succeed were wilfulness, selfishness, passionateness, and jealousy. 4. Conscience calls louder than bleating sheep; God hears more keenly than Samuel. 5. Saul's head was hung in an idol's house, because his heart was idolatrous.

THE SCRIPTURE LESSON IS 1 SAM. 16:1-13.

Prayer: Lord Jesus, We rejoice that Thou knowest where we are and what we are. Thou also canst bring us to our place and work, in Thine own time and way. Help us to be prepared in heart and life for all that Thou are planning for us. Above all, may we have the anointing of Thy Holy Spirit for our life work. For Christ's sake. Amen.

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, B. C. 1065. Place, Samuel lived at Ramah. This anointing was at Bethlehem. Persons, Samuel, Jesse, and his seven sons.

Scripture Setting: God Calling to Service. Abraham called, Gen. 12:1-17. Moses called, Ex. 3:1-17. Joshua called, Num. 27:15-23. Samuel called, 1 Sam. 3. Elisha called, 2 Kings, 2:1-15. Nehemiah called, Neh. 1. Paul called, Acts, 9:3-16. Peter called, Matt. 16:13-20. The Apostles called, Matt. 10:5-24. Christ called, Isa. 42:1-13.

Life and Conduct Setting: This wonderful incident is suggestive of life's kingdom, and the many gateways into our kingdom. Here are some of the ways in which God calls to service: 1. At critical times in His Kingdom. The new work needs a new worker. 2. Through human agency. God may use man, angel or devil to notify the worker. 3. By overruling providences. A wicked king, straying asses, a service of sacrifice are all links in the chain. 4. Contrary to human expectation and choice, God alone knows how to fit the right man to the right place. 5. According to inward character and spirit. He seeks such to serve Him. 6. For a particular work. God is a spiritual economist, and is after a maximum of result from a minimum of means and effort. 7. By furnishing the needed grace and power. David had splendid natural abilities, but God adds other qualities and especially the endowment and equipment of the Holy Spirit.

FOUR STEPS TO A KINGDOM.

Testing the Applicants. Did you ever apply for a position and stand in line till your turn came for you to be questioned? Or did you hear your big brother or sister tell about it? Well, that is what is meant by that first picture. Those boys had not exactly applied for a position, and yet by the turn things had taken they were really applicants. Can you think of any other way of saying "the turn things had taken"? I like to call it Providence, for really God is touching and turning things in all lives. A great preacher once preached a sermon on "Every Man's Life a Plan of God." He had a good text for it, too, for it was, "I have guided thee, though thou has not known Me." It was about Cyrus, the great heathen king and conqueror.

There they go—those boys—one, two, three, four, five, six, seven. And each time the man in the chair said, "This is not he." You can find the names of all the seven in the Bible. Who is that man in the chair? It is Samuel, the aged prophet of God. He came here to Bethlehem, to the family of Jesse, for God said he had provided a king for His people, from that family. Saul was still king in name, but God had said he should not continue long. Saul disobeyed God, and so he lost his throne and kingdom.

First Step to Promotion. "Do the duty which lies nearest thee, which thou knowest to be a duty. Thy second duty will already have become clearer." So wrote Thomas Carlyle to those who were perplexed about what they ought to do. His advice is fundamental and the very heart of wisdom. It is also a key to unlock doors of uncertainty in every direction. Young men often never discover what their life work is to be until they begin at humble tasks near at hand. One of our most successful business men began work at a dollar and a quarter a day as a common laborer, after having graduated from a technical school. He found himself and his career while at this work.—Selected.

The Right Kind of a Boy. What was the matter with these seven boys? They were all present at the religious service, and they all look well in the picture. Samuel also was pleased with them. The real trouble was, not one of them was just right at heart. Any one of them might have made a king like Saul, but God now intended to get one who was right at heart. Samuel was surprised, but at last he asks Jesse, "Are these all the boys you have?" He replies, "No, there is one—the youngest—but he is keeping the sheep." "Send and bring him," said Samuel. He must have thought to himself at once that this was the very one God wants.

The third picture shows him as he watches the flock of sheep. Let us try to think what kind of a boy he is. For one thing, he is obedient and submissive. All the older boys are at the feast, and David—for we will now call him by name—has gone to the fields and to the work. He did not go pouting and frowning, either. Then, we see that he is faithful, with his eye on the sheep, his rod in his hand; he is ready to spring up if a bear or wolf came in sight. He killed a bear once and a lion at another time. But what is that by his side? Yes, a harp, and it shows that he was improving his odd moments to become skillful as a musician. In it all he is thinking of God and life and what he would like to be and do. I expect he practiced with the sling also, and we shall find in another story that both the harp and the sling were used by him to good effect. See Phil. 4:8 for six good things to think about when you are alone.

Your Duty and a Little More. Mr. Andrew Carnegie, in an address before a graduating class in New York, gave some excellent advice to the young men on how to attain success in life. Among other good things he said:

"There are several classes of young men. There are those who do not do all their duty; there are those who profess to do their duty; and there is a third class, far better than the other two, that do their duty and a little more.

"No one can cheat a young man out of success in life. You young lads have begun well. Keep on. Don't bother about the future. Do your duty and a little more, and the future will take care of itself."

—The Brotherhood Star.

"You Are Wanted at Once." Suddenly, as David sits there, he sees a man coming towards him. David is wondering if anything has happened to his father or brothers. Now the man is up to him, and he says, "David, you are wanted at once," and he tells him of the visit of Samuel, and the prophet's request. There is so much of God in it all that we may be sure that God whispered to David to go. God works at both ends of the line in accomplishing His purposes. The story of Philip and the eunuch shows this in the 8th chapter of Acts; so also many other stories in the Bible. As you see him led along in the next picture, he seems thoughtful and serious, but obedient. Even then, only seventeen years old, he could have sung our hymn, "Where He leads me, I will follow."

Some of the beautiful hymns David wrote (we call them psalms) have just such thoughts of submission and joy in them. While they are going to see Samuel, we may remind ourselves that David is in the direct line of God's purposes for His people. Jesse, David's father, was the grandson of beautiful Ruth, the gleaner. Ruth was married to Boaz, and Obed was their son. So you see he had good parents and good training, and he was to be a king that God had provided. Then all these things are happening at and near Bethlehem, where Jesus was born a thousand years later. Jesus was the great-great-great-great-grandson of David. He was also called David's greater Son, because He was God Himself.

A Strange New Power. How early does a boy begin to feel that he is a man, and is to do a man's work? Certainly that is possible by the time he is as old as David was. Jesus Christ felt this when He was only twelve years old, for He said to His mother, in the temple, "Wist ye not, that I must be about My Father's business?" Have you ever seen the picture called "The Soul's Awakening"? That fifth picture makes me think of the soul's awakening. David was a fine, manly boy, "of a beautiful countenance, and goodly to look to." But he had also those inner qualities which show a good heart and spirit—like faith, hope, patience, humility, courage, joy. But in addition to all this he was specially helped of God. As soon as he was brought before Samuel, the Lord said, "Arise, anoint him; for this is he." Then it is also said that "the Spirit of the Lord came upon David from that day forward." This strange, new power on mind and heart and life made this shepherd boy grow up to be a hero, a statesman, a scholar, a poet, a wise and good king. The gift of the Holy Spirit is a wonderful, wonderful power—the greatest and best gift of God to anyone. And everyone may have this gift through Jesus Christ, by taking Christ as a personal Saviour and Friend. Remember two things: "God chooses fit men, and God fits chosen men."

Why David Was Chosen. David was chosen, not for the excellence of character he already possessed so much as for the possibilities of excellence to be developed by the grace of God, through his obedience. It is like the vision of the sculptor who sees the possible statue in the marble, as Michael Angelo once said of a piece of beautiful marble, outwardly defiled and thrown to one side, "I see an angel there and must get him out."—Exchange.

Quiz and Study. 1. How did Saul come to be king? 2. How did he lose his throne? 3. Tell the story of Joseph as a boy; of Daniel, as a boy; of Timothy, as a boy. 4. How was a famous heathen king tested and "found wanting"? 5. How did Elisha receive power for his work? 6. Tell about a woman who anointed Christ at a feast. 7. Tell about some women who anointed Christ for burial.

Challenge Text. "Man looketh on the _____, but the _____ looketh on the _____." 1 Sam. 16:(?).

Practical Thoughts. 1. Uselessness, wastefulness and sinfulness of undue grief (v. 1). 2. Power of incarnated truth (v. 4). 3. Retirement and seclusion the training school for great service (vs. 11-12). 4. Danger of judging by the merely external—whether the personal appearance, the social qualities, the intellect or the life. 5. Divine command a stimulus and safeguard in Christian work. 6. The Holy Spirit the best equipment for service (v. 13). 7. Peril of abused privileges ("I have rejected him," v. 1). 8. Secret and conditions of promotion. The true way to first places. 9. God has complete knowledge of His kingdom, its needs, perils, opportunities. 10. The workers ripen and advance as the work advances. 11. We should not be hasty either in selecting or rejecting others, for God's choice is not as man's. 12. Neglect not the humble and lowly, for these may be God's choice.

DAVID AND GOLIATH

And it came to pass, when the Philistine arose, and came and drew nigh to meet David, that David hasted, and toward the army to meet the Philistine.

And David put his hand in his bag, and took thence a stone, and

and smote the Philistine in his forehead, that the stone sunk into

and he to the earth. So David prevailed over the Philistine with a sling and with a stone, and smote the Philistine, and slew him; but there was no sword in the hand of David. Therefore David ran, and

and drew it out of the sheath thereof, and slew him, and therewith. And when the Philistines saw their champion was dead, they fled.

THE SCRIPTURE LESSON IS 1 SAM. 17:32-51.

Prayer: Lord Jesus, We hail Thee as the strong Son of God, our Saviour. Thou art mighty to conquer all enemies. We thank Thee for the power Thou dost give those who love and trust Thee. With all confidence may we go forth to every battle, if Thou dost order, and lead. Grant us the victory over every sin and enemy. For Christ's sake. Amen.

"One struggle of might, and the giant of Gath,
With a crash like the oak in the hurricane's path,
And a clangor of arms, as of hosts in a fray,
At the feet of the stripling of Ephratah lay."

"For the God of David still Guides the pebble at His will."

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, B. C. 1063. Place, valley of Elah. Persons, Goliath, Saul, David, the two armies.

Scripture Setting: Battling for the Lord. Fight of faith, 2 Tim. 4:1-8. Power from God, Psa. 18:13-39. The battle spirit, Prov. 16:13-33. The battle call, Rev. 3. Strength in weakness, 1 Cor. 1:19-31. Enemies and weapons, Eph. 6:10-24. God with us, Rom. 8:31-39. Victory through Christ, Col. 3:1-17.

Life and Conduct Setting: In this contest between David and Goliath, we are shown some of the great facts and principles in all battling for the right. 1. Crisis times in every life and nation. Then the struggle for supremacy is on. 2. Remarkable special providences in the individual and nation. "This shepherd boy rises to be the warrior prince. 3. Mistakes and delays in every conflict. This is almost unavoidable in view of man's ignorance and tendency to plan without God. 4. The weapons in the conflict. These are simple as the Divine plan. Man is apt to devise more complicated ways and means, forgetting that they do not represent power. The simple gospel is the sling and stone to bring victory. 5. True spirit in the conflict, chiefly trust in God and humility. 6. Victory in the conflict. The mightiest enemies go down before the power of God, manifested through his people. 7. Faithful use of means in the conflict. God is the power, but David and his sling are the agencies used.

HOW A YOUTH CONQUERED A GIANT.

Brave for the Right. There is a great difference between bluster and bravery. A fussy and boastful person is apt to be a coward when the danger comes. There is a difference even between boldness and bravery. A person may be bold and yet not brave. David was quiet and humble, but he was brave, and brave for the right. It is now several years since he was anointed king. He has been keeping the sheep, and thinking much of the work which God might ask him to do. Saul had gloomy spells, since the Spirit of God left him, and David was called to the king's palace to play on his harp before Saul. This seemed to be the only thing that would quiet the king. At last the king was much improved, and David went back again to his sheep.

The Philistines about this time came up to battle with the Israelites. The armies were facing each other, and David's three brothers were in the Israelite army. One day Jesse sent David with provisions for the soldier brothers. In the Philistine army there was a big, blustering giant, ten feet high, who dared any one to fight him. In those days battles were often decided by single soldiers fighting for each side. The very day David came to the army that giant, named Goliath, was strutting before the Israelites, shouting, "Send a man to fight with me," as he had done for forty days. David was stirred and indignant. He asked, "Who is that man that defies the army of God? Why does not some one fight him? I can do it." David felt this way because he knew what God could do through him.

A Vision of God. "Every fresh vision of God has brought with it tremendous world results, when men have been careful of the life to come. When they have laid hold on God; when Heaven became a daily reality, then society was laid hold upon by a wondrous redemptive power. Luther's vision of God changed the face of Europe. Wesley's vision of God changed the social life in England. Paul's fresh vision of God made him a messenger of a Gospel of life and hope. Job's vision of God set him upon his feet with a message for men through following centuries."

The Best Way to Fight. Saul heard that David was willing to fight the giant, but he tried to discourage him. David said, "I fought a lion and a bear and killed them, and I'm sure if God would help me to kill a lion and a bear, He'll help me to kill the Philistine." Then Saul put his own armor on David—a helmet and a coat of mail—and also gave him his sword. The first four pictures show how he is being rigged out as a soldier. His three elder brothers are standing there looking at him, and one of them made fun of him. David did not reply, but he was thinking of the best way to fight the giant. Very soon he said, "I am not used to these weapons, but prefer to fight in my own way." So the next picture shows him as he puts off the armor, and then takes his staff and sling. As he comes to the brook that flows between the armies, he selects five smooth stones for his sling. David's whole life has been a preparation for just such a battle as this.

How to Win Victories. What is it that will give victory to any army; that was the secret of Napoleon's victories; that enabled Admiral Togo to destroy the Russian fleet in the Straits of Korea; that made General Von Moltke victorious over the French? It is the same that will give success to any convention or prayer meeting, or Sunday school. It is that which will make any work successful, or any life a success, and insure even eternal life. It is all in the word readiness, preparation. God works along the lines of our earnest, honest endeavors.—Selected.

Trusting in God and Self. All this time Goliath was watching him with a sneer and a smile. As David comes from the brook, his sling is hidden under his coat. The giant sees only his staff, and he cries out, "Am I a dog, that this boy comes to me with a staff? I'll give his body to the birds." Then he cursed David by his gods. David replied, "I come to you in the name of the Lord of hosts, the God of the armies of Israel. This day the Lord will give you into my hand, and I will take off your head."

But David also planned the battle the very best he could. He knew God would expect him to do what he could. He reasoned that the giant would be off his guard when he saw how young David was, and that he had only a shepherd staff. Now is the time for his quick eye, and true aim, and clear brain, and brave heart. See him run right towards the giant! That is a part of his plan. This dazes the giant for a moment; and, as he runs, David quickly puts a stone in his sling. Round and round his head he swings it, and away goes the stone, straight to the giant's forehead. He reels and falls on his face, stunned. David hurled the stone, but God guided it to do its work.

"Papa Take Hold of Me." It makes a good deal of difference whether you take hold of God or God takes hold of you. Said a father: "My little girl today refused to let me take hold of her hand when we were walking together. She thought she could go alone. But when we came to a place which was slippery, she took hold, first of my little finger, and then, as it grew more icy, of my whole hand. As we went on and it was growing worse, she let go entirely and said: 'Papa, take hold of me.' She knew I was strong and that she could not fall unless I fell. If our hands are placed in His whose throne is in Heaven, we never can fall or fail."—D. L. Moody.

Slay Your Giant. The giant had armor from head to foot, and his spear was twice as long as a common man would carry. But there was one spot in the forehead that was exposed, and David's true aim hit that. His practice with the sling had made him a crack shot. This stone may have killed him, but David wanted to be sure that he was dead; so he sprang forward, while the giant was stunned, and took Goliath's own sword and cut off his head. This was all done so quickly that both armies were amazed. Now the Philistines see that their leader has fallen, and is dead, they turn and flee to their own land. But the Israelites take courage and pursue them and kill thousands of them, even to the gates of Gath, their fortified city. Thus David helped the army to win a great victory. And he saved the people of God from their old-time enemies.

Other Giants. We have just room here to name some of the giants which boys and girls have to fight these days. There is giant Temper, a real blustering fellow, red-faced and loud-voiced; giant Selfishness, who cares for no one else and plans only for his own pleasures and ease; giant Envy, who always is growling because he cannot have what others have; giant Pride, giant Fashion, giant Laziness, giant Appetite, giant Vice, giant Intemperance, giant Cheat, giant Wilfulness, giant Wordliness, giant Falsehood, giant No-god. The spies brought back word that the land was full of giants. So the land of Self is full of giants. Any one who conquers these giants must have all the soldier qualities of David. Only when the head is off the giant is the job finished. You have the sling and the sword; see that you use them against your giant.

Quiz and Study. 1. Mention four qualities or traits in Goliath and four in David. 2. Name some of the giants we have to fight today. 3. What two giants did Bunyan write about in Pilgrim's Progress? 4. What are the best weapons to use in fighting giants. 5. How did Joseph win victories; and Daniel? And what giants did they overcome?

Challenge Text. "Be strong in _____, and in the _____ of His might." Eph. 6: (?).

Practical Thoughts. 1. David is an example of the heroic element in Christianity. 2. Fidelity in little things and in obscure places is the preparation for the crisis. 3. The truth never lacks a champion; the right man emerges for the emergency. 4. The simple Gospel is the sling and stone to smite every giant of error and sin. 5. The lesson suggests the mistakes, methods, spirit, weapons and victory in Christianity's conflict with the world. 6. One may use the sword of a written argument and another the sling of ready speech. Each one's method is best—for himself. 7. Awake, be ready, for this may be the most important day of life. 8. All preceding life prepares or unfits, for the next enemy and battle. 9. God has some David preparing to meet and conquer every Goliath.

Dr. J. M. Coon.

And it came to pass as they came, when David was from the slaughter of the Philistine that the women came out of all the cities of Israel, to meet king Saul, with tabrets, with joy, and with instruments of musick. And the women answered one another as they played, and said, Saul hath slain his thousands, and David his ten thousands. And was very wroth, and the saying displeased him; and he said, They have ascribed unto ten thousands, and to me they have ascribed but thousands: and what can he have more but the kingdom? And Saul eyed David from that day and forward. And it came to pass on the morrow, that the evil spirit from God came upon Saul, and he prophesied in the midst of the house: and David with his hand, as at other times: and there was a javelin in Saul's hand. And Saul for he said, I will smite David even to the wall with it. And David avoided out of his presence twice.

DAVID'S ENEMY—SAUL.

THE SCRIPTURE LESSON IS 1 SAM. 18:1-16.

Prayer: Lord Jesus, Keep us from the sin of envy, which slew the Lord of glory. Make us content in life and quick to do Thy will. May we avoid the hate and jealousy and murderous spirit of Saul, and imitate the love and forgiveness and helpful spirit of David. Do Thou grant Thy presence and Thy Holy Spirit that we may be able so to do. May we trust in the salvation secured to us by the Saviour from sin. In His name. Amen.

"O God, let me the power attain
To love the good I may not gain;
To own the rose is sweet, although
No roses in my garden grow;
Revere all lofty souls, and grand,
Though far below their heights I stand;
To praise with glad, unenvious speech
The triumph I shall never reach;
And to exult that others dare
Great deeds in which I cannot share."

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, B. C. 1063. Place, Gibeah, in the tribe of Benjamin. Persons, Saul, David, Jonathan, singing women.

Scripture Setting: Envy and Hate. Evil of envy, Jas. 4:1-12. Envy forbidden, Rom. 13:8-14. Freedom from envy, 1 Cor. 3:1-15. Enemies without cause, Psalms 69:1-18. Jesus envied and hated, John 7:1-13. True spirit to possess, Psalms 37:1-18. Joseph hated, Gen. 37:5-28. Care for the righteous, Psalms 33:1-22.

Life and Conduct Setting: The lesson paints for us two life portraits, which really show two ways to work in life. One portrait is of Saul—or the wrong way to work. The picture shows him 1, full of envy and hate; 2, working by a low and scheming policy; 3, incompetent and cowardly; 4, full of jealousy and suspicion; 5, unjust and treacherous in conduct; 6, selfish and departing from God.

The other portrait is of David—or the right way to work. The qualities seen in David are: 1, obedience and prudence; 2, fidelity and courage; 3, loyalty to his master and king; 4, guided and helped of God; 5, constant and consistent in public service; 6, humble in popularity; 7, successful because consecrated, and still more consecrated when successful. The way to work and win in life is to avoid the Saul elements of character and imitate the David elements.

WHICH PORTRAIT IS YOURS?

Another Victory. Did you ever think of it, that there are really only two classes of people in the world? This is true when we divide them into the good and the bad. At the last great day Christ will divide all people into those two classes. They are called in Scripture the sheep and the goats. But all through life everyone is putting himself into one class or the other. We shall see that these two classes are represented by David and Saul, and each person should be deciding in his or her mind which is the better kind of person.

When David came to Saul, after he slew the giant, Saul asked him whose son he was, and David replied, "I am the son of Jesse the Bethlehemite." David had grown so that Saul did not know he was the boy who had played on the harp for him a few years before. Saul's son, Jonathan, was present, and he at once took a great liking to David, and David did to him. The next story will tell of these two fine young men, who were friends for life. Saul made David war captain to fight the Philistines. He won a great victory, and came back with many scalps of the Philistines, as you see by the first picture. Did David have any enemies among his own people? Yes; for even the best people, and the best acting people, sometimes have enemies. Their very goodness may make some people hate them. You will be surprised to know that Saul hated David. He was the very person who should have admired him for his heroism in slaying the giant and afterwards fighting the Philistines and saving Saul's kingdom. It all came about because the women of the land praised David for his great and good work. As you see by the second picture, they danced and sang, crying, "Saul hath slain his thousands, and David his ten thousands." They were really praising them both, but Saul took offense and was envious of David, and then hated him.

Play Fair and Win. "Now, fellows," the captain said, "we have just got to win this game, and that's all there is to it. The other bunch know their business and play the game well, but we can win out if we only think so and do our best. No dirty work, remember. If they want to mix it up, just go right on and play the game. We cannot afford to have men decorating the fence when we need them in the field."—Onward.

The Language of the Face. Some people claim that they can tell much about a person by the lines in the hand and by the bumps on the head. A person can be known also by his face and actions. The eye and mouth, and even the way one holds his head, all tell tales about the character. As we study these faces of Saul and David, we can begin to answer the question of the story. At least we can say very soon which portrait we would prefer to be ours. It is not always safe to judge by appearance. Once a man was looking at a picture of the great and good Judson, and he said, "That man would have been a sea pirate, except for the grace of God." But usually the story in the face is the same as the real story in the heart.

It is so in this case. You can scarcely think of a greater contrast than that between these two faces. And the one thing for us to remember is that they both started about alike. But very soon Satan began to paint the one portrait, and the Holy Spirit began painting the other. Here you see the portraits well along towards completion. In the one you can see pride, suspicion, hate, envy, revenge—all ugly qualities. In the other it is easy to find humility, goodness, gentleness, forgiveness—all beautiful and noble qualities. Paul paints the finished pictures in seventeen dark strokes, and nine bright lines. See Gal. 5:19-23.

Every One His Own Photographer. Longfellow says in his "Hyperion" that "He who drinks beer, thinks beer; he who drinks wine, thinks wine; and he who drinks midnight, thinks midnight." Our thoughts are the outgrowth of our actions. The girl and boy who put heart into their work instead of into frivolity and foolishness, will find that they think of it with increasing clearness and pleasure. The result is that the face shows what one thinks and does.

The Man with the Harp. If people would always stay as pictures, the bad would not hurt much, and the good would not help. But the portraits mean life and conduct. You have read the poem, "The Man with the Hoe," and you have seen the picture of "The Angelus"; but in both cases they represent toil and sacrifice and worship. So these two portraits tell two different life stories. In the case of David, it is the man with the harp. He is also a man with a sling and a sword, when God had that kind of a work for him to do. But the harp tells the better kind of work—a work to soothe and help and comfort. This is a beautiful symbol, and most fitting for David. You know he wrote the most of those wonderful hymns in the book of Psalms. There is no other book like it in all the world. It is the music of a soul that has seen God, and has known of His goodness and forgiving love. And it is music—sweetest music—for the tired and troubled and tempted in all ages of all the world. Yes, David's sword and sling have been almost forgotten for centuries; but his harp goes on singing to millions and millions of people. The beautiful twenty-third psalm is called "The Nightingale Psalm," and nearly every one learns it by heart.

The Oil of Kindness. "I wanted to drive an iron bar through a piece of timber. I bored a hole of the right size, but the bar was rusty, and the hole was rough. I made slow progress and was beginning to split the wood. Then I thought of the oil can. I oiled the bar; I poured oil into the hole; a few blows of the hammer sent the iron into its place. A few drops of oil were more effective than many blows of the hammer."—Dr. Babb.

The Man with a Dagger. That last picture shows a very different kind of a man. He is not only hurling javelins, but hurling them at one of the best of men, and one who was in the very act of doing a kindness to him! You can't think of anything meaner or more wicked. He is in a passion of rage, too. He makes you think of a tiger, or hyena, or wolf, in a bloodthirsty mood, springing on some innocent animal. Again and again he tried to kill David with the javelin. When he failed, then he tried to get the servants to kill him. Not one of them was willing to do it. Then he ordered David to battle, hoping he would be killed there; but God watched over him and kept him. He offered him his daughter in marriage if David would kill a hundred Philistines. He killed two hundred, and God protected and prospered him. At last Saul was afraid of David, but he tried again and again to trap him and kill him. Now, which do you want to be—a harp boy and man, or a dagger boy and man? And which portrait are you really painting, stroke by stroke, in your daily life and conduct?

Wasps in the Home. Into a happy home there came a selfish, quarrelsome person for a visit. In a few days the children began to find fault and quarrel. Their temper and disobedience, like the stings of the wasp, made the mother restless and unhappy. How glad they all were when the visit was over! How terrible it would be if some such wasp-spirit was born right in a home and all the other members of the family would have to feel its stings all the time!

Quiz and Study. 1. When did David learn to play on the harp and use the sling? 2. What traits of character can one see in the face usually? 3. Who else did Saul try to kill with his javelin? 4. How was this sin of envy shown in the case of Joseph's brethren? 5. How in the case of Christ's enemies?

Challenge Text. "Wrath is ———, and anger is ———, but who is able to stand before ———?" Prov. 27:(?).

Practical Thoughts. 1. Faithful under difficulties is one great secret of popularity. 2. The evil spirit is both a cause of sin and because of sin. 3. Every one is a harp-type of life or a dagger type. 4. God preserves those who trust and love Him. 5. To fight against the good is to fight against God. 6. Wise action not only brings success, but it is success. 7. A fact or act may be right in itself, but wrong as to time, place or manner. 8. One should be jealous for the right without jealousy or envy of others. 9. God overrules and defeats the plans of the wicked.

THE SCRIPTURE LESSON IS 1 SAM. 20:1-42.

Prayer: Lord Jesus, We thank Thee for friends—friends that love and lift and bless. Help us that we, too, may be friends to those about us that need our sympathy and aid. May we be unsparing in all those larger gifts of life, which guide to the Heavenly way. In every way in which Thou hast blessed us may we be a blessing to others. Above all may we lead our friends to the great Friend and Saviour. In His Name, Amen.

"I would be true, for there are those who trust me;
I would be pure, for there are those who care;
I would be strong, for there is much to suffer;
I would be brave, for there is much to dare.

I would be friend of all—the foe—the friendless;
I would be giving and forget the gift;
I would be humble, for I know my weakness;
I would look up—and laugh—and love and lift."

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, B. C. 1062. Place, The stone Ezel, near Gibeah. Persons, Saul, David, Jonathan, the lad.

Scripture Setting: True Friendship. A friend indeed, Prov. 18:10-24. Gospel friendship, 1 John 3:10-24. Blessedness of friendship, Psa. 133. Friends of Jesus, John 15:11-17. Friends as believers, Acts 4:24-37. Hints on friendship, Prov. 27:6-19. Friends and enemies, Mark 3:22-32. Portrait of a friend, Rom. 12.

Life and Conduct Setting: The friendship of David and Jonathan is a suggestive study to one who desires to make the most of his relations with others. 1. The conditions of true friendship. To stand out sharply. (1) A self-sacrificing spirit, yielding self to the good of another; and (2) possible worth to each other—the one lovable and worthy, the other worthy and lovable. (When these two vital conditions are present, it is easy for the outward act to follow. Heart and hand have met.) 2. The characteristics of true friendship. In our picture we see (1) boldness as Jonathan defends David before the king; (2) the inventive device in which the king is outwitted and defeated; (3) loyalty, pledging perpetual service. 3. The blessedness of true friendship. (1) It enriches the life of each. Love gives all it has and lo! it receives all back and more. The paradox of friendship is that each party to the compact gives most and receives most. (2) It rejoices and cheers. The kiss and embrace are more than the lovlier gifts of robe and girdle and sword. (3) It guards and saves. Jonathan rescues David and David remembers and protects Jonathan's descendants. 4. The truest friend and friendship. This is Jesus Christ and personal choice of Him as Saviour. By His sacrifice and forgiving love He calls to all, "Come unto me."

A TALE OF TWO FRIENDS.

How to Choose a Friend. A friend is really one who loves, for it comes from an old word meaning to love. Nearly everyone has had many persons that may be called friends. Some would stay friends for a long time, and many only for a short time. None of these could be real friends, for a real friend is for life. If it is one who loves, it must be one who is chosen by the heart. This is what Jonathan was to David. Each chose the other by heart choice, and so it was a lasting friendship. We have learned how they liked each other from the first, and every time they met they were more and more friendly. David's very troubles and difficulties made Jonathan love him all the more! As Saul was growing in hatred to David, so Jonathan was growing in love to him. And when Jonathan had to choose between his own father and David he chose David. He could not love them both, for they were so unlike. He could not help but love David, for he and David were so alike. Each was attracted by the frank and manly nature in the other, and by the spirit of charity and kindness. Jonathan's friendship for David was tested in many ways, but it stood every test.

David also was true to Jonathan, and in one of the stories later we shall see that this friendship brought kindness to Jonathan's descendants. So we see that those who are friends by heart choice really grow stronger and better friends by the troubles and dangers of life.

The Looks and the Heart. Looks may lead to love, but character retains it. We love our friends for what they are, but in each one we find some superlative physical beauty. It may be the eyes; or the mouth; or the hands. It may be the voice; the smile; the laugh. It may be the poise; the walk; the carriage; but something we are sure to find. But those who have the heart qualities, and make the heart choices, endure forever.—Exchange.

The Sign of the Arrows. One has enemies as well as friends, as we see in the case of Jonathan and David. They both knew that Saul would try to keep them from seeing each other. Now David suspected that Saul intended to kill him. When he told Jonathan about it Jonathan said that he would find out by testing his father. The test was for David to stay away from his meals at the king's table and Jonathan was to explain why David was absent. If Saul passed it off that would mean that he would not kill David. But if he raged and stormed, as he really did, that would mean that he intended to kill him.

In this case Jonathan was to warn David by the sign of the arrows. It was a kind of code language, which they, but no one else, would understand. The sign was for Jonathan, when he was practicing shooting with his bow, to shoot three arrows near a stone where David would be hiding. He would send a boy for the arrows, and if he cried out to the boy "Is not the arrow beyond thee?" David would know that he must flee for his life. This is all pictured out in those first drawings. There is David hiding, Jonathan and the lad, and the lad running for the arrows. Just as he gathers them up, David hears the cry of Jonathan, which warns him to flee. Even the boy did not know what these signs meant. Jonathan was very careful in the whole plan, for he knew his father meant to kill David if he had a chance. Why, he even threw a javelin at his own son, at the feast, when Jonathan pleaded for David. What a comfort to Jonathan to have a friend like David!

A Friend in Need. Two young men roomed together in college, and a very strong attachment was formed between them. Later they entered business in the same city, and their affection continued and deepened until they were both gray-haired. The hour came when one of them was waiting in agony at a telegraph station for news from a dying son. His friend of the years stood by his side. He spoke no word nor offered any sympathy, save that he returned the handclasp of the broken-hearted father. He did not need to speak. His was the silent comfort of love.—Exchange.

"Just for Us Two." Nearly everyone has said that to some dear friend. Each one feels that he would like no one else to know a certain thing, or go to a certain place. This is what Jonathan means when he sends the lad back to the city with his bow and arrows. The lad may wonder why he is to do this, but he is obedient, and there he goes. Now David comes out from his hiding place, and he and Jonathan meet for the last time except one. From this time David was to have no home and no safety or comfort until Saul's death. What a bright spot this was in his memory! During all the years afterwards Jonathan would be with him in spirit and he would never forget that brief visit and the parting kiss. This was worth far more to him than any money or gifts. Everyone may have some human friend he loves more than all others. Christ, too, had his special friends, like Peter and John. This does not prevent us from being friendly to many people. Then there is a Heavenly Friend that each one should choose, and of whom we might say "just for us two." That is Jesus Christ, who comes to be a Friend to everyone who will receive Him and choose Him. He is the "Friend that sticketh closer than a brother." To secure Him we may need to send away many others, just as Jonathan sent the lad. He opened the way from earth to Heaven and comes to walk with each one, as Savior and Friend.

Finding and Welcoming the Best. All they needed was to renew the covenant already made. This they did by the cordial greeting and the kiss, and the tears. They had made this covenant when they first got acquainted (chapter 18:6); and they had renewed it by word when they were last together (20:14-17). Now Jonathan said, "Go in peace, for we have sworn together that the Lord shall be between you and me, and between your children and my children, forever." It was a double pledge and covenant—Jonathan to David and David to Jonathan. This was done because Jonathan knew that David was to be king some time. Jonathan was the son of the king and David was the coming king.

Was there a third person witnessing this covenant? The lad was gone, but the Lord saw it all, and was pleased. All the best friendships are known to Him, because they are prompted by Him. The pledge you sign in the Young People's Society, or the covenant in the Church, and even the pledge against liquor and tobacco, and other bad habits, are all known to God. He is pleased to have us make such pledges against false things and persons, and for and with the true and good.

Inviting the Best. Some one once wrote a great author asking what was the secret of true life and the author answered in this striking phrase: "Inviting into it the best things." Here we are placed in a world of infinite things. We are facing an unknown future full of many good and many evil things. A great many of these things will play upon our lives to determine them in ways over which we have no control and of which we can not tell the end. Therefore we should invite into our life only the best things and the best friends.

Challenge Text. "There is a ——— that sticketh closer than a ———." Prov. 18: (27).

Practical Thoughts. 1. In true friendship, each one gives all and receives all. 2. True friendship grows stronger with every trial and trouble. 3. Importance of friendship with Jesus Christ: (a) It saves man from peril; (b) fits him for service; (c) counsels, guides and strengthens; (d) brings him to the abiding friendship of all the good; (e) makes him at last like the Christ friend. 4. Conditions of friendship with Christ: (a) Heart change; (b) love and friendship for Him; (c) unselfish and sacrificing for Him; (d) loving and saving others for His sake; (e) submissive to His will and obedient to His law. 5. Friendship with the good is desirable, to lead and keep in every right way; friendship with the bad is perilous.

THE SCRIPTURE PASSAGE IS I SAM. 24:1-22.

Prayer: Dear Lord, Help me to practice Thy great law of kindness, Thy golden rule of love. I will not push to the front by pushing another back, nor climb to success by treading another down.

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, April, B. C. 1060. Place, Engedi, near Jericho, means in Hebrew the Fountain of the Goat. This cave where David hid was spacious, holding six hundred men, as the Cave of Adullam protected at another time David, his family and four hundred men. Persons, David, Saul, and their followers.

Scripture Setting: Saul Hunts His Hiding Son-in-Law. David in the wilderness of Ziph, 1 Sam. 23:19-26. David in the cave of Adullam, 1 Sam. 22:1-2. David in the hills of Hachilah, 1 Sam. 26:1-12. David's praise for protection, Ps. 34:7-22. David prays for safety, Ps. 35:1-14.

Life and Conduct Setting: This passage contrasts the jealous and the generous dispositions.

1. Refusing to kill Saul delayed David's hour of rule, but proved him worthy of ruling.
2. Saul's second effort against David's life showed incurable hatred and heartless ingratitude.
3. David spared Saul (a) as the father of Michal, David's wife; (b) as the father of Jonathan, David's friend; (c) as God's anointed; (d) as the people's choice.
4. Few angry, iron hearts there be that cannot be melted in the passion of genuine love.

GENEROUS TO AN ENEMY: OR GOOD FOR EVIL.

Point of Contact: If the boys of America were invited to ballot for their favorite character in all the Old Testament, David, I am sure, would be first choice. His popularity then as now was due to his valor in battle, and his fairness, even kindness, towards his enemies. To secure a crown some men have acted treacherously. Robert Bruce, though one of the greatest of Scottish kings, of noble birth, in order to rule committed a violent and merciless deed. He invited John Comyn, his rival, to meet him in the Grey Friar's church at Drumfries and talk over their rival claims. He violated both the sacredness of the place and his oath by driving his dagger into his rival. He fled from the church crying guiltily, "I have slain the Red Comyn."

Greater was the discipline of David's spirit when he refused to strike dead the heartless Saul. One violent act, and David, instead of being as a wild beast on the mountain without home or sanctuary, could have enjoyed the pleasures of a palace. Where the ardent passion of Bruce was uncontrolled, David exercised forbearance. A second act of forbearance, not noted in this lesson, shines all the brighter since David again stood over the sleeping Saul, but though urged, refused to take the king's life. Such fine chivalry and generosity to an enemy made David a national favorite, the darling of his people.

Envy and Enmity Cancelled in the Cave of Engedi. "Saul went in to cover his feet: and David and his men remained in the sides of the cave." The limestone hills of Judea abound in caves. In the dark sides of one of these David with six hundred trusty and tried warriors hid as king Saul entered. To Saul as he entered all was dark, and he thought himself alone. To David from within, the entrance of Saul against the clear light was easily seen. When Saul is wrapped in sleep David steals forward and with his hunting knife cuts a great piece from the royal robes.

How easy for that sharp knife to find beneath the garment the warm flesh and the still warmer blood of the king! But a three-fold restraint arrested David. He was a loyal subject to his country's king, for striking Saul he would be striking his people's government. He was patient as a saint against his envious oppressor, resolving to win back Saul's love by the greatness of his own forgiving heart. He was a devout believer in a Divine destiny that controlled each human life. Saul, if weak and jealous, was God's anointed, and God in His own time would put an end to his reign. Such high motives are worthy of our study.

Young people love to pay back a grudge. But it is not manly to remember an injury. Shakespeare makes one of his characters to say, "Kneel not to me: the power that I have on you is to spare you; the malice towards you, to forgive you; live, and deal with others better." And One who was greater, called, because of His relationship, David's Son, did say, "Therefore, if thine enemy hunger, feed him; if he thirst, give him drink; for in so doing thou shalt heap coals of fire on his head."

The Frayed Flag of Friendship and Forgiveness. "The Lord judge between me and thee, but mine hand shall not be upon thee." From a rocky point beyond Engedi David addresses Saul in a remarkable speech to show that he has formed no plot against the king's life. Nothing could furnish better evidence of David's kindly feeling than the breadth of the royal robe which David now waves as a flag above his head.

Before Saul's army and before the world here is the proof that if there had been a desire to kill there was the best of opportunities to do it. He is willing to call God to witness and to judge that he is innocent of such a bloody intent. And the evidence deeply moved the heart of Saul. His very life he now saw he owed to the kindness of David. Saul tried to answer, but his voice broke into convulsive sobs.

Why was David so desirous of presenting a token of his innocence waved from the rocks above Saul and his army? It was because he was under the shadow of a cruel calumny. Some one who wished to "tear his soul like a lion" was within Saul's court stirring up the jealousy of the king and representing David as a rebel. The introduction of the seventh Psalm would suggest it was Cush the Benjaminite. Now Saul was convinced that David was innocent. His hand had been free to strike, but he struck not. Saul could only cover his face and sob, "My son David."

The Divine Odor Distilled from David's Devotion. "Thou art more righteous than I: for thou hast rewarded me good; whereas I have rewarded thee evil." In the whole varied field of David's remarkable life there never blossomed a sweeter or fairer flower than his chivalry toward Saul in the cave of Engedi. If we had only the green-eyed, murderous jealousy of Saul to remember, this spot would seem like a desolate wall of rock near the Dead Sea fit only to harbor outlaws. But David's high and noble impulse has breathed upon the scene, and now we remember the delicious fountain that flows and the plain below where beautiful flowers grow. I wonder if this is why it was so sacred to Solomon, David's son, that when he wrote the Song of Songs he gives us this charming glimpse, "My beloved is unto me as a cluster of camphire in the vineyards of Engedi."

Not as a king, but as a fugitive from the hot anger of Saul does David speak to us still in the greatness of his forgiving spirit. The fragrance of his gentle spirit comes floating down to us across four centuries like the odor "of myrrh and aloes and cassia out of the ivory palaces." In the beauty and strength of his young manhood he played upon his harp such soothing strains that he comforted the delirious Saul. Tradition says that David after playing wound lilies around the strings of his harp to keep them from breaking. We may believe it, for after his harp was stilled a fragrance lingered where the "Sweet Singer" had been. David's example abides. In his tenderness, his godliness, and his attachment to his friends he has left an illustrious memory. Would you know his secret? He kept faith alive, and did not forget to pray.

The Persians tell of a traveler who found a lump of scented clay. He asked the clay the secret of its wondrous sweetness.

"Friend, if the secret I disclose,
I have been dwelling with a rose."
Good Lord, abide with us, that we May catch these odors fresh from Thee.

Quiz and Study. 1. When did David a second time spare Saul? Whom did he rebuke for not guarding the king? 2. By what four different terms does David in the lesson address Saul? What endearing term does Saul use? What does he prophecy David will become? 3. What pledge does Saul get from David? How did David afterwards remember Saul's family? 4. What son and daughter of Saul played a great part in David's life? How?

Challenge Text. "Be not — of —, but overcome — with —." Rom. 12:(?).

Practical Thoughts. 1. In the caves of adversity and oppression kind deeds shine like beacon lights. 2. How many remarkable deliverances when death fairly cuts our clothing but we are spared! 3. Strange are the turns of fortune; a partridge hunted on the mountains may save the hunter's life. 4. The hand that spares and saves is greater than the heart filled with malice.

DEATH OF SAUL AND JONATHAN.

THE SCRIPTURE LESSON IS 1 SAM. 31:1-13.

Prayer: Lord Jesus, Teach us by the lives of those who fail. May the dark examples warn us, as the bright ones beckon us. May we remember that every dark sin and every bold sinner are but pictures of what we would be except for the grace of God. We thank Thee for the light that has shined into our hearts and for the helps that lead us to the true and right life. Abide with us ever. For Christ's sake. Amen.

"Careless seems the great Avenger; history's pages but record
One death-grapple in the darkness 'twixt old systems and the Word;
Truth forever on the scaffold, wrong forever on the throne,
Yet that scaffold sways the future, and, behind the dim unknown,
Standeth God within the shadow, keeping watch above His own."

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, B. C. 1056. Place, Mountains of Gilboa. Persons, Saul, Jonathan, Saul's armour-bearer, the two armies.

Scripture Setting: Wages of Sin. Trouble and anguish, Job. 15:20-35. False foundations, Matt. 7:13-29. Fate of the wicked, Lev. 26:13-39. Wicked driven away, Prov. 14:16-35. Song of sorrow, Psa. 39:1-13. End of the wicked, Psa. 49:1-20. Judgment certain, Prov. 1:20-33. Brings death, Rom. 6:12-23.

Life and Conduct Setting: What solemn lessons are impressed upon us by the death of Saul: 1. The community of life interest and relationship. If one suffers, many suffer. By his high position Saul pulls down his own family and brings shame and defeat to Israel. 2. The certainty of the Divine threatenings and judgments. For twenty-five years Saul has continued to be king, after he was rejected of God. The Divine sentence passes steadily on to fulfilment. 3. The power of example. This is shown constantly in Saul's life; because of his splendid presence and many strong qualities. Even in his death his armor-bearer is influenced to evil. 4. The sinfulness of the natural man. Saul is a notable instance of it. With the best possible conditions at the start, he at last became murderer and suicide. 5. The impotence of man to guide and keep himself. Only the grace of God can transform character and control lives to the glory of God. 6. The temptation to magnify the present and forget the great future. Saul was more solicitous about the treatment of his body than about the destiny of his soul.

THE SAD END OF A WICKED KING.

How Did It All Begin? Here are pictures of war, defeat, and death, and the king killing himself. What a contrast to the beginning of Saul's reign! Then he was head and shoulders above every one both in physical stature and in opportunities for usefulness. God was with him by His Spirit, and at first he was successful against his enemies. We may well ask how and when did he begin to fall. The answer is found in his disobedience to God's command. If we try to go back of that we may find the beginning in some wish of his, or in a spirit of pride, or even in a desire to make special offerings to God in worship. Whatever it was, it was not following God's command carefully. Something that is good in itself may yet be contrary to God's will and purpose. These turning points of life may often be matters of seemingly small importance. The cheating in a game of sport, the lying about some matter, the doing of something mean and wrong, just because no one was looking. The taking an undue advantage in any way, as deceiving one's teacher in examinations. The temptation to some such sins may come to anyone. The yielding to any of them may start one in an evil course full of terrible consequences. The great lesson in Saul's life is to watch the beginnings of sin.

Sowing and Reaping. History and daily examples are full of illustrations of this law. French nobles sowed cruelty and lust and reaped the Revolution.

American patriarchs sowed the Declaration of Independence and laws perpetuating slavery, side by side, and reaped the Civil War. Every license granted to a liquor dealer, every train run on the Sabbath day, every re-election of a corrupt officeholder, every toleration of vice, is seed sown in productive soil. The widespread intelligence of our country is due to the common school. The rule holds as undeviatingly in ordinary life. "Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap."

Forsaking God and Conscience. Saul had many warnings from his own conscience, from Samúel and from God's Spirit. But he kept on in the evil way, preferring to do his own will, and go his own way. He even went to consult a woman who claimed she could call up spirits from the other world. This was particularly forbidden by God. He did not get any comfort from this, but the messenger God allowed to come up told him that he had lost his kingdom, and that he and his three sons would die the next day. Poor Saul! He forsook God, and God forsook him. So he no longer had guidance and protection from God. How often we learn that if man is just left to himself he goes wrong. A clock or watch needs to be cared for, wound up at the right time and set again and again by the "standard time." This must be done by the man who owns it. Just so the soul of every person must be kept in tune, and in time by God, who both made it and owns it. Conscience is the real clock of the soul, and its very name is a picture of God watching it, winding it and setting it. The name means, "I know with"—that is, I know with God. So the conscience is true and right when we let God care for it all the time. When the conscience says, "Do this," or "Don't do that," we should obey at once, and so we will avoid the beginnings of sin.

Putting Off the Crown. There is a good deal of uncrowning going on these days. Here is a fine young fellow who might have reached lofty heights of influence and power. But the evil of the world was too much for him. He dallied, yielded, was enmeshed of sin, and went the way of death—having put off his crown.

While dining in a restaurant in New York a few weeks ago with three friends another act of uncrowning was witnessed. Across at another table sat a minister and a woman at luncheon. Both were drinking beer! That minister put away his crown when he did that scandalous thing, and that woman also uncrowned herself.—Selected.

Folly and Failure of Sin. When God ceased to help Saul and the Israelites, the Philistines came against them in battle again. This time the Philistines were victorious, as the second and third pictures show. That man they are killing just now looks like Jonathan. The two lying dead are his brothers. Jonathan was a good and noble man, and tried to do all he could to help his father. But the sins of Saul were so many and so great that God had to punish him. In doing so, the good suffered with the guilty. In the fourth picture we see Saul shot at by the archers who had found him. His armor-bearer tries to shield him, but cannot. Sin means a "missing of the mark." True, indeed, in the case of Saul, for he had missed all the splendid opportunities which were given him of God. Every sin has its revenge on the sinner, and on as many others as it can reach in any way. Sin is a failure in a moral sense, but it is wonderfully successful in bringing misery, trouble, peril, and death. It is a seed which grows a large and terrible harvest.

What a Harvest. No, young man, it doesn't hurt you a particle to sow your wild oats. Go ahead and sow as you wish. But it's the gathering in of the crop that will make you howl. And you have to gather it, too. If you don't it gathers you in, and one is a great deal worse than the other.

In a jail at Covington, Indiana, twenty-five men, arrested for drunkenness during the progress of the county fair, made things lively by howling at the passers-by. One fellow shouted: "Look here! this is what you taxpayers get for a little whisky revenue; you have to board twenty-five of us, locked up for drunkenness."—Selected.

False Honor and Pride. This is shown in the last pictures. Saul saw that the battle was lost, and that his three sons were slain, and saw, too, that he was wounded and would fall into the hands of the enemy. What now does he do? He called to his armor-bearer and said, "Draw your sword and kill me, for it is better to die by your hand than to be killed by the Philistines." It was wicked and cowardly for Saul to order his armor-bearer to do this. He would not obey him, and you can see how horrified he looks at the very thought of lifting up his hand against the king. We must honor him for refusing to do so mean an act. Then Saul commits the last act in his sinful life, and almost the worst. He falls on his own sword and so dies by his own hand. We call that suicide, which means killing one's self. It is almost the worst kind of murder, for one has no right to take any life, his own or another's. Saul had just strength enough to lift his face up so we can see it, and it seems to speak a solemn warning to all not to disobey God, and not to begin a life of sin.

The Person to Watch. Do you ever have any struggle with yourself? I do. The ever-present self rarely fails to say, "That's mine," "Give me the best," "Give me the ripest," "Give me the most comfortable seat," "Let me go first," "Certainly I am not to give up my trip," "I know there is not much money in the family purse, but you know I must have a new suit."

Maybe you know nothing of grasping, clamorous self. But I do. And I have to give him some pretty sharp orders, else he gets ugly.—Selected.

Quiz and Study. 1. What was the real reason of Saul's failure in life? 2. What other Saul in the Bible, and what can you tell about him? 3. How many bad traits in Saul can you name?

Challenge Text. "Whatsoever a man ———, that shall he also ———. Gal. 6: (?).

Practical Thoughts. 1. "Saul is a type of carnal leaders of God's people." 2. Saul and his kingdom is a preparation for David and his kingdom. 3. To disobey God is to make shipwreck both of one's future hopes and temporal good. 4. The interdependence of the human family. 5. Even the wicked are made to work out the Divine purpose. 6. Life is a probation, and each one is responsible for his use of it. 7. If we fail in life and fail of Heaven, we have only ourselves to blame. 8. Taking one's own life is cowardly, selfish and sinful.

THE SCRIPTURE LESSON IS 2 SAM. 2:1-11 AND 2 SAM. 5:1-25.

Prayer: Lord Jesus, Thou art King of kings, and Thy will is done in Heaven and in earth. We thank Thee for the royal souls Thou hast given to the world. We rejoice that Thou dost promise kingly traits and crowns to all who will love Thee and obey Thee. Inspire within us a desire for all that is good, true and noble, and by Thy Holy Spirit help us to attain to the same. For Christ's sake. Amen.

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, B. C. 1056. Place, Hebron, 20 miles south of Jerusalem. Persons, David, men of Judah.

Scripture Setting: True Spirit in Success. Watchful of providence, 2 Sam. 2:1-10. Gratitude and prayer, 1 Thes. 5:16-28. Stewards of grace, 1 Pet. 4:1-11. Recognition of others, Eph. 4:20-32. Obedient and faithful, Gal. 5:13-21. Forgiving others, Col. 3:9-17. Conscious accountability, Rom. 14:1-10. A king's homage, Psa. 21:1-7.

Life and Conduct Setting: Now that David has actually reached the throne, let us gather up the steps by which he attained this height of success.

HOW A GOOD KING RULED.

The Last Step to the Throne. Did you ever see your big brother or sister, or some friend graduate from college? He or she has spent years and years, to be ready that day to receive a diploma. It is a proud day for the graduate, and for all the friends. That first picture where David is anointed is like a graduation from college. For many years he has been in the college of life, and now he gets his diploma, which means the throne and the kingdom. As the college graduate goes forth to do his life work, so now David begins to rule as king. For a long time God had purposed that David should be king, and as a shepherd boy he was once anointed. That was when he was about seventeen years old, and now he is about thirty. What a college course that was of thirteen years! In it he was shepherd lad, musician, poet, soldier, statesman, friend, lover of God. These years and experiences and positions have been fitting him for his life work. This college course of life has developed the gifts, graces, and virtues he specially needed. Master teachers he has had, and above all the guidance of God and the power of the Spirit. Then he bows and receives his diploma of anointing, which means that both God and the people unite joyously in declaring him king.

Come Up Higher. One of the best things that Beecher ever said was, "Do the best you can where you are, and when that is accomplished God will open a door to a higher sphere." In actual life this truth is proved to be one of the natural laws in the spiritual world, and in the business world and in the world of scholarship as well.

These opening doors are always above us, and the ladder by which we climb to them is always the same. The rungs are individual duties well per-

1. The gateway of Providence, opening before him by Divine purpose. 2. The gateway of early training, personal and by association. 3. The gateway of a good heart and life. 4. The gateway of opportunity, which is another name for special Providence. 5. The gateway of faith in God and in self. 6. The gateway of humility and personal watchfulness. 7. The gateway of difficulty, opposition and trial. 8. The gateway of choice and holy purpose. 9. The gateway of a strong individuality. 10. The gateway of life's challenge. 11. The gateway of the Holy Spirit, and constant submission to His leading.

formed, and they must be mounted one by one. There is no bounding from the bottom to the top. There is no such thing as ignoring the first rungs because they are near the ground.—Exchange.

First Act of the King. This is shown by the third picture. Those men are running with David's message of blessing and praise to the people who had rescued the body of Saul. In the second picture we see those men lowering the ashes of Saul's body into the grave. The Philistines had treated Saul's body shamefully, and had nailed it to the city wall, to show their contempt. These men of Jabesh remembered Saul's brave deed for them once, so now they went by night and rescued the bodies of Saul and his sons, to give them decent burial. David honors them now for this good and brave act. But even before this official act David had mourned for Saul and Jonathan, and wrote a beautiful song about them. This shows how he forgave Saul, and how greatly he loved Jonathan. Of him he said, "Very pleasant hast thou been to me; thy love to me was wonderful, passing the love of woman." It is called the "song of the bow," and may be found in the first chapter of Second Samuel. This anointing in the picture is at Hebron, as God commanded. Seven years later David is anointed king over all Israel, with Jerusalem as the capital city. He is loved because he is good, kind, helpful, and forgiving.

A Wise Putting Off. "What made you stop right in the middle of your sentence, and then start talking about something entirely different?" The questioner laughed, and her friend joined in as she replied to the puzzled query: "If I think in time, I make it a rule never to say today the mean thing that can be put off until tomorrow," she explained.

"So tomorrow it is out of date, and does not get said at all."—Reformed Church Record.

Kingly Gifts for All. All persons cannot be kings, but all can do kingly deeds; and a kindly deed is a kingly deed. They are nearly the same even in name. The fourth and fifth pictures show two things which every one may have—kindness and truth.

The little girl's feeding the donkey is an act of kindness. The kindness may be shown even to an animal; but the beauty of the act is that it is a picture of a kind heart. Then all may be true, and may and should speak the truth, even as God does. Kindness and truth are like crowns on one's head; and to be kind and true are kingly and queenly acts. These qualities David always had, so it was easy for him to show them after he was really king. Now it is well to remember two things about these kingly qualities. One is that every one is pleased to see them in others and is glad to have others believe that he, too, has them. No one wants to be thought unkind or untrue. The other thing that needs to be specially remembered is that it is very easy to lose these bright crowns of kindness and truth. I fear that it is specially easy for boys and girls to uncrown themselves, either by a sharp, harsh, and selfish manner, or by an untrue word or act, which is deceiving in some way. "Hold that fast which thou hast, that no man take thy crown."

What Anyone Can Do. Did you ever stop to think how beautiful kindness really is? In your walks have you ever met a young woman gently supporting on her arm an old, old man? He is blind. Time has brought silver to his hair. His steps are slow and feeble. With a cane he picks his way on, all the way guided and directed by the one who is so good to him. At the crossing of a street she says, "Here is a step up. Careful now! Step up!" or, "Now down! Carefully!" So on they go, chatting all the way, the old man seeing things on every side through the eyes of his companion. And how your heart was stirred by the sight.

Which Portrait Are You Painting? I am thinking of those last two pictures. What a striking contrast! Saul lies dead, slain by his own hand; his life a failure, and now his soul has gone to be judged. David sits a king, chosen and favored of God, respected and loved by the people. Every one is painting a life portrait; and in many respects it will be one or the other of these pictures. Every day one is adding either bright or dark lines to the portrait. This life painting will show in one's face and actions, and the walk and companions chosen. But most of all, it will tell when it cannot be seen so easily—in the choices and desires, in the purposes and motives.

Here is where the painting is permanent and enduring. There is a hymn which you sometimes hear sung, "Where Will You Spend Eternity?" The answer will be according to the way we are painting our inward characters.

Did you ever attend an unveiling, when the curtain was drawn from a finished painting or statue? Every eye is fixed on the moving curtain, and at last there is the painting complete. The great judgment day is the unveiling of souls before God and the world. Then it will be known to all, and shown to all, which kind of a portrait you have been painting in and by our life. Now turn away from the pictures of Saul, so sad in its dark and gloomy lines. Look upon and think of David, with his harp by his side, and with his heart full of gratitude to God. I am sure he is thinking of the way God has led him and kept him, and has at least given him the kingdom and throne. As he thinks of it all, we can almost hear him say, "With God's help I'll be true and kind—true to God and His law, kind and good to all the people." And while you have looked at David and thought of him and rejoiced with him, you have been choosing him as your model, and have actually painted a bright line or two on your soul portrait. Jesus Christ has died for us, so that it is possible for us to be made beautiful and perfect in Him. He also has sent His Spirit to keep the model before us and even to hold and guide our hand as we paint. "And so we are changed into the same image from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord."

Helping Others to Be Good. It was said of one of the best men of our generation, "Whenever he entered a room of any kind the conversation that was going on and the discussion, immediately sprang up to a far higher level than it was before." And to this added, "Men thought their best and spoke their best in his presence." What worthier commendation could any man have?

Quiz and Study. 1. How many times was David anointed? 2. Tell what you can of each anointing. 3. Which tribe first acknowledged David's claim? 4. How long before David became king of all Israel? 5. Name six traits of character in David. 6. What was the chief secret of his success?

Challenge Text. "But God is the judge; He ——— down one and ——— another." Psa. 75: (9).

Practical Thoughts: 1. David prayed when in peril and so now in success. 2. We should obey God and also use all precaution and tact. 3. Success always brings special perils and burdens. 4. Even a king can afford to be just, respectful and generous. 5. David knew God's promises, and therefore he waited. 6. Respect for the dead should not interfere with the rights of the living. 7. David is a lesson of inspiration as Saul is one of warning.

Prayer: Dear Lord, May we look from David, king over all Israel, to Christ, the Son of David, whose Kingdom is the world, and whose reign shall continue world without end.

May we be obedient servants of Thine, so that as Thou didst use David, Thou mayest use us for the advancement of Thy Kingdom.

May we so live and strive that our service may be acceptable to Thee, and that Thou shalt be ever with us. For Thy name's sake. Amen.

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Time, B. C. 1048. Place, Hebron, David's first capital. Persons, David and the elders of Israel.

Scripture Setting: David a Type of Christ. A native of Bethlehem, 1 Sam. 16:1. The Shepherd, Psa. 78:70, 71; John 10:14. Prophetic vision, Acts 2:29-32. King of Israel, 1 Sam. 16:13; John 1:49. Messiah called David, Ezek. 34:23, 24. Acknowledged by Christ, Rev. 22:16.

Life and Conduct Setting: The story of David's final anointing as king of Israel teaches many lessons. 1. The fulfillment of Samuel's prophecy. 2. God's providence in dealing with His servants. 3. The elders of Israel are used to fulfill His word. 4. The Jebusites could not withstand the power of God's anointed. 5. The presence of the God of Hosts made David great. 6. David was not exalted for his own glory, but for Israel's sake.

A KING'S CORONATION.

A Great Holiday. For days great trains of camels, asses, mules and oxen laden with all manner of provisions had been climbing the hillside to Hebron, and an army of nearly three hundred and fifty thousand representatives from the twelve tribes of Israel, had gathered within the modest capital of David and its environments. They poured into the city from far and near; no less than a hundred and twenty thousand men from across the Jordan. The multitude had come to see a king crowned. It was to be a great national holiday—a three-days' festival. Never before or since has there been such a coronation. Though we may be little interested in kings, this coronation is of more consequence to us than any other act of history save one. More than six hundred years before their day the rule of Judah had been foretold. When the dying patriarch declared that "The sceptre shall not depart from Judah, nor a law giver from between his feet until Shiloh come," Jacob uttered a mighty prophecy, and the beginning of its fulfillment was the coronation of David; its completion the pierced form of the Son of David, hanging upon a cross bearing the superscription, The King of the Jews. For David, shepherd, prophet and king, born in Bethlehem and of the line of Judah, was the precursor and type of Christ; His coronation a guarantee of the coming of the Lion of Judah. Chosen by God, anointed by Samuel, David was now to be elected by the people. Thus God, His priests and people work together for good government.

Their Common Brotherhood. "Behold, we are thy bone and thy flesh," was the declaration of those who spoke for the tribes of Israel. For five years after the tragic death of king Ishbosheth, Israel had no ruler and the whole country was in a state of lawlessness akin to anarchy. The situation was desperate; instead of conquering and possessing the land as God intended, their condition invited attack and at any moment they might fall into the cruel hands of the Philistines.

David had been regarded as a "man of blood" because of the cruel excesses committed by some of his followers. But as time wore on, it became evident that David was in nowise accountable for these tragic acts. Indeed he had repudiated them and severely punished the perpetrators. For seven years Israel had been going from bad to worse, while under David's wise rule Judah prospered. With the Philistines Israel had nothing in common, and from them they might expect nothing, save the barbarities which the heathen always inflicted upon their enemies. But David was of their own stock, bone of their bone, flesh of their flesh. In their extremity the leading men of Israel decided to put aside prejudice and appeal to David. For is not blood thicker than water? The people ratified the decision of the elders with enthusiasm, and each tribe vied with the others in sending great delegations to Hebron to witness the coronation of David as Israel's king. They came not as slaves or vassals, "We are thy bone and thy flesh." Thus David was reminded of the common brotherhood between ruler and people, which should be acknowledged by all in authority.

Thus Saith the Lord. They had followed David's leadership before. Many of those who came to Hebron had fought for Saul under David. They recognized their captain of other days, and with true soldier loyalty renewed their allegiance to their former commander: When they had returned from those famous victories over the Philistines, had not their women sang, "Saul hath slain his thousands, and David his ten thousands?" Ah, their blood tingled with the old enthusiasm, and huzzahs rent the air, when their spokesman referred to the former days when they had marched together under the leadership of David, their captain.

But had they been moved to choose a king by no other motive than kinship and fighting comradeship? Were the elders so proud of the approval which the people had set upon their judgment, that they were now congratulating themselves on their wise choice? Did no one remember when the hand of God's gaunt old prophet was laid upon the head of a beautiful ruddy-cheeked shepherd lad to anoint him king of Israel? Slowly the people gather round their spokesman, and a solemn hush falls upon the vast crowd, when as though he would remind David of the sacred responsibility they are now imposing on him, words are spoken that recall to the candidate for coronation, that mysterious and wonderful day of his boyhood. "And the Lord thy God said unto thee, Thou shalt feed my people Israel, and thou shalt be ruler over my people Israel." David was God's anointed king. Every event of their national history: Saul's defeat and death, the cutting off of his line, those years without leadership, were all but events in the fulfilment of prophecy; all had worked out the will of God.

A Defi Accepted. The patriotism of David's followers was soon put to a test. Situated on the edge of the precipitous mountain wall that bounds the Jordan valley to the west, stood the city of Jebus. It was a national fortress surrounded on three sides by rock-ribbed ravines, so steep and so deep as to be impassible. Even the one remaining side was hardly open to attack. Encircled by beautiful valleys and enthroned above the Jordan, this rock girt city formed a strategic point which it was absolutely necessary to gain and to hold if the reunited kingdom were to hold its own against its enemies.

The Jebusites relied on the strong position of their city and rested in fancied security, even sending a contemptuous defiance to the besiegers. "Except thou take away the blind and the lame, thou shalt not come in hither." Even their feeblest men, the blind and the lame, could defend such a fortress against David's army! It was a foolish boast, for David was aware of the secret tunnels that honeycombed the city, and accepting their insulting defiance, he promised the office of commander of the king's forces to the man who should enter the fortifications of the city by means of these underground passages.

It was a dangerous undertaking, but Joab volunteered and the stronghold of Zion was taken, and it became the "City of David"—Jerusalem, the capital of the nation. David sang of its beauty in some of the sublimest of the Psalms, calling it the "City of our God in the mountain of His holiness," "Beautiful in elevation and the joy of the whole earth." Enthroned in the mountains, its strongholds of defense God-made, it has become to Christians the type of Christ's Church on earth and His Kingdom in Heaven.

For His People's Sake. "And David went on and grew great, and the Lord God of hosts was with him." In these simple words the chronicler gives us the real secret of true greatness. Even before Samuel sought him out from among his brethren to anoint him king of Israel, the shepherd lad had learned to trust God for his own protection and that of his flock. Twenty years had passed since then and David had shown his greatness not only in the killing of Goliath and in deeds of military prowess, but in fortitude under affliction, in generous forbearance toward his enemies, in loyalty to his friends, succor to the weak and helpless, beneficence to the poor, regard for his parents and their people.

And now lifted to the throne, receiving homage and gifts from kings, David manifests his greatness through the humility which enables him to perceive that God has not taken him from the sheep cote to place him on a throne for his own self gratification, but that he has been exalted for his people, Israel's, sake. He recognized that he was not made a king for his own pleasure, but for the good of others. The care which as a lad he had exercised over his flock, he would now exercise in behalf of his people. David would be a shepherd king.

Practical Thoughts. 1. The ruler and his people are of the same clay. 2. God always knows His man. 3. No city can withstand the power of God's anointed. 4. Boasting is a poor defense. 5. God's presence is the secret of true greatness. 6. In the end the world honors the man whom God honors. 7. Only the strong in the Lord can take the stronghold of Zion. 8. God never enriches for man's selfish pleasure. 9. The highest office is merely a trusteeship. 10. God made the sheep cote a testing place for the throne. If David had neglected his sheep, he would never have been chosen to feed the people.

DAVID BRINGS UP THE ARK.

THE SCRIPTURE PASSAGE II SAMUEL 6:1-19. ALSO READ I CHRON 13-15.

Prayer: Dear Lord, May we not lay irreverent hands upon that which is sacred. Keep us from irreverence and disobedience and may we learn that true service consists in doing Thy will. May we serve Thee with joy and be filled with the spirit of praise. Thine be the glory. Amen.

"We'll crowd Thy gates with thankful songs,
High as the heavens our voices raise;
And earth, with her ten thousand tongues,
Shall fill Thy courts with sounding praise."

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, B. C. 1042. Place, Gibeah or Kirjath-jearim, a hill city of Judah. Persons, David, Uzzah, Obed-Edom and Michal, David's wife.

Scripture Setting: The Ark of God. The design, Ex. 25:10-16. Purpose of the ark, Ex. 25:22. Carried over Jordan, Josh. 3:15-17. The ark at Jericho, Josh. 6:11. The ark taken, 1 Sam. 4:17. The ark in Heaven, Rev. 11:19.

Life and Conduct Setting: From this passage of Scripture we may learn many lessons concerning true worship. 1. True piety is shown in David's desire to rescue the ark of God from neglect. 2. Ignorance is blended with the king's religious zeal and God's explicit directions are disregarded. 3. David and his chosen men possess the joy of religion without its spirit of obedience. 4. There was sufficient enthusiasm but not enough confidence in God to entrust to Him the protection of His own.

A KING'S LESSON.

A Sacred Treasure. Is there anyone whose enthusiasm has not been thrilled by the story of The Quest of the Holy Grail? While they braved no dangers and they journeyed not to a far country, the rescue of the ark of God was attended with much of the same enthusiasm and exaltation that characterized those romantic pilgrimages of the Middle Ages. There was the same display of military pomp, and king David and his cavalcade were moved by the same religious fervor.

The ark of God was not only the sacred chest in which reposed the two tables of the law, but to Israel it was as the very throne of God. For on it rested the mercy seat overshadowed by the holy cherubim above which God manifested His presence and delivered his oracles. Here atonement was made for the sins of the people. Could one imagine an object of greater veneration to God's chosen people? Yet strange to say, for seventy years the sacred ark had been forgotten. King Saul had not even had it placed in the tabernacle which he set up at Nob, but had permitted it to lie neglected and forgotten in the house of Abinadab in Kirjath-jearim.

A Royal Council. Often during Saul's reign had David grieved over the neglect of the ark and the growing irreligion of the people. For David loved God and all things pertaining to His worship; he would rather hold the humblest office in God's house than to fill the loftiest place the world had to offer. Shortly after he was king of Israel he proposed to restore the ark of God to its place as the center of national worship. He sent a call throughout the land for an assemblage of chosen men. Every village and hamlet responded to the king's call and sent her best and bravest men, and when David explained his purpose, nobles, priests, Levites and warriors volunteered their service.

An Enthusiastic Pilgrimage. Thirty thousand chosen men of Israel joined the pilgrimage, led by the king and his musicians. With neither prayer nor sacrifice they started to take the ark of God. The journey to the house of Abinadab was one of unbroken joy. Here many of the pilgrims first saw the sacred ark. It was a costly thing, made of shittim wood overlaid with gold. The mercy seat which rested on it was of gold also, as were the cherubim above, whose outspread wings were of beaten gold. Large rings of gold at each corner held the strong staves of shittim wood overlaid with gold by which the ark was to be carried. It was too holy to be committed to horses or oxen. Jehovah had commanded that it should be borne upon staves or the shoulders of chosen men among the Levites, who were warned of God not to touch it "lest they die." But alas, not one of these thirty thousand picked men of Israel remembered this. All were ignorant of this explicit law concerning the ark.

The Levites should have known that it was not only their duty but a privilege to bear the ark. Or were they all proud of their ceremonial indifference and did they think to serve God acceptably in their own way? Truly a people so ignorant and indifferent to the laws and ordinances of their national religion needed to learn a lesson of reverence for the God who had raised them from bondage to nationhood.

An Act of Astounding Irreverence. They could think of no greater way to honor the true God than to worship Him according to heathen rites. So they would transport the ark just as the Philistines carried their gods of wood and stone, and copying Philistine custom they procured a new cart drawn by oxen. We may trust David's zeal that that cart and oxen were equal to any equipage used at heathen festivals. Did they not know that obedience is better than sacrifice? David was soon to learn a lesson which should enable him to truly declare, "How love I Thy law; it is my meditation all the day." "Thy commandments are ever with me."

Tragic as it was, can any lesson be too costly that teaches the people obedience and establishes a nation on the enduring basis of reverence for God's law? The ark had been neglected during all the seventy years it had lain in the house of Abinadab, but now his descendants, Uzzah and Ahio, played a conspicuous part in the proceedings. Ahio walked before the ark as it was borne out of the house, and the two brothers proudly drove the cart. How much more acceptable their service had they obeyed God's ordinance and borne the ark on their own shoulders.

The entire multitude burst into song accompanied by the sweet strains of the harp and psaltery, the sound of the timbrel and stirring tones of cornet and clash of cymbals. In confidence they chanted:

"Let God arise, let His enemies be scattered," not knowing that a disobedient heart is God's chiefest enemy. Without understanding, they sang:

"Worship the Lord in the beauty of holiness." And yet so great is God's mercy that He forbore to show forth His displeasure at the affront which they either ignorantly or carelessly offered Him. Onward swings the great religious procession, crossing fields and threshing floors. At one of these the oxen stumbled, shaking the ark. True faith would have assured them that the One who had deigned to manifest His presence above the ark, would preserve it from evil. Had Uzzah been accustomed to reverence the ark when it was in his home, the habit of a lifetime would have restrained him now. But, alas, Uzzah put forth his hand to stay the ark. No lightning flash could have descended more swiftly than judgment descended upon impious Uzzah. He died by the ark of God.

The Pilgrimage Abandoned. David, who wanted things to go his own way, was displeased and even dared to question the judgment of God. Could God have spared Uzzah and kept His own word inviolate we may be sure Israel would have been taught the lesson of obedience and reverence less tragically. But it was four hundred and fifty years since God's warning had sounded forth, and the Word of God changes not. The faith that had feared neither lion nor giant faltered, and for the first time David was afraid of God. He gave up the enterprise he had entered upon with so much joy and abandoned the ark.

But there was one who received it with reverence and godly fear. Obed-Edom, the Gittite, welcomed the ark to his house and it was left in his keeping. He was a Levite of the sons of Korah, a branch of the Kohathites whom God had designated to bear the ark, and gladly Obed-Edom assumed the duty which was his by inheritance. And, glorious reward, blessings such as they had never before experienced attended Obed-Edom and his household. Parents and children rested happy under the blessed Presence, servants sought their master's interest as never before, and thus served their own; field and vineyard bore abundant harvest during the three happy months that the ark dwelt in the house.

The Second Pilgrimage. When David was informed of the blessing which had followed Obed-Edom, he decided to make a second pilgrimage for the ark. But before starting the king acquainted himself with all of God's law concerning the ark and religiously carried out every detail. Priests and Levites sanctified themselves for the performance of duty; sacrifice was offered when they started with the ark from Obed-Edom's house, and God's blessing was besought upon the movement. They were led by eight hundred and sixty-two Levites clad in white, with their instruments of music. No heathen cart and oxen carried the ark, but it was borne upon the shoulders of Levites, and attended by seven priests blowing silver trumpets; following it were two doorkeepers, one of whom was Obed-Edom. Last of all came the king clad not in royal garments, but in the white robe and linen ephod of those who served God. They entered the gates of Jerusalem singing David's song.

"Lift up your heads, O ye gates,
And be ye lifted up, ye everlasting doors,
That the King of Glory may come in."

And David, not as king, but as priest and prophet, offered sacrifice and blessed the people in the name of the Lord of Hosts, who is the King of Glory. What though Michal looked down on the scene and despised her lord as he danced before the ark in spiritual exaltation, and led the people in their joyful worship? It was the greatest day of David's life and no less than eleven of David's Psalms were written in commemoration of it. On that day, the law was vindicated, reverence restored and obedience to God enthroned in Jerusalem.

Quiz and Study. 1. What did the ark represent? 2. Name one other act of sacrilege mentioned in the Bible. 3. Could Israel expect to please God while they disobeyed His law? 4. Was Michal's contempt justified?

Practical Thoughts. 1. Many persons think to serve God in their own way. 2. Emotionalism is not always religious zeal. 3. The family altar is the ark of God in the home. 4. Disobedience is disloyalty. 5. Obedience brings its own blessing. 6. Reverence and obedience to the laws of God are an enduring foundation for any nation. 7. There is nothing more contemptible than contempt.

GOD'S COVENANT WITH DAVID

Now therefore so shalt thou say unto my servant

I will set up thy seed

He shall build an

THE SCRIPTURE PASSAGE IS II SAM. 7:1-17.

Prayer: Heavenly Father, We thank Thee for Thy covenants of old, and we rejoice that Thy promises to Noah, Abraham, Jacob, Moses and David were fulfilled in Thy Son, whose throne Thou hast established forever. We rejoice that Thou dost still care for Thy people everywhere, and that Thy Word never fails. May we trust Thee and seek the upbuilding of Thy house and Thy Kingdom. Establish our hearts that we may keep Thy covenant. For Thy name's sake. Amen.

"Tell of His wondrous faithfulness,
And sound His power abroad;
Sing the sweet promises of His grace,
And the performing God.

His very word of grace is strong
As that which built the skies;
The voice that rolls the stars along Speaks all the promises."

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, B. C. 1040. Place, Jerusalem. Persons, David and Nathan, a prophet.

Scripture Setting: An Eternal Kingdom. Established, Psa. 89:35-37. Without end, Isa. 9:6-7. Imperishable, Dan. 2:44. Eternal, Isa. 60:21-22. The Kingdom the Lord's, Obad. 1:21. Christ the King, Luke 1:31-33.

Life and Conduct Setting: God's covenant with David shows forth His tenderness, wisdom and faithfulness. 1. David's wonderful success does not cause him to forget God. 2. He holds not only his kingship but his possessions as belonging to God. 3. God commends David's purpose though He does not grant David's desire. 4. God unfolds His Divine plan to David. 5. Makes it plain that the time for a permanent habitation for God has not arrived. 6. Promises David that his son shall build God's house. 7. Blesses the king and promises protection and forgiveness to his descendants. 10. Points onward to Christ, the Son of David, whose Kingdom is eternal.

AN ENDURING KINGDOM.

No Life Without a Plan. Life is so bewildering that it has been likened to a maze, but just as every maze is only the development of a carefully arranged plan, so the confusion and surprises of life are the fulfillment of God's great plan. The California tourist who visits the beautiful grounds that surround the Hotel Del Monte invariably strays into the Maze and soon is lost in its mysterious windings, only recovering his bearing after a long period of aimless wandering. Some become so hopelessly bewildered that they are compelled to remain in the Maze until eventide, when the gardener, who alone knows the plan, comes to guide those who may be imprisoned there, through its exits into the open. So at eventide the Gardener comes to the bewildered ones of life's maze and guides them into the open.

But to David was vouchsafed the privilege of having the maze of life unfolded to him by its great Architect and Designer. For with infinite patience and tenderness did God through Nathan's vision, disclose His plans to His servant, David. God deposed his enemies and God guided his feet into paths of greatness, and when David should emerge from life's maze into the open, God's care would follow the footsteps of his descendants. However devious their windings, they should not be cut off, for God had planned to establish David's throne forever.

A Stately Palace. To the simple Israelites, king David's house was a marvel of architecture and grandeur, for even in the cities the people of those days lived chiefly in tents. Only the wealthy could afford houses and these were built of the native sycamore wood, while the royal palace was built of hewn cedar logs. Now cedar is soft in color and pleasing to the eye. It has a pungent, pleasant odor, and the resin it contains preserves it from the attacks of insects, making it very durable. It was also very costly, for it did not grow in their own country, but had to be imported from Tyre, the wood being a gift from his friend, Hiram, king of Tyre.

Though Israel possessed many skilled workers in the earlier days, and could boast of her jewelers, weavers, wood carvers and fine artisans, during the years of Philistine domination, no Israelite was permitted to use the simplest tools, and the nation had so lost its skill that David was compelled to send to Tyre for carpenters and masons to erect and adorn his house.

A King's Gratitude. Some men forget God in their prosperity, but good fortune and success only drew David nearer to the Giver of all these blessings. David had known cold and hunger. He knew what it was to be homeless, and in danger. Now he could sit quietly in this beautiful palace and meditate. Did he meditate in selfish content on his changed fortune and congratulate himself on his rapid rise in the world? Did he plan still greater victories and more dreadful carnage? Was he planning how to secure the throne to his descendants and build up a great dynasty? Ah, no selfish consideration occupied the shepherd king's thought. Prosperity incites him to higher service. As he looks at the durable walls of his palace, its comforts and adornment, David is struck by the contrast between his house and the tent which sheltered the ark of God. He can see the tent as he looks out of the window and a holy ambition seizes him to erect an enduring building to hold the ark of God, and which might be used as a temple of worship—a building whose magnitude and magnificence should accord with the purpose for which it was to be used.

Nathan's Vision. The lesson which David learned in bringing the ark to Jerusalem has not been forgotten. He no longer impulsively undertakes a service for God, but first seeks advice and counsel from Nathan. Of Nathan we know nothing except that he is David's close friend and counsellor. The perfect frankness and equality that marked the relationship indicates an intimacy of long standing. Perhaps in their early youth they were students together at Naioth, where both were instructed in the law by Samuel. When conversing as man to man, certainly Nathan manifested no fear in the royal presence, but when they met as prophet and king, David the king stood in awe of Nathan the prophet. Nathan did not always possess prophetic vision, and when consulted by the king, not only did he commend David's plan, but he mistakenly avowed God's approval of the project, saying, "Go and do all that is in thine heart; for the Lord is with thee." Which only goes to prove how two good men may err in judgment and zeal, and how Christian people may and do sometimes confuse their own desire with God's will.

A Vision of the Night. In the quiet of his home, God appeared to Nathan in a vision, to overrule David's purpose. So compassionate is God that the refusal to accede to the wishes of His earthly child is accompanied with infinite tenderness. He speaks of David as "My servant," a term applied to few persons in the Bible, and then only to those commissioned like Moses, to do a great work for God. Thus the very first words of God's refusal inspire hope.

David's ambition was noble, his desire unselfish, but they did not accord with God's eternal purpose. David saw the present need only, while the calm survey of One to whom a thousand years are as a night's watch, extended throughout eternity. He pointed out to David that through all His dealings with Israel, God had a purpose and through all their affliction in Egypt, in their desert wanderings and entrance to the promised land, this purpose was being gradually worked out. Even David's own life had been controlled by God. The same power which had placed him in the sheep cote had exalted him to rulership.

Rest from their enemies was promised to David and God's people. Nation and individual were alike under the protection of an all-wise Providence. It would soon be time for the building of God's house; not, however, in David's day, but during the reign of a son who should be born to him, would the temple be erected. And as David had been a man of war, this son should be a man of peace, and during an era of peace the temple of the Prince of Peace should be erected.

An Everlasting Promise. And then the promise was made to David of an everlasting dynasty. He had not been called to the throne as Saul only to be cast down, for "Thine house and thy kingdom shall be established forever." It was a progressive covenant, referring first to David, then to Solomon his son, after that to David's remotest descendants, and then finally to Christ, the true Son of David, the Messiah of God. It was a wonderful promise, embodying all and more than David had dared hope or desire. It would have satisfied an oriental monarch to know that his throne should be preserved to his posterity. It would have satisfied a Hebrew to know that his people were to be preserved, but God's mercy so exceeds man's desire that He is ever giving more than we dare to ask.

David would go the way of his fathers; his sons would reign after him. They would sin against Jehovah, be chastened and forgiven. For a lapse of years David's house and the temple built by his son would be unused and his people, Israel, pass into captivity. But the root and offspring of David would reappear as a Bright and Morning Star, and all the world should come under its effulgent rays.

As Nathan unfolded his vision to the king, God's refusal of his desire, hurt David, but he was content that God's purpose should be upheld. Though he dimly understood God's covenant, all his life through down to old age, he sang of the Lord's promises, and the last whispered words of the dying David were, "He hath made with me an everlasting covenant, ordered in all things and sure."

Quiz and Study. 1. When and by whom was the temple built? 2. Did David have any part in its erection? 4. Who accomplished its first restoration? 5. Who restored it for the second time? 6. What prophecy did Christ make concerning the temple that the Jews considered blasphemous? 7. Does God always give us our desire?

Challenge Text. Delight thyself also in the — and — shall — thee the — of thine —. Psa. 37:(?).

Practical Thoughts. 1. The difference between the good and the evil man is shown in his thoughts. 2. Success is oft-times the acid test of character. 3. God's plans for us are always better than our desire. 5. The fighting man tears down and destroys many evils, but the building of God's church is done by the man of peace. 6. A man's promise can only span a lifetime, but God's promises abide from the beginning to the end of time. 7. We are all builders of God's temple.

THE SCRIPTURE LESSON IS 2 SAM. 9:1-13.

Prayer: Lord Jesus, How Thou hast surprised us by Thy love and grace! At Thy table of salvation are the lame, the halt, the blind, now made perfect in Thy life and love. May we seek to imitate Thy goodness and grace. Give to us the Christ life and the Christ spirit. May we realize that every blessing we enjoy is calling on us to seek and bless the needy elsewhere. Help us to respond to the call and pass the blessing on. For Christ's sake. Amen.

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, B. C. 1040. Place, Jerusalem. Persons, David, Mephibosheth, Jonathan's son, and Ziba, Saul's servant.

Scripture Setting: Life Friendships. David and Jonathan, 1 Sam. 18:1-12. Jonathan and David, 1 Sam. 20:1-17. Forsake not a friend, Prov. 27:1-12. Born for adversity, Prov. 17:1-17. Memory of friends, Job. 29:1-16. Friends by serving, John 14:15-23. Love of Christ, Eph. 3:8-19. His life for his friends, John 15:1-16.

Life and Conduct Setting: This lesson tells some things which friendship means and does. 1. Friend-

"The quality of mercy is not strain'd;
It droppeth, as the gentle rain from Heaven
Upon the place beneath; it is twice bless'd;
It blesseth Him that gives and him that takes;
'Tis mightiest in the mightiest; it becomes ship remembers vows and pledges. It treasures the bright pictures of the past. 2. Friendship is not satisfied until it brings an offering to the one loved. 3. Friendship inquires, seeks, plans, persists, until it finds the friend. 4. Friendship has a quick memory of past blessings and a grateful heart to return them. 5. Friendship is enduring and vital, through many years and changing conditions. 6. Friendship has to do with heart and character, and therefore is not stopped by any men, outward failure or defeat. 7. Friendship forgives any failure of the past—forgives that it may bless the more fully and freely.
The throned monarch better than his crown."

A CRIPPLE AT A KING'S TABLE.

The Wheel of Life. "He used to be very well off, but now he has lost all." Again and again you can hear a remark like that, about some one you know, or that you may know of. If it is not a change of fortune, it may be of friends or of influence. Sometimes, of two particular persons, one may go up and another go down, by this turning of the wheel of life. That came near being the case here, as shown by the first picture. You remember that, in the story of Jonathan, and there is a picture of it something like this: Only a few years have passed, and now Jonathan's son is bowing down to David. His name is Mephibosheth, which means "contender against idols." If he was true to his name he was a good man, but he was lame in both of his feet. That was caused by his nurse letting him fall when he was a babe. She was fleeing with him at the time of the battle when Jonathan was slain. His life was saved, but he never could be cured of his lameness.

How does he come to be here before David? I am glad you asked that question, for to answer it makes us think of how David fulfilled his vow of friendship made to Jonathan. Since David became king he had been very busy doing all he could for his people. Then there were wars that took his time and thought. He was victorious over his enemies, and now he had come to a time of peace and quiet. One day he remembered his pledge to Jonathan, that he would always be a friend to his children. Learning about Mephibosheth, he sent for him, and now they meet in these changed conditions. God whispered to David and made him think of that pledge. God always turns the wheel of life.

How a Spider Saved a King. Frederick the Great, king of Prussia, was saved from death by a spider, according to a story people tell. They say that the king was at luncheon and was about to drink some chocolate when a spider dropped from the ceiling into the cup. The king sent for another cup and the attendant returned immediately to say that the cook had shot himself. It was afterward found that the cook had poisoned the chocolate and that when the second cup had been sent for he believed that his act had been found out.—Argus.

What All the World Needs. Can you think of any one thing which the world needs, and which every one needs? I believe it is safe to say that it is kindness. It may not be the most important thing, but very often it will lead to the more important things. And without kindness it is almost impossible to reach people with those more important blessings. That second picture is suggestive of how the kindly act may be done even towards the brute creation. If this were a moving picture, I am sure the dog's tail would be wagging in gratitude for the cooling drink the young man is giving him. The animal world is quick to learn who are friendly and kind, and the wildest animals can often be tamed by kindness. Sometimes we have seen men and boys, and occasionally a girl and woman, who were like animals, and who could be best cured and managed by kindness. But this was the kindness of friendship, and the world is ever needing that.

The world is full of cripples of many kinds—by loss of property, of friends, of positions, of hope and courage. To such, an act of kindness is refreshing and encouraging. And do you know that we have each one, as it were, pledged that we would try to be helpful. Too often we forget these pledges, as David did, for a time, and then the cripples are neglected. Can you think of some one just now that you could help in some way? Even if you make some sacrifice in order to do it, the help will be more appreciated, and you will be the gladder for.

Help Needed at Once. You saw a sad face to-day and wondered why it was sad. Or you knew the secret, it may be, and resolved to speak a kind, sympathetic word, but the hour passed, and the sad face was lost in the crowd. Think what that means. "I won't neglect another opportunity," you say. Well, be it so; but in that particular place there will be a little niche of forlorn silence. Suppose that burdened heart had been lightened and had carried its message of good cheer to another and another and another. The wires were stretched—a whole network of them—but you did not turn on the current, and now the lever is beyond your reach.—Exchange.

The Blessing of a Good Father. David and Jonathan were friends, but it was because both were good. Now, Mephibosheth gets the benefit of having a good father. The wise man says that "a good name is rather to be chosen than great riches." So, too, a good father and mother are far better than a fortune. When David was thinking over the past, he could not help seeing the face of Jonathan, so good and true to him in his time of need. Then all at once he said to himself, "Why, I promised to be a friend to his children always. I wonder if he left any?" He found an old servant of Saul, by the name of Ziba, and he asked him, "Are there any of Saul's family living? For I want to show kindness to him." Ziba thought a minute, and then said, "Why, yes; Saul's son Jonathan left a cripple boy. He is now a man, and living at Lodebar, east of Jordan." When David summoned him to the palace, perhaps Mephibosheth feared that he would be killed, for that was often done when there was a change of kings. But here is what David said to him: "Mephibosheth, you need not fear. I will be kind to you because I loved Jonathan, your father, and he loved me." He also said, "You shall have all the lands that belonged to Saul and his family, and you shall always sit at my table in the royal palace. See pictures three and four.

He then told Ziba to look after the estate and report all to Mephibosheth. Wasn't that a noble thing for David to do? And wasn't it a great blessing that Mephibosheth had a good father? A good friend is a great inheritance, and you can have a good friend only by being good, and by being friendly. "He that would have friends must show himself friendly."

How Friendship Helps. How great a help such a friendship is in life's mysterious journey no words can describe without the appearance of extravagance.

"What is the secret of your life?" asked Mrs. Browning of Charles Kingsley. "Tell me, that I may make mine beautiful too."

He replied, "I had a friend."

What reverence there was in that reply! What a tribute to the inspiration of a noble friend! Let no one friend think that there is gain in condoning failure on the part of the other. There may be sympathy in failure, tender, loving words of consolation, assurances of unbroken amity; but there must be no hesitation in helping to correct the wrong-doing and keep the soul clean.—F. B. Meyer.

"I Am Not Worthy." If you were asked to name the most beautiful quality in man or woman, I wonder what you would name? Well, at least, one of the most beautiful qualities is humility. David had this grace and he showed it on many occasions. Mephibosheth had it also. That act of bowing down to the king was partly because of his humility and modesty; it may have been partly in fear. But after David tells him to fear not, and plans for him to have his old estate and sit at the king's table, Mephibosheth shows his humility most clearly. He says, "What is thy servant that thou should'st look upon such a dead dog?" The picture of the dead dog means that Mephibosheth feels that he is useless to David, and so he is surprised at his kindness. Humility is not only a beautiful grace, but, when true, it is one of the best qualifications for usefulness. False humility says, "I am not worthy, and therefore I will not try." True humility says, "I am not worthy, but I will try."

Quiz and Study. 1. What happened once to a cripple, laid at a beautiful gate?" 2. Tell about a table Christ spread in a wilderness. 3. Read the beautiful verse about Christ supping with those who receive him. Rev. 3:20. 4. At what church table does Christ say, "Take, eat?" 5. How did David come to think of Mephibosheth? 6. What great Friend should we all remember?

Challenge Text. Thine own ———, and thy ——— friend, forsake not." Prov. 27: (1).

Practical Thoughts. 1. Children enter into blessings which parents have made possible. 2. We should ever be mindful of the obligations of friendship. 3. Our kindness to others should be prompted and measured by God's kindness to us. 4. "For Jonathan's sake" suggests and illustrates the words "for Christ's sake." 5. The seed of a true friendship will produce a lifetime harvest of good. 6. The friendship of Christ is most vital and most fruitful of good.

THE SCRIPTURE LESSON IS 2 SAM. 15:1-15.

Prayer: Lord Jesus, Keep us from all that is low and mean and base. Guard Thou all the gateways of heart and life that we may not defile or be defiled. Specially wilt Thou cleanse the heart fountain of all evil thought and desire. Put Thine own Spirit in both as guest and host. So will we love Thee, serve and worship Thee. So will we be kept from sin and glorify Thee before the world. In Christ's name. Amen.

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, B. C. 1023. Places, Jerusalem and Hebron. Persons, Absalom, people he met, Ahithopel.

Scripture Setting: Youthful Sin and Folly. A wasted life, 1 Sam. 31:1-13. Prosperity of fools, Prov. 1:20-33. Moving toward Sodom, Gen. 13:1-13. Defiant wickedness, Isa. 5:18-24. The shame of sin, Ezek. 7:10-19. Warning against pride, Matt. 23:1-12. God is not mocked, Gal. 6:7-18. The great refusal, Mark 10:17-22.

Life and Conduct Setting: A warning lesson to young men especially. Here are some of the sinful tendencies and temptations: 1. Absalom was after merely temporal good, and it is common temptation to youth today. 2. A selfish ambition of the lowest type and in a most consuming form. 3. A sinful nature and tendency bred in the hot-bed of animalism and idolatry. 4. Restless under restraint and authority and himself the worst anarchist, he accuses, insinuates, undermines, so as to wean away the people from his father and king. 5. Hypocrisy and deceit, in order to accomplish his purposes. All is dark, subtle, sinuous, with the trail of the serpent on it. 6. Corruption of the times. 7. Lack of parental training. David must share some of the responsibility of Absalom's sin. 8. Making merchandise of religion—perhaps the worst sin in the list these days.

A WICKED YOUNG PRINCE.

A Kiss That Nearly Cost a Throne. What can you tell about Benedict Arnold, the traitor? One thing at least everyone knows—and that is that he is despised by all. This story is about one who was even worse than Arnold, for he was a traitor to his own father. David had several wives and many sons. One son was named Absalom, whose mother was a heathen princess. He was a proud, self-willed boy, though good-looking, and known by all as the boy with a beautiful head of hair. He was David's oldest son, and might have been king sometime if he had not been so wicked. When David married heathen women, their false religion came with them, and David forgot his own God. So his children grew up without religious training. One of them had committed a great sin, and Absalom felt that he should die for it. So, without any trial, and by a treacherous trick, Absalom had him slain. David was angry, and Absalom fled to his mother's old heathen home, and stayed there three years.

At last David was willing that he might come back, and when he did come he kissed him and forgave him. This was the kiss that nearly cost David his throne. Absalom should have been punished instead, but David was weakened by age and by false worship, and he overlooked Absalom's wickedness. This mistaken mercy opened the way for Absalom's wicked plot to kill his father and take the kingdom. David's mistake was in letting Absalom have his own way.

Would Have His Own Way. A young man went on a summer tour to Europe and was to spend a part of it in the Alps. In company with his guide and some other travelers, he came to one of the most dangerous passes, and the guide said: "Now you must all be strapped together." So he harnessed them all to a rope, and some guides went on before and other guides came after. The chief guide said: "Now, this is very dangerous." The young man did not like to be harnessed up in that way, so he slipped out of the strap and three minutes after he did it his feet slipped and he went down three hundred feet and was dashed to pieces in a moment.—A. J. Gordon.

"Oh, That I were Judge!" Absalom began his wicked plot by riding about in great style, with fifty men running before him, as a sort of body guard. This is shown in the first two pictures. He would make the people believe that he was a favorite of the king, and also a very important person. It is very easy to deceive most people by such exhibitions of display. Absalom's fine appearance would help to increase the impression. Absalom was thoroughly selfish and proud, but he had to act as if he had the interests of the people at heart. David did not know all that was going on, and he was only glad to have Absalom back home. He did not know what a traitor he had in the very palace. Then he may have thought that Absalom would soon be king, anyway, and so he let him rule more and more.

Now Absalom takes another step in the plot. He pretends that he is a friend of the common people. He meets them at the gates of the city, where people would come to see the king for any reason. He would tell them that the king had neglected to have any judges appointed to try their cases. He would also say that their case was good, and "Oh, that I were made judge to help you!" Often, too, he would talk confidentially with them, and even kiss them. In this way he won the hearts of the people: but it was by flattery, and he did not mean what he said. Absalom had a sinful pride and ambition that made him disobey and deceive his father, and this led to his ruin.

A True Kind of Pride. A circus was in a town and a little boy stood watching the great tent curiously. A neighbor, coming up, said: "Hello, Johnny, goin' to the circus?" "No, sir," answered Johnny, "father don't like 'em." "Oh, well, I'll give you the money to go," said the man. "Father don't approve of them." "Well, go in for once. I'll pay for you." "No, sir; my father would give me the money if he thought it best; besides, I've got twenty-five cents in my box—enough to go." "I'd go, Johnny, for once; it's wonderful the way the horses do," said the man. "Your father needn't know it." "I can't," said the boy. "Now, why?" asked the man. "'Cause," said Johnny, "after I've been I couldn't look father right in the eyes, but I can now."

"Let Me Go to Prayer-Meeting." That was not exactly what Absalom said, but that is what it meant. And what did he want to do? Complete his plot to dethrone his father and have himself proclaimed king. Can you think of anything more wicked than that? He would make even religion a cloak for his meanness and treachery. Even yet David is blind to what Absalom is doing. He doubtless rejoices when Absalom asks that he may go to Hebron to worship, for he thinks it is to serve God. It is now nearly four years that Absalom has been stealing the hearts of the people. He has friends in all parts of the kingdom, and he intends to rally them at Hebron. He has sent spies everywhere, to see that all are in readiness to make him king. Men with trumpets were ready to shout the message to all, as soon as Absalom was crowned. The priest was also secured who would offer fitting sacrifices. It was all very religious in appearance, but this made it all the more wicked.

The real test was in the heart and purpose. He pretended to worship God, but really wanted to use it as a cloak to serve himself in. Scarcely any sin is worse than pride; and it is a sin that brings trouble always, for "pride goeth before a fall." The proud man is usually despised by everybody as soon as he is found out.

The Fatal Mistake. Absalom made one mistake that spoiled his plot. He left God out. That is the great mistake that all wicked people make, and therefore they always fail in the end. They may seem to succeed for a time, as Absalom did, but it is only in appearance, and for a time. We have seen how religious Absalom pretended to be, but it was a sham religion, and so did him no good, but only harm. There was no God in it, on the Divine side, and no heart in it on his side. Now we will see how his plan failed. Among those he persuaded to go with him was a man named Ahithopel, a very wise man, and David's counsellor. Absalom thought that in this way he would get the very strength of David. But when David heard it, he prayed, "O Lord, I pray Thee, turn the counsel of Ahithopel into foolishness." Just then Hushai, a good man, came to go with David, but David said to him, "Go back to be with Absalom, then mayest thou for me defeat the counsel of Ahithopel." In this way God prompted David to help answer his own prayer. Hushai did defeat the counsel of Ahithopel, as we see in the next story, and so Absalom was defeated in battle and killed. It was all because Absalom did not have God on his side, and David did. Losing God, he lost his friends, and all else.

Why He Lost His Friends. He was suspicious of everybody. He never threw the doors of his heart wide open to people, or took them into his confidence. He was always ready to receive assistance from them, but always too busy or too stingy to assist them in their time of need. He regarded friendship as a luxury to be enjoyed instead of an opportunity for service. He never hesitated to sacrifice their reputation for his advantage. He was always saying mean things about them in their absence. He measured them by their ability to advance him. —Success.

Quiz and Study. 1. What mistakes did David make respecting Absalom and the management of affairs? 2. What was the real cause of David's neglect? 3. How long had Absalom been working up the rebellion? 4. Why did he go to Hebron to start his reign? 5. Name six sins in Absalom, or as many as you can.

Challenge Text. "Honor thy ——— and thy mother that thy ——— may be ———." Ex. 20: (?).

Practical Thoughts. 1. Sin may be forgiven, but its effects and judgments are not removed. 2. The parent must govern the child or the child will tyrannize over the parent. 3. Thousands in their foolish "simplicity" go to the dance, the theater, the card table, the saloon, just because they are invited. 4. He who is unfaithful in his present place or sphere will probably be unfaithful under any other circumstance or condition. 5. The child left to himself will tread even upon the affections and piety of the parent. 6. "Whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap"—and the harvest is apt to be a whirlwind.

ABSALOM'S DEATH.

THE SCRIPTURE LESSON IS 2 SAM. 18:1-33.

Prayer: Lord Jesus, We are thankful for the life that now is, and for the eternal life, made possible in Christ. Help us that we may escape from the death of the wicked. May we be warned by the fate of those who have opposed and rejected Thee. Keep us from pride, vanity, selfishness and every sin. For Christ's sake. Amen.

Somewhere at every hour
The watchman on the tower
Looks forth, and sees the fleet
Approach of hurrying feet

Of messengers that bear
The tidings of despair.
O Absalom, my son!
He goes forth from the door,
Who shall return no more.
With him our joy departs;
The light goes out in our hearts;
In the Chamber over the Gate
We sit disconsolate.
O Absalom, my son!

—Longfellow.

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, B. C. 1023. Place, Mahanaim, in the tribe of Gad. Persons, David, messengers, attendants.

Scripture Setting: Father and Son. Model father and son, Gen. 22:1-18. A loving son, Gen. 45:6-21. Judgment on father and son, 1 Sam. 4:3-18. Counsel to the son, Prov. 4. Rebellious children, Isa. 1:1-9. "Is it well?" 2 Kings 4:18-30. The son corrected, Prov. 23:12-26. The model home, Col. 3:12-25.

Life and Conduct Setting: The lessons from Absalom's death need to be voiced afresh in every age. 1. Laxness of parental training and discipline inevitably bring sorrow and disaster. 2. Mere material and physical qualities are not enough to give success. There must be inward character and right ideals and purposes. 3. Judgment invariably overtakes the wrong-doer, sooner or later. 4. Undue grief blinds one to many personal blessings and duties. 5. A life of sin is short, at best, and is increasingly difficult to change. 6. It is far better to mould the boy in his youth than to mourn over him in his death.

THE DREADFUL DEATH OF A BAD YOUTH.

The Worst Young Man. Who is he? You have known some very bad ones, but you can almost always find some good qualities in each. It is easy to think of many bad traits in Absalom, and very hard to think of a single good one. Whether we think of him in relation to God, or to his father, or to the king, or to his friends, or to the people, or even to himself, it is all bad, bad, bad. At last one of his personal bad traits was probably the snare that trapped him and led to his death. This was his vanity over his long and beautiful hair.

As the two armies are fighting, and Absalom is cheering on his men, he rides through a thick wood and his head and hair are caught in the branches, holding him fast. The mule goes off and Absalom is left hanging thus. God's hand is in this also. You remember that David prayed that Ahithophel's counsel "might come to naught." Ahithophel was David's wise counsellor, and he had gone over to Absalom. When David prayed he sent a trusty friend to try and defeat any plan Ahithophel might offer. It was through this friend, Hushai, that Absalom did not kill David at once, but waited to raise an army. This gave David time to gather his army, and this battle was fought. And this was the last crisis in Absalom's wicked life.

When Is the First Crisis? Oh! how little we know what may be before us, on some morning that dawns on us just as other days, but which is to form a great crisis in our life. How little the boy that is to tell his first lie that day thinks of the serpent that is lying in wait for him! Is it not a good habit, as you kneel each morning, to think, "For aught I know, this may be the most important day of my life. The opportunity may be given me of doing a great service in the cause of truth and righteousness. O God, be not far from me this day; prepare me for all that thou preparest for me!"—Blaikie.

Looking Out for Number One. That was the kind of a man Absalom was. If he ever did a kind deed for number two, or any other person, we have no record of it. Well, "number one" is hanging there now in a tree. If he had been friendly and helpful there would have been many ready to deliver him. But no one cared to do that. Some of the people remembered that David charged the soldiers "not to hurt the young man Absalom," but even they did not help him. One of these persons told Joab that he saw Absalom caught. "Why did you not strike him dead?" said Joab. The man replied that the king told them not to harm him in any way. But Joab was anxious to stop the war and the rebellion, and he caught up three darts and went and thrust them through Absalom's body. Then ten of Joab's young men came with swords and finished the work of death. Vanity, pride and selfishness were his ruin.

Too Proud To Be Warned. On the Mississippi river, a steamer was towing a heavily laden barge, when one of the sailors went to the captain and told him that the barge was sinking the steamer. The captain, with an oath, told the sailor to mind his own business.

Not long after the mate came to the captain, and said, "Sir, that barge is sinking us."

"We are all right. I'll take care of my own steamer," was the captain's reply. Soon after the captain perceived the truth of what the sailor and mate had said, and ordered the ropes cut at once, because the heavily laden barge was sinking the steamer. The "ropes" were a heavy chain, and before the links could be broken the barge had gone down, dragging the steamer with it.—Exchange.

The End of the Rebellion. That man with the trumpet is Joab. As soon as Absalom is slain he calls to the army to stop fighting and pursuing. He knew that Absalom's soldiers would be discouraged as soon as they knew of his death. Even many of his own soldiers were glad the war was over, for Absalom was found out by them. They discovered that he cared only for himself. If a man or boy is "number one" in his own thought he cannot be number one in the minds of others. And such a man keeps going down the scale farther and farther. Was David glad to hear that his army was victorious, and that his kingdom was safe? He did not seem to think of anything except Absalom's safety. It was the first thing he inquired about, and when he learned of his death he could only cry, "Oh Absalom, my son, my son!" His grief was so long continued that Joab had to remonstrate with him. His grief was partly due to the fact that he had been too lenient and lax when Absalom did wrong.

The Child Has A Right To Be Made Obedient. An English army captain in India nourished a young tiger on the blood of animals, but one day it tasted his blood, and if he had not shot it at the moment it would have killed him. If a man never thanks God, how can his child be grateful to him? If we deceive a child he will have no compunction in deceiving us. David had never rightly loved Absalom, or he would have restrained him. He loved his handsome son with passionate earnestness, but there was no ruling habit or direction in that love. David was fickle in his treatment of Absalom.—Exchange.

The Death That Is After Death. Even Absalom's first death was disgraceful. Almost always the dead body is cared for tenderly, and laid away in the grave. But see that picture, where they are throwing his body into a pit, and that other where they are heaping a pile of stones on it. This shows how they despised even the dead body. But that did not distress David so much as the thought of the second death. When his baby boy died he mourned for him, but he also said, "I shall go to him." He could not feel this way about Absalom, for he knew that Absalom had rebelled not only against his father and his king, but also against his God. By this death that is after death David was separated from Absalom for all eternity. You remember that the old clock on the stair used to tick something like this: "Forever-never, forever-never." This is what Absalom's death said to David's heart. Someone has said that David's grief was too late to be corrected, too great for any consolation, and too long, for there was no hope of reunion. When Jonathan died, David was grieved, but there was comfort also; comfort at the remembrance of his beautiful friendship and comfort in the prospect of meeting him again. That is not so in this case, for there is a death after death. One way to avoid a disgraceful death, and also the death after death, is by being obedient to one's parents. Here is where Absalom made his first mistake.

Try This Plan. In a family of children each one had a calendar and in the quiet time when they were about ready for bed they tried to think whether they had done more to make their parents' day glad and bright or sad and dark. They called it making sunshine and shadow. Days which they had made sunshiny by loving obedience and helpfulness, they marked with a bright yellow pencil, and days when they had grieved their parents by thoughtlessness and disobedience they marked with a blue or black one. Which do you think they liked the better to see, sunshine or shadow? They grew so that they tried harder to have fewer shadows this week than last.—Exchange.

Quiz and Study. 1. What old judge sat waiting for news of his two sons and the ark? and what was the result? 2. What mistake did David make in the training of Absalom? 3. What other mistake in his marriages?

Challenge Text. "Whoso curseth — or — let him — the death." Mark 7:(?)

Practical Thoughts. 1. Life is full of crisis moments, and often there are no warnings given. 2. The fate of Absalom illustrates the common doom of prodigals. 3. Absalom had unusual advantages at the start, but made a complete failure of life. 4. Lost opportunities and a wasted life cannot be recovered. 5. Selfish ambitions almost always lead to ruin. 6. The deceits and hypocrisy of Absalom were at last visited on him. Absalom sowed the wind and reaped the whirlwind.

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, B. C. 1015. Places, Jerusalem and Gihon. Persons, David, Zadok, Nathan, Benaiah, Solomon, Adonijah.

Scripture Setting: Kings and the King. Promotion is of God, Psa. 76. Duties of the king, 1 Chron. 22:1-19. God's covenant, Psa. 89:1-14. Wrong ambitions, 2 Sam. 15:1-14. Using fraud, 1 Kings 1:5-15. True way to the kingdom, Mark 10:31-45. A kingdom worth having, Rev. 21:1-16. The new kingdom, John 3:1-17.

Life and Conduct Setting: The record of how Solomon came to the throne may find applications in all relations and spheres of life. 1. Solomon is king by Divine purposes, and one can be certain of position and promotion on no other ground. 2. Solomon is king through helpful human agencies, as David, Bathsheba, etc. Thus one's friends and life relations may further his interest. 3. Solomon was king because of personal worth and fitness. One will not long retain a kingdom in any other way. 4. Solomon was king for a certain specific work. Thus always is service the end and warrant of rank. 5. Solomon was king by popular favor and acceptance, largely due to his essential qualifications. What others think of us is important in its place and may be a vital condition in working out God's will.

THE CROWNING OF A FAMOUS KING.

A New Peril to David. How much trouble a bad boy or man can make! We saw that in the case of Absalom. After his death David had a prosperous time in his kingdom for many years. He at last planned to build a beautiful temple for God. He had already built a house for himself. He told God what he wanted to do; and God said that it would not be right for him to build it, for he had been a man of war. God told him that his son Solomon might build it, and all that he had done towards it could be used. Then David promised Solomon that he should be king, and build the temple to God. But one of his sons, by the name of Adonijah, said to himself that he was older and had the better right to the throne. He began some such plan as Absalom had tried. He actually persuaded all his brothers, except Solomon, to join him in the rebellion. He had a priest also who was to assist in crowning him. David was now old and weak and even in bed when the news was brought to him. Adonijah was confident of success and had gathered all his friends to a great feast. Even Joab, the general, had gone with him. They both seemed to have forgotten about the fate of Absalom. But every wicked person thinks that he can succeed where others have failed; and so he is self-confident. Adonijah means, "the Lord is my master," but he was not true to his name. This is the case with boys and girls sometimes.

Are You a Weed or a Flower? Shoot was a beautiful green blade that sprang from the ground. Mother Nature was very proud of it. But one day she was worried, for Shoot was not shooting just right. Queer little things were breaking out all over it. She said to herself, "It must be its wild oats." Next day when Mother Nature came to wake it up those queer little buds had budded and instead of flowers there were—burrs! Then Mother Nature's heart was broken, for she knew Shoot was a weed. Shoot could not help it, but boys and girls can help it. They are "I's," not "it's"; and they should grow to be flowers and not weeds, for God will help them.—Rev. R. W. Gentry.

"God Save King Solomon!" Suddenly this is the cry that is heard everywhere. Even the Adonijah company hear it in their feasting. How does it come about? It was chiefly because God had purposed that Solomon should reign. That purpose made all things and persons fall in line. Even the sick king rises up in his bed and calls for the priest and prophet to come to him. He tells them to act at once and proclaim Solomon king. He remembers his promise to God and also to Bathsheba, Solomon's mother. This promise, according to the purpose of God, makes him quick, strong and determined. Though seventy years old, he thinks and acts as promptly and resolutely as ever he did in his life. The first three pictures tell the story of this act of king David.

God's Hand in History. There is no doctrine in the Bible more clear than that God does interfere in the lives of men. He interfered in the life of Moses and Saul and David and Solomon and the prophets and the apostles, and He also interferes in the lives of men now. And that God does so interfere, surely believed and confidently trusted in, will transmute the prosiest life into grandeur and beauty. And when He speaks in audible tones to one man and gives tendency to the life and the future of another, it is only that He may bring blessing to the man and through him to the world.—Exchange.

Honored and Anointed. Before the public proclamation was made David had taken the usual steps to declare a new king. Solomon is placed on the royal mule, and is brought into the city from the valley of Gihon. No one but the king is allowed to ride on this mule; and when Solomon was seen on it the people were ready to proclaim him king. But the anointing with the sacred oil was the chief ceremony. This was by the priest, who poured the oil on the head of Solomon. It was a solemn service, and performed only on rare and state occasions. It meant two things specially. One was that the king was in covenant with God and was expected to do as God wished. The other was that the Spirit of God was supposed to come with the anointing, and help the king in all his great duties. All this was done rapidly at the command of David. He also said that Solomon should come at once and sit on the throne and be king. As David was still living, he sent out the message to all the people that Solomon should be king in his stead, and that he had so appointed him. With God above him, his father beside him, and the Holy Spirit to guide him, Solomon had everything to help him on in the right way. But when all is prosperous is often the time of temptation. We shall see if it was so with Solomon. At least it is safe to watch continually.

Watch! Watch! Watch for the end of the world and Jesus's coming? Yes. Watch for the day of your death? Yes. But watch also for the judgment hours that come to you every day of your life. Every moment judges us, every act either condemns or justifies. Lives oftentimes swing on the pivot of a single deed, and eternal destiny is determined by the decision of a moment. Watch!—Exchange.

First Act of the King. When Adonijah and his company knew that Solomon had been anointed king they were greatly alarmed. They were not far away, and they had already begun proclaiming Adonijah king. But they did not have the royal mule, nor the anointing oil. The fear grew and they scattered and fled. Adonijah himself did not have courage enough to try to rally his followers. He must have known that he was a traitor to the king, his father, and disobedient to God. This was surely enough to make him a coward. He ran and laid hold of the horns of the altar, and would not come away until Solomon pledged to save his life. It was the custom that one should not be killed while he held the altar horns in this way. No doubt Adonijah would have killed Solomon, and, perhaps, Bathsheba if he had come into power. And no one could have blamed Solomon if now he had ordered him slain. But what does he do? He sent word that if Adonijah would do right, and be true to him as king, no harm should come to him. This was a very gracious thing for Solomon to do, and it agreed with his name, which means "peaceable." Solomon told him to go free to his own home. Thus Solomon begins well. If he should not succeed it surely will be his own fault. He had many factors for the making of a good man and ruler. Not least of these was the life character and influence of David, his illustrious father.

Father and Son Chums. I know of a father who has a son in whom he takes a genuine interest, and they are the closest chums it is possible to imagine. It is, of course, impossible for them to be together all the time, for the father works all day at his store and the boy goes to school, but at night they are always together. The father does not monopolize the companionship of his son by any means, for he invites other boys to call at the house; and when you see them all together you can well imagine that there is no man about. The father enters into all the sports of the little fellows, who rightly avers that "he is great." That boy is now almost nineteen; but when he had passed the age of twelve the father said: "My, oh my! Next year you will be in your teens, and then what shall I do?"

"Same as you've always done," said the boy, while a dimple came in his cheek and a sly twinkle came to his eye. "You know we've pledged ourselves to stick together forever."

"So we have, so we have," said the father; "and no matter how big you get you will always be my chum."

That's the way to treat your boys.—Baptist Commonwealth.

Quiz and Study. 1. What good work did David plan, and why did God prevent it? 2. What did Christ say about Solomon's glory? 3. Tell of another who rode in triumph into Jerusalem on an ass. 4. How many of David's seven different titles or kinds of work can you mention?

Challenge Text. "Behold, I have set my ——— in my holy ——— of Zion." Psa. 2: (9).

Practical Thoughts. 1. The lives of others are guides to us, either as inspiration or warning. 2. The conditions of permanent success are obedience to God and fidelity to duty. 3. God not only selects men for their work, but fits and equips them. 4. The example and heritage of a good father are of incalculable value. 5. Other men labor and we enter into their labors.

THE SCRIPTURE LESSON IS I KINGS 3:4-15.

Prayer: Lord Jesus, Grant us to see life from Thy high viewpoint. May we ever reckon with God and soul and Heaven in all our choices. Save us from being satisfied with the good or even the better. Stir us with a deep desire for the best—the very best Thou hast to give; and so may our choices go out like invisible hands to clasp and hold the best. For Christ's sake. Amen.

So let the way wind up the hill or down,
Though rough or smooth, the journey will be joy;
Still seeking what I sought when but a boy,
New friendship, high adventure and a crown.
I shall grow old but never lose life's zest,
Because the road's last turn will be the best.
—Henry Van Dyke.

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, B. C. 1015. Place, Gibeon in the tribe of Benjamin. Persons, Solomon, and the Lord in a dream.

Scripture Setting: Right and Wise Choices. Moses' choice, Heb. 11:24-27. Daniel's choice, Dan. 1:8-21. Ruth's choice, Ruth 1:1-18. Mary's choice, Luke 10:38-42. Paul's choice, Acts 9:1-16. Joshua's choice, Josh. 24:14-25. The true wisdom, Prov. 9:1-12. Neglecting the great choice. Heb. 2:1-13.

Life and Conduct Setting: In this study of Solomon's wise choice, we may note several important facts. 1. The opportunity for wise choices. God is constantly saying, "Ask what I shall give Thee." 2. Reasons for wise choices. Because God asks it; because of the Divine goodness; because of one's responsibility and mission; because of one's need and weakness. 3. Benefits of wise choices. We please God; we secure the desired blessing; we get also much incidental good. 4. Tests of wise choices. Continued obedience; religious fidelity. 5. Weakness of wise choices. Things may be wise, but not the wisest; things may be good, but not the best. Solomon chose wisely and right things; but failed of the greatest blessing, namely, spiritual things.

THE GOOD CHOICE OF A YOUNG KING.

I'll Do My Best. "I can't do it and I won't." It was a bright young man who said it, and Satan gave him enough bad purpose to stand by his resolve. He was asked to do a service in the young people's society. Another was asked and he replied, "I feel I can't do it, but I'll try." He tried and was successful, for God helped him. I think Solomon was like this second young man. He did the best he could and God helped him to do still better, as we shall see. When Solomon was made king he was only a young man about twenty years of age. After he was fully established in the throne he worshiped God with many sacrifices. In this way he showed his desire to glorify God. This service was at Gibeon, where the old wilderness tabernacle was located. A great many people went there with him and Zadok, the high priest, offered the sacrifices. Solomon chose Gibeon rather than Mt. Zion, where the tabernacle (See 2 Chron. 1:3-6) was. Perhaps the reason was because Solomon was to build the temple, which came after the tabernacle.

How Are You Choosing? There is a story told about the choice of Hercules, who was the most famous of all the heroes of Grecian mythology. Two beautiful maidens called upon him in his youth, one named Pleasure and the other Virtue; the first one offered him a life of ease and delight, and the other a life of usefulness and fame. Hercules chose Virtue, and spent the greater part of his life in doing things to help weaker people with his wonderful strength. Two thousand years ago this story of Xenophon's about Hercules' choice delighted the people, for every one likes to see the right choice made between two possible opportunities. The most famous wrong choice ever made in real life is that of the rich young ruler who came to Christ and asked Him what he must do to gain eternal life. Who can tell us what was his choice? (Matt. 19:21, 22.) Solomon belonged to the class who say, "I'll do my best."—Tarbell.

"What Shall I Give You?" When the sacrificing was over Solomon had gone to rest for the night. But there was not much sleep for him. The day had been full of great events and his mind was even fuller of great thoughts and ambitions. He was planning what he should do in order to fulfill all his father David had hoped. He was not thinking so much of wars and enemies as David had to and the most of the judges, but his thoughts went out towards the people he was to lead and train. At last he must have said to himself, "What a great work this is! How can I do it?" Just then he fell asleep. As he slept he had a dream or vision. It seemed as if God Himself appeared to him and said, "Ask what I shall give thee." He acknowledges all the goodness of God in bringing him to the throne; he confesses that the work is great, even too great for him to do alone; and then he said he would like to have wisdom to rule this great people aright. He must have been glad even in his dream that God appeared to him with promise of help.

How Much Can You Take? You—the boy who reads these words—still stand on the hillside. Beneath you is a barren soil, but measureless wealth. You may take away with you out of this mine of youth, the trade, the profession, the acuteness which, if you have adequate natural gifts, may make you many times a millionaire; or you may take the simple tastes and habits which will command for you a healthy, happy life. You may find affections which will endure until death; or you may acquire vices which will taint your body and soul for all time.

More than all, it is on the height of youth that God speaks to each man the words which, if he takes them with him, will give him victory and peace, not only in this life, but in the life hereafter. What will you carry away? Now is the time to choose.—The Youth's Companion.

God's Abundant Goodness. God was pleased with the answer of Solomon. He showed His pleasure by giving more than Solomon asked; perhaps more than he dared to hope. Paul says that God is able to do for us abundantly above what we can ask or think. Here God says, "I have also given thee riches and honor." Think of the different ways God had blessed Solomon. He had given him a good father; He had filled him with a desire for peace; He had made the kingdom prosperous and at peace with all the world; He had multiplied the children of Israel until they were "a great people"; He had inspired him with a lofty idea of the needs of the nation; He had come to him in a vision and offered help; He had prompted him to make the request he did; He granted his requested promptly and generously; He threw in the "riches and honor" for good measure; He added also a special promise of long life for his continued obedience. Solomon did not win this part of the promise, for he was not obedient. He died at sixty years of age, but it was his own fault.

Obedience Brings Blessing. When "I will be wise" had come to mean "I will obey God and come near to Him, or let Him come near to me by my obedience," it was a resolution which was open to all men, the weakest and the humblest, as well as the strongest and highest, to make. The little child just putting a trembling foot onto the margin of the vast plain of life; the plough-boy busy at his work without a rest from morning till night, from year to year; the practical man strong in affairs but with no gift for abstract speculation; the poor, sick woman with no strength left but just to suffer—this new change of the Gospel threw open the gates of wisdom to them all. Then all could be wise.—Phillips Brooks.

A Dream That Was Not All Dream. We are not apt to think much of dreams, though sometimes they have a message and a meaning. In Solomon's day a dream usually meant something, and there were persons who claimed to be able to interpret dreams. God often spoke to men in dreams. So Solomon believed what the dream revealed to him. He was greatly encouraged because God had promised to help him. He went to Jerusalem and offered sacrifices to the Lord before the ark. The burnt offerings meant that he dedicated himself to the Lord for whatever work there might be for him. The peace offerings were to show his gratitude and thanksgiving. Besides this, he made a jubilee feast to all his servants. In this way he won the friendship and service of all in yet greater degree. Solomon's wisdom was tested in the case of the two women and their babies. One of the babies had died, and each mother blamed the other for its death and each mother claimed the living child. Solomon was asked to say which was the real mother. He sent for a man with a sword and said that he would divide the living baby and give each woman one-half of it. The one woman agreed to that, but the other said, "O, my lord, give her the living child and do not slay it." Then Solomon knew that she was the real mother, and ordered the living child to be given to her at once. The Bible says that "God gave Solomon wisdom and understanding exceeding much, and largeness of heart, even as the sand that is on the seashore."

If I Had Only Known. "When I was a lad, I accompanied my father, who was sent by the government to treat with a tribe of Indians in California. On the way we encamped for a week in what is now the State of Nevada, upon a certain bleak hillside. I might have bought the whole hill for ten dollars, but I slept and ate and amused myself, and paid no attention to the sterile ground beneath. My barren hill was the site of the famous Comstock lode, which has yielded hundreds of millions in silver and gold. To think that it all might have been mine if I had dug but a little way below the surface, as other men coming after me did."—Exchange.

Quiz and Study. 1. Was Solomon's choice the best he could make? Why not? 2. What are we apt to put first in our choices? 3. What ought we to put first? 4. What three books did Solomon write? 5. What did Christ say about Solomon's wisdom? Luke 11:31.

Challenge Text. "Seek ye first the kingdom of _____ and His _____ and all these _____ shall be added unto you.—Matt. 6: (9)

Practical Thoughts. 1. Youth is specially the time for choices that govern the life. 2. A right and wise choice is of great good, even though it seems to fail of realization. 3. We should watch lest the good cheat us out of the better and the best. 4. Our whole life is apt to turn on a few choices or even on one. 5. When we choose the best all needed inferior blessings are included. 6. Choice is a great exponent of character, and also a fashioner of character. 7. God gives liberally to the heart and life that is open to receive.

BUILDING THE TEMPLE

And the house, when it was in building, was built of stone before it was brought thither:

so that there was neither nor

of iron heard in the house, while it was in building. The middle chamber was in the right side of the house;

and they went up with

into the middle and out of the middle into the third.

So he built the house, and finished it;
and covered the house
with

of cedar. And then he built chambers against all the house, five cubits high: and they rested on the house with timber of cedar.

THE SCRIPTURE LESSON IS 1 KINGS 5:1-12 and 6:1-14.

Prayer: Lord Jesus, May we have a true reverence for Thee and for Thy house. Help us also to remember that we ourselves are temples of God. Enable us to make them fit dwelling places for Thee. May we cast out all that is displeasing to Thee. Abide in us by Thy Holy Spirit. For Christ's sake. Amen.

Build thee more stately mansions, O my soul,
As the swift seasons roll!
Leave thy low-vaulted past!
Let each new temple nobler than the last Shut thee from Heaven with a dome more vast.

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, B. C. 1012. Place Mount Moriah. Persons, Solomon and his people.

Scripture Setting: Building the House of God. Right foundations, Isa. 44:18-28. Love for it, Psa. 84. Prayer in building, Dan. 9. Building securely, 1 Cor. 3:10-23. The true sanctuary, Eph. 2:13-22. Zeal for God's house, Psa. 69:1-9. The better temple, Heb. 9:1-28. The Heavenly temple, Rev. 21:1-27.

Life and Conduct Setting: This great work of Solomon emphasizes some principles which apply to all human undertakings. 1. He was providentially called to the work and specially fitted for it. 2. He had the advantage of much previous work, both general and special. 3. He was directed and sustained in it all by the good hand of God. 4. He had the co-operation of worldly forces and factors. 5. A remarkable providence overruled, so that every part fitted into its true place. 6. He persevered until the work was done. 7. He followed the Divine directions, and did all for the glory of God.

THE GREATEST BUILDING IN THE WORLD.

A Four-Fold Wonder. What is the most famous building you ever saw or read about? However famous it was this is even more wonderful. It was wonderful because it stood for God dwelling among men. Like the tabernacle at first, it seemed to say, "God is here." It was wonderful because God gave the plan for it. It was just four times as large on the ground as the tabernacle was; and God told Moses exactly how to build the tabernacle. It was wonderful in its cost. David said that he had prepared a hundred thousand talents of gold, and a thousand thousand talents of silver, which alone would be equal to more than $7,000,000,000. Besides this there was the brass, the iron, the stone, the cedar. Some of this money was deposited in the temple, dedicated to God. But a fabulous amount was used in the building itself. It was wonderful in its beauty. In its proportions it was harmonious and commanding; and the immense amount of gold and silver used, produced a wonderful effect in every detail of both the structure and its furnishings. It was wonderful in its deeper design and object. This was to declare and magnify Christ and His mission. Nearly every part of the building and furniture pointed to Christ and His sacrifice. Other buildings might be noted in one or two of these particulars, but no other building has ever been famous in all four of these ways.

A More Wonderful Temple. Do you remember the story of the lost portrait of Dante at Florence? A certain artist determined to find it again. He went into the palace where tradition said it had been painted. The room was used as a storehouse. The walls were covered with dirty whitewash. He had the heaps of rubbish carried away. Patiently and carefully he removed the whitewash.

Lines and colors long hidden began to appear; and at last the grave, lofty, noble face of the great poet looked out again upon the world of light. "That was wonderful," you say, "that was beautiful!" Not half so wonderful as the work which Christ came to do in the heart of man—to restore the forgotten image of God and bring the Divine image to the light. He comes to us with the knowledge that God's image is there, though concealed; He touches us with the faith that the likeness can be restored.
—Henry Van Dyke.

Who Built the Temple? It is called Solomon's temple, because built during his reign; but it might be said to be wonderful again in that it had so many builders. In the first place, God built it in finishing the plan and giving the nation great prosperity and freedom from war; and in making the neighboring nations and kings friendly. Then David built it in collecting vast amounts of money and material for that very purpose. He built it, too, by planning and purposing it in his heart. He would have gone on to do the actual work, if God had permitted him. Because he was a man of war God planned that Solomon should do it. Also Hiram king of Tyre did much towards furnishing stone and cedar, and to that extent was a helper in the building. Lastly, the people wrought in many ways and so finished the great work. There were 70,000 porters, 80,000 stone hewers, and large numbers of other workers in the mines and woods, for transportation and construction. All those workmen were busy for seven and a half years before the whole building was finished.

Give Christ the First Place. A young preacher has just delivered a somewhat ambitious discourse in the annual meeting of the association and was feeling pretty well satisfied as to the impression he had made, when an old pastor quietly said to him, "My brother, give Christ His place." On reviewing his discourse the young man was abashed to discover that he had not in any way connected Christ with his line of thought. A religious address that professes to be keyed on the Gospel, yet which contains no mention or suggestion of Christ, is radically defective. It is like summer with the sunshine left out. In every sermon Christ should have His place, and His place is by no means unimportant.—Exchange.

Its Religious Meaning. The very purpose of this splendid building was to glorify God. And since God planned it and the tabernacle as His dwelling places we know that it was intended for man's worship. Some of the things which we learned about the tabernacle we are now reminded of again. One peculiar thing in the work of putting the building together was that the great building rose up quietly with no sound of hammer or chisel. All the stones and beams were shaped and fitted before they were brought on the ground. The temple had two courts about it, one for the people and one for the priests. In the court of the priests was the great altar of burnt offerings, made of unhewn stones. Near this stood a large tank for water. It was made of brass, and was supported by twelve oxen also of brass. In this tank the water was kept for washing the offerings. On the right side in the Holy Place were ten tables bearing the shew bread and the golden vessels of the sanctuary; the altar of incense stood near the vail in the center; ten golden candlesticks instead of one as in the tabernacle stood on the left side. Before the Holy Place there was a house of marble and cedar where the chief priest and his sons dwelt. Outside of the temple proper there were rooms for the priests also. These could be entered from the outside only. The Holy of Holies was separated from the Holy Place by a great vail, as in the tabernacle. In it was the ark, which contained the two tables of stone. Two large angelic figures overlaid with gold stretched their wings from one wall to the other, the tips of two wings meeting above the cherubims that covered the mercy seat. Into this room only the high priest entered, and that once a year.

The Temple a Spiritual Picture. Of its parts the outer court has been held to represent the world; the altar of burnt offerings, Christ the great sin offering; the Holy Place, the church; the light of the golden candlestick, the light of God and Christ to the church; the table of shew bread, Christ the Bread of Life; the altar of incense, the prayers and spiritual sacrifices of the church; the Holy of Holies, Heaven; the high priest is also a type of our great High Priest, who "rent the vail in twain" between the Holy and Most Holy place, thus signifying that the "way into Heaven is now open."—Johnson.

Temple Promise and Prosperity. God made it favorable for the building of the temple as we have seen. Even the heathen king Hiram sent his servants to greet Solomon. When he learned that Solomon was to build a temple, he said, "Blessed be the Lord who hath given unto David, a wise son to rule over this great people." God was pleased also when the temple was finished. The prosperity which He had given for many years was continued, as we shall see.

This great truth is illustrated also in all ages. The tabernacle grew into the temple; the temple was followed by the synagogue; and now we have the church everywhere as the place where God especially meets man. The presence of the church, the visible temple of God, is always a sign of prosperity. It is also a source and cause of still other blessings. No one chooses to make his home where there are no churches. Therefore, also, everyone should be glad to do his part in sustaining the church temple and its worship. Each person will receive the largest spiritual blessings, and the best earthly blessings, too, only by personal service and worship in the church of Jesus Christ. Best of all, when one becomes himself a temple of God, for the indwelling of the Holy Spirit. This is the great privilege of each person, and God is constantly calling upon us to dedicate ourselves to His worship, service and praise. The Holy Spirit is promised to conduct the exercises in this wonderful temple of the soul; and He will use all our powers to glorify God and make known His goodness and grace to others.

And both these temples—the house of God and the soul of man—should be kept true and pure for the purpose God intended.

The True Spirit of Worship. When Abraham was on his way to Mount Moriah to offer his beloved son, Isaac, in obedience to the Divine command, he bade the servants: "Stand ye here, while I and the lad go yonder to worship." Well it is for the devout soul thus to address the elements that tend to distract when in the place of prayer—"Care and anxiety, worldly thought, fear and doubt, stand ye here while I go yonder!" Oh, for the true spirit of worship which can leave all these undesirable aliens outside the door when we enter the Holy Place!—Reformed Church Record.

Challenge Text. "Know ye not that ye are the — of God, and that the — of God — in you." 1 Cor. 3: (6).

Practical Thoughts. 1. The house of God should receive the best and largest gifts. 2. Every one may be a temple of the Holy Spirit. 3. The house of God is pre-eminently a place for prayer and worship. 4. Believers are as stones for the Heavenly temple, and are being fitted and polished here. 5. The house of God, without God in it, is a misnomer and a disgrace.

And it was so, that when Solomon had made an end of all the

a loud voice, saying, Blessed

according to all that he

The

as he was with our

let him not leave us, nor forsake us: That he may incline our hearts unto him, to walk in all his ways, and to keep his commandments, and his statutes, and his judgments, which he commanded our fathers.

THE TEMPLE DEDICATED.

THE SCRIPTURE LESSON IS 1 KINGS 8.

Prayer: Lord Jesus, May we think less about our outer selves and more about our real selves, the soul temple. Thou hast made us for Thyself; so may we be ready always to welcome Thee to our temple home. May we not allow any enemies or unclean things to hide and lurk in any room or corner. For Christ's sake. Amen.

"My body is the temple of my God,
For He has said it! Well or poorly kept,
My glory or disgrace, yet His abode,
And every deed I do or thought I think Makes record on the temple instantly."

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, B. C. 1005. Place, Mt. Moriah. Persons: Solomon and the people.

Scripture Setting: God in His temple. The God of the ark, Psa. 68:1-20. Latter day glory, Hag. 2:1-9. Going to the sanctuary, Psa. 122. Jesus cleanses the temple, John 2:13-22. The tabernacle, Ex. 26:1-37. Cleansing the heart temple, Psa. 51. The corner stone, 1 Pet. 2:1-10. The household of God, Eph. 2:11-22.

Life and Conduct Setting. Looking at the temple as a symbol of God dwelling with man, we discover several important truths. 1. The sanctuary is a vital factor in the world's history. 2. It speaks of the patience and condescension of God. 3. It declares God the author of salvation and the One worthy of worship. 4. It is a call and challenge to man to consider the claims of God. 5. It reveals the plan of God for the conquest of the world. 6. It affirms the blindness and indifference of the carnal heart. 7. It is nothing and worse than nothing if God is not in it.

THE DEDICATION OF TWO TEMPLES.

The Ark of God's Covenant. Dedications of all kinds usually go in couplets. There is the dedication of the doer and the dedication of the thing done. A boy may complete a good work of any kind, and this is its dedication, but he has given himself to the work with determination and purpose, and that is his dedication. So with a girl; so with a business man; so with man or woman in any relation of life. We say that a church is dedicated, yes, but the church members were dedicated first, and possibly again afterwards. We shall find that to be the case here. Do you see those people bearing the ark? They are active and joyous from the king to the least one who is helping in the service. We have seen that ark again and again, in many places and conditions. It was first placed in the tabernacle, and was the chief reason for building the tabernacle. Now that the temple is finished king Solomon orders the ark brought into the Holy of Holies. No wonder they offered sacrifices and rejoiced in the Lord and before Him. It is the time of the feast of tabernacles, and the city is full of people. Then the service of dedication draws even a larger number than usual. The bringing up of the ark to the city was the greatest event in David's reign; so now the bringing of it from its temporary tent on Mt. Zion was the crowning glory of Solomon's reign.

What the Ark Meant. The ark may be taken as a picture of the Divine Presence, or the Divine plan in human life. It was a visible form of an invisible power. Here was the abiding-place of the symbol of the Divine Presence. The law was placed in the ark to show that the centre and heart of all things is righteousness. On this God's throne is founded. According to righteousness He rules all things. The law is the very natural breath and atmosphere of Heaven. When we have reached perfection, we do right as naturally as we live. Jesus Christ "puts his law in our hearts, and writes it upon our minds."—Peloubet.

The Outshining of God's Glory. And now a very wonderful thing happened. The priests carried the ark into the Holy of Holies and placed it under the wings of the cherubim angels. The other part of the temple was filled with priests and singers clothed in white and with harps in their hands. They were rejoicing with the king and reciting the words, "O, give thanks unto the Lord, for He is good, for His mercy endureth forever." Round about was the immense throng of spectators. Solomon himself sat upon a brazen platform, surrounded with his guard of five hundred men, each with his shield of gold. It was a thrilling moment in this great and joyous service. Suddenly when the rejoicing was at its highest the glory of the Lord filled all the house like a golden cloud. The brightness was so great that the priests could not stay and minister, but were obliged to go out of the temple and stand in the court. All this is fully set forth by the many beautiful illustrations. Solomon knew what the glory meant, and he rejoiced that God showed His approval in this marked way.

Keep the Soul Temple Glorious. How many girls remember that to each one of them has been given a dwelling, which is entrusted to her exclusive care, and which no one but herself can cleanse or keep in order? It matters little whose hands sweep or dust the room in which she sleeps and eats. But that inner chamber in which the soul dwells she alone can keep in order. Does she examine it every morning, to sweep out the vulgarity, the malice, the indolent indifference to God and His truth which she may find there? She does not open her house at night for noxious insects and foul birds to harbor in it. Does she thrust out with equal zeal all trivial thoughts and gossip, with their malignant sting, from that most secret chamber? She may live in a hut or in a palace. But that place in which her soul dwells is unseen by mortal eye. It is her work to keep it clean and pure as long as life lasts.—Youth's Companion.

The Place of God's Dwelling. The tabernacle was the meeting place of God and man. Now that the Israelites were no longer wandering in the wilderness a more permanent building was desirable. The temple served this purpose for hundreds of years, and itself pointed on to Jesus Christ, the true temple in whom alone God and man can meet. Solomon has felt the presence of God; and as we see him there with hands extended, he has just finished the prayer of dedication. While praying he knelt before God, and now he stands to give a kingly blessing to all the people. In the prayer he has offered he has made many requests: That God would regard the oath made at the altar, and require its fulfillment; that He would maintain the cause of Israel against their enemies; that He would hear and answer their prayer for rain; that He would protect them from famine, pestilence and plague; that He would grant equal blessings to the stranger "that all people of the earth may know Thy name to fear Thee"; that He would guide and prosper His people in battle; that He would forgive, receive and restore them when they were carried into captivity. This was a remarkable prayer for a king to make, and Solomon must have been helped by the Holy Spirit. At the close of the prayer, fire came from Heaven and burned the bodies of the animals that had been prepared as sacrifices. This was further proof of God's presence and approval.

The Believer is God's Temple. Said a great king once, "Where I sleep, there is the palace." Each one of us may say, Where I am, there is God's temple. "See that thou make all things according to the pattern showed to thee in the mount," were the words ringing in the ears of Moses as he came down Mount Sinai to become the architect of God's dwelling place, the tent of worship. We have had a pattern given us; if we model our lives upon Christ's life, God will dwell in us.—Tarbell.

Dedication of the Second Temple. The king and people were the second temple. They had dedicated themselves to this great task at the first, for it never would have been accomplished otherwise. It meant very much of purpose, heroic work and sacrifice. Now that it is all done they dedicated themselves again. When Solomon ceased praying he turned to the people and blessed them. He thanked God for His favor up to the present time; he publicly acknowledges the fulfillment of all His promises; he prayed that God might continue with them, and enable both king and people to do all the Divine will. This was even more pleasing to God than the dedication of the temple of stone, for God thinks much more of souls than He does of stones. The two chief purposes of the material temple and of every church building are to make us think of the Christ temple and to help us build the soul temple. There were seven days of this dedication service, and then seven days more of joyous celebration at the feast of tabernacles. Then Solomon dismissed the people who were "glad of heart" because God had shown them so many and so great favors.

After this Solomon built a palace for himself in Jerusalem, and a palace for his wife, who was a daughter of Pharaoh, king of Egypt. He also built fine houses for himself in other cities. He was thirteen years doing this, and the nation was greatly prospered. Of Solomon's glory and fame we will learn more in the next story.

Dedicate the Soul Temple. If God says to us, in the bright promise of youth, "Ask what I shall give thee," let us make the best choice, and answer: "Give me grace to know Thy Son, the Christ, and to grow like Him;" for that is the true wisdom which leads to eternal life, and that is the true royalty which brings dominion over self, and that is the true happiness which flows unsought from fellowship with the Divine Life.—Henry Van Dyke.

Quiz and Study. 1. What three temples are there in the spiritual kingdom? 2. Why are churches dedicated? 3. How and why should we dedicate ourselves as temples of God? See Rom. 12:1. 4. In what ways may God answer prayer? 5. How was Solomon's prayer answered?

Challenge Text. "I was — when they said unto me, Let us — into the — of the Lord." Psa. 122: (?)

Practical Thoughts. 1. A great man is still greater when he honors God. 2. True prayer includes reverent and joyous adoration. 3. God's character and providence are the sure bases of appeal to Him. 4. Man's unworthiness, need and sin are the best plea for mercy and blessing. 5. Prayer should be specific, but always submissive to the Divine will. 6. Nations as well as individuals need the prayers of God's people.

QUEEN OF SHEBA AT THE COURT OF SOLOMON

BY SCHOPIN

"King Solomon exceeded all the kings of the earth in riches and wisdom." The Queen of Sheba, hearing of his fame, visited Solomon with a great train of followers on camels, bringing gold and precious stones and other gifts, traveling across the desert to meet Solomon, that she might learn of his wisdom and greatness. When she had seen all the queen exclaimed: "Behold, the half was not told me."

We see, in the picture by Schopin, the courtyard of Solomon partly surrounded by magnificent buildings, the grand doorway being at the right hand, where the great king is coming out to greet the visiting queen. On the parapet of cut stone are costly vessels and beside them a youth with a tray of refreshments. There are other attendants, one holding up the train of the king's garment, others bearing fans and a sun umbrella, while a lion chained to the wall crouches there, as the custom was to keep such fierce creatures to add to the sense of power and majesty.

A rich carpet is spread on the doorstep, and on it are carved benches to aid the queen in dismounting. A richly decorated camel is kneeling as he has been taught, to make dismounting easy. The queen is an elegant lady, holding her scepter, and about to descend to take the outstretched hand of Solomon. The queen's Ethiopian attendants coming from a hot country wear very few clothes, which adds to the picturesqueness of the scene. A slave holds a fan of ostrich feathers over the queen's head, and all suggests the life of wealth and luxury which has been hers. The French artist has composed a gorgeous scene worthy of this remarkable incident.

Howbeit I believed not the words, until I came, and mine eyes had seen it: and, behold, the half was not told me: thy wisdom and prosperity exceedeth the fame which I heard.

THE SCRIPTURE LESSON IS 1 KINGS 10:1-13.

Prayer: Lord Jesus, Thou art the King of kings and the Lord of lords. With Thee are all the treasures of wisdom, power and grace. Thou dost invite all to come unto Thee, and Thou dost not turn any empty away. Thy gifts are peace, pardon, joy and life, eternal life. Draw us that we may delight to sit at Thy feet and receive of Thy bounty and mercy. And may we find that Thou dost give us Thyself also. For Christ's sake. Amen.

I came and communed with that mighty King,
And told Him all my heart; I cannot say
In mortal ear what communings were they.
But wouldst thou know, go, too, and meekly bring
All that is in thy heart, and thou shalt hear
His voice of love and power, His answers sweet and clear.

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, B. C. 995. Place, Jerusalem. Persons, Solomon, queen of Sheba, courtiers.

Scripture Setting: Kingly Glory and Grace. Christ's power and glory, Rev. 1:7-20. The King of kings, Matt. 2:1-11. Prophecy of kingship, Zech. 9:9-17. A great King, Psalms 95. Kingship by the cross, John 3:11-21. Worthy of homage, Phil. 2:1-11. Prince of peace, Isa. 9:1-7. A price and a Saviour, Acts 5:24-32.

Life and Conduct Setting: By suggestion and analogy this historical incident teaches us how to find the King of kings, the Saviour. 1. The queen of Sheba was willing to listen to reports of Solomon, so we should inform ourselves about Christ. 2. The queen decides to test the reports for herself, so we should personally come and test Christ. 3. She comes with open mind and heart, and with generous gifts; so we should come to Christ, and even in our poverty, need and sin we may come. 4. She receives Solomon's answers and wisdom and is humbly obedient and receptive; so we should be before and with Christ. 5. She joyfully witnesses to his power and glory; so we should confess the glory, grace and pardon of Christ. 6. She gave to Solomon fabulous gifts, and personal praise to Solomon's God; so we should bring gifts to Christ, first giving ourselves. 7. She received the blessing and gifts of Solomon and returned to her own country; so we should come to Christ for salvation and equipment and then go to our own and other lands with the wonderful, wonderful message of life.

A FAMOUS BIBLE KING.

More and More Prospered. "Hurry now, we must go early and get a good position." This you have heard more than once, when people were planning to see the president or some other great person. Our story is about a famous king of the olden time, and about a queen who was anxious to see for herself, and learn if he was as great and wise as some people had reported. The king was Solomon, the king of Israel and the queen was the queen of Sheba. Solomon had prospered in every way, since he became king. He was famous for his wisdom especially. He had asked God for that, you remember. He had written several thousand proverbs, and he knew very much about plants, birds, animals, fishes and insects. He was also the richest king in all the world, and all nations were friendly to him. Because of all this his fame spread abroad over all the world. The wonderful temple he had built, and his own palace also helped to make his fame and name known. He used very much gold and ivory in his palaces and public buildings. This made them look brilliant beyond anything which had ever been known. It was said that silver was as plentiful as stones in the streets. Wouldn't you have liked to see king Solomon if you had lived in his day?

How to See the King. First of all, I got a card of invitation. It was only a little card, but it was the command of my king, and I must obey. Then

I got a letter from a government office telling me exactly what I must wear. Every little thing was commanded—the hat, the coat, the black silk stockings, the silver buckles, the shoes, the white gloves, and, because I was a minister of the Word of God, over all I was to wear a scarlet robe, with two broad bands of white silk down the front of it. Nothing was left to my own choice; everything must be right if I was to see the king. So the Bible tells us that those who are to see God must wear the right dress, the robe of righteousness, washed and made white in the blood of the Lamb of God, who takes away the sin of the world.—Rev. J. C. Gibson.

The Visit of a Queen. Among those who heard of Solomon was this queen of Sheba. This was a wealthy country in Arabia, nearly fifteen hundred miles from Jerusalem. Though it was a long journey, very long for those days, yet she planned to take it in person. She was very rich, and so she brought many servants with her, and a long caravan of camels loaded with spices and gold for king Solomon. She came to ask especially about his religion and his God. She had not been taught about the true God and she was willing to learn of Him. Solomon received her kindly, answered her many questions, and showed her all the great buildings he had built. She was taken through Solomon's palace, and saw the splendor of his table and servants. She was not allowed to enter the temple, but she saw the private stairway by which the king entered for worship. As she had come to make a thorough test and examination, so Solomon freely showed her all things. The Saviour King freely gives salvation to any who will come and accept it.

Come and See for Yourself. Moody is said to have stopped once in the midst of a sermon to boys to offer a book to anyone who would come up and get it. All hesitated, but at length a bold youngster advanced and received the volume. That was Moody's way of illustrating God's gift of life through Christ. It will never be forced upon anyone, but the offer is open to all. We have only to step forward and receive the gift.—Exchange.

"The Half Was Not Told Me." This is what the queen says after she has seen all. No doubt she expected to dazzle king Solomon with her riches and glory. But he so far exceeded all she had heard that "there was no more spirit in her." She was astonished and bewildered. It all seemed more like a dream or some wonderful fairy story. She would not believe even the reports she had heard, but now she confessed that it all far surpassed any reports. She praised Solomon, and also the people who were permitted to hear his wisdom continually. She said, "Blessed be the Lord thy God, who delighted in thee, to set thee on the throne of Israel." Some think that she accepted the true God and ever after worshipped Him. Then she gave Solomon one hundred and twenty talents of gold, equal to about three million dollars. She also gave him a great store of spices and precious stones, such as they never had seen before. Solomon also gave the queen rich presents from the royal bounty and many other gifts besides. She then returned to her own land.

More and More Glorious. This meeting of Solomon and the queen of Sheba caused two quite opposite effects. Of the queen it is said, that "there was no more spirit in her." This was as if she said, "I can't equal this and I will not try." As to Solomon, it had just the opposite effect. For the next ten or twelve years he was even more constant and active in making himself famous. It was as if he said, "I can do much more than I have, and I'll prove it to the world." At least his actions said this. The queen's praise was a whisper to his vanity and pride, and he was quick to hear it. "He exceeded all the kings of the earth for riches and wisdom." They came to him from far and near. Among the presents that were brought to him were some horses. That seemed to give him an idea for splendor and glory. Very soon he had "a thousand and four hundred chariots, and twelve thousand horsemen." For these he secured horses from Egypt and from Syria and from the Hittites. In this way Solomon seemed to be growing greater and greater. Was he really? We shall see in the next story. But meantime we tremble for this great king because he had a heathen princess for a wife, and now had brought horses and chariots into his kingdom. Can you guess what these acts meant to the future of Solomon?

Avoid the Taint of Sin. A famous artist said he would never allow himself to look at an inferior drawing or painting, to do anything that was low or demoralizing, lest familiarity with it should taint his own ideal, and thus be communicated to his brush. There is everything in holding a high ideal of your work. Hold the idea of excellence constantly in your mind, for whatever model the mind holds the life copies. What we think, that we become. Never allow yourself for an instant to harbor the thought of deficiency, inferiority. Reach to the highest; cling to it. Take no chances with anything that is inferior. Whatever your vocation, let quality be your life slogan. And above all, let this be your rule in spiritual things. Choose Christ, alone, and serve Him heartily and fully.—Exchange.

Quiz and Study. 1. How many of the "seven wise men" of Greece can you name? 2. Quote one or more of Solomon's proverbs. 3. Quote any famous sayings of others. 4. Who was "Poor Richard," and what was he famous for? 5. Define a proverb. See Dictionary. 6. What gifts were brought to the Christ babe, and when and by whom? 7. What is true wisdom? See Eccl. 12:13, 14, Job. 28:28, Luke 11:49, 1 Cor. 1:24-30.

Challenge Text. "Behold, a — than — is here." Matt. 12:(?)

Practical Thoughts. 1. A nation is blessed and honored when it has wise rulers. 2. Christ attracts by the wonders of His wisdom, grace, love and life. 3. The worship of God has the promise of temporal as well as of eternal blessing. 4. The half can never be told of Christ's grace and glory as a Saviour. 5. The people of God should impart blessing to all whom they meet. 6. The world is studying Christ as shown in the believer, in the Church and in the Christian nation. 7. How fully and fairly do we represent Christ in our relations with others? 8. Riches, glory and honor cannot give happiness, but Christ can and does.

SOLOMON'S SIN

For it came to pass, when Solomon was that his wives turned away his heart after other gods: and his heart was not perfect with the Lord his God, as was the heart of his father. For Solomon went after the goddess of the Zidonians, and after Milcom the abomination of the Ammonites. And Solomon did evil in

the sight of the Lord, and went not fully after the Lord, as did David his father. Then did Solomon build an the abomination of the children of Ammon. And likewise for Che-mosh, the abomination of Moab, in the hill that is before Jerusalem, and for

did he for all his strange wives, which burnt incense
and unto their gods.

THE SCRIPTURE LESSON IS I KINGS 11:4-13.

Prayer: Lord Jesus, Help us to see the nature and power of sin. Then only will we be able to see Thee, and welcome Thee as a Saviour. May we avoid the fatal mistake of being satisfied with merely temporal good. Grant us the best spiritual blessings, even Thyself as Saviour, Guide, Helper, Friend. Then only are we safe from sin and sure of Heaven. For Christ's sake. Amen.

Mortal sins thou goest out to battle,

Monsters shapen out of thine own breath,
Traitorous senses, oh, the very clay

Thou art made, of! Fight then to the death,
For the Lord thy God is with thee in this day!

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, B. C. 995. Places, Jerusalem and neighboring hills. Persons, Solomon, his wives, the Lord.

Scripture Setting: The Doom of the Wicked. Warnings of God, Deut. 8:1-20. A sinful nation, Jer. 7:1-10. Doom of the wicked, Psalms. 9. Causes of downfall, Isa. 1:10-24. Fate of the ungodly, Ezek. 26:7-14. The ungodly heart, Heb. 3:1-13. The call to all, Prov. 8:1-7. Last call of grace, Rev. 22:12-21.

Life and Conduct Setting: Here is a common picture of the tactics and progress of sin in the soul and life. 1. A weakening of the inner spiritual forces of heart and conscience, verse 4. 2. A gradual departure from the right in outward conduct, verses 5, 6. 3. Increasing in sin and multiplying times, ways and places of sin, verses 7, 8. 4. Resisting the continued and emphatic warnings of God, verses 9, 10. 5. Provoking God to judgment, and so failing of the mercies and blessings previously enjoyed, verse 11. 6. Failing to turn and repent, even when unexpected mercy is extended, verses 12, 13. 7. Bringing the individual and the nation into many life entanglements, and consequent misery.

GREATEST FOLLY OF THE WISEST KING.

Weakness in Solomon's Greatness. "All is not gold that glitters." This was true in king Solomon's case. Solomon had a gold throne, and gold steps to it, and gold, gold in abundance and for every purpose. But he did not have a heart of pure gold. That is, his heart was not fully right before God. When he had that night vision and God said, "Ask what I shall give thee" he asked for that which would make him famous as an earthly king. That was a good thing to ask, but it was not the best. Solomon kept prospering as an earthly king and became more and more famous for his wisdom, power and glory. He even worshiped God and sacrificed to Him. But he also allowed the worship of other gods, and at last began to worship them himself. This all came about because he did not fully follow God and obey Him. And it began by his not making the best choice at first. This was the weakness in his greatness. It led to his marrying a heathen princess, the daughter of Pharaoh, king of Egypt. She brought her idol gods with her and so idolatry began. Then there were more wives and more false gods, until Solomon forgot the true God almost entirely. "His heart was not perfect with the Lord."

Is the Heart Right? You cannot make intellect the basis of character, because some of the most intellectual people I ever knew had no character. Nor can you make the will the basis of character, because some of the most self-willed people I ever saw were characterless. Neither can you make conscience the basis of character, because conscience is largely a thing of education, somewhat like the fellow who said, when he first joined the church, that any little thing he did wrong turned his conscience, but he said, 'I have got so now I can steal a horse and it doesn't bother me at all.' Therefore the will, the intellect or the conscience cannot be made the foundation of character.

"If I were seeking an enduring foundation on which to rest character, I would make the affections the basis, for the heart controls all the rest."—Sam Jones.

The Wife's Great Influence. Even one wife has great power in the home, as wife and mother. She can make or mar the home. Happy indeed is that home when the wife and mother loves the true God and worships Him by word and life. Solomon's wife was not such a woman, but a heathen who worshiped false gods. And he had not only one such, but seven hundred of them, all worshipping false gods. Then he had three hundred partial or inferior wives, who also were heathen. Poor Solomon! What chance had he to be good? But it was all his own fault, for not one of these bad women could have become the king's wife without his choosing her. Now it is said that "his wives turned away his heart after other gods." He seemed at first to try to worship the true God also; but it was only for a short time. He soon gave up to the many false gods of his wives. And even when he was worshipping God also, God was not pleased with that. God will not be an "also" God. He is the only true God, and He must have the full worship of the whole heart. And we all can see that this is reasonable and is also the very best thing for us.

Influence of Wife and Mother. A group of people were studying the heavens, and wondering what was the center of the universe.

"Well, Johnny, give us your opinion of it all," demanded one of the party, turning toward a small boy. "What is the center of the universe?"

"Maw," answered Johnny, promptly.

There was a ripple of laughter, and then the acquiescing comment of the questioner:

"Well, I suppose she is—to him."

"Alas, he voiced a greater truth than he know!" whispered a mirthful member of the circle into a sympathetic ear. "I don't think I ever knew anyone more self-assured of being the center of the universe than is 'Maw.' All with whom she has anything to do must revolve around her if they revolve at all."—Exchange.

Some of the False Gods. The pictures of them are enough for us. I am sure none of us would begin to worship such things as those. Perhaps you say, "Oh, no, I would rather not have any god." But after all that is a kind of god, and his name is No-god. For some reasons he is the very worst false god. Now let us see what some of these false gods meant. You can study the pictures as we find out about them. There is Ashtoreth, also called Astarte. She was the goddess of the Zidonians who copied her from the wicked Venus of Phoenicia. In the worship of her the worst kind of sins were practiced, and she was supposed to be pleased with it. How very different from the true God, who cannot even look upon sin with the least bit of favor or approval. There is Milcom, which is the same as Molech. This was an idol made of brass and children were sacrificed to it. It was made with great arms and grasping fingers which held the boy or girl fast until the body was all burned up. Our true God, who is Jesus Christ, took the children in his arms, but in order to bless them. Christ loves all the children and all children can easily love Him. There is Chemosh, that is much like Astarte and Molech. The name may be one thing or another, but all are false.

How a Boy Destroyed a False God. A boy who attends one of our Sunday schools went out in the country to spend his vacation, and went to help the men harvest. One of the men was an inveterate swearer. The boy, having stood it as long as he could, said to the man, "Well, I guess I will go home tomorrow." The swearer, who had taken a great liking to him, said: "I thought you were going to stay all summer." "I was," said the boy, "but I cannot stay where anybody swears so; one of us must go, so I will leave." The man felt the rebuke, and said: "If you will stay I won't swear," and he kept his word. Boys, take a bold stand for the right; throw your influence on the side of Christ, and you will sow seed, the harvest of which you will reap, both in this world and that which is to come.—Kind Words.

Solomon the Idolator. It was bad enough for Solomon to allow his wives to worship false gods. This itself was sinful, for he might have prevented it easily. And God holds us responsible for things which we might prevent. But Solomon did not stop at merely allowing idolatry in others. He himself began to be an idolator. It is said that "his heart was not perfect with the Lord," and then "he did evil in the sight of the Lord," and at last we are told that "likewise did he for all his strange wives." His progress in sin is rapid and all because he followed his own selfish will and pride rather than God. His heart was never right, and so at last his life shows it in open idolatry and rebellion. God had been good to him and had appeared twice to him to warn him against the very sins he is now committing. Solomon was willing to use God to advance him in his earthly glory and kingdom. But he never asked God for that higher wisdom which alone can save one from self and sin and Satan. The next story will tell how God punished Solomon and even the mercy in the punishment was "for David's sake." So the wisest king in all the world committed the greatest folly and sin.

Where Solomon Failed. The natives of India used to say of Sir Henry Lawrence: "When Sir Henry looked up twice to heaven and once down to earth, and then stroked his beard, he knew what to do." This suggests the elements of a successful life, especially for one intrusted as a ruler or leader of his people. Solomon was to look up and "seek out all the commandments of the Lord." He was to do the great work that lay about him; and all this was to be done with a meditative, thoughtful spirit; with a perfect heart and with a willing mind, for the Lord searcheth all hearts. Solomon had the outward look of policy and progress, and the inward look of pride and vanity; but he failed to take the upward look of confession, humility and faith.—Exchange.

Quiz and Study. 1. How many wives did Solomon have and what kind? 2. What good traits did Solomon have? 3. What good and great work did he do? 4. What was his fatal lack? 5. How alone may we be saved from sin and kept in the time of temptation?

Challenge Text. "Keep thy _____ with all _____, for out of it are the _____ of life." Prov. 4: (?)

Practical Thoughts. 1. If even Solomon fell, who is safe? 2. The folly of trying to live a good life without Christ and His guidance. 3. The power of a choice that is best as well as wise. 4. The life of sin is usually started in little omissions and transgressions. 5. Many hindering providences are gracious warnings and barriers against a life of sin. 6. Every sin injures others as well as the sinner, and is specially directed against God. 7. Judgment against sin may be long delayed, but falls at last. "Be sure your sin will find you out."

Prayer: Out of the good and the evil of the past, O Lord, may we find wisdom and warning for our own lives. What is loyal to Thee may we follow. What is wicked may we put aside. May the follies of youth pass from us, and the counsel of Thy ministers be heeded by us. Amen.

A YOUNG KING’S FOLLY.

Solomon’s Kingdom. For years before king Solomon died and left his kingdom to his son Rehoboam, it had been like a glittering soap bubble, ready at a touch to burst. The people had been ground to dust under its heavy burdens of taxation for all kinds of lavish expenditure by the great king. He had built himself the finest palace in the world; had erected all kinds of idol temples for his thousand wives and concubines; had levied a great army and built a navy, and had made his people poor and desperate by his extravagances. His most cruel act was to take them from their homes and fields and compel them to labor for months upon his public enterprises.

He had corrupted the religion of Jehovah by allowing his many wives to import their heathen worship into the land, and supplant the worship of the one true God of Israel. The time had come in God’s providence to break in pieces a despotic empire and to restore to the people their right to liberty and happiness.

Solomon’s Son. When Solomon came to die, he named his son Rehoboam to succeed him. This young man was brought up in luxury and viciousness. His father had lost the religious fervor of his earlier manhood, and his mother, Naamah by name, was from the idolatrous country of Ammon, and had succeeded in having Solomon erect a costly temple to the cruel god Moloch over against the Jewish temple. Jerusalem, the capital city, had become corrupted by the vices of many nations brought thither through the evil tolerance of king Solomon.

Rehoboam was about twenty-one at his father’s death, and because of the great reverence of the nation for his grandfather,

David, he could easily have held the love and loyalty of the people and placed his kingdom upon a sure foundation of peace and prosperity. His father’s abuses he could have corrected and by a little kindness to his oppressed and troubled subjects he could have entered upon a great and popular reign. He had a magnificent opportunity as a young king.

The Plea of the People. No sooner had young Rehoboam begun his reign than the people made ready to ask that relief should be granted them from certain forms of oppression. They wanted the lowering of their taxes, which under Solomon had grown onerous and impoverishing. Everything that one ate or drank or wore or owned was taxed to an extreme; a few rich people were growing richer, but the masses of the poor were becoming poorer each year, notwithstanding the fruitfulness of field and vineyard and orchard.

But more than the heavy and exasperating tax was the cruel demand of compulsory labor upon Solomon’s many public enterprises, which were undertaken not for the good of the nation, but for the glorification of the king. The tribes of Judah and Benjamin at the south had less grievance because they were in a sense the beneficiary of Solomon’s schemes, but the “ten tribes” to the north felt the hardness of the conditions, and it was from these great tribes that there came the insistent and bold yet courteous plea to king Rehoboam to lighten their burdens.

The Counsel of Wise Men. Rehoboam went in kingly state to the old northern capital, Shechem, where the ten tribes, with their leaders, had met. With great dignity and courage, they set forward young Jeroboam, whom Solomon had exiled to Egypt, and who had now been recalled to serve as spokesman for the tribes. They said:

"Thy father made our yoke grievous; thou, therefore, make the grievous service of thy father and his heavy yoke which he put upon us, lighter, and we will serve thee."

The king asked three days in which to consider and make answer. Summoning the old men who had been the friends and counsellors of his father Solomon for forty years, some of them doubtless also counsellors of his grandfather David, he asked their advice. They said wisely and kindly, "Be a servant unto your people; help them all you can as their king; answer them graciously; speak a good and comforting word to them; promise them you will lighten their heavy burdens—do this, and they will love you and serve you, O'king, to the end of your days."

The Counsel of Fools. Turning from the old men and their wise counsels, Rehoboam sought the advice of the young men who had grown up with him about the palace of his father. They were the "young bloods" of the capital, as vicious and worthless as Rehoboam himself. As their dainty lives were unused to toil, they had only contempt for the hard-working common people and their cry for help from the king. Neither had they the wisdom to foresee the tragedy of rebellion that waited upon their brutal counsel. They said to Rehoboam:

"Say to the people, whereas my father did lade you with a heavy yoke, I will add to your yoke; my father chastised you with whips, but I will chastise you with scorpions."

So on the third day came Rehoboam before Jeroboam and the leaders of the ten tribes, saying to them as his cruel answer to their plea for mercy: "I will add to your yoke; my father chastised you with whips, but I will chastise you with scorpions."

The Answer of the People. The ten tribes had their answer ready, and it was quickly spoken by their leader, Jeroboam. For one hundred and twenty years they had been loyal to the kingdom under Saul and David and Solomon. They had pride in themselves and their own cities and leaders, but they clung to the line of David and to the temple of Solomon until there came, like the crack of a whip in their faces, this stinging answer of Rehoboam. Then they broke into rebellion, and said: "What portion have we in David? Neither have we inheritance in the son of Jesse. To your tents, O Israel; now see to thine own house, David."

So Israel departed unto their tents, and calling Jeroboam before them, they said: "Be thou king over the ten tribes of Israel."

The Two Kingdoms. Thus broke in pieces

the empire of Solomon, which at one time was the most powerful of its time. In its stead came the two kingdoms of Judah and Israel, or, as often described, the "southern kingdom" and the "northern kingdom," Judah being at the south and Israel at the north. Judah was composed of the tribes of Judah and Benjamin, while the kingdom of Israel was made up of the ten tribes.

Judah had greatly the advantage over Israel in its possession of the city of Jerusalem, the famous capital of David, and in the ownership of the magnificent temple of Solomon, to which the tribes were required to come each year as their one place of national worship. In material ways Israel far surpassed Judah.

King Jeroboam. He was also a young man, though older than Rehoboam. He was of the powerful tribe of Ephraim, and had been made overseer of the building work carried on at Jerusalem by king Solomon, especially the fortress of Millo. His ability as an organizer had attracted the king's notice, and his qualities of leadership and power over men had become favorably known to the tribes. The prophet Ahijah had come to him with a message from Jehovah, saying in effect as follows:

"The Lord God hath sent me to name you as king over the ten tribes of Israel. The time is near at hand when these tribes of the north shall build a kingdom for themselves and shall look to you to be their king. Get ready for the crown."

The word came to Solomon that the prophet had spoken to Jeroboam, and he banished him to Egypt under pain of death if he should return. But when the hour of destiny came Jeroboam was ready and the ten tribes were waiting for him as king.

The Price of Folly. The last word of warning is for the young who, like Rehoboam, have come to their own. As to him, so it will be to every young person—he will have the chance to play wise man or fool. Rehoboam knew the right thing to do, or he would not have sought the old men for advice. His ruin was wrought by the company he kept. If he would only have turned his back on them forever, it would be to this day "Rehoboam the wise king," not "Rehoboam the fool."

Quiz and Study. How had Solomon paved the way to ruin? 2. How had Rehoboam been raised? 3. How had Jeroboam become famous? 4. What might Rehoboam have done? 5. How did the two kingdoms compare?

The Gist of It. 1. Motherhood moulds the son for good or evil in most cases. 2. The weakest quality in the father is often the heritage of the child. 3. The wealth and luxury of the few make the poverty and bondage of many. 4. A man's wife is the door to his success or failure. 5. Breaking God's laws will in time break any nation.

THE SCRIPTURE ACCOUNT IS 1 KINGS 12:26-30.

Prayer: From evil men in high places deliver us, O God. By the memory of our fathers who suffered and died that we might enjoy peace and righteousness and good government, we beseech Thee as Ruler of nations that no evil man shall corrupt and shame us by ungodly example. Amen.

"God of our fathers, known of old;
Lord of our far-flung battle line,
Beneath whose awful hand we hold
Dominion over palm and pine:—
Lord God of Hosts, be with us yet,
Lest we forget, lest we forget."

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, B. C. 976-954, the 22 years of Jeroboam's reign. Places, Shechem, the capital, and Dan and Bethel, the sacred places. Persons, Jeroboam and the prophet Ahijah.

Scripture Setting: Ingratitude and Idolatry. Of Israel. Deut. 32:18. Of Saul. 1 Sam. 15:17. Of David. 2 Sam. 12:7-9. Its punishment. Neh. 9:27; Jer. 18:20. Idolatry punished. Deut. 17:2; Rev. 14:9.

Life and Conduct Setting: 1. Jeroboam's idolatry sets in bold relief the double sin of ingratitude and evil example. 2. Worse than his own baseness towards God who had so highly honored him, and the example of idolatry which he himself set before the kingdom was the fact, as repeatedly stated, that he "caused Israel to sin." He made his subjects sin by compulsion.

HOW A KING "PLAYED POLITICS."

A Great Kingdom. Israel, the northern kingdom, was about twice the area of Judah, and nearly the size of New Hampshire, containing 9,400 square miles. It had fewer mountains and more valleys than its rival kingdom. The Sea of Gennesaret, later the "Sea of Galilee," was an important feature, as was the great plain of Esdraelon to the southward. It was a land "flowing with milk and honey."

Much of the nobler history of the Jewish nation had centered in this northern portion, and its citizenship through the entire history of the "Chosen People" had been of a higher type in courage, independence, and aggressiveness. Most of the leaders of the undivided nation had come out of the ten tribes. There was less luxury and more patriotism and a sincerer worship of God.

A Great Opportunity. Jeroboam was probably forty years of age. No further clue than the name only is given of his family. He was "son of Nebat." He had neither royal blood nor high political or social advantage. He evidently came up democratically from the common people. Rehoboam of Judah was born with a "golden spoon in his mouth," while Jeroboam had forced himself to the top as a man of singular native ability. He had been a hard worker, and had won the high respect of a great king and an entire nation.

It was no small tribute to his ability and reputation that Solomon had grown jealous and fearful of him and had therefore sent him into exile. Never had a young king so great an opportunity to win the hearts of his subjects by a reign of mercy and righteousness and turn their hearts also to Jehovah by a high personal example of gratitude.

What Jeroboam Could Have Done. First, he could have lowered the taxes upon his subjects. It was for this in part his people had pleaded before Rehoboam, and Jeroboam himself was their spokesman. He was to reign twenty-two years, and would have ample opportunity to reform the cruel methods of money-raising that had provoked the rebellion of the tribes. He began this good work, but in a little while his reforms ceased. Second, he could have put aside ambitious exploiting of his kingship and contented himself with living simply and unostentatiously and by a good example have led his people to regain their lost prosperity. This he did not do, but on the contrary, like Saul, soon forgot the lowly origin out of which he came and aped the luxury and prodigality of other evil kings. Third, he might have honored God, who had lifted him to such high eminence, and by a devout example and firm hand upon the idolatrous tendencies of the times have healed the religious backslidings of the nation.

What Jeroboam Did. His first royal act, which was defensible, was to build anew into a large and beautiful city Shechem as his capital, and to fortify it, and also Penuel, east of the Jordan, as a defense against Assyria. Fearing that if his people under the law of Moses continued to go annually to the temple at Jerusalem to attend the appointed feasts and to worship Jehovah, they would transfer their loyalty to Rehoboam and cause the loss thereby of his own place and power, he craftily devised a plan of worship of his own and made a law that his subjects should remain at home. He made two calves of gold, and after building shrines to contain them, he set up one at Dan, in the far north of his kingdom, and one at its extreme south, near to Jerusalem, and decreed these two places to be the centers of worship.

He next unlawfully took upon himself to appoint men as priests who would be willing to serve in the worship of the golden calves, the regular priests of the temple refusing thus to serve. Having thus appointed his idolatrous worship and his false priests and changed feasts, Jeroboam followed it up by enacting that his people should worship only at Dan and Bethel.

How the Plan Worked. Jeroboam did not mean that his golden calves should be worshipped as idol-gods. They were intended to represent Jehovah to the people as some sort of "graven image," which the law of God had expressly forbidden. By putting the two images, one at the north and one at the south, on the great road to Jerusalem the king made it easy for the people to stay for worship near to their own homes and avoid the labor and expense of going up each year to Jerusalem.

As there were certain great feast days appointed for definite times by Moses, and to be observed only at Jerusalem, Jeroboam sought to counteract these religious attractions by other like feasts for his own kingdom but upon different days. From his unlawfully chosen band of priests it was easy to secure a shameless compliance with his craftily devised plan of worship which both disobeyed and dishonored God and ensnared his people.

The Evil Outcome. For hundreds of years later Jeroboam's artful scheme of idolatry infected Israel like a poison. It became the pattern and suggestion to other kings, and because it had a certain plausibility about it there were even good men who defended it. It was the consummate plan of a politician who put his own interest over against his duty to God and his people.

The first evil consequence was that many priests too conscientious to serve before the graven images exiled themselves from their priest-cities in Israel and removed to Judah as a refuge. They were followed by many of the people. The golden calves intended only to represent Jehovah soon became objects of worship in themselves, as is always the case, the weak worshipper passing easily from the unseen God to worship that which stands for Him.

Ingratitude and Disobedience. Jeroboam's worst sin was his ingratitude, and the worst form of ingratitude is that which turns against the goodness of God and tramples His mercy under foot. Jeroboam had been given great natural ability and powers of leadership. In the providence of God he had risen to high position among the tribes, but had lost it through the jealousy of his king. Poor and exiled he had been driven into an unfriendly country, out of which the kindness of Jehovah had recalled him to the highest place in the gift of his countrymen. While the crown and sceptre of the kingdom seemed to come from the people, it was the direct gift of God, as Ahijah, his prophet, had foretold.

What a tremendous change from exile and poverty in Egypt to a palace and a throne in his own kingdom, and what base ingratitude to have set his subjects to worshipping calves of gold and dishonoring the temple of Jehovah and breaking in pieces his laws, for no better end than that the scheme of a selfish and ungrateful politician might be attained.

Jeroboam's Epitaph. The Bible has some good and noble epitaphs over the memory of its saints and heroes, and it also has some that mark the extreme of wickedness and of Divine displeasure. Especially do we find such epitaphs of evil among the records of the kings of Israel and Judah in the books of Kings and Chronicles. Over many of their graves it is written, "He did that which was evil in the sight of the Lord." Over a few it is recorded that "He did that which was right in the sight of the Lord."

But Jeroboam achieved the deepest infamy of all, and because his sin was greatest his epitaph is repeated twenty-three times over in these words: "Jeroboam, son of Nebat, made Israel to sin." It was bad enough to sin against one's self, as do most sinners. It was worse to sin against others, and by an evil example and influence, lead one's companions into sin. But worst of all was it to go beyond example and personal sinning and as a king to so frame the laws of a nation as to "make" his subjects to sin against Almighty God. This epitaph stands apart.

The Last Word. Jeroboam, by the mercy of God, was king for twenty-two years. His political schemes for a time prospered and the nation became more and more pliant and wicked. He lived long enough, however, to reap some of the ruin he had sowed and to find that God makes mock of politics and politicians.

Quiz and Study. 1. What is the evil epitaph of the Bible concerning Jeroboam? 2. Why did Jeroboam enact an idolatrous worship for his kingdom? 3. Why did he appoint his own priests? 4. What was his worst sin? 5. Why was it worst?

The Heart of the Story. 1. God chooses a man for what he might be. 2. Opportunity knocks at every man's door, but stays not. 3. Because God chooses a man as His instrument does not always signify that the man is a saint. He makes even the devils to serve Him. 4. Ingratitude and prosperity too often go together. 5. Politics and religion are not usually yokefellows.

THE SCRIPTURE ACCOUNT IS 1 KINGS 16:15-33.

Prayer: Thou, O God, hast given unto us to live in an age of light and liberty, under the blessings of the Gospel of Jesus Christ. Our homes, our happiness, our freedom, our religion, our good rulers and churches and schools, are all Thy gifts. Amen.

"We praise Thee that the Gospel's light
Through all our land its radiance sheds;
Dispels the shades of error's night,
And heavenly blessings 'round us spread."

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, B. C. 936 to 904, inclusive; the 34 years of the united reigns of Omri and Ahab. Places, Tirzah, Samaria and Jezreel, capital cities or pleasure homes of Israel's kings. Persons, Omri, Shemer, Ahab, Jezebel.

Scripture Setting: National righteousness. Prov. 14:34. The good ruler. Isa. 32:1. The doom of the evil ruler. Prov. 10:25. An evil woman. Prov. 12:4.

Life and Conduct Setting: 1. An evil line of kings the heritage. 2. An ambitious and able father without principle or fear of God or man. 3. A son more evil than his evil father, both by inheritance and disposition. 4. A woman more evil than either father or son. 5. A worldly and prosperous nation saturated with idolatry and increasing licentiousness.

AN EVIL TRINITY—FATHER, SON AND WIFE.

An Evil Line. The two kingdoms, Israel and Judah, set out side by side, each moved by envy and hatred of the other. Both began with evil kings, Rehoboam and Jeroboam. Both had groves and altars and shrines in abundance to the gods of heathendom. For some reason the bad beginning in Judah was broken into by the reign of two really great and good men, Asa and Jehoshaphat, father and son. In the northern kingdom there were five kings before the reign of Omri, as follows: Jeroboam, Nadab, Baasha, Elah and Zimri.

These were of changing dynasties, but amid all changes one thing remained constant, and that was the evil spirit of Israel's kings. "He did that which was evil" is continually written over them by the sacred historian. Besides this was the turmoil of war and blood; the dagger of the assassin; the deadly increase in the viciousness of court and people. There was not much promise of peace or righteousness to king or nation.

The Downward Pull. What was it that brought to pass this steady downward movement of the nation and such an unbroken line of evil rulers? Why was it that Judah, of the same blood and raising and of the same country and environment, should now and then have great and good men come to its throne and rule in righteousness over a glad people? The answer is not easy to give, but here are some things to be said:

First, it was because the priests of Judah, many of them at least, were good and true men, and kept alive the true worship of Jehovah and the spirit of religion among the people. It is certain that some of Judah's good kings owed their goodness to the timely care and training of a godly priest. The priests of the northern kingdom were unfit usurpers of the sacred office, and their lives were false and vicious. Secondly, Israel, on its temporal side, was too prosperous. In this it far exceeded Judah. Put together prosperity and bad spiritual leaders, and the downward pull is doubly strong.

Baal Worship. Ancient idolatry, as named in the Bible, ranged from the nobler form of worship of the heavenly bodies, the sun and moon and stars, down through the fire-worship, to images of beasts and reptiles upon the earth. In some cases, as in Egypt, there were blended the purer and the grosser forms. In Israel the same condition existed. A remnant, godly and undaunted, both of priests and people, continued to worship Jehovah according to the ritual of Moses. But the mass of the people borrowed the evil religions of surrounding nations and made them their own.

Vilest, grossest, deadliest and most seductive of all was the worship of Baal, which came chiefly from the Zidonians, whose cities were Tyre and Sidon. Baal was part sun god, part Bacchus, part Hercules and was worshipped under the image of a bull, the symbol of the male power of generation. He was wanton like Peor, cruel like Moloch, insatiate in lust like Minotaur, and the priestesses were prostitutes and fornication the sacrament. Astarte, the female god, divided the infamous honors of the licentious and unspeakable ritual of this wide-prevailing pagan cult.

Israel's Proneness to Idolatry. Why did the Jew, of all the people in the earth, so repeatedly fall into idolatry, is a question not easy to answer. Remembering that his pathway as a nation was marked by a blaze of miracles, and that from the days of Abraham, founder of the nation, to David and Solomon there had been an unfailing succession of prophets and miracles direct from God, it is a strange thing that a people so honored should riot in the worship of idols and so soon and so often forget the mighty power so many times wielded for their benefit by the hand of Providence. Yet for thousands of years the Jew put to shame God's favor and made mock of miracle and messenger, and was saved from destruction again and again, only because He had pledged His eternal faith and mercy to certain great leaders of the nation. Perhaps it was the sense of that unbounded mercy and long-suffering and the conceit of being the "chosen people" of God that begot in the Jew his presumption and ingratitude.

Omri's Twelve Years. Omri and Zimri were generals of the army of Israel, both treacherous, cruel and ambitious. Zimri was the trusted servant of king Elah, but had come upon his master when drunk in his palace at Tirzah and had slain him in a most cowardly way, and then assumed the kingship. Omri's division of the army, hearing of this, proclaimed Omri king, and civil war set in until Omri finally won the kingdom.

His first achievement was the purchase of the "hill of Shemer" on which he built his capital, Samaria, and so fortified it that it withstood many severe sieges in after years. Omri was a soldier, a hard fighter, a scheming, ambitious man, ready to betray or slay a friend or foe if impeding his kingly plans. His chance came and he took it, regardless of consequences. So skillful in war was he that he compelled respect and forced tribute from his enemies. He might have made an imperishable name as a wise and helpful ruler had he so chosen, but his fame rests upon the shameful fact that he deliberately corrupted his people and added to the villainess of existing idolatries in Israel by introducing and giving prestige to Baal worship, the most vicious and licentious of all ancient religions.

Ahab's Twenty-two Years. "Ahab" means a "son who resembles his father," and the name singularly fits the case. He had much of the ability of his father Omri and more of evil, though that seems hardly possible. He was a general of deserved fame. He had a measure of patriotism, and extended the power of his kingdom. He was far from being a coward or a weakling, but he was selfish, covetous, egotistical and cruel to the last degree. He seemed wholly lacking in the sense of kingly honor and self-respect or in the dignity and justice of a king. He did more evil of a more vicious kind than Omri, and swept Israel yet further into Baalism. He built in his capital city a great temple to Baal, and set a body of four hundred and fifty priests of that religion to minister for the people, and after setting up an image of Ashtarothe, the female deity, he instituted and encouraged the indecent rites in her honor.

Queen Jezebel. Ahab took to wife "Jezebel, the daughter of Ethbaal." The modern name is "Elizabeth," but in this sweet old-fashioned name among women it is well that we do not recall that of Ahab's queen. Bad as he was, she was worse; a bad woman always descending to a lower depth than a bad man. Her father, king of the Zidonians, worshipper of the vile Astarte, the Zidonian Venus, had slain his own brother and usurped his throne. Jezebel was a brilliant and probably beautiful woman, more than a match for her husband, who became a tool in her hand.

She was an intense Baal worshipper and an equally intense hater of Jehovah and the Jewish monotheism. She had great courage and audacity; was as resolute as adamant in her evil plans, and most atrociously shamed the sex to which she belonged by the satanic cruelty of her nature. "She was one of those masterful, indomitable, implacable ones who, when fate places them in power, leaves a terrible mark on the annals of nations." She was the Bloody Mary, the Lucretia Borgia and the Catherine de Medici, all in one body of evil.

Good and Bad Rulers. Think of twenty-two long years of evil rule under this ill-matched pair, Ahab and Jezebel. Both names are by-words in history and men and women turn the pages that tell their story with strong disgust. But it is not so much their own personal wickedness as it is their baleful influence upon their subjects. The first evil effect of a wicked ruler is to coarsen the moral fibre of every man, as that of a bad woman in a high place is to coarsen her sister women.

The next evil effect is the evil that falls upon the home in the coarsening and brutalizing of the father and mother, and in the taking away of the tenderness and purity that belong to that holiest of all institutions—the home. The third and worst effect of evil rulers is in robbing childhood of its right to good and true parentage and to the sweetness and sacredness of the undefiled home life.

The Last Word. Power for good or evil is multiplied many times by whether one's husband or wife be good or bad. No alliance of evil and good can command the blessing of God or the favor of men, and it is certain that two evil spirits bound together in marriage are tenfold the worse to themselves and others. Therefore let young men and women take heed whom they wed.

Quiz and Study. 1. How is the continued evil of Israel's kings to be explained? 2. How did Israel's kings compare with Judah's? 3. What were Omri's best and worst acts? 4. How did Ahab dishonor God in his capital city? 5. What were the characteristics of queen Jezebel?

Food for Thought. 1. Sin is not of God's authority or permission. 2. The most dangerous religion is that which sanctifies lust. 3. "The human heart is deceitful above all things and desperately wicked." 4. A man is always made better or worse by his wife, and conversely. 5. A bad woman sinks to the lowest level of wickedness.

Prayer: May Thy good hand be upon us also, O Lord. May the prophet's trust in Thee and obedience to Thy Word be our example and admonition. Reveal Thyself to us that we may know Thy love and care and power are greater than our needs. Amen.

"Guide me, O Thou great Jehovah,
Pilgrim through this barren land;
I am weak, but Thou art mighty,
Hold me with Thy powerful hand.
Bread of Heaven,
Feed me till I want no more."

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, B. C. 920-900, the twentieth year of Elijah's career. Places, Cherith and Zarephath. Persons, Ahab, Elijah, the widow and son.

Scripture Setting: The righteous upheld, Psa. 37. God the feeder of all, Psa. 136:25. Like a father, Psa. 103:13. God's care for us, Matt. 6: 25-34. Always with us, Matt. 28:20.

Life and Conduct Setting: God's care of Elijah, as illustrated: 1. By giving courage and protection as he came before king Ahab. 2. By making him His chosen ambassador before court and nation. 3. By sending the ravens with food to sustain him during the famine. 4. By clothing him with miracle working power for himself and those dependent on him.

A STORY OF BIRDS AND BREAD AND BARREL.

Sin and Judgment. Under the doubly evil example of Ahab and Jezebel Israel was hurrying on to apostasy and destruction. It was only a question of a few years at most until the fires of patriotism would die out wholly and there would come the armies of hostile nations and the desolations of war. Always in due time sin, whether of individual or nation, is followed by judgment.

But in the case of Israel the great mercy of Jehovah accorded them another opportunity to repent and turn from their idolatry. His instrumentality to bring them back to their senses was not in this case to be the armies of Assyria or Egypt. He would discipline them Himself and in such a way that it would be plain to Israel that the judgment was from God and designed to arouse their consciences and recall them to the forsaken altars and faith of their fathers.

Famine. Grim famine was to be the Divine scourge for king and people, and it was to be so far prolonged that men would see in it an unmistakable sign of Jehovah's displeasure at the sins into which His people had fallen. The sword of the invader might be misunderstood and accredited to the spirit of conquest. The pestilence, slaying its tens of thousands, might not appear to be God's direct instrument. However destructive these agencies of punishment they could not fall upon all alike. A three-years' famine sent from God would afflict every living creature alike, whether man or beast. And Elijah, the Tishbite, the rugged son of the wilderness, the "storm-king" of Israel, God's greatest prophet, was to carry the word of famine and judgment into the very presence of Ahab and Jezebel.

Enter Elijah. He was called "the Tishbite," probably from his birthplace in Gilead, east of the Jordan, a high plateau, fit chiefly for grazing. Rough, austere, disdaining the vices and luxuries of his nation, out of the rude lands beyond the river, he appeared before king Ahab without warning or ceremony. The Hebrew prophet had no need for introduction or apology. For a thousand years, when God had called to duty His prophets He had so ordered their lot that king and court and people stood reverently before them as they came with their "burden" of prophecy upon them.

There was no pause of doubt or skepticism or cowardice with the brave old Tishbite. He was conscience keeper to king and peasant alike and could go where he pleased and say what God had given him to speak. "As the Lord God liveth, before whom I stand, there shall not be dew nor rain these years but according to my word."

Suffering and Sorrow. The famine began its work of destruction. For a time there was little change. The valleys were green, the trees held their foliage, the countless streams and brooks of the northern kingdom went surging under the sunlight. Food and drink grew scarcer and the rains ceased to fall. By and by the early and the latter rains wholly failed; the waters dried up except in remote and protected places; the ground grew bare and desolate and the heavens above were as brass. Starvation set in for people and cattle, and the one supreme purpose of all was to find food enough to sustain life. The land was filled with suffering and sorrow: children were crying to their mothers for bread and fathers were looking here and there in vain for relief for their little ones; while the beasts of the barren fields were making their moans. It was all terrible, but it was the only way to bring the idolatrous and backslidden people to a realization of their great sin. Hard and cruel as suffering appears, it is often an angel of mercy and deliverance to sinning men.

The Brook Cherith. While stream and field and vineyard and orchard were growing utterly desolate and barren and the Baal-worshippers were crying in vain to their god to send them rain and food, God was watching specially over the life of His brave prophet. First, he sent him to the "Brook Cherith," which was somewhere to the east beyond the Jordan, near to Elijah's native country. No one knows just where Cherith and its saving pool of water was, but its remoteness and seclusion along some canon of the river must have made it a safe place of refuge against the terrible drouth and also against the wrath of king Ahab. Here Elijah stayed close to God, fed daily by the great strong ravens who came at Jehovah's bidding to bring him food from some unknown place.

No stranger miracle than this is in all the Bible. Yet it is easy to understand that if God can give a bird the strange instinct of flight hither and thither in search of its own food, He could as easily make it to find food for His prophet.

Zarephath of Zidon. The time came when the water in the brook Cherith failed and the ravens, by God's bidding, ceased to bring Elijah his morning and evening meal. It had been a noble school of faith and hope in God to the prophet, as day by day he waited the coming of the birds and watched the drying up of the brook.

But now God's strange providence once more interposed. "Get thee to Zarephath," it said, and Elijah moved far to the north towards Lebanon, then west to near Zidon, a Phenician city on the shore of the "Great Sea." To this day a chapel, built hundreds of years ago, marks the supposed site of the place where Elijah dwelt until the end of the famine came. Singularly, too, it was in the land of Jezebel, who would have given much to know the prophet's hiding place that she and Ahab by any means might extort from him the word that would bring rain from heaven upon the parched land.

Widow and Son. Hither to the village of Zarephath came Elijah, worn and thirsty and hungry, and doubtless wondering over the strangeness of the providence that brought him to this starving village. Just outside the gate he met a widow to whom he made his plea for a little water and food.

Doubtless the streams from the mountains of Lebanon, snow-covered, kept alive the streams around Zidon, but food was scant as elsewhere. The water was brought, but the handful of meal and the last of the olive oil were all that remained to the widow and her son. "Fear not," said Elijah, "make me a little cake first, and afterward make for thee and thy son." And then he promised her in the name of the Lord God of Israel that "the barrel of meal shall not waste, neither shall the cruse of oil fail, until the day that the Lord sendeth rain upon the earth." In her humble home Elijah abode as guest until the famine ended.

A Story Within a Story. While Elijah was waiting for the end of the famine in the widow's home there came to pass a wonderful miracle at his hands that should be told here in the very words of the Bible as found in the 17th chapter of I Kings:

"And it came to pass after these things, that the son of the woman fell sick; and his sickness was so sore that there was no breath left in him. * * * And Elijah said unto her, Give me thy son. And he took him out of her bosom and carried him up into a loft where he abode, and laid him upon his own bed. * * * And he stretched himself upon the child three times and cried unto the Lord and said, O Lord, my God, I pray thee let this child's soul come into him again. And the Lord heard the voice of Elijah; and the soul of the child came into him again, and he revived. And Elijah took the child and brought him down out of the chamber into the house and delivered him unto his mother; and Elijah said, See, thy son liveth."

The Reason for It. The story of Elijah has both God's wrath and mercy as its elements. Nothing but suffering, long, intense, and general, would wean Israel from its abominable idolatry. It looks cruel that men, women, children and beasts of the field should be starved to death; but starvation is better than filth and every abominable vice. Better the children in Heaven than on earth, if reared amid such unspeakable wickedness. And then their fathers and mothers were the guilty ones who deserved the punishment they received, and could be brought to their senses only by the judgment of God.

Quiz and Study. 1. What was Israel's religious condition when Elijah came? 2. Who were responsible for this condition? 3. Why did God send famine upon the nation? 4. Why did he punish both innocent and guilty? 5. Why did he put power over the famine in Elijah's hands?

Meditations. 1. God's ways are not always plain, but they are always right and just and merciful. 2. God always has a man ready for an emergency. 3. Man is immortal till his work is done. 4. The way of suffering is commonly the way of spiritual quickening. 5. God is to be trusted absolutely, even to the death.

ELIJAH AND AHAB

And Ahab called Obadiah, which was the

of his house.
(Now Obadiah feared the Lord greatly:
For it was so, when Jezebel cut off the

of the Lord, that Obadiah took an hundred prophets, and hid them by fifty in a with bread and water.)

And Ahab said unto Obadiah, Go into the land, unto all of water, and unto all brooks: peradventure we may find grass to save the alive, that we lose not all the beasts. So they divided the land between them to pass throughout it: Ahab went one way by himself, and Obadiah went another way by himself. And as Obadiah was in this way, behold, Elijah

and he knew him,
and

and said, Art thou that my lord Elijah? And he answered him, I am: go, tell thy lord, Behold.
Elijah is here.

Prayer: Give unto Thy servants, O Lord, the courage and loyalty of Thy ancient prophet. When men in authority or the people under them would sin against Thy law, may Thy servants with boldness and love declare against it. Amen.

Our country we commend;
Be thou her refuge and her trust,
Her everlasting Friend."

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, between B. C. 920-900. Place, somewhere near Samaria, the capital.
Persons, Elijah, Obadiah, Ahab.
Scripture Setting: God's Mercy and Wrath. Full of compassion, Psa. 78:38. Will not always chide, Psa. 103:9. Will turn away wrath, Psa. 106:

23. Mercy follows wrath, Psa. 107:10-14.

Life and Conduct Setting: God's unfailing mercy:

1. Keeping guard over His saints. 2. Heeding the cries of the suffering. 3. Putting an end to famine.
4. Showing mercy even to Ahab if he would repent.
5. Keeping covenant with His servants.

AHAB BOWS BEFORE ELIJAH

Israel's Repentance. For three and a half terrible years the famine had fastened upon Israel, until scarcely enough bread and water were left to sustain life. The king himself knew not how to keep alive the dependents on his bounty. Such hard pinching, ever-intensifying hunger and thirst, for a time at least, broke the stubborn heart of the people and even moved the fear of the king. God's heavy judgment was not so much to punish as to reform, and when there began to be a spirit of sorrow among the people for the idolatry that had so dishonored Jehovah the hand of Divine Providence lifted and the conditions were changed. It was a long, terrible test of the Baal whom they had worshiped, and when there was no relief to suffering from their idol gods there came back with shame and sorrow the memory of the God of their fathers and how He had given them bread and water and sent the early and the latter rains.

The Mercy of God. Their hearts were open to God, and He knew that the end intended by such suffering had at last been attained, and therefore judgment gave place to mercy. He saw that Ahab, who had ransacked all places in his own kingdom and sent messengers to neighboring kingdoms in quest of Elijah, that he might lay hold upon and compel the prophet to undo the famine, had now for the first time attained a state of mind and heart where Elijah would dare to come into his wicked presence and speak the word of command from Jehovah. God saw further, that the masses of the people were at last ready, in a little time, to stand in the presence of Ahab and the priests of Baal and, denouncing the latter, cry with one voice: The Lord He is God. The "turn of the tide" had come at last even though it was not to be lasting, and the mercy of God became uppermost.

Faithful Obadiah. When His time had come to take away the famine God spake to Elijah and commanded him to show himself to Ahab and tell the king that he would send rain upon the earth. About that time Ahab had called before him in his palace at Samaria the governor of his home affairs, Obadiah, and had instructed him to go into all places where water could possibly be found, that the lives of the king's horses and mules might be saved. Ahab, in his anxiety, divided the kingdom between himself and Obadiah to search after water, and Obadiah, on his way, met Elijah, who bade him go tell Ahab of his coming. "Obadiah feared the Lord greatly," and had hid away and fed a hundred prophets of Jehovah despite the wrath of Jezebel, and his faithfulness to God was known to Elijah. At first he hesitated about going to his master, knowing the king's hatred for Elijah and fearing that if the prophet were carried away his own life would pay the penalty. But Elijah comforted the loyal servant of God by saying: "As the Lord of hosts liveth, * * * I will surely show myself unto the king today."

Brave Elijah. The time of enforced seclusion and quiet for Elijah has passed. God had fed him by the ravens at Cherith, and from the miraculously-filled barrel and cruse of Zarephath. For years Ahab had been seeking him with evil intent, and now Elijah's time had come to stand before Ahab. Elijah was worthy the confidence of his God. He was born and reared in the mountains of Gilead, in sight and sound of the majesty of the heavens and the earth. He was strong, hardy, temperate, swift—a typical mountaineer. He was, tradition tells us, a man of short stature, of rugged countenance, with the thick locks of the Nazarite streaming over his shoulders like a lion's mane, giving him a fierce and unkempt appearance. More than all, with stern and unswerving loyalty to God, he hated with a bitter hatred the abominations of Baal, the cruelty of Ahab and the licentiousness of Jezebel.

Face to Face. For three years and more the prophet and the king had dwelt apart. Elijah's last warning had been that rain would not fall upon the earth again until he should speak the word. Then, it was Elijah waiting before the king; now, it was Elijah who had sent word to the king to come before him. Doubtless Ahab, taught in the wonderful history of his race, knew something of the mighty power committed to the Hebrew prophets, and he must have been sure in his heart that this was God's man. Doubtless, too, he had so felt the keen edge of famine and so knew himself to be under censure of the loyal servants of Jehovah in his kingdom, that a measure of humility had found way into his proud spirit. If he had sense of courage and truth at all, how must his heart have sunk within him as he looked once more into the rough heaven-lit face of the brave Tishbite who feared only his God. "Art thou he that troubleth Israel?" he asked, with something of his old pride and hate. Mark the noble answer, divinely patient and dignified, of Elijah: "I have not troubled Israel; but thou and thy father's house, in that ye have forsaken the commandments of the Lord, and hast followed Baalim."

Elijah's Command. The man from the mountains, rough-clad and stern, was master now, and more than king and army and royal blood and prerogative. Why some great painter has not immortalized himself by picturing this scene between prophet and king of Israel is a matter of wonder, as all its elements are tragic, intense and full of power and interest.

Elijah speaks quickly and sharply without a moment's hesitation, and in the voice of a king to his discredited and conscience-stricken royal master, if master he could be called even by courtesy: "Go," he said, "gather to me all Israel unto Mount Carmel, and the prophets of Baal four hundred and fifty, and the prophets of the groves four hundred, which eat at Jezebel's table." Turning from him, the king, with unquestioning obedience to Elijah's stern command, sent his messengers throughout the famine-stricken land, saying to all Israel: "The king commands your presence at Mt. Carmel on such a day."

The Coming Doom. Ahab knew that it was the rumble of the day of judgment to the false gods and worshippers of Baalim, and that Jehovah's triumph was soon to transpire. Let him have credit at least for discerning the hand of God in the movements and words of this utterly fearless servant, the prophet. What was impending at Carmel he could by no means surmise, but his quick obedience to Elijah's word proved that he foresaw a day of reckoning to all who resisted the power and will of Jehovah.

Baal with all his splendor of temples and worshippers had failed to provide a drop of rain or a blade of grass. His power, put to the test, had been broken and dishonored, and now the sign of Israel's one true God was in the heavens above and the earth beneath. With the shadow of a great tragedy awaiting king and people, and fear and joy blending as the people heard that Elijah had come to his own as God's prophet, court and people made ready for the gathering at Carmel.

God's Reasons. Before the crucial day of Carmel comes, let the reader take time to consider and review the conditions that invoked a day of judgment.

First, king Ahab had broken every law of kingly obligation to his people and his God, and it was needed that he should be humbled and discredited before the nation.

Second, Jezebel the queen had made Israel to reek with the licentiousness and cruelty of her imported idolatry and her four hundred priests of the groves and, in default of repentance by them or their vile mistress, justice ordained their utter extermination for the sake of Israel.

Third, the four hundred and fifty priests of Baal who had so long blinded the eyes and corrupted the ways of the plain people had not shared in the sufferings of the famine or in the sorrow of heart that came to their deluded victims and they also deserved the doom that awaited.

Lastly, the people who had so grievously sinned, but after God's punishment had repented, needed an opportunity to renew the ancient covenant which they had broken.

The Uplifting Curtain. Behind the curtain of Divine judgment, of famine and pale-faced mothers and crying children, of starvation and sorrow beyond description and far beyond our experience, there have been mysteries that we could not understand about God and evil and punishment. Some things we will not understand at all in this present life; but as the curtain is lifting and Carmel is coming into view we begin to see certain great truths that have been hidden from us.

Quiz and Study. 1. Why did Obadiah fear to bear Elijah's message to Ahab? 2. What rebuke did Elijah give to Ahab? 3. What did he command Ahab to do? 4. Why was Ahab so changed in the presence of Elijah? 5. Why did God send Elijah alone as His representative?

Looking Backward. 1. One man, with God at his back, is a majority. 2. The man of sternness is needed for the time of great sin. 3. A troubled conscience is a wonderful tamer of a proud spirit. 4. A man who fears God utterly can fear none else. 5. "The mills of God grind slowly, but they grind exceeding small."

THE PROPHETS OF BAAL

And it came to pass at the time of the offering of the evening that Elijah the

came near, and said,
Lord God of Abraham, Isaac, and of Israel, let it be known this day that thou art God in Israel, and that I am thy servant, and that I have done all these things at thy word. Hear me, O Lord, hear me, that this people may know that thou art the Lord God, and that thou hast turned their heart back again. Then the and consumed the burnt sacrifice, and the wood, and the stones, and the dust, and licked up the water that was in the trench. And when all the people saw it,

they

and they said, The Lord, he is the God; the Lord, he is the God.
And Elijah
said unto them, Take the prophets of Baal; let not one of them escape.
And they took them:
and Elijah

them down to the brook
Kishon, and

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, between B. C. 920 and 900, nearer the latter year. Place, Mt. Carmel, overlooking the Great Sea. Persons, Elijah, Ahab, the priests and people.

Scripture Setting: A time of confession, I Jno. 1:9. A day of decision, Josh. 24:15. Backslidings healed, Jer. 14:4. God's promise of old, Deut. 30:1-3.

Life and Conduct Setting: The great concourse on Mt. Carmel had many significant features: 1. The place itself was central and historic. 2. A broken and neglected altar to the true God was a mute witness to all their long backslidings. 3. The worst of kings, ashamed and fearful, was there. 4. Priests of Baal and Ashteroth, nearly a thousand in number, were chief actors. 5. The penitent and suffering people, with the greatest of prophets, Elijah, as the central figure, waited.

TRUSTING GOD AND TESTING BAAL.

The Time. When the great famine—the first general disaster that had fallen upon Israel—had come, the nation religiously was at its worst, the physical famine being a sign of the spiritual famine of God's word and work. Now that the end for which the famine was sent was at least partly attained and the people were penitent the time was ripe for the great test between the hosts of Baal and of Jehovah, as represented by His lone prophet. Elijah was coming toward the end of his hard career of twenty years. His ministry had been full of pain and persecution and sadness of heart, and its one aim had been to bring Israel to repentance, that by their help he might purge the land he so greatly loved of the priests and shrines of idolatry. In God's mercy the time for bringing all things to pass was now come.

The Place. "No spot could have been more fitting for the gathering of Israel. The long range of Carmel, some parts of which rise 1,600 and 1,700 feet above the sea, skirts the whole south of Esdraelon. Of this the promontory at the western end, rising about 600 feet above the waters at its foot, was chosen. Though then bare and scorched, like the whole country, its luxuriant richness in ordinary times was a proverb, Carmel clothed with verdure being the paradise of the land. The altar on it had been a great place of religious resort on new moons and Sabbaths, and though now overthrown, was famous throughout the land. Close beneath the rocks, under the shade of ancient olive trees, was a well which was said never to fail, and this, even after long drought, still held sufficient water to supply Elijah with as much as he required. About twenty-five miles off, on the southwest, rose the city of Jezreel on its green hill, with Ahab's palace and stately gardens, in which perhaps was Jezebel's temple of Asherah.

The People. It must have been a vast multitude of the plain people who gathered at Carmel. Its central position and accessibility coupled with the rumor of the interposition of Elijah; his issue with all of Baal's priests; the presence of the king himself, and the expectation of some great tragedy, must have drawn the people from all parts of the kingdom, no point of which was more than fifty or sixty miles distant. The place afforded a great natural amphitheatre, about which many thousands could stand and see and hear. By many Elijah and the king would be seen for the first time, and a contrast would be drawn between the two men, the impression of which would remain until death. The sin of the people, who had been more sinned against than sinning, was in their instability. "How long will ye halt between two opinions?" was Elijah's sharp question to them, or, as one translates it, "How long will you hop from bough to bough like the birds?"

The Priests. Eight hundred and fifty of these graced the occasion in their "white robes and peaked turbans." Four hundred and fifty of them were ministers of Baal, the Phœnician "sun-god" whose vast temple Ahab had built at Samaria, in which the image of Baal shone resplendent. Theirs was the official religion, whose temples and shrines were distributed throughout the kingdom, an insistent, aggressive and defiant religion that threw down the altars of Jehovah and put in their stead the obscene images of the imported deities. The first great era of persecution was begun by these infamous and foreign priests of Baal, who, with their hosts of prostitutes serving their vocation under the guise of priestesses of the temples and groves, stopped short of no device of cruel and licentious superstition to serve Ahab and Jezebel and corrupt the people. Along with these priests of Baal were four hundred priests of Asherah, whom Jezebel had brought with her from Zidon and installed at Samaria and Jezreel, feeding them at her own table.

The King's Court. Ahab, with probably his court, was conspicuous in the assemblage, as nominal master of the day by virtue of his royal position. But in the estimation of all but his priests, even in his own esteem, he was far from being the real master. His queen was not there. Whether Ahab was essentially a cruel or simply a weak king, moved to evil by others, is a question unsettled among students of history. He was vicious and sensual. His evil life was so overshadowed and dominated by the greater wickedness of his wife that he is sometimes made to appear in an excusable light. But Elijah knew the positive meanness of the man when he said, "It is thou and thy house that troubleth Israel."

Elijah the Tishbite. Above all others, in the simple power of his great character, towered the prophet Elijah, whom one has called "the grandest and most romantic figure Israel ever produced."

Disdaining the luxuries of life, and living only to serve his God sincerely, he appeared in strange company among sleek priests and well dressed courtiers in his tunic, with belt of hide tightened about him like a son of the desert. His mantle and staff were his only superfluities, and he has been truly pictured perhaps as "sinewy and thin from his scant diet, his hard life, the rapidity of his movements and his powers of physical endurance." At Carmel, or elsewhere, he would be the observed of all observers, the most striking personality in all the vast company of priests and politicians and courtiers and soldiers and people. It was his hour and he knew it.

Jehovah Versus Baal. The early morning, the hour of worship of the "sun-god," was the beginning of the final test. Elijah began by chiding the people in stern and biting words: "Why do you limp now on one foot and then on the other. How long will you halt between Jehovah and Baal. If Jehovah be God, follow Him; if Baal, follow him. Choose ye this day whom ye will serve." Then he unfolded his plan of testing Jehovah and Baal. He gave the first trial to the latter's priests. On their altar, surmounted by their offering, the fire from heaven should be invoked, and Baal—he was a god of fire—should be made by a miracle to indicate his deity.

All day his howling priests importuned their god, cutting themselves with knives and shrieking about the altar while Elijah jeered them on, until the hour of the evening sacrifice came, when with a great hush over all, Elijah gathered up the dismounted stones of Jehovah's neglected altar, twelve for the twelve tribes, put them in place, slew the bullock and, placing it on the altar, poured upon it and into the encircling trench twelve barrels of water, and then lifting holy hands to Jehovah, prayed that the Divine fire of confirmation might descend. In an instant, as the prophet's prayer ended, the fire of Jehovah answered, and leaping upon the altar consumed not only the offering, but the stones and wood and even the water around it.

The Close of the Day. The sun was fast descending to the waters of the Great Sea which Carmel overlooked when Elijah completed his test. As the fire burned its way into the very earth beneath the altar there was a moment of intense and awful fear in the hearts of the people when falling upon their faces to the ground they cried, "The Lord, He is the God! The Lord, He is the God!"

King and priests were stricken dumb and powerless and terrified by the manifest hand of the God of Israel. With all his courage and audacity Ahab would not have dared to issue an order or interpose a word of hindrance to the complete and perfect mastery of Elijah. Such was the deep and fierce revulsion of the people that he or his courtiers would have been torn limb from limb if they had interfered. In a moment more, at the command of Elijah and with full sanction of Jehovah, the 850 priests of Baal and Asherah were hurried en masse to the foot of the hill and slain in the dry bed of Kishon, to the end that they should no longer live to defile and pervert.

Once More. The door of opportunity was opened once more to all of the mighty company on Mt. Carmel except to the slaughtered priests of Baal. Ahab the king had another chance to redeem himself. His venal and sensual courtiers could turn their backs if they would upon their lives of vice and luxury. Even Jezebel could read the handwriting of fate and be warned by it. Especially there came once more to the people who had sinned and suffered so much because of their idolatry a new day of hope and mercy and forgiveness. Just as the rain was soon to fall in gracious power on the parched earth, so would God's love fill their hearts and lives if only they kept their renewed covenant with Him.

Quiz and Study. 1. Why did Elijah insist upon all the priests and people and king coming to Mt. Carmel? 2. What motives drew together the great multitude? 3. What was Elijah's plan for the day in detail? 4. Why did he give the opening of the test to Baal? 5. Why was he justified in slaying the priests?

Conclusions. 1. God honors His saints in His own way. 2. Three things make a Christian invincible—faith, courage, purpose. 3. The one cure for a cancer, physical or spiritual, is to cut it out. 4. Only plain, stern truth befits a time of backsliding. 5. As long as God gives life He gives opportunity to repent.

And said to his servant, Go up now, look toward

THE SCRIPTURE ACCOUNT IS 1 KINGS 18:41-46.

Prayer: Thou wilt not always chide, O God, neither wilt Thou keep Thine anger forever. Even as a father pitieth his children when they turn in sorrow from their sins, so wilt Thou be merciful to us.

“There a wideness in God’s mercy,
Like the wideness of the sea;
There’s a kindness in His justice,
Which is more than liberty.”

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, between 920 and 900 B. C.—the years of Elijah’s ministry. Place, Mt. Carmel, and the road to Jezreel. Persons, Elijah, his servant, Ahab, Jezebel.

Scripture Setting. God the giver of rain, Job 5:10. God’s word like the rain, Isa. 55: 10-11. God gives the rain to all alike, Matt. 5:45. The joy of forgiveness, Psa. 32:1. God will redeem from famine, Job 5:20.

Life and Conduct Setting. 1. God blesses both the physical and the spiritual. 2. He gives rain to the parched earth and grace to the back-slidden heart at the same time. 3. The prayer of the righteous man will avail in time of famine and pestilence. 4. We need withholding of our temporal mercies that we may learn trust and gratitude. 5. The broken seed He will not break, nor quench the smoking flax.

ELIJAH’S GREAT VICTORY.

After the Battle. The great day at Carmel closed towards sunset and the multitude turned towards their homes. Elijah had been vindicated. He had borne the odium of the famine for more than three years because of the fact that he had been the messenger of Jehovah concerning its coming. Ahab the king, though he ought to have known better, had cherished a relentless hatred towards Elijah and had sought to lay hands upon him in the countries surrounding, as though the prophet himself and not Jehovah was the cause of suffering to the kingdom. All this was swept away by the events at Mt. Carmel. After the day’s test between Jehovah and Baal had ended there were none who could not see that it was Jehovah Himself who had brought punishment upon the nation for its idolatry, and that Elijah was simply the instrument in Jehovah’s hands. Even Ahab’s hatred for Elijah seemed to pass and the people more than ever held the prophet in reverence because he had been doing God’s will under Divine appointment. All that had happened would henceforth be set to the account of Jehovah’s plan.

Ahab’s Feast. The Jews had a custom of following certain sacrifices with a feast, and this occasion seems to have been within their rule. When the day was ending and the people had dispersed to their homes Ahab, the king, still lingered. “And Elijah said unto Ahab, ‘Get thee up, eat and drink; for there is a sound of abundance of rain.’ So Ahab went up to eat and drink.” Somewhere near to the altar which had been consumed by the fire from heaven Ahab and his escort sat down to eat and drink, not as an ordinary occurrence, but as signifying two great events which had marked the day—first, the turning of the hearts of the people away from Baal and back to Jehovah; second, because of the great downpour of rain which was in a little while to fall throughout the kingdom and end the three years and a half of famine. It meant, therefore, much more than the usual sacrificial feast when the king of Israel sat at table on the invitation given by Jehovah’s prophet. It was indeed a sign that even Ahab was humbled and penitent and that Jehovah was reconciled to him, both personally and as head of the kingdom of Israel.

The Two-Fold Rain. Do not forget that God’s mercy on this great day had a two-fold expression. Out of the heavens had fallen, all unseen but felt by thousands of hearts, the gentle rain of God’s forgiveness to all who, with sorrow, turned back to Him and joined in the great cry, “The Lord, He is the God:” They had been saying for years, “His mercy is clean gone, and He hideth His face from us behind heavens of brass.” Doubtless in the multitude gathered at Carmel were not a few of the “seven thousand who had not bowed the knee to Baal,” and they had specially been praying to Jehovah to both forgive his sinning people and let the rain water the parched earth. One blessing would not come without the other. Punishment, hard and long, had come from God to bring the people to their senses, and in the very nature of the case the sorrow for sin and God’s forgiveness of sin must come first, after which would come the gracious falling of the literal rain from heaven, as the second token of the mercy of Jehovah.

Elijah at Prayer. “And Elijah went up to the top of Carmel; and he cast himself down upon the earth and put his face between his knees.” It was not for the old prophet to eat and drink as Ahab was doing. On the high top of Carmel he could look northward, eastward and southward and see a wretched, barren land, sere and brown, and could remember how it looked three years before when he prayed "that there might not be rain." Then the valleys and hillsides were green and beautiful. The long years of suffering between came before him and his heart ached for his country and people. Once more it was appointed unto him to speak the word in prayer that would call together the mighty clouds from over the Great Sea and pour down rain until earth and valley and hillside and dry beds of streams and wells were filled to overflowing. How it moves the heart of a Christian now to call up that picture of the Old Testament saint with face between his knees in prayer!

"A Sound of Abundance of Rain." As he prayed he said to his servant Go up now, look toward the sea. And he went up and looked, and said, There is nothing. And he said, Go again seven times. And it came to pass at the seventh time that he said Behold there ariseth a little cloud out of the sea like a man's hand.

By that far-off but swift-moving and fast-growing cloud Elijah knew that the "fervent, effectual prayer of the righteous man" had availed, and that the rain was being swiftly marshalled by the storm clouds of the sea and would soon be pouring down upon the land. Surely Elijah rejoiced greatly in his heart at that moment. For years he had borne the burden of God's avenging messenger, and king and people had reviled and hated him because of the famine and the suffering. Now it was all passing, and God had so ordered it that Israel would be saying, "Elijah has brought us the rain."

The Race to Jezreel. So quickly gathered and grew the rain-clouds that Elijah hurried his servant to Ahab, saying, "Prepare thy chariot and get thee down, that the rain stop thee not. And it came to pass in the meanwhile that the heaven was black with clouds and wind, and there was a great rain."

Jezreel was eighteen to twenty miles away towards the southeast. Down the hillside, along the gulches and valleys, across innumerable brooks and streams, through the great plain of Esdraelon, as the road took its course, Ahab and his charioteer and horses plunged through the gathering blackness and rain, lest the torrents that quickly fill and overflow the banks should cut him off from his home; and just ahead, his loins girded, ran the prophet Elijah, clean-bodied, strong as steel, brave as a lion, a hundred times greater than a king.

The Wrath of Jezebel. Ahab hurried through the gate of beautiful Jezreel, where his summer palace was, while Elijah, his strange service as escort ended, turned aside.

He knew Jezebel, and that in her heart of cruelty and deadly hatred of him and his God there would be no place for him in Jezreel even though Ahab should now play the friend. He knew also that once Ahab had told his wife the story of the day and how her four hundred priests of the grove were lying dead in the brook Kishon there would be nothing that her fury would not use to destroy him. So fierce was she over the news that she forgot her cunning and sent a messenger to him saying, "So let the gods do to me, and more also, if I make not thy life as the life of one of them" (her dead prophets) "by tomorrow about this time."

Elijah's Flight. When Jezebel's threat came to the prophet he knew that the full power of king Ahab and the queen and the army and court would be put behind the threat, and that it would be folly to remain longer in Isreal. It was not a question of courage or faith in God. Elijah knew that Providence helped those who helped themselves and that God put no premium upon foolhardiness in the face of danger. He knew, too, that Ahab was pliant in the hands of his wife and would not dare to resist her wrath against him.

There was only one country in which he could abide with safety and that was Judah, the southern kingdom, between which and the northern kingdom there was rivalry and strong dislike by both kings and people. He would be safe far down in the southern part of that kingdom close to Arabia and its wilderness, and the fact that he was the victim of the persecution of Ahab and Jezebel would all the more secure for him the sympathy of the people of Judah.

Did the Famine Fail? No, it did not fail. If Elijah or any other servant of God expected the full and perfect transformation of Israel through the famine or other agencies of Jehovah, he had failed to take due account of the stubbornness and malignant power of idolatry in its most sensual forms, or of the proneness of the Hebrew race to lapse into it. In the days of Moses and Aaron and Samuel, down to Ahab and Jezebel, the record of Israel had been stained by frequent and dire lapses. It seemed to be bred in the bone of the Jew to turn at a moment's notice from the altars of Jehovah to golden calf or sun god. Hundreds of years must pass before the nation would finally be weaned from idols. Meantime, though many fell, many more stood fast in their Carmel covenant.

Quiz and Study. 1. Why did God make the ending of the famine to depend on Elijah's prayers? 2. If there had been no Jezebel, is it likely that Ahab would have become a friend to Elijah?

The Last Word. 1. Elijah's prayer is given by the New Testament as an evidence that God will honor any good man's prayers. 2. Evil companionship stands in the way of every good intention.

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, between B. C. 920 and 900. Place, Beersheba, and the wilderness of Arabia. Persons, Jezebel, Elijah, his servant, the angel. Scripture Setting: Prayer for deliverance, Psa. 64. Hatred without cause, Psa. 59:1-2. God knows, Matt. 6:25-26. Always with us, Matt. 28:20.

Life and Conduct Setting: 1. Elijah was human. 2. He was prudent. 3. He was a true patriot. 4. He was jealous for the honor of Jehovah. 5. He sorely needed to hear Jehovah's own word. 6. He needed quiet and rest. 7. He needed to get ready for the end of his ministry.

HOW STRENGTH AND WEAKNESS BLEND.

In the Wilderness. Elijah had fled southward to Beersheba and beyond into the wilderness a day's journey. From Jezreel to Beersheba, by direct course, was eighty miles, increased probably to a hundred by the route taken. Beyond Beersheba lay a great stretch of wilderness, extending into Arabia, and covering the zigzag path of Moses and the hosts of Israel as they journeyed from Egypt on their way to Canaan. Leaving his servant behind at Beersheba, for what reason is not known, he pushed on alone until overcome by weariness. It seemed to have been an instinct with him, as with other great men, to be alone in the time of trouble. He had been in the midst of intense excitement for many days, and mind and body had been greatly under the strain. The journey from Jezreel had been far and swift, and it may have been in simple mercy to his servant that he was allowed to remain at Beersheba.

The Tired Prophet. Mind and body wear out together, and if there is heart-sorrow the end comes quickly. All three were overworked in the case of Elijah. So intense was he at Carmel and in the preparation for that great crisis that he had probably gone with insufficient food and sleep. His common mood was intense and full of vital energy. Added to physical and mental overtaxation, the heart of the prophet was full of sorrow for fear that his life-work had failed, and that Jezebel and Ahab would obstruct the reformation begun at Mt. Carmel and again lead his countrymen into idolatry. Hidden under his rough dress and austere mien was a big, warm heart that loved his country and his countrymen. The swift revulsion from excitement and daring before a great multitude, in the face of hate and death, followed by a mighty triumph, was enough to fill the brave heart with discouragement and gloom and drive him into the desert, away from sight or sound of his fellows.

Food and Rest. Under a juniper tree, a bush of desert growth, reaching to a height of six or eight feet, and affording a scant protection from sun and wind and rain, the prophet lay and slept; a forlorn picture, so different from the Elijah we saw by the altar on Mt. Carmel. It was God's opportunity to deal in great love and tenderness with His favorite, and He sent an angel as His special comforter—the "trained nurse" of Heaven, who baked him bread on hot stones and brought him a cruse of cool, refreshing water, and waited near until Elijah awoke. He let him sleep and rest and partake of food such as an angel could prepare. It met precisely the need of the prophet, and taught him the comforting truth that God is everywhere—in the desert, at Carmel, or at Jezreel—and that He "knows our frame and remembers that we are as the dust." Nothing could have so soothed and restored and revived Elijah's courage and hope.

Elijah at Horeb. There was one more great lesson the old man needed. After being made surer than ever of God's providence, and that God was with him in love and sympathy, Elijah needed to be taught a lesson of the ways that God uses in bringing to pass His plans in the world. It was the lesson such rugged soldiers of Heaven need to learn. Peter had to learn it; Martin Luther learned it, as did Cromwell and Wesley, and others. Men of great courage and aggressiveness, of vital force and intense action, are wont to rely upon their strength and on a single method of pushing their way to the success of the Kingdom of God. Therefore, after his food and sleep and rest, the prophet was led far beyond, a journey of many days, and was miraculously kept in strength, in order that he might come face to face with Jehovah at Horeb and learn the lesson of God's ways.

God's Symbols. Elijah, in the presence of Horeb, had the past of Israel before him. It was to this mountain that Moses had come as keeper of Jethro's flocks, and was greeted by the burning bush and the commission from Jehovah. Again at this place he had struck the rock and water had poured forth; and yet again he had here met Jehovah face to face.

To Elijah, the second great leader and champion of Israel, it was holy ground and it was doubtless the Divine will that he, too, should come hither to hold high communion with God as Moses had done, and as he and Moses and Jesus would in later time upon another mountain. God taught Elijah by symbols. First came the whirlwind rending the rocks, and Elijah learned that God was not always moving among men like the fierce wind. Then by an earthquake and fire Elijah was taught that these fiercer moods of nature did not represent the ways of Jehovah in extending His Kingdom. Last came the still small voice, and Elijah heard and knew and bowed before the Lord, who was trying to teach His prophet how in this quiet, gentle way men's hearts must ever be securely won.

God's Way. Elijah loses nothing of his greatness under the juniper tree or in the cave at Horeb. However much small critics, who ought to pass through the prophet's experiences, may prate of the prophet's weakness, Jehovah's exquisite tenderness and sympathy and method of restoring Elijah to himself gave no indication that the God of Elijah thought him a failure.

His trouble was that he was only human. He had a great optimism as to God, and his loyal soul would not consent that Israel should dishonor Him. He was no cooing dove that sits by his mate and sings of love and home. He was an eagle that soared in the storm and dwelt among the mountain peaks. His one weakness was that he took no account of the weakness of other men, but wanted all things after his own high standards. He was a giant among pygmies. But God, at Horeb, was tender to His over-wrought favorite and taught him the better and surer way of dealing with most men, and made him to understand the ways of the Kingdom and their varied application to the needs of men.

The Seven Thousand. There was one great surprise and comfort to the prophet. Over and over he had excused his pain of heart and despondency of spirit by saying to Jehovah, "I, even I only, am left: and they seek my life, to take it away." Even after the "still small voice" had revealed the presence of Jehovah, Elijah had said, "I, even I only, am left."

Upon the surface it certainly seemed as if he alone of all Israel had been faithful to God in the time of Israel's fearful degeneracy. Doubtless this was due largely to the fact that Elijah had been forced into seclusion and solitude for years and had not been permitted to come into fellowship with other saints of God. There were no places where the devout Israelites could gather for worship. All shrines and temples were devoted to Baal, and the light of true religion seemed wholly extinguished. It did not matter to Elijah that the multitude had shouted at Carmel for Jehovah, as he knew too well their fickleness of old. How full of surprise and comfort then must have been Jehovah's word: "I have left me seven thousand in Israel, all the knees which have not bowed unto Baal, and every mouth which hath not kissed him."

Elijah the King-Maker. After the lesson of Horeb was learned, Elijah was ready to go again to Israel and finish his career. He was to come before Ahab once more and pronounce upon him the terrible doom that awaited the king, his queen and his house. He had to take up the old hard "burden" of the prophet once more and carry it to the end of life, but with a new vision of God and His Kingdom.

As he passed from the presence of Jehovah his greatest honor came to him by Divine commission. He was told to anoint Hazael to be king over Syria, and Jehu to be king over Israel in place of Ahab whose reign would endure a little longer. He was also to find and anoint his own successor and put him in training to take his place. His last work on earth was to be his greatest, and, whether he yet knew it or not, God had in reserve for him the highest honor at the end of his life ever conferred upon man.

The Home-Coming. So Elijah passed out of the wilderness, up the valley by the Dead Sea, and along the Jordan towards Damascus, rejuvenated and braver and more hopeful than ever, but doubtless with a more patient and gentle spirit towards bad and ungrateful men. He had learned his lesson, that God has many ways of carrying forward His Kingdom among men, but that the favorite method is by the gentle warming of their minds and hearts.

Quiz and Study. 1. Why did Elijah seek refuge in Judah and the wilderness? 2. What did Jehovah do to restore His servant? 3. What lesson did Elijah need to learn? 4. How did God recompense Elijah for his trials?

Summing Up. 1. The spiritual is closely interlinked with bodily conditions. 2. Rest is a vital part of true religion. 3. Great days and miracles do not always yield great religious results. 4. Man needs communion with God in solitude. 5. "Not by might, nor by power, but by My Spirit, saith the Lord."

Then they sent to Jezebel, saying, Naboth is stoned, and is dead.

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, B. C. 906, the 20th year of Ahab's reign. Places, Samaria the capital and Jezreel the summer home, twenty miles north. Persons, Ahab, Jezebel, Naboth, Elijah, the elders. Scripture Setting: The sin of covetousness, 1 Tim 6:1-19. The sin of Ananias and Sapphira, Acts 5:1-11. ### HOW GOD DEALS WITH CRIME.

Elijah's Later Ministry. After the stress of Carmel and the experiences of Horeb, Elijah seems to have been several years secluded from public service in Israel. The anointing of Hazael to be king over Syria, and of Jehu to take the place of Ahab, was left to his successor, Elisha, whom Elijah chose for himself on his journey back from the Arabian wilderness. Though hidden from the public eye, and for the time given no part in the movements of king and nation, Elijah devoted himself to a quieter form of ministry. He took to himself Elisha to be trained as his successor, and found in him his counterpart. The ruggedness of the one was in contrast with the gentleness, and even womanliness, of the other. They were two strong types, each complementing the other, and doubtless while Elisha was learning much under his honored master the elder prophet, he was also helping Elijah to learn that much-needed lesson taught at Horeb concerning the more peaceable ministries and methods of the Kingdom of God. In addition to this, Elijah was caring for the five great schools of the prophets, at Jericho, Ramah, Gilgal, Bethel and Gibeah.

Beautiful Jezreel. Once more, after this quiet interim of years in his life, Elijah is brought into prominence, and for the last time comes before king Ahab. Omri, father of Ahab, had contributed much to the prosperity of the kingdom in material ways. He had levied tribute, and lavished great sums of money upon buildings of all kinds. Samaria had already become famous for its great temple to Baal and its ivory palace of the king. After Samaria came the building of Jezreel, to the north of Samaria, perched upon the mountain range that sweeps north and south between the Great Sea and the Jordan. To the west was the Plain of Esdraelon and Carmel, to the east the Sea of Gennesaret and the Cañon of the Jordan—a far-reaching and beautiful stretch of mountain, valley and sea. Jezreel was the pleasure city of Ahab and Jezebel, and Ahab especially beautified it by gardens and parks and fountains, and built himself a famous palace of luxury. Encircling the city was a wall of protection against siege of enemy.

Ahab's Covetousness. On the eastern slope of the hill of Jezreel, says Geikie, close to the city wall, along which one side of the palace of Ahab ran, was a vineyard which had been owned for generations by the family of one Naboth, a man of substance and position in the city. Disliking to see the ground of a private citizen so near, Ahab had determined to get possession of this, if possible, that he might turn it into a garden of flowers. But Naboth, with the sturdy independence of a Jewish landholder, was unwilling to sell it, both because it had been for generations a family possession, and especially because of a religious scruple against parting with it. "The Lord Jehovah," he said, "forbid it me." He made it an issue of conscience with the king for the sake of his religion, and was bold in saying to the king that this was his reason. It was not a question of courtesy to his king or of the large price which doubtless Ahab would give for the vineyard, but because he could not in loyalty to his God break the law of Moses.

The Law of Land. Very merciful and positive was the law prescribed by Jehovah through Moses as to ownership of land in Israel. It was a peculiar law, far in advance of the age in which it was divinely enacted, and is even beyond the land laws of our modern time. God Himself was in fact the owner, and the occupant by allotment or otherwise was His tenant.

To protect the family through all its successive generations it was enacted that "if any brother be waxen poor and hath sold away some of his possession," any of his kin might demand its redemption and secure it by law; and that all land disposed of under stress of poverty or other cause should revert to the family heirs in the year of jubilee. Therefore it was both the letter and the spirit of the law that no land could be sold except in dire need, and that such sale was wholly conditioned upon the right to redeem by the legal heirs. It was under this law that Naboth refused to sell his vineyard. Read Leviticus 25:23, 24.

Jezebel's Plot. Ahab had set his heart upon owning Naboth's vineyard despite the plea of the owner that he could not break the law which forbade the sale of land that belonged inalienably to his family. Naboth's answer that "I am forbidden to give the inheritance of my fathers to thee," was but a spur to greater covetousness, and, like a spoiled child denied its wish, the king sulked and fretted in his palace until Jezebel contemptuously chided and mocked him, saying: "I will give thee the vineyard of Naboth." She at once wrote letters over the king's seal and sent them to her corrupt partisans in Jezreel, bidding them seize upon Naboth, charge against him blasphemy and treason, suborn witnesses to make good the charge, and, having convicted him, to put him to death. It was done as she commanded, and along with Naboth died his sons also, that every heir to the vineyard should be extinguished.

Elijah's Advent. Jezebel brought to Ahab the news of Naboth's death, and the king was driven in his royal chariot to the vineyard to take formal possession of the ground, now that Naboth and his sons were dead. There is not a hint in the record that either Ahab or Jezebel felt a moment's regret for the brutal murder of a good and true subject and his innocent sons.

It was at this hour of the triumph of his covetousness that brave old Elijah was sent once more to confront him and to deliver the awful judgment of Jehovah. Ahab and Elijah met in the vineyard and this is what the prophet said: "Thus saith the Lord, Hast thou killed and also taken possession? Thus saith the Lord, In the place where dogs licked the blood of Naboth shall dogs lick thy blood, even thine." And Ahab said to Elijah, "Hast thou found me, O mine enemy?" And he answered, "I have found thee; because thou hast sold thyself to work evil in the sight of the Lord."

How Ahab Died. Back to his palace Ahab drove, with heavy heart, and remorse preying upon him. For the first time in his life he was thoroughly frightened over his crimes—so much so that he put on sackcloth and fasted and prayed so earnestly that God's mercy for a time postponed the doom foretold by Elijah.

He lived about four years longer, at the end of which time he joined with Jehoshaphat, king of Judah, in an effort to retake Ramoth-gilead from the Syrians, though Micaiah, the prophet, warned him of sure defeat. Benhadad, the Syrian general, gave orders that Ahab, if possible, be singled out and slain. A Syrian soldier drew a bow at a venture and his arrow pierced the armor of Ahab, and in a few hours he died. The body was brought back to Samaria, and the chariot, with its blood, was washed in the town pool, and all men saw that the street dogs licked up the blood of the dead king, even as Elijah had declared.

How Jezebel Died. Ahab had little mourning over his death, but he partly redeemed his vicious life by the courage he displayed at the battle of Ramoth-gilead.

It was not so with Jezebel, the real demon, who had possessed the soul of Ahab. Elijah had said of her, that she should die even as she had made Naboth to die, and that her mangled body, unburied under the wall of her palace at Jezreel, as she had done to the bodies of Naboth and his sons, should be eaten by the dogs of the city after they had licked her blood. So it came to pass at the last. Jehu, avenger for Jehovah, slew the sons of Ahab and caused the painted Jezebel to be pushed to her death over the city wall, where the dogs devoured her, according to the word of Elijah. Certainly there were no mournings for this most evil woman in Bible history.

The Word of Warning. Covetousness is a modern vice, as powerful now as in the days of Ahab. It is by no means limited to mere money-loving, but includes the fixing of one's heart in consuming desire upon any earthly thing for its own sake. The debauchee, the demagogue, the libertine, the "popular" preacher, the gamester, the miser are all in the same class. A little thing like a plot of ground may dethrone a king and provoke the judgment of Jehovah quite as easily today as in Naboth's time. Better a morsel of bread and contentment than covetousness, which in its essence is indeed idolatry.

Quiz: 1. How does one explain the folly of Ahab's desire for Naboth's vineyard? 2. In what way did judgment fall upon Ahab and Jezebel? 3. Do crime and cruelty always meet with punishment in this world? 4. Wherein is Jezebel entitled to the evil fame of being the worst of all Bible characters?

The Last Word: 1. One who consents to sin and profits by it is no less a sinner than the actual doer of the sin. 2. Covetousness is the meanest of all sins. 3. One sows the wind and reaps the whirlwind. 4. God's justice is as certain as His mercy.

Life and Conduct Setting: 1. Elijah's life and labor end together. 2. The aged prophet's concern for the sons of the prophets. 3. The prophet-trainer's last lesson. 4. A stranger to death. 5. The prophet gone, another succeeds.

THE GLORIOUS END OF A GREAT, GOOD MAN.

Elijah's Last Days. After the death of Ahab, little is heard of Elijah, who seemed to have devoted himself to the fellowship and training of Elisha, and to looking after the schools of the "sons of the prophets." Upon the death of Ahab, his son Ahaziah came to the throne, reigning parts of two years only. By an accident he fell from the window of his palace, and sent messengers to Baal-ze-bub to ascertain from that idol-god whether he would recover from his fall. By command of Jehovah, Elijah intercepted the messengers and made answer to the king that because of his dishonor to Jehovah in invoking Baal he should die. When Ahaziah found out that it was Elijah who sent this message, he dispatched a captain and fifty to bring the prophet before him, but they were consumed by fire from heaven, as were fifty others. In answer to the plea for mercy by the third band of fifty, Elijah spared their lives and accompanied them to the king's palace, and there denounced the king's evil course and his certain death. He was succeeded upon the throne by Jehoram, a brother, as he had left no son or heir.

Elisha's Training. Elijah gave much of the last years of his life to Elisha in fitting him for the great work to which he must succeed on the removal of his master. Elisha was worthy this care and training. He had promptly put himself into the hands of Elijah, as the story shows, leaving behind him a comfortable home and honored parents, and in devotion to Jehovah taking from the plow the oxen he was plowing with, and offering them in sacrifice to Him as a sign that he recognized the call to be Divine. There was much to learn. The Hebrew prophet had many duties, among which three outranked the rest: First, he must be trained in the knowledge of the Scriptures, and be able to give instruction to the people. He must be a preacher in fact and keeper of the consciences of men. Second, he must be the compiler and custodian of the sacred annals and records of his predecessors and of his own times. Third, in most cases he must be a seer or foreteller of future events and a minister of miracle-working power.

The Schools of the Prophets. These were practically to the Jews what our modern theological seminaries are to us. There were at least five of these schools in Elijah's time. Samuel had instituted them, as the last of the Hebrew judges and first of the official line of the prophets. The principal schools were at Gilgal, in the territory of Ephraim, a few miles north of Bethel, which was a short distance north of Jerusalem. Another school was at Bethel, and yet another at Jericho. The young men in training at these schools were called "sons of the prophets," not with reference to literal sonship, though some of them were flesh-and-blood sons, but rather as the spiritual sons. There were several hundreds of the young men under training. They were trained in the law of the Old Testament Scriptures, and in the duties pertaining specially to the prophetic office, though very few of them were given power to foretell the future. They became in fact the preachers of Israel.

Elijah's Educational Work. The oversight of these "schools of the prophets" must have engaged most of Elijah's time and thought during the closing years of his life, the strenuous portion of which seems to have ended with the day he confronted Ahab as he was returning in triumph from the garden wrested by blood from the hands of Naboth. Part of his prophecy of doom against the royal house was not fulfilled in his day. There seems also to have come to the heart of the prophet a realization that God's quieter way of winning men, as indicated by the "still small voice" at Horeb, was the better way with which to close his life of storm and stress. Not a few of the great leaders of the church—men like Paul and Luther and Knox and Wesley—have thus turned away from the strenuousness of their early ministry and have rounded out their lives in service to the young.

Elijah's Last Day. Some time, unknown to us, in the reign of Jehoram, son of Ahab, and successor of Ahaziah, his brother, the final call to duty came to Elijah. His home seems to have been at Gilgal, north of Bethel. Elisha, whom Elijah had anointed as his successor in the office of prophet, doubtless was living with and serving his master, as was the custom among young men during their years of prophetic training.

Evidently Elijah knew that his last duty was now to be done and the end of his career had come, as nothing else will explain his repeated action on this last day towards Elisha. And it seems plain also that supernatural knowledge had been communicated to the "sons of the prophets" to the effect that Jehovah would take from them their chief at this time in some miraculous way. All were expectant and waiting for an extraordinary event, and Elisha himself seemed thoroughly imbued with the idea that some strange event awaited his master.

The Last Journey. Leaving Gilgal, Elijah began his round among the schools of the prophets. As the prophet started forth to Bethel, at the south of Gilgal, Elisha was bidden to stay behind, but resolutely refused to be parted from his chief. As they two drew near to the school at Bethel, the young men in training, passing by in awe the great prophet, asked Elisha if he did not know that Elijah would be taken from him on that day, and were told to hold their peace. Again, after the visit to Bethel, Elijah bade Elisha remain behind, as he must go on to the school at Jericho, but Elisha, knowing that the last test of his courage and faith as successor to Elijah was being made, again refused to part company with his master, following him to Jericho.

The Last Scene. Once more Elijah sought to detain Elisha, saying, "Tarry here, for the Lord hath sent me to Jordan," but Elisha persisted in following the aged prophet. As they passed down to the bank of the river, fifty sons of the prophets from the Jericho school came after the two, and taking position upon the upper bank of the Jordan, kept intense watch over the crossing over of the two prophets.

Elijah, wrapping his mantle in his hand, smote with it the waters of the river and they "divided hither and thither, so that they two went over on dry ground." When they had passed over to the mountains beyond Elijah asked Elisha, "What shall I do for thee before I am taken away from thee?" Elisha asked, as his last request, that a double portion of his master's spirit might be given to him, meaning the birthright of the first-born or twice what other sons of the prophets might receive of Divine power and prophetic knowledge. Though a "hard thing," Elijah promised to grant it on conditions.

Elijah's Translation. Somewhere on the high plateaus east of the Jordan, among the mountains that rise from it, the end came. Mt. Nebo, where Moses died, was one of these Perea mountains, and there is a strong conviction with some that it was on this sacred place, from where the great law-giver had looked upon the "promised land," that Elijah was translated from earth to Heaven.

While the two were talking together, suddenly there appeared the vision of chariot and horsemen out of the heights and Elijah was caught up into Heaven. Elisha, patient and watchful to the last, enduring the repeated test of Elijah, received from the ascending prophet his mantle in token that the double portion of Elijah's spirit should be the heritage of Elisha. And with that same mantle Elisha turned back the waters of the Jordan on his homeward way.

Elijah's Greatness. No words can exaggerate the Jewish admiration for this foremost of the line of their prophets. His fame, like that of Moses, grew greater with the passing centuries, until when Christ came asking, Whom say men that I am? the answer was, "Some say Elias." And when Jesus would hold converse with venerated spirits of national fame, two came back from the invisible world to commune with Him—Moses and Elijah.

Quiz: 1. Why did Elijah so severely test Elisha? 2. Wherein was it right and proper for Elisha to ask a "double portion" of Elijah's spirit? 3. What other person has been taken to Heaven without death? 4. Wherein was Elijah's end peculiarly befitting?

Practical Truths: 1. At times God gives premonitions of one's end. 2. "Man is immortal till his work is done." 3. The workman passes, but the work goes on. 4. God has given to every age full proof of immortality. 5. Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of the least of His saints.

THE WIDOW'S OIL INCREASED

Now there cried a certain woman of the wives of the sons of the prophets unto Elisha, saying, Thy servant my husband is dead; and thou knowest that thy servant did fear the Lord: and the creditor is come to take unto him my two sons to be bondmen. And Elisha said unto her,

What shall I do for thee? tell me, what hast thou in the house? And she said, Thine handmaid hath not any thing in the house, save a of oil. Then he said, Go, borrow thee vessels abroad of all thy even empty vessels; borrow not a few. So she went from him, and

And it came to pass, when the that she said unto her son, Bring me yet a vessel. And he said unto her, There is not a vessel more. And the oil stayed. Then she came and told the man of God. And he said, Go, and pay thy debt, and live thou and thy children of the rest.

THE SCRIPTURE ACCOUNT IS II KING'S 4:1-7.

Prayer: Dear Lord, Help us ever to come to Thee with faith that Thy grace and love are sufficient for every need. We would trust Thee as did the widow of old; like her we would be obedient to Thy command and render acknowledgment for all Thy blessings. For Thy name's sake. Amen.

Though troubles assail and dangers affright,
Though friends should all fail and foes all unite,
Yet one thing secures us whatever betide,
The promise assures us, "The Lord will provide."

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, B. C. 895. Place, Probably Gilgal. Persons, Elisha, a widow, and her two sons.

Scripture Setting: God, our Helper. He rewards obedience, Deut. 28:2-5. His care never fails, Deut. 31:8. His children trust Him, Psa. 36:7. They may rest in His promise, Psa. 37:5-7. He hears and saves, Psa. 135:18-19. Righteousness better than revenue, Prov. 16:8. The Lord provides, Matt. 6:30-33.

Life and Conduct Setting: The story of the widow's cruse of oil teaches 1. God never forsakes the righteous. 2. That His mercy extends to the children of those who fear Him. 3. God's Fatherhood and sympathy. 4. His readiness to help. 5. His liberality to His children. 6. His providence and provision for those who seek His aid. 7. With God nothing is impossible. Our extremity is often His opportunity.

ELISHA SAVES TWO SONS FROM SLAVERY.

A Farmer's Son. The prophet, Elisha, was born and reared on a farm in a rich agricultural region near the Jordan. Elisha's father, Shaphat, was a rich farmer, and from Elisha's familiarity with the customs of city and court, we infer that the father gave his son all the advantages of his day. Though Elijah's mantle descended upon him, Elisha retained his own individuality. Elijah was the prophet of wrath and judgment, and his sudden appearance and brief prophetic career has likened him to a burning meteor, while Elisha was "like a rainbow" announcing salvation to a people in darkness. His very name meant "God is salvation." No one need fear to approach him and the most timid might feel at home with him. Indeed he united the confidence of all, and friends and neighbors deemed no request too small to prefer to the one whom they had often seen in the field behind the plow and the harrow, while the great of the land and even kings, sought help and favors from the man whose bearing proclaimed him their equal.

An Ancient School. At the close of the war with Moab, Elisha left the army and resumed his mission of mercy among the poor and needy, making his abode at the prophet's schools. Founded by the prophet Samuel these schools were not altogether unlike our present missionary training schools. Here young men and youths met for instruction in the Scriptures, music and prophesy, maintaining themselves by their own toil, and building their quarters with their own hands. From these students, who were known as the "sons of the prophets," God called His seers and prophets, and to them came those who wished to consult Jehovah. A prophet was always the teacher and guide of those in training. Elisha was a favorite teacher, residing first at one place and then another, just as the teachers of half a century ago "boarded round," blessing all with words of wisdom, guiding them unto Divine truth, praying with them and joining them in joyful hymns, assisting them in their work of building and helping them in adversity. He may be said to have been their patron saint.

In Dire Need. Our story presents the home of a widow and her two sons who were in the direst need. The shelves which usually held the family provisions contained only a pot or earthen jar of olive oil, much used in those days. A bare table and wooden bench beside it, with pallets of straw on the floor were all the room contains, for the chamber has been stripped of its furnishings to satisfy the dead husband's heartless creditor; so great a burden is debt. Like Shylock, the man has demanded immediate payment in full, with an alternative more dreadful to the poor widowed mother than the pound of flesh,—the enslavement of her two sons for seven years that their labor might pay the debt incurred by their father.

Though the black cloud of debt hangs like a pall over the little home and poverty is their sole portion, the husband and father left his family a splendid inheritance. He was ever a true servant of God. According to Jewish legend, he was no other than Obadiah, who hid one hundred sons of the prophets in caverns and fed them, thus saving their lives when the wicked Jezebel would have destroyed all the Lord's prophets. The act not only cost him his position in court but left him financially embarrassed. He found a refuge from the wicked queen's wrath at the school of the prophets, where he hoped that with his hands he might earn enough to provide for his family and discharge the debt incurred through his benevolent act, when death blasted all his hopes. Whether or not the legend has any foundation of fact, the little home was sorely menaced, and the widowed mother in desperate straits.

A Widow's Appeal. Broken-hearted as she is, the servant of God is not utterly cast down; though her poverty and perverted Jewish custom make it possible for a heartless creditor to enforce his unjust demand and outrage the higher law of Jehovah, which said, "Ye shall not afflict any widow or fatherless child. If thou afflict them in any wise and they cry at all unto me, I will surely hear their cry." She remembers the promise and tells her boys to wait while she seeks Elisha, the prophet of God. She hurries to him, her eyes still red with weeping and sobbingly presents her need. "Thy servant, my husband is dead."

Whoever the departed one, he was known to Elisha, for she continues, "And thou knowest that thy servant did fear the Lord." It is all the claim she proffers, but it is enough, for God has promised that He will not only provide for the righteous, but even for his children's children. Elisha asks, "What shall I do for thee? Tell me, what hast thou in the house?" The query causes a sinking of heart. Perhaps in the earlier days of their acquaintance they had lived in such affluence that Elisha hoped to save enough from the wreck of their fortunes to meet the creditor's demand. Alas, he did not know that there was only a pot of oil in the house. However, the prophet does not seem at all appalled by this declaration of her poverty: he knows what the Lord can do with the least we may bring to Him.

The Lord Provides. Elisha commands her to go borrow from her neighbors all the empty vessels she can. Since it is to be a demonstration of the power of One who loves to deal liberally with His servant, she is to borrow, not a few, but many. It would have seemed a strange command to one of less faith, especially when she learns that all these many vessels are to be filled from the one little pot of oil—the sole content of her larder. But never for a moment does the praying mother doubt or hesitate, though she does not yet comprehend how her sons are to be rescued from slavery by Elisha's plan. She trusts God so simply and fully that she hastens home with winged feet and without stopping to tell them why, sends her boys out to borrow the empty vessels.

When she had absolutely nothing with which to fill them! When they have carried home every empty vessel obtainable, the mother shuts the door of the little home, for the occasion is too sacred for scornful or curious eyes. Then, her face irradiated with faith, she tells her sons to bring the vessels, while she fills them from that one pot of oil. And such is the power of a believing mother that they obey her. All around them are the empty vessels, great and small; the mother holds the pitcher of oil, and in the name of the God of the widow and the fatherless, she begins to pour the golden oil from the vessel in her hands. Though some are ten times as large as the pitcher from which the oil flows, every empty vessel is filled, and so rapidly that the two boys can hardly replace them quickly enough. Vessels full of oil fill the table, stand on the bench and cover the floor, and still the oil flows from that one small jar. God's promise has been upheld. His power is only limited by the capacity of His children to receive, and only when every vessel is filled and the sons say there is not another empty one does the supply cease.

The Debt is Paid. The widow hastens to Elisha, who commands her to go, sell the oil, which has a market value, and pay her debt, since however exorbitant and unjust the demands of her creditor, a just obligation may not be repudiated. The same God who has made a way for her to meet the debt has provided for the future support of herself and children, for the balance after cancelling her debt, is sufficient for their permanent relief. Then the widow knew that the great Jehovah did not forget those who serve Him, and that His ear is always open to the cry of the righteous.

Quiz. 1. What great prophet before Elisha helped a poor widow? 2. Upon what ground did the widow of our story base her appeal for help? 3. Give two promises which she could claim. 4. What is David's testimony concerning God's care of the righteous? 5. Have we the same right to trust Him?

Seed Thoughts. 1. A righteous record is a man's best legacy to his children. 2. A good man's deeds live after him. 3. The soul that depends on God's promises is never utterly cast down. 4. To enter the service of the One who holdeth the wealth of the world in His hands is the surest poverty cure. 5. God's children may not be feasted, but they will always be fed. 6. God stands ready to fill every empty vessel. 7. He always gives an overflowing measure. 8. His deliverance is sure.

Prayer: Dear Lord, Grant us such faith in Thee that we may recognize in all Thy dealings with us the hand of a loving Father. Even in sorest affliction may we have the assurance that all is well.

Open the eyes of all bereaved ones to the knowledge that through faith in Jesus their departed shall live again and be restored to them. Amen.

What cheering words are these;
Their sweetness who can tell?
In time, and to eternal days,
" 'Tis with the righteous well!"
'Tis well when joys arise,
'Tis well when sorrows flow,
'Tis well when darkness veils the skies,
Because He loves me so.

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, B. C. 895. Place, Shunem. Persons, Elisha, Gehazi, his servant; a Shunamite woman, her husband and child.

Scripture Setting: The Power of God over Life and Death. God's presence in death, Psa. 23:4. Our Guide in death, Psa. 48:14. Looses those appointed to death, Psa. 102:20. Ransoms from the power of the grave, Hos. 13:14. Holds the issues of death, Psa. 68:20. Holds the keys of death, Rev. 1:18. Delivers from fear of death, Heb. 2:14-15. Victorious over death, Isa. 25:8. Death abolished by Christ, 2 Tim. 1:10.

Life and Conduct Setting: This lesson teaches us that, 1. Elisha is known as a man of God through his daily walk and converse. 2. Kindness to one of God's servants is rewarded. 3. God claims what He has given. 4. The mother seeks God in her bereavement and her faith triumphs over her sense of loss. 5. The unconverted Gehazi finds no power in Elisha's staff. 6. Only through prayer and repeated personal endeavor is Elisha able to restore the child to life. 7. The mother receives again the child whom God had given and taken away.

THE TRIUMPH OF A MOTHER'S FAITH.

A Great Lady. The little town of Shunem was only a few days' journey from Jerusalem, situated in the midst of evergreen olive groves, waving cornfields and purple vineyards. All its homes were prosperous. The mistress of the finest house in the village, who was a great lady not only because of her possessions, but great in character and faith was so eager to minister to God's servant, that she would actually watch for Elisha's coming, and upon his appearance hasten to greet him and constrain him to enter her home and eat. Her hospitality was so genuine that "As oft as he passed by, he turned in thither to eat."

Elisha lived his religion in the home. His gentleness, kindness, and habit of prayer caused his hostess to tell her husband that she was convinced that Elisha was not only in name, but in reality a "holy man of God," and she proposed that they build a sleeping chamber for his especial use. Accordingly an "aliyah" or chamber was built, resting partly on the wall of the house and projecting beyond it like a balcony, with a latticed window opening to the street. It was furnished with a bed, a seat, a table, and candlestick, that the prophet might write; and the little room devoted to God's prophet became to the hostess, God's sanctuary.

Hospitality Rewarded. One morning after a night's rest and repose in the prophet's chamber, Elisha sent Gehazi, the young student who served as his attendant, to his hostess to find what he might do in return for her hospitality, even offering to use his great power with the king in her behalf. But the woman was too great to desire the petty benefits of court and she replied to Elisha's offer with quiet dignity, "I dwell among mine own people." Gehazi carried back her answer, and Elisha conferred with his young attendant, who suggested that the home was childless. Their hostess might disdain the king's favor, but deep down in her heart was the longing of every true woman for a child of her own. "Call her," said Elisha. The woman came in answer to his summons, stopping reverently at the threshold. Gehazi had guessed aright. When told that in time a child would be born into the home, her joy was so great she could hardly believe the prophet's assertion. Yet scarcely a year elapsed before she was a happy mother.

An Unexpected Blow. Several years passed; the child God had given them grew from infancy to boyhood. He was the joy and delight of the home, growing daily and hourly dearer to his parents. It was hard to tell which welcomed his sunny presence most, the mother in the home or the father in the field. No morning could have been brighter and fairer than that summer morn when the mother watched her boy run eagerly to the harvest field where the father was at work, that he might watch the men reap the grain and bind it into sheaves. After playing awhile in the harvest field the little fellow turned a white face to the father, and exclaimed, "My head! my head!" To the busy father it seemed only a passing illness and he ordered one of the young men to carry the child home to his mother. All the healing arts of that ancient time proved unavailing, and we have a pathetic picture of the mother, powerless to stay the death angel's destroying touch, as her boy breathes his last upon her knees.

It Is Well. Quietly, and as if her darling were asleep, she carried the still form up to the prophet's chamber and laid her precious burden "On the bed of the man of God and shut the door upon him and went out," thus committing her child to God who had given and who would restore. So great was her faith, that she evaded her husband's questioning and even withheld the knowledge of the boy's death from him. Why incur useless sorrow when eventually, "It shall be well?"

Her one desire was to run to the man of God. She could not wait for the servant, but with trembling, eager fingers saddled the ass herself, and urged the servant whose duty is to run behind and goad the animal forward, "Drive and go forward." He is not to consider her comfort, but whip the animal into utmost speed, for moments seem hours to the bereaved mother. The man of God saw her afar off and sent his servant to meet her. To Gehazi's query, "Is it well with thee? Is it well with thy husband? Is it well with the child?" she answered, "It is well." Marvelous faith of the woman, triumphant over the greatest loss and utmost bereavement that may pierce a woman's heart!

A Mother's Anguish. Her soul had risen to mountain heights of faith, but the mother's heart would overflow. Hastily dismounting, she threw herself down before the prophet and caught his feet. The attendant would have thrust her aside, but Elisha's tender heart was touched by the anguished woman's appeal. "Did I desire a son of my lord?" It is the question asked by bereft mothers ever since. Why had God given her this treasure, and then snatched His gift from her? It were better the home had remained forever childless.

Man's Failure and God's Power. Elisha commissioned Gehazi to take his staff, gird his loins, and without stopping to exchange salutations with anyone lay Elisha's staff upon the child. But alas, there was no virtue in the prophet's staff except as God endowed it with power. Gehazi journeyed to Shunem and laid the prophet's staff upon the face of the child, but he did not awaken. The task needed the prophet's deep consecration and dependence on God as well as his staff. Elisha entered the wall chamber and, shutting out the mother and Gehazi, he prayed unto the Lord, and then he went and lay upon the child, mouth upon mouth, hands upon hands, his eyes upon the closed eyes of the dead until the dead and the living were one. He felt the child's flesh. It was warm! But Elisha was only a man and his faith so small that the task demanded another effort. Pacing the floor, walking from one room to another and communing with God, he finally returned to the chamber of death, and when he stretched himself upon the child, the child sneezed seven times and opened his eyes. The mother's faith had triumphed. All was well!

The Mother Receives Her Child Again. Opening the chamber door, the prophet called Gehazi and sent him for the mother. Never did the mother forget that moment. In the bliss of that reunion she realized that it was the hand of love which for a short time had withdrawn her child from her. No moment of her life, not even when the baby head first nestled against her breast, was ever so filled with bliss as this. Dearer and closer than ever before was the tie between mother and child, for had she not known both loss and restoration! And her child was a thousand times more precious because of that cruel time of separation. In an excess of joy she fell at Elisha's feet and bowed herself to the ground in adoration of the goodness of God, then she took up the son who had been restored to her from death itself and went out.

Was she not a type of the great company of mothers who gather at the throne of God, and fall at His feet to receive from the One who was victorious over death, the dear children who are restored to them, not for a season as was the Shunamites' son, but forever.

Quiz. 1. What miracle of Elisha was similar to this? 2. Name three characteristics of the Shunamite woman which made her great. 3. How was her hospitality manifest? 4. How did she show herself superior to social ambition? 5. How did she exhibit a firm trust in God? 6. What comfort does this story bring to bereaved mothers?

Seed Thoughts. 1. One's life is the best proof of Christian calling. 2. He is truly great who is content. 3. Good men carry a blessing everywhere. 4. One loses nothing but gains much through hospitality. 5. A mother's faith in God often saves her boy from worse evils than death. 6. Prayer was more powerful than Elisha's staff. 7. Great trials should be patiently endured. 8. Our trials have often a blessed end. 9. Gehazi entered the chamber of death alone and was powerless to help. 10. Elisha carried the Creator of life with him and conquered death. 12. All mothers may trust God to restore their child to them.

NAAMAN THE LEPER

And it was so, when Elisha the man of God had heard that the king of Israel had that he sent to the king, saying,

Wherefore hast thou rent thy clothes? let him come now to me, and he shall know that there is a in Israel. So Naaman came with his

and

of the house of Elisha. And Elisha unto him, saying, Go and wash in Jordan seven times, and thy flesh shall come again to thee, and thou shalt be clean.

Then went
he down,
and

seven times in Jordan, according to the saying of the man of God: and his flesh came again like unto the flesh of a little child, and he was clean.

THE SCRIPTURE ACCOUNT IS 2 KINGS 5:1-19.

Prayer: Dear Lord, we thank Thee that the least of Thy servants may proclaim Thy power, and that Thou dost not work through kings and princes, but that Thou are ever easy of access to all who humbly come to Thee for cleansing. We rejoice in the cleansing power of the blood of Thy dear Son and render grateful thanks for His cleansing. Amen.

There is a fountain filled with blood,
Drawn from Immanuel's veins,
And sinners plung'd beneath that flood
Lose all their guilty stains.

E'er since by faith I saw the stream
Thy flowing wounds supply,
Redeeming love has been my theme,
And shall be till I die.

Life and Conduct Setting: 1. With all the world can give Naaman is not secure from the greatest misfortune. 2. Through her testimony and faith in God, a little slave girl points the way to Naaman's cure and salvation. 3. Naaman learns that God's favor is not through kingly influence. 4. Elisha, the man of God, is impervious to the ostentation and show of a worldling. 5. Simple as is the mode prescribed for Naaman cleansing, he finds no other way save obedience to the Divine command. 6. Once cleansed and restored Naaman becomes a humble, grateful and generous follower of the one true God.

A LITTLE MAID AND A GREAT SOLDIER.

A Great Soldier. The scene opens in the ancient heathen metropolis of Damascus; Benhadad, the insolent and powerful foe of Israel, is on the throne. His favorite general is commander-in-chief of all the royal forces, though Naaman owes his high position to his own deeds of valor as well as to kingly favor. His fine face and soldierly bearing are worthy of the name of Naaman, which means beautiful; high rank, unlimited authority, and immense wealth render his position enviable. But worldly honor is never without alloy: Naaman is a leper, and leprosy is so loathsome and hideous a disease that nothing save sin is so blighting and fatal.

A Captive Slave Girl. In one of the many sorties of the Syrians into Israelitish territory, a division of the Syrian army had borne down upon a village, plundering it and carrying its inhabitants into slavery. A little girl was torn from her parents and dragged across the border onto Syrian soil, where, desiring to ingratiate themselves into the favor of their commander-in-chief, her captors presented her to Naaman. He gave her to his wife, never dreaming of the great blessing the insignificant little slave girl was to bring to him.

Despite misfortune, the child retained her trust in God, accepted His strange providence and faithfully served her mistress, even sharing her sorrow over her husband's unfortunate malady. One day when the mistress was unusually downcast, the little maid exclaimed, "Would God my lord were with the prophet that is in Samaria, for he would recover him of his leprosy." It required all the child's courage to speak to the great lady, but the little slave girl could not lose this opportunity to testify to the power of God.

A Royal Message. Her mistress thought the girl's word too foolish to tell her husband, but one of the upper servants repeated the little slave's word to the great Naaman, and he made them known to the great king of Syria, who urged his favorite to "Go to, and I will send a letter unto the king of Israel." The great man's cure was to be obtained through royal authority and the power of money. Accordingly Naaman set forth on his journey with a retinue of attendants, the king's letter and ten splendid robes and silver and gold to the value of more than fifty thousand dollars of our money, to bestow upon the fortunate one who should effect his cure.

Benhadad's letter made no mention of the true God or Elisha his prophet. He took it for granted that just as he had magi who were at his beck and call, so Jehoram was the fortunate possessor of a high priest of magic who could cure leprosy at his royal master's command, and with his old-time insolence of power, Benhadad demanded Naaman's cure of the king of Israel. When Jehoram read Benhadad's impossible demand he thought the wily Benhadad was only seeking a quarrel with him that he might declare war against Israel, and he rent his royal mantle in token of his distress and cried, "Am I God to kill and to make alive?" For so hopeless was the dread disease that the Hebrews regarded a leper as one dead.

Help Appears. In the midst of the panic a messenger appeared from Elisha. His first question was a rebuke from the prophet to the king: "Why hast thou rent thy clothes?" Though Benhadad's demand exceeded the royal authority, it was not beyond the power of Israel's God, who can kill and make alive. "Let him come to me," was Elisha's command. The king gladly dispatched his unwelcome and embarrassing guest to the prophet, and Naaman and his gorgeous retinue appeared before Elisha's humble abode. The Syrian commander had a high sense of his own importance, and he confidently expected the prophet to come out of his house and greet him with humble obedience, but Elisha knew that Naaman would have to lose all his pride before God could help him; so though the most accessible of men, he only sent a messenger to tell the haughty Syrian captain to, Go wash in the Jordan (which was twenty miles away), not once, but seven times, if he would be cleansed from his leprosy. Surely, the prophet did not know what a great man was at his door!

Pride Is Humbled. Naaman expected that an obsequious prophet would bow low before him, calling on his God and magically working the great man's cure, which obligation Naaman would discharge by so loading the magic worker with gold, silver and costly apparel that not God, but the great Syrian commander, would be the benefactor. Instead, to be treated as though he were a common suppliant—a beggar—Naaman was very angry. Were there not rivers in Damascus, whose crystal waters, flowing down from the mountains, were cool and ideal for bathing?

The haughty soldier turned away in a rage, vowing that if wash he must, he would at least wash in one of the rivers of his own land instead of the muddy, sluggish Jordan. He ordered his chariot to drive away, and the cavalcade moved forward, when one of his attendants approached him, addressing Naaman with Oriental deference as "My father, if the prophet had bid thee do some great thing, wouldst thou not have done it? How much rather when he saith to thee, Wash and be clean?" Anger always dethrones judgment and the camel driver's timed remonstrance restored Naaman's reason. If he went away in a dudgeon there remained nothing for him but final death from a most loathsome disease, while if he obeyed the prophet's command there was a possibility of cure. For the first time there came to the mighty Syrian a realizing knowledge of his condition. What availed power and rank, wealth and pomp of station if he was a leper?

The Cleansing Stream. His decision is made, and he orders the cavalcade to the Jordan. It is a drive of twenty miles or more, but since he has yielded his pride there is a simple dependence on the prophet's words, quite foreign to the hitherto imperious commander. He urges his attendants on with eager haste, for all his hopes are now fixed upon the once despised Jordan. The cavalcade reaches the river, whose clayey banks have so discolored the stream that it reminds one of blood.

An awed silence falls upon the company as Naaman stands by the river's brink. Expectation is on the faces of some, while others try hard to hide the sneer at their captain's folly. He plunges into the water and rises to the surface. The mighty Syrian has participated in many battles and great councils, but this is the most important moment of his life. There is no change in the leper's appearance; a second and third time he enters the water, but the same signs of leprosy cling to him. Now he goes under for the sixth time. Surely if there is any efficacy in the waters of the Jordan some signs of cure will be apparent. But no, the man is as leprous as when the command was issued. Naaman's heart is heavy. As never before he feels the burden of his leprosy.

But stay,—the command was seven times and God exacts implicit obedience from those who would receive His benefits. The heathen soldier prays to the one true God; the seventh time he plunges under the wave. His prayer is answered; the health-giving hand of God has touched his leprous body and he is clean. The light of God's countenance has dispelled the darkness of heathenism. Not since he was a child have arm and thigh shown such firmness and glowing health. A soul has been born under the Jordan, and instead of the leprous creature who sought healing in its waters a new creature stands upon its strand, praising God for his restoration and cleansing. As he reappears among them, there is a shout of joy from those who line the river bank. Naaman is no longer a leper.

Quiz: 1. To what former king of Israel did Benhadad send an insolent message? 2. What great virtue was manifested by the little slave girl? 3. Did Naaman's gold prove efficacious? 4. What does the psalmist say concerning the help of princes? 5. Do you think there was any healing power in Jordan's waters? 6. What might this story typify?

Seed Thoughts. 1. Earthly happiness is always incomplete. 2. The little maid carried her religion with her. 3. Testimony for God is never lost. 4. The words of a slave may outweigh the letter of a king. 5. He who prescribes the form of blessing he shall receive from God, is often disappointed. 6. God does not ask great things of us, but he demands that we do whatsoever He asks. 7. Many men think they can buy God's help with gifts and money. 8. God cannot help those who refuse to obey Him. 9. The worldly wise reject God's plans because they are simple. 10. The blood of Christ is a cleansing fountain.

THE SCRIPTURE ACCOUNT 'S 2 KINGS 5:20-27.

Prayer: Lord deliver us from the sin of covetousness and falsehood. Let not the leprous blight of these sins fall upon us, but may we ever be loyal, disinterested servants of Thine, seeking first and always the advancement of Thy Kingdom. For Thy name's sake. Amen.

"How sad our state by nature is!
Our sin—how deep it stains!
And Satan holds our captive minds
Fast in his slavish chains."

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting. Time, B. C. 894. Place, Jericho. Persons, Elisha, Naaman and Gehazi.

Scripture Setting: The Sin of Covetousness. Eve's sin, Gen. 3:6. Covetousness forbidden, Ex. 20:17. Abhorrent to God, Psa. 10:3. Evil consequences, Prov. 15:27. Covetousness and righteousness contrasted, Prov. 21:26. Causes disobedience, Ezek. 33:31. Woe to the covetous, Hab. 2:9. Its kindred vices, Mark 7:22. Christ's warning against covetousness, Luke 12:15.

Life and Conduct Setting: In this lesson: 1.

We observe the contrast between a liberal, righteous soul and one covetous and wicked. 2. With true grandeur and loyalty Elisha refuses to be recompensed for a cure wrought by God. 3. Gehazi covets the gold and costly apparel his master has refused. 4. This covetousness makes him a liar and libeller of Elisha. 5. He seeks to hide his dishonesty from the man of God and fails. 6. The prophet declares Naaman's cure and conversion too sacred an occasion for material recompense. 7. Naaman's leprosy falls upon Gehazi.

A COVETOUS MAN'S FOLLY.

The New Convert. Even though it entailed a detour of fifty miles to return to Jericho, Naaman was too great a soul to go back to Damascus without manifesting his gratitude to Elisha, so we find the gorgeous cavalcade returning to Jericho. It was a triumphal procession, proclaiming Naaman's recovery to the throng that lined the streets. It was a spectacular public demonstration that Israel's God and His prophet were greater than Israel's panic-stricken king.

The great procession, which has almost kingly pomp, does not stop at the palace. Naaman has done with royalty. His allegiance has been transferred to One greater than any earthly king, for the miracle has been inward as well as outward. The physical change is less striking than the change in the real Naaman. Pride is gone, all sense of caste has disappeared; instead of waiting outside for the prophet of God to come out and render obeisance to him, Naaman dismounts from his chariot, knocks humbly at Elisha's door and stands before him with bowed head while he imparts a wonderful piece of information. "Behold, now I know that there is no God in all the earth, but in Israel." The Syrian has traveled a greater distance than from Damascus to Samaria, farther than from Jericho to Jordan. He has come from darkness to light, from heathenism to God, from spiritual death to spiritual life.

True Greatness. He calls to his attendants to bring the gifts of money and apparel that had seemed so great when he started on his quest for health, but which now seem small in comparison with the benefit he has received, and humbly begs the man of God to accept them. The kindly face of the prophet glowed with simple joy at Naaman's declaration of faith in the true God, but Elijah's rugged grandeur was never more impressive than the air of quiet majesty with which Elisha disposed of the Syrian commander's gifts. Perhaps it required as great heroism to refuse glory and honor and reward for himself as it did to defy a king or confront the prophets of Baal. Gehazi, the prophet's attendant, looked longingly at the richly woven robes and the treasure of silver and gold, but Elisha would rather exalt God than to enrich himself. He wanted Naaman to know that his cure was of God and not of man. Elisha was jealous also for the honor of his profession. Naaman had come expecting to find a common magic worker; he must learn that a true prophet of God served for a higher reward than money. Moreover, Elisha was too great a patriot to accept emoluments from his country's foe. Perhaps he wanted Naaman to learn the worthlessness of aught he had, in comparison with what God could give, so Elisha waved aside the silver and gold and costly raiment with the declaration, "As the Lord liveth before whom I stand, I will receive none."

The Great Man Departs. The Irish peasant carries a bit of native soil with him across the ocean and plants the bit of turf under his door-step that he may feel at home in a strange land. So the ancient Jews transferred earth from Jerusalem to Babylon to build a temple on it, that it might seem as though they were worshipping on their own sacred land. Naaman felt that he was in the land of the true God, and that the very soil was holy, and he begged for a few loads of earth to carry back to Damascus, on which to build an altar to the true God, whom he will serve save when compelled to accompany king Benhadad to a house of idol worship, when etiquette and custom demand that he shall bow before the idols; for strong and fine as is Naaman's character, he has not courage to go contrary to common custom, even though his conscience tells him it is a sin. Elisha sent the new convert away with the fatherly benediction, "Go in peace," and Naaman departed.

Evil Thoughts. Gehazi watched the splendid cavalcade, noted the rich camel trappings, magnificent chariots and richly apparelled retinue of attendants, and contrasted this display of wealth with the austere life of his master and himself. It was a mistake on Elisha's part to have refused the Syrian's gifts; Gehazi even convinced himself that it was his duty to look after his master's interest. Of course he would not accept all the great man had offered his master, but a little to lighten their necessities. Having convinced himself of the legitimacy of such an act, we find the youth employing the name of God and in such haste to put his plan into execution that he ran after Naaman.

As the converted Syrian hurried from his chariot and apprehensively asked, "Is all well?" Gehazi framed a lie, saying, "My master hath sent me," and in Elisha's name he proffered a request for a talent of silver and two changes of raiment for two imaginary young men, whom he piously averred were sons of the prophets. It was a modest request, but it maligned his master, since it raised a doubt as to the sincerity of the prophet's former refusal of the gifts. But Gehazi covets the splendid robes which he saw spread before his master, and he cares nothing for the impression as to Elisha's honesty which he may leave with the Syrian.

Deeper in Sin. The grateful Naaman, rejoicing in the opportunity to serve his benefactor, insisted and even forced two talents of silver and two changes of garments upon Elisha's attendant, sending two of his own servants with Gehazi to carry the treasure to the house. Fearing to let his master see him with the gifts, Gehazi dismissed the two men at the gateway, and stealthily hid the garments and bags in the house.

What a contrast to his master was the covetous Gehazi, with a lie on his lips, disloyalty in his heart and disposing of his booty like a thief! It was a difference of heart; the heart of one was fixed on God until Elisha's life was as beneficent as a palm tree in the desert which affords drink, food and shade, to all who seek its shelter. The heart of the other was fixed on worldly things until it became as deadly to himself and others as the noxious vine that poisons all who come in contact with it.

Having hidden his treasure, Gehazi "went in and stood before his master, and Elisha said unto him, Whence comest thou, Gehazi?" The sin of covetousness prompted the lie to Naaman; the fear of discovery leads to the second lie, when the culprit declares to his master, "Thy servant went no whither."

The Wages of Sin. Gehazi hopes to deceive Elisha, but the prophet's vision had reached out to the meeting of Naaman and the receipts of his gifts—gifts which might have been acceptable at another time and under other circumstances. This was not a time "to receive money and to receive garments, and olive yards, and vineyards, and sheep and oxen, and men servants and maid servants," graft which Gehazi had received and of which he hoped to keep his master in ignorance.

We have evidence that the warm-hearted Elisha loved his young attendant and sadly and slowly he pronounced the culprit's sentence, "The leprosy of Naaman shall cleave unto thee and to thy seed forever." The youth stood with downcast eyes and as his glance fell upon his hands for the first time, he realized the hideousness of sin; already the flush of health had gone, the skin was dry and hands and arms bore the awful deadly whiteness of leprosy and as his sin had grown from a covetous thought to lying dishonesty, so now the leprosy was spreading over his entire body. Never again would he feel the rich, warm pulsing of healthy blood through his body, and saddest of all, the curse of his sin would be transmitted to his children's children and their children's children forever, so unending are the consequences of sin, and so terrible its punishment.

Quiz: 1. Name three other examples of covetousness given in the Bible. 2. Why did it require heroism to refuse Naaman's gifts? 3. Where did Gehazi's sin begin? 4. Is it possible to commit a single sin or does one sin beget another? 5. Name some of the sins that result from covetousness.

Seed Thoughts. 1. Gratitude is the sign of a great soul. 2. The soul that has met God is always humbled. 3. It is easier to overcome an enemy than to overcome temptation. 4. Many people run into sin. 5. Satan is a master of evil invention. 6. Ill-gotten wealth always proves a curse. 7. There is always a day of judgment. 8. As one vibration of light travels millions of miles, so one sin may cover centuries. 9. We live not only for ourselves, but for those who come after.

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, B. C. 890. Place, Dothan. Persons, Elisha, his servants, and the Syrian host.

Scripture Setting: The Invisible Host. An innumerable army, Job 25:3. Commanded by God, Psa. 68:17. A Heavenly host, 1 Kings 22:19. Greater than the enemy, 2 Chron. 32:7, 8. They visit the earth, Gen. 28:12, 32:2. Their mission, Psa. 34:7. Empowered by God, Psa. 91:11-12. Angels watch us, Heb. 12:1. Control the elements, Rev. 7:1-3. Around the throne of God, Rev. 22:3-4.

Life and Conduct Setting: This is one of the most beautiful and comforting stories of the Bible.

1. Though the king and his court disregard him, Elisha seeks their safety by sending warning to the ungodly king of Israel. 2. By such warning he endangers his own safety and the king of Syria seeks to take him captive. 3. A great army is sent out against one man. 4. Elisha's servant is affrighted by the enemy's forces. 5. In response to the prophet's prayer, his eyes are opened that he may see the great angelic host which God has sent for their defence. 6. The magnanimity of the man of God is manifested toward his intended captors who fall into his power.

OUR UNSEEN HELPERS.

Prophetic Warnings. The miraculous cure of the commander-in-chief of the Syrian forces, and the kindness manifested by Israel's prophet, should have deterred Benhadad from further warfare with that country, but the gratitude of kings is short-lived, and within a few years hostilities were renewed. Benhadad held secret councils of war and planned ambushes so that he might surprise the enemy. But God manifested His protecting care over His people through Elisha, who would warn the king of Israel, "Beware that thou pass not such a place, for thither the Syrians are come down." The scouts sent out by Jehoram upon the receipt of these messages always found Elisha's warnings well founded. Thrice the prophet saved king Jehoram and his army from surprise and disaster.

The Mystery Explained. Benhadad did not know that these warnings were from God, and he was troubled. Indeed, he was terrible in his wrath; there must be a traitor in the camp, for how else could the king of Israel obtain his knowledge of the plans of the Syrians, and be prepared for every sortie? But his favorite commander declared, "None, my lord, O king: but Elisha, the prophet that is in Israel, telleth the king of Israel the words that thou speakest in thy bed chamber."

The explanation seemed feasible, for Benhadad remembered Naaman's miraculous cure, and was willing to believe that a man who possessed the magic power to cure leprosy could also read the king's thoughts in his bed chamber. Immediately the wily Benhadad thought to outwit God by making a captive of His prophet and bringing him to Samaria, where he could do no further mischief. The king turned toward the officer who had proffered the explanation, and ordered him to "Go and spy where he is, that I may send and fetch him."

An Unfortunate Dilemma. Though he is not mentioned, it must have been Naaman himself who stood before the king, since no one else had such definite knowledge of Israel's prophet, and such an order would only be given to the commander of the Syrian forces, which position Naaman held.

Without doubt, the Syrian's gratitude and conversion were unfeigned, but he was an ambitious man, and in order to retain the favor of his royal master he had desired immunity to bow before idols when in the king's presence. The privilege was not granted, though the prophet bade him "Go in peace." Perhaps Elisha hoped the new convert would gain sufficient courage to openly avow God before Benhadad and his court, but cowardice grows like any other sin, and we find no record of such an avowal on Naaman's part. In fact, concealment has caused the Syrian commander to grow so faint-hearted that the man who feared to confess God is now afraid to avow his friendship for Elisha.

It may have been one of the sad consequences of Gehazi's sin that his importunity and acceptance of Naaman's gifts created a distrust of Elisha's sincerity, causing the Syrian to believe that the prophet was, after all, only a magic worker of superior power, and cooling Naaman's ardor and zeal for the true God. If his sin caused a new convert to stumble, we can better understand the severity of Gehazi's punishment. Once more, with horses and chariots, Naaman starts out to find Israel's prophet, prepared to besiege Dothan, where Elisha is temporarily residing, and even to raze it to the ground in the attempt to capture the man to whose good offices he is indebted for health, life, and all he enjoys. It is an unwelcome duty, but he dare not oppose his royal master. However, Naaman need not fear, for God will take care of His own.

True Courage. Under cover of night, the Syrian host encamped upon the plains about Dothan. The young man who was Elisha's attendant rose early and when he went forth on his duties, "Behold, an host compassed the city with horses and chariots." As the servant of Elisha, the young man undoubtedly believed in God, but when his belief was put to a practical test, and he saw the enemy encamped about the town, and learned their errand, he was panic-stricken, and rushed in to Elisha, crying, "Alas, my master, what shall we do?" The poor youth thought salvation from the danger that threatened them depended on their own effort. But Elisha knew that his God was near, and though the Syrian king's army were ten times as great, it could not thwart God's purpose.

With that quiet, kingly dignity which distinguished him, he soothed the youth's fears, "Fear not, for they that be with us are more than they that be with them." What could the prophet mean? Did he not know that the village of Dothan could not turn out a hundred able-bodied men? Why, then, did his master make such a boast? The youth turned his incredulous gaze upon the prophet, and was abashed by Elisha's calmness in the face of such danger.

Eyes Opened. The prophet was unmoved because he knew whence help cometh. With his physical vision he could see no farther than his young attendant. But he knew that God would not desert him in the time of peril, and he was confident that where there was danger, there was deliverance. Elisha's faith did not need to be strengthened by a Heavenly vision, but for the sake of his attendant he prayed, "Lord, I pray thee, open his eyes, that he may see." Wonderful faith of the man of God, who did not pray that help should be sent. He knew it was there.

"And the Lord opened the eyes of the young man and he saw; and behold, the mountain was full of horses and chariots of fire round about Elisha." With eyes opened the youth saw the spiritual help sent by God and to him. It bore a resemblance to the earthly force which menaced them, only superior in brightness and splendor and numbers. Ah, the comfort and strength and protection we all might derive from the spiritual forces about us, if we could but see! Never again would the youth doubt God's power to protect and defend His own. Now he knows why the quiet man by his side is unmoved by the number and strength of the enemy. He realizes why this unpretentious man of God is able to work miracles, even to cleanse the leper and raise the dead. Did he not live so near to God that all the host of God wrought with him?

Eyes Closed. As the Syrians marched toward the two, Elisha prayed a second time, and this time he asked, "Smite this people, I pray Thee, with blindness," and they became as men who could not see, and followed their prophet-guide ten miles to Samaria, where, in answer to Elisha's prayer, their eyes were opened, and they saw how God had outwitted the machinations of man. Instead of the prophet being their prisoner, they were in his power, and he led them into the very presence of the king of Israel, where the great-hearted Elisha refused to take advantage of the helplessness of those who would have taken him captive. When the king would have slain them, the prophet declared that the lives of men who had been placed in their hands through the power of God should be considered sacred.

If Naaman was indeed the leader of the Syrian forces on this expedition, we may imagine his guilty consternation at this miracle. How he must have seen his own blindness, in failing to fearlessly and openly avow God! How black his own temerity in obeying the king's order against his old-time benefactor, must have seemed in contrast with the prophet's magnanimity! At Elisha's command they were feasted by the king of Israel and sent on their way to Damascus. "So the bands of Syria came no more into the land of Israel." May it not have been due to the intervention of Naaman, who, in gratitude for the long sufferance of God, returned to his king with renewed allegiance to the true God, and unwonted courage to stand firmly for the right?

Quiz: 1. How did Elisha become cognizant of the movements of the Syrian army? 2. Why was the prophet unaffrighted? 3. Does the Bible teach a belief in angels? 4. What great realm was opened to the young attendant's vision? 5. May we likewise claim God's protecting care?

Seed Thoughts. 1. Thoughts cannot be hidden from God. 2. One man and God are greater than all the king's armies. 3. Elisha did not need to see the angels; he knew they were there. 4. There is a greater and more beautiful world than the one seen through human vision. 5. Every true believer is surrounded by the same spiritual force that defended the prophet of old. 6. It is but a thin partition that divides the material from the spiritual. 7. The servant of God need not fear if he is in the performance of duty. 8. "The best laid plans of mice and men, gang aft a'glee."

A scoffer re-proved. 5. A manifestation of the Lord's mercy to His people even though undeserving. 6. Famine superseded by plenty through the Word of God. 7. The high and the humble used to fulfill His purpose. 8. The scoffer's punishment.

A FAMINE ENDED IN A NIGHT.

The Besieged City. Again Benhadad made war upon Israel, directing his energies against Samaria. The once proud city was in a pitiable condition. Outside its gates a besieging army lived in splendor and luxury; within its walls, famine and starvation. For months the great Syrian host had encamped without the city, foraging and impoverishing the surrounding country and cutting off all supplies from Samaria. With an exhausted treasury and without reinforcements or allies and with pestilence and death denuding its population, from human viewpoint, the city was doomed.

A siege is not an uncommon method of warfare, but only one who has undergone the experience can realize its horrors, for the moral consequences of a prolonged siege are unspeakable. Hunger unmans and starvation brutalizes a human being. It is not for naught that we pray, "Give us our daily bread," for the lack of bread destroys all natural affection. In Samaria, as King Jehoram learned during a walk through its streets, under the brutalizing dominion of hunger, mothers had eaten their own children and were trading in the flesh of their offspring.

A Weak King. The dreadful story so astounded the king that he rent his clothes, revealing the sackcloth which he was wearing underneath to appease God and win His favor and succor. But under the sackcloth was a heart that was hard, unjust and impenitent. In an outburst of passion, the royal wearer of sackcloth charged Elisha with their misfortunes and swore with an oath that the prophet's head should come off that very day, and even sent a messenger to fulfill the threat. It was in accordance with the changeful nature of Jehoram that ere the messenger reached Elisha, the king had repented of his threat and himself set out with his royal retinue, to countermand the order, arriving at Elisha's house shortly after the messenger.

King and Prophet Meet. Just as God enabled him to read Benhadad's thoughts in his bed chamber, as soon as it was uttered, the king's threat was known to Elisha, who sat in his house discoursing with the elders of Samaria, as unmoved as when the Syrian host was encamped about Dothan to take him prisoner. As he stood in Elisha's presence, the unstable Jehoram charged the consequences of his own sin, and incapacity upon God, and irritably exclaimed, "Behold this evil is of the Lord; what should I wait for the Lord any longer?"

The calm, courageous man of God turned upon the childish, petulant king. It was a tragic moment; the man who confronted royalty so calmly was under sentence of death: the executioner was present; the king stood leaning on the arm of one of his courtiers irresolute as to whether to order the execution or not, while the elders had retired to the background to await the outcome. The utmost indifference and calmness marked the man whose life hung in the balance. He seemed enveloped in unconscious grandeur and at the sound of his voice, a deep solemnity fell upon those present, "Hear ye the Word of the Lord."

Beyond Reason. "Tomorrow about this time shall a measure of fine flour be sold for a shekel and two measures of barley for a shekel in the gate of Samaria." A measure or "seel" was equal to about a peck and a half, and a shekel to two dollars and a half. It was a bold declaration, that within a day there should be such a drop in the price of flour and barley, when the cost of these commodities had been absolutely prohibitive throughout the siege. Such a thing was impossible. Nevertheless it was the Word of the Lord. God had spoken through His prophet and the tidings should have brought joy and praise and thanksgiving.

Jehoram, for whose deliverance the power of God had been so often manifest and who had been relieved from many emergencies by Elisha, received the prophet's message in silence, and even permitted his court favorite to scoff and jeer at the promise of God. The nobleman turned sneeringly to Elisha, "Behold if the Lord would make windows in Heaven, might this thing be?" Elisha had borne with the honest doubts of his young attendant and prayed for his enlightenment, but here was a scoffer, who not only doubted but rejected and reviled God's Word, setting his own understanding above that of the Almighty. He turned to the haughty lord and slowly uttered these words, "Behold thou shalt see it with thine eyes, but shalt not eat thereof."

Risking the Chances. The four despised lepers who sat at the entrance of the city gate, discussing what method would most surely prolong their miserable existence, had no idea that God was using them for the fulfillment of prophecy. Poor, pitiable objects they were, subsisting upon the refuse thrown outside the city wall. Famine had left them to die of starvation. Lepers were not allowed inside the city, but driven desperate by hunger, they were tempted to defy the law which made them outcasts and enter the city in search of food, for "Why should they sit there and die?" If they entered the city they would find naught save famine and death. There was just one chance. They might desert to the Syrians with a possibility that they might be received in the camp; even if the Syrians should fall upon them and kill them, they could but die, and any death would be preferable to the slow torture of starvation.

How It Came to Pass. Now at the very time the lepers stole out to seek the Syrians the Lord caused a great noise to be heard in the Syrian camp, which sounded like the noise of horses and chariots and of a great host of soldiery. Thinking it was caused by the arrival of reinforcements for the beleaguered city, the great Syrian army fled to a man. They even left their army accountrements, tents and animals and fled for their lives.

Silently and under cover of night the four lepers stole into the Syrian camp. Tent after tent was deserted, with the evening meal untouched. They ate and drank, satisfying their hunger, then seeing the rich furniture, the golden bowls and drinking cups, the gold bracelets and chains worn by military dandies, and even bags of gold and silver coin, they eagerly gathered up what booty they could, hiding it and returning for more until shame and fear drove them back to the city to spread the good tidings.

Prophecy Fulfilled. The news spread like wildfire and was carried to the king, in the middle of the night. Despite Elisha's prophecy of the day before, Jehoram persisted in thinking it a ruse of the enemy, and was reluctant to send messengers to verify the truth of the lepers' story. But it was true. The Lord had fulfilled His Word spoken by His prophet. People and soldiery were soon carrying off Syrian booty, not only the silver and gold, but what was at the time more precious—stores of provisions, selling food inside the city gate or market place. "So a measure of flour was sold for a shekel and two measures of barley for a shekel, according to the word of the prophet."

"Truly God is no respecter of persons. As He used the loathsome, repulsive lepers to fulfil His Word so He made king Jehoram the instrument through which Elisha's words concerning the king's favorite should come to pass. Anticipating the rush for food, Jehoram appointed that nobleman to superintend the distribution of the provisions, and so great was the press that he was trampled under foot by the eager rushing crowd and died. The scoffer had seen the Word of God verified, but it had availed him nothing. All too true had proved the prophet's words, "Behold, thou shalt see it with thine eyes but shalt not eat thereof."

Quiz. 1. Was Jehoram a weak or a strong king? 2. Why did he impute their misfortunes to Elisha? 3. Was this just? 4. Why is it wrong to scoff at religion? 5. Name other scoffers in the Bible and state their end. 6. Why may we always trust the promises of the Lord?

Seed Thoughts. 1. War is always brutalizing. 2. A comparison between a weak king and a strong man is always advantageous to the latter. 3. There is a great difference between a doubter and a scoffer; the one seeks wisdom, the other repudiates it. 4. He who scoffs at sacred things always ends disastrously. 5. God's promises are always realized. 6. He who could end a food famine can relieve soul hunger. 7. God not only gives fine flour and barley in plentitude, but is Himself the bread of life to famishing souls.

JEHU THE KING

And it came to pass, as soon as he had made an end of offering the that Jehu said to the guard and to the captains,

Go in, and slay them; let none come forth. And they with the edge of the sword; and the guard and the captains cast them out, and went to the city of the house of Baal. And they out

house of Baal,
and

And they brake down the:

of Baal,
and

of Baal, and made it a draught house unto this day. Thus Jehu destroyed Baal out of Israel.

THE SCRIPTURE ACCOUNT IS 2 KINGS, 10:15-28.

Prayer: Dear Lord, We thank Thee that we live under the reign of love; that Christ's coming has brought peace on earth and turned the tyranny of kings. May we never mistake zeal and self-interest for true piety, nor render Thee half-hearted service. We ask it in the name of Christ. Amen.

The love of God is broader
Than the measure of man's mind;
And the heart of the Eternal
Is most wonderfully kind.

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, B. C. 882. Place, Samaria. Persons, Jehu, king of Israel; Jehonadab, the Rechabite; and worshippers of Baal.

Scripture Setting: The Sin of Idolatry. Commandments against idol worship, Ex. 20:3-5. Idolatry forbidden, Lev. 26:1. Forms of idolatry, Deut. 4:15-19. Death penalty, Deut. 17:2-7. Idolators confounded, Psa. 97:7. Warning against idolatry, 1 Cor. 10:14; 1 John 5:21. Idolatry defined, Col. 3:5.

Life and Conduct Setting: In this lesson, 1. Jehu, an unscrupulous zealot, combines selfish interests with religious zeal. 2. Fearing Elisha's disapproval Jehu avoids the prophet and seeks the support of the good but bigoted Jehonadab. 3. Professing zeal for God, but largely influenced by the desire to secure his own dynasty, he plans to destroy the worshippers of Baal. 4. Instead of following the God-inspired Elijah's bold defiance of Baal's prophets, Jehu uses duplicity and entraps the idolators. 5. He orders their massacre, thereby gaining complete riddance of the supporters of Ahab. 6. He proves the falsity of his claim to act as God's agent, by worshipping the golden calves at Bethel and Dan. 7. Good is wrought out of evil in the downfall of Baal worship throughout Israel.

AN UNSCRUPULOUS ZEALOT.

Jehu the King. How many who speak of "driving like Jehu" know that they are using a phrase extant three thousand years ago, concerning a man noted for his furious and reckless driving? The Jehu, whose mode of driving thus has become immortalized, is the chief personage of our lesson. Whatever his faults and crime, no one can doubt Jehu's strength of character. He was a man of action rather than of words. His unbounding energy, desperate courage, decision, firmness and thoroughness made him a marked man very early in his career, and while he was still a young man, God chose him for the overthrow of the house of Ahab, and told Elijah to anoint him as the future king of Israel. But the anointing was deferred many years and finally performed by Elisha through a young prophet.

He was anointed for stern and harsh duty. The occasion demanded a patriot, destitute of self-interest, humbly obedient to God and an example of righteousness to his countrymen. Had Jehu been such a man, today his name might stand with William of Orange, Luther and Washington instead of being significant only of reckless driving. For there can be no doubt that at the time of his call, Jehu was a worshipper of Jehovah, with unusual fitness for the great responsibilities imposed upon him; but he regarded the trust as only an opportunity for self-advancement and self-aggrandizement. It was all too apparent that in his dealings with Ahab's descendants he acted not so much as the executioner of God's judgment against a wicked dynasty, as for his own self-protection.

Jehu and Jehonadab. But though actuated by self-interest, Jehu was performing God's judgment upon the wicked Ahab and the vacillating Jehoram fell a victim to his treachery. When Ahab's descendants were utterly destroyed, Jehu planned a greater strategy. Ahab had identified himself with Baal worship and naturally the adherents of that form of idolatry were friendly to his dynasty. If Jehu could effect their extermination he would be wholly rid of every unfriendly influence, while he would gain a name for piety through the destruction of Baal worshipers in the land of Israel.

Fearless and self-reliant as Jehu was, he felt the need of an ally whose reputation for piety would give countenance to so questionable an undertaking. He dared not send for Elisha, for he well knew that the prophet would not uphold falsehood and treachery. Driving to Samaria with his usual furious haste, he met Jehonadab, the son of Rechab. There could not have been a greater contrast than that between these two men. Jehu was an unscrupulous, ambitious man of the world, while Jehonadab had withdrawn from the world in protest against its corruption and luxury; as chieftain of the Rechabites, he laid the entire tribe under a vow that they would drink no wine, plant no vineyards, avoid the evils of city life, and keep themselves free from worldly entanglements by dwelling in tents all their days. And this remarkable man impressed his views so strongly upon his followers that they adhered to the vow for centuries, and to this day there are those who follow his austere example.

As the royal chariot dashed along at the usual mad rate, they came upon the desert sheik, who was on his way to meet Jehu. With his usual promptitude and brevity, Jehu saluted him and asked with blunt directness, "Is thine heart right as my heart is with thy heart?" With even greater brevity the stern-faced tribesman replied, "It is." Ratifying the covenant of friendship with a hand clasp, Jehu took Jehonadab into his chariot and sought to ingratiate himself with him by boasting of his piety, saying, "Come with me and see my zeal for the Lord."

The Zeal of Jehu. So subtle a vice is self-deception that Jehu had actually convinced himself that he was a disinterested patriot acting only in obedience to God, as he planned the massacre of all the Baal worshippers. It is true that God demanded the uprooting of idolatry from among the Israelites, in order that they might perpetuate the worship of the true God. But how much more it would have been in accordance with the long sufferance and mercy of God if Jehu had called upon the people to repent and return to the true God, and have executed judgment only on those who persisted in cleaving to their idols. Instead Jehu conceived a plan so treacherous and evil that God has condemned it through His prophet, Hosea. Did he think that God needed man's lies, that he began with a lie on his lips? "Ahab served Baal a little; but Jehu will serve him much." Then he appointed a great day of sacrifice to Baal and sent a proclamation broadcast through the land, accompanied with the threat that all who should absent themselves should not live.

The Assemblage. There had been much conjecture and no little apprehension as to the new king's religion. For though anointed by Jehovah's prophet, like many professors of religion, he was seldom or never seen in the Lord's house, and served God only when it advanced his own interest. The followers of Baal were triumphant over the proclamation, whose brevity and boldness were so characteristic of the real Jehu.

Many who formerly worshipped Baal secretly now came out in the open, and on the great day the house of Baal was full from one end to the other. Every precaution was taken to have only Baal's worshippers, and they were given special robes for the occasion that they might be distinguished from worshippers of the true God. Amid an uproar of applause, Jehu and Jehonadab entered the vast assemblage; it was evident to the multitude that Baal's ranks were to be recruited by the accession of the austere chieftain, else why was he present on such an occasion? Why, indeed, unless inspired by ignorance of the love of God?

The Massacre. Jehu so little understood what it meant to be a true follower of Jehovah that he took added precautions to assure himself that none of the servants of the Lord were present. Having reassured himself that only the followers of Baal were there, he assembled his guards and warned them on the peril of their lives to let no man escape.

Again there is shouting, and great acclamation. The king serves as high priest to Baal, offering in all probability human sacrifice! It was Baal's hour of triumph. The burnt offering is ended and the treacherous Jehu drives captains and guard, fast and furiously as he drives his chariot, "Go in and slay them; let none come forth." Let a curtain be drawn mercifully over the awful scene. We can only thank the tender Saviour that we are privileged to live under the dispensation of love, and that God's followers have learned that the heart of the Eternal is most wonderfully kind.

The Outcome. Jehu was never a man to leave things half done. The destruction of Baal was complete. The images were torn down from the house of Baal and burned. The pillar of Baal which was of stone could not be burned and was therefore broken to pieces. Even the house of Baal was partly destroyed, only a portion remaining as a memorial of sin and a warning of its punishment, and even that which remained was put to the greatest possible desecration; they made it a draft house to be used as a depository for the filth of the city. "Thus Jehu destroyed Baal out of Israel."

Having accomplished his own ends, Jehu's zeal disappeared and instead of trying to lead Israel back to the true God, he worshipped the golden calves of Dan and Bethel because calf worship was essential to the maintenance of a divided kingdom. If it were abolished there would be no reason why Israel and Judah could not unite under one government and Jehu would become a king without a throne. Was it not another proof that Jehu was not so anxious to avenge Jehovah as he was to serve his own interests? It is a sign of the sovereignty of God that instead of allowing evil to thwart His ends the Lord utilizes evil for the fulfillment of His purpose, often making evil men the unintentional instruments in building up His Kingdom, and in this instance, Jehu's sin wrought good through the destruction of Baal worship in Israel.

Quiz. 1. What dynasty did Jehu overthrow? 2. What kings did he slay? 3. What great faults tainted Jehu's zeal? 4. What good result was achieved through his perfidy? 5. Name two famous massacres of modern history perpetrated under the guise of religion?

Seed Thoughts. 1. Some men's religion is so mixed with self-interest that its savor is destroyed. 2. It is not hard to serve God when inclination and duty go together. 3. Some men lay all their meanness on God. 4. God is never served by a lie. 5. God is truth and He demands truth in His servants. 6. In His work of destruction God sometimes uses evil men, but never to build up His kingdom. 7. It is only sanctified zeal that counts. 8. There are still some men who cease to be Christians when they have attained their own ends.

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, B. C. 877. Place, The temple, Jerusalem. Persons, Joash, the child king; Jehoiada, the priest; Athaliah, Joash's grandmother; Jehosheba, his aunt.

Scripture Setting: Youthful Servants of the Lord. Abel, Gen. 4:4. Joseph, Gen. 39:3. Moses, Heb. 11:23-24. David, 1 Sam. 16:11-12. John, Luke 1:66, 80. Timothy, 2 Tim. 1:5.

Life and Conduct Setting: The history of Joash records 1. God's preserving care over dangers that beset infancy. 2. The contrast between a good and a bad woman. 3. The devoted and faithful service of Jehoiada, the priest of God. 4. The crowning of the boy king. 5. The retribution which befell Athaliah, the usurper. 6. The triple covenant with God, the king and people.

A BOY RULER.

A Child of Royalty. Only recently the world was watching the boy king of Spain; and the baby emperor of China with the government of two hundred million people resting on his puny infant shoulders, has been a pathetic and interesting figure. The remarkable preservation of his infant life and his youth when crowned, makes Joash one of the most interesting of Judah's kings. Never did a child have greater handicaps and greater advantages. He was the great-grandson of that wicked royal couple, king Ahab and queen Jezebel; with a grandfather so weak and wicked and such a failure as king that he was buried without kingly honors, while his grandmother excelled both her wicked parents in cruelty and sin. His father, who was no better than his evil ancestors, was slain by Jehu, at the early age of twenty-two. In order to secure the throne for herself, his grandmother ordered the massacre of every one even remotely descended from David, not even sparing her own grandchildren. Surely there could be no greater misfortune than descent from such a line; besides the sentence of death hung over his baby head. But we shall see how God manifested His protecting power in behalf of this unhappy child of royalty.

The Deliverance. The heathen queen had planned with cruel certitude, but she had neglected to take into account Jehovah's promise of the perpetuity of the throne of David. Ahaziah, the baby's father, had a half-sister, Jehosheba, who was the wife of Jehoiada, a priest of God. They were a godly couple and Jehosheba's heart had not been corrupted and calloused by the court. The two months' old baby under cruel sentence of death appealed to her compassion, and she resolved to save it. As a king's daughter, sister of the former king, and aunt of the royal children, she had access to the palace at all times. Taking the child's nurse into her confidence, she stole out with baby and nurse and hid both in a room in the palace where mattresses and coverlets are stored. Every Oriental palace contained such a store chamber, and as it was never used for aught else, they were comparatively secure from discovery, though a baby's cry might have revealed its hiding place and thereby cost the life of its rescuer.

The wicked Athaliah was neither a good wife nor a good mother. The Scriptures attribute her husband's sinful career to the fact that he "had the daughter of Ahab to wife," and declare that Ahaziah did wrong because "his mother was his counsellor to do wickedly," and her grandchildren were destroyed by her. Jehosheba was not only a good wife and mother, rearing a godly son, but also loyal in every relationship, risking her own life to save a baby nephew.

What Came of a Merciful Deed. In a few days Jehosheba took the child and its nurse from its temporary hiding place, and stole from the royal palace to the temple where, with her husband's assistance, the babe was hidden away from its murderous grandmother, and the impending massacre. Thus by her merciful act, Jehosheba became a co-worker with God, assisting in the fulfillment of prophecy and prolonging the line of David unto Mary and Joseph.

Could Jehosheba know that centuries to come, another woman would with her husband's assistance, flee from a wicked king's edict and hide a Child of the house of David from another slaughter of the innocents? Though nearly a thousand years apart, the two episodes were closely allied. For only the frail infant in Jehosheba's arms stood against the extinction of the line of David; its slender thread of life held together the genealogy of the Child in Mary's arms. But Jehosheba was all unconscious that the service she rendered to one of His little ones, was in very deed unto the promised Prince of the house of David.

If the infant Joash was unfortunate in his heredity, compensation was given him; what other child was ever permitted to spend his infant years in the temple of the Lord, or was so carefully nurtured and instructed by the high priest of God?

Planning the Usurper's Overthrow. Meanwhile a heathen queen ruled over the city of David and the land of Judah, and as far as known, the royal line of David was extinct. The splendid temple erected by Solomon was neglected and in disrepair, while under its shadow a temple was built to Baal whose worship Athaliah sought to establish in the holy city and sacred land.

After six years of impatient waiting, Jehoida felt that the time was ripe to throw off the idolatrous yoke of the usurper. Joash was now a boy of seven and according to Oriental custom, of an age to be proclaimed king. Jehoida had already won the adherence of the officers of the queen's bodyguard and the five captains of the royal guards, with whom he held a secret conference in the temple, and binding them by a secret, solemn oath to fidelity to the cause of the little king, he showed them the young descendant of David. The priests, Levites and other faithful followers of Jehovah were then invited to Jerusalem. After being sworn to secrecy, they also were shown into the presence of the boy Joash, and took the oath of fealty. Guards were skillfully posted about the temple and the palace. Spears and shields which David had won in many battles and which had reposed in the temple for 150 years were brought out and given to the captains of the guard.

Long Live the King. When all was ready the little Joash was led forth to the raised platform which the kings of his line were in the habit of occupying in the temple. It was fitting that the coronation should take place on a Sabbath day, for it was a religious ceremony prompted by the highest patriotism. In the sight of all the people, Jehoida crowned the boy king, and then to show that the king was to rule by law and not according to his own will, the high priest laid a roll of the law of Moses on the child's head. Once again God's priest had anointed a lad, and the boy descendant of the ruddy faced shepherd lad was proclaimed king.

Words would fail to describe the emotion of that assemblage of tried and true followers of Jehovah. Many times in the temple, they had mournfully chanted the words of the psalmist, "Lord, how long shall the wicked triumph?" Now might they sing in triumph, "The Lord will not cast off His people, neither will He forsake His inheritance." Truly God still reigned, for the psalmist's offspring sat upon the throne. "And they clapped their hands and said, God save the king."

The Triple Covenant. The walls of the temple resounded with the shouts of God's people; the cheering rang across the open space to the palace, and was Athaliah's first intimation of danger. Hurrying to the temple to learn the cause of the uproar, she saw the young king crowned, and on the platform surrounded by the royal officers and captains of her own guards; the Levite choir was chanting the coronation psalm; the temple band was playing, and trumpeters and people were joyfully acclaiming Joash king.

Small wonder that the wretched Athaliah rent her clothes and cried, Treason! Treason! But was it treason that a heathen usurper and murderess should meet her doom, Baal be overthrown and the throne of David revert to its rightful owner? Jehoida, the faithful high priest of God, had not inaugurated a revolution merely to set his wife's nephew upon the throne, but to reinstate the worship of Jehovah, and the most solemn and sacred feature of the coronation was to follow. "And Jehoida made a covenant between the Lord and the king and the people, that they should be the Lord's people; between the king also and the people." King and people were to worship God and be faithful to Him and He would protect and keep them. In token of their sincerity, the people destroyed the house of Baal, its altars and images, and the worship of the true God was restored. Thus this peaceful revolution accomplished more than Jehu's coup d'état of treachery and slaughter.

That "Joash did that which was right in the sight of the Lord all the days of Jehoida the priest," and after the good man's death, was led into sin through evil companions, even conniving at the death of the son of his benefactors, shows that association is more powerful than heredity.

Quiz. 1. What other boy was anointed king by a prophet and priest of God? 2. What other babe in the Old Testament was saved from death by hiding it? 3. What king ordered a slaughter of innocents? 4. How was the life of the Child Jesus preserved? 5. Does God still exert a guardian care over children? 6. Which was the truest reformer, Jehu or Jehoida?

Seed Thoughts. 1. Perils and danger face every infant life. 2. Jehovah guards the cradle of every slumbering babe. 3. A bad woman destroys, a good woman preserves life. 4. An evil heredity does not predestine its possessor to evil. 5. Heredity may be overcome by education and environment. 6. We cannot choose our ancestry, but we may pick our associates. 7. Retribution always overtakes and overtakes the criminal. 8. A royal dynasty was saved from destruction and God's Word upheld, through one merciful act.

THE SCRIPTURE ACCOUNT IS 2 KINGS, 13:14-21.

Prayer: Dear Lord, Grant us grace to meet Thy summons calmly. May it find us prepared and ready. Help us so to live, that even after death, our influence shall live on and have a vivifying effect upon souls that are dead in sin. For Thy glory. Amen.

"Lives of great men all remind us,
We can make our lives sublime,
And, departing, leave behind us
Footprints on the sands of time."

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, B. C. 842. Place, Shunem. Persons, Elisha and Joash, king of Israel.

Scripture Setting: The Death of the Righteous. Greatly to be desired, Num. 23:10. Precious in the sight of the Lord, Psa. 116:15. They enter into peace, Isa. 57:1-2. They have hope in death, Prov. 14:32. Are sustained and comforted in death, Psa. 23:4. God's presence in death, Psa. 48:14. Victorious in death, Isa. 5:8, 1 Cor. 15:56-57. Shall live again, Isa. 26:19. Depart to be with Christ, Phil. 1:21-23. Borne to Heaven by angels, Luke 16:22. Their Heavenly reward, Dan. 12:2-3. They receive a crown of righteousness, 2 Tim. 4:8.

Life and Conduct Setting: In this beautiful account of the death of God's servant, 1. Elisha's greatness is manifested in death as in life. 2. Royalty visits him and mourns his departure. 3. The prophet sees visions unto the last. 4. He tries to comfort the king who grieves for him and to inspire him with his own courage and determination. 5. Joash is too easily satisfied. 6. The dying prophet has courage still to rebuke a king. 7. The greatest and godliest man in Israel meets the common lot of all. 8. Elisha's miraculous power extends beyond the confines of death. 9. The dead prophet's touch restores life.

THE DEPARTURE OF A GREAT MAN.

The End Approaches. The greatest man in all Israel lay dying. It is doubtful if there is a darker record in all the pages of history than is contained in the two books of the Kings. Murder and treason, craft and greed, deadly ambition and cruel ingratitude, lust and jealousy, fury and hate, are all marshaled before us. Even the tragedies of Shakespeare pale before the unbridled lust depicted in the ancient Hebrew record. And nowhere is there such a record of great men: the wisest of all times, master builders, great military commanders, real heroes and good soldiers, statesmen unexcelled in our present day, diplomats and financiers; but the unvarnished and truthful record reveals some fatal weakness, or a strain of evil in the greatest and best.

History testifies that sinful and black as is the record of God's chosen people, the rest of mankind were unspeakably worse and the outside world infinitely blacker. The dark pages of the two sacred books are illumined by two characters, whose spotlessness and moral grandeur are in striking contrast to their times. Both were prophets of God. The one, austere and solitary, seemed not of ordinary flesh and blood and in his departure was untouched by death, ascending to Heaven by way of the fiery chariot instead of the tomb.

But the other was so intensely human, so broad in his sympathies, so lowly of heart, so ready to help, so simple and open in his life, that he was not only the greatest, but the best loved man in the entire nation. He was a "man who lived by the roadside," and the lives of the humble and great converged at his door. Now he was sick unto death. The one to whom kings had come for deliverance; at whose command nature had reversed her laws; and to whom death itself had yielded its prey, must fulfill the common law of man and die. Like the Holy One in whose power he wrought, though, "He saved others; himself he cannot save."

A Royal Visitor. To live so that one will be mourned by one's enemies as well as by one's friends, and by the heads of the nation in unison with the simple folk of the community, proves a life well spent. Elisha lay in the chamber which had been built for him by the Shunamite couple and was the object of their loving ministration, while the entire community joined with the great lady of Shunem in mourning his fast approaching end. It was the close of a long life. More than sixty years ago, he had left the plow at Elijah's call and now he was past eighty. He had not been active in public affairs lately, for Jehu had ignored him, and though Jehoahaz, the son of Jehu, must have come to Elisha in defeat, when the great-hearted prophet besought and won God's help for him, the ungrateful king who so easily forgot his Divine Benefactor, soon slighted His prophet.

And now king Joash, grandson of Jehu, reigned in Israel. Though an evil man, Joash mourned Elisha's illness and came down from Samaria to Shunem to visit the dying prophet. Doubtless many times the king had been angry and smarted under the prophet's rebuke; but as he looked at the wan face and gaunt and pain-racked body, and noted the evidence of approaching death, the king threw himself down by the bedside and bent over the glorified face of the man of God until it was wet with his own hot tears.

A King's Tribute. Infinitely tender was the tribute of the worldly but sorrowing king. "O my father, my father, the chariot of Israel and the horseman thereof." Strangely enough it was the very expression which Elisha had used when, sixty years ago, he had seen Elijah, his beloved master, ascending to Heaven in a chariot of fire. Then, it had seemed to the bereft young prophet as if Israel had been shorn of its protection; as if the horses and chariot and armies of Israel were naught since he who wrought their victories was gone. Faithfully the youthful follower of Elijah had tried to wear his master's mantle, fill his place and perform the office of prophet to his people, and now in his old age and ere his departure, king Joash's exclamation was the assurance of his success. And were the king's eyes opened, even as the young attendant's had been? And was the chariot of God not nigh to protect His servant in death as in life?

His Last Prophecy. Like God, who hates sin and loves the sinner, Elisha's heart was filled with compassion for the man by his side. Was not Joash his king, and did not the salvation of Israel depend upon his determination, courage and persistence against its foes?

Elisha was no selfish recluse, and dying though he was he still had the welfare of his country at heart. Magnificent courage, that with the death damp gathering on his forehead, leads the prophet to rouse the king, energizes him and inspires him with hope and courage. Dying, Elisha was more alive than Joash. Summoning all his fast waning strength, he raised up on the bed, and with eyes alight with prophetic fire, he bade the young and stalwart king take his bow and arrows, and the king obeyed. "Put thine hand upon the bow." The words rang with the old authority, and the king did as he was told. Then Elisha put his own hands upon the king's hands, for Joash must not think he can win without God's help. The window was opened and the king awaited orders. "Shoot. And he shot." It was an ancient method of declaring war; when an arrow shot by a herald, or spear thrown into the country to be invaded with the words, "I wage war against you," was sufficient declaration of warlike intentions.

The Rebuke. Wonderingly Joash turned to Elisha, who explained that the arrow shot eastward into the air was the arrow of the Lord's deliverance, pledging deliverance from the yoke of Syria. The prophet bade the king smite with other arrows, this time to the ground, as if smiting something to the earth. Joash smote as commanded once, twice, thrice, and then possibly regarding the whole proceeding as a sick man's fancy, he stopped. Terrible in his indignation was the dying prophet, who, fearless to the end, again rebuked royalty. "Thou shouldst have smitten five or six times; then hadst thou smitten Syria till thou hadst consumed it: whereas now thou shalt smite Syria but thrice." His quiver was not empty. If Joash had believed the promise of God, he would have used every arrow, for was not the power of God behind his every effort?

Outlives Death. Perhaps this one supreme effort in behalf of his country hastened the end, for shortly after, death claimed the greatest man of all Israel. Every honor was paid the dead prophet and his body reposed in a great vaulted sepulchre hewn out of solid rock. Josephus tells us he had a magnificent funeral and burial. But greater honor than his people could give was accorded him later, for God attested the genuineness of his calling. A remarkable miracle was wrought to proclaim to Israel that the word and work of a truly good man outlives death.

While ravaging the country a band of marauding Moabites came suddenly upon a funeral. According to Israelitish custom, the dead man was wrapped in linen cloths and was being borne to the tomb by his friends. But alas, they could not hope to escape if they carried the corpse to the grave prepared for it. Elisha's sepulchre was hard by. The distressed mourners quickly rolled away the stone and hastily thrust in the dead body. And, miraculous power of God, triumphant over death;—as soon as the dead touched the uncoffined bones of the prophet he was restored to life and stood upon his feet! The miracle which in life the man of God had wrought only after much prayer and entreaty, was now accomplished without effort. Moreover the prophet's prediction to Joash was literally fulfilled. Three times, and three times only, did Joash defeat the Syrians. Death was powerless to stay the word and work of a true servant of God.

Quiz. 1. How did Elisha depart from the world? 2. How much longer did Elisha serve as prophet than Elijah. 3. Was the king Joash of our lesson the Joash crowned king by Jehoida? 4. How long a period were the two kings of the same name contemporary rulers? 5. What weakness did Joash betray in failing to shoot longer?

Seed Truths. 1. He who trusts God may meet both danger and death unafraid. 2. Even the wicked are compelled to pay tribute to a truly good man. 3. That man has lived well whose enemies weep over his departure. 4. The arrow of the Lord's deliverance is always winged in behalf of His people. 5. Joash only asked for three victories and he got only three; had he asked for more, he would have got more. 6. Many a professed Christian stops his own efforts to reform ere God has completed His work of grace. 7. God is always ready to do more for us than we are willing to accept. 8. All Christian victories and reforms have been gained only through the perseverance of the saints. 9. A man's influence and works do not die with him.

CAPTIVITY OF THE TEN TRIBES

Then the king of Assyria came up throughout all the land, and went up to Samaria, and it three years. In the ninth year of Hoshea the king of Assyria took Samaria, and Israel away into Assyria, and placed them in Halah and in Habor by the of Gozan, and in the cities of the Medes. For so it was, that the children of Israel had sinned against the Lord their God, which hath brought them up from under the hand of king of Egypt, and had feared other gods, And walked in the statutes of the whom the Lord cast out from before the children of Israel, and of the kings of Israel, which they had made.

THE SCRIPTURE LESSON IS II KINGS 17:1-23.

Prayer: Dear Heavenly Father, Make us to know Thy will in national ways, and help us to do it. Thy ancient people are examples to us. Their sins and their punishments were alike dreadful. May the idolatries of wealth and the luxuries of life not ensnare us, and may we ever heed Thy calls and love Thy worship. As we read of war and devastation our hearts turn to the Prince of peace.

In His name may we gain the victories of peace. For His dear sake. Amen.

"Who is wise and he shall understand these things? Prudent, and he shall know them? For the ways of the Lord are right, And the just shall walk in them; But transgressors shall fall therein."—Hosea 14:9.

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, 722-1 B. C. Place, Samaria, the capital of Israel. Persons, Hoshea the king of Israel, Hezekiah the king of Judah, Shalmaneser IV king of Assyria 727 to 722 B. C., Sargon king of Assyria 721 to 702 B. C. So king of Egypt, twenty-fifth dynasty. Hosea and Isaiah prophets.

Scripture Setting: The sadness and Divine warnings of the lesson cannot be understood without the help of the great prophets of the period. Read The drunkards of Ephraim, Isa. 28. The seven-fold woe, Isa. 6:8-28. God's controversy with Israel, Hosea 4:1-10. Reaping the whirlwind, Hosea 7 and 8. The commandment against idolatry, Exodus 20:1-6.

Life and Conduct Setting: This lesson is peculiarly sad because it brings us to the end of a long period of wrongdoing on the part of the northern kingdom. And it is peculiarly rich in value as a warning against national wrongdoing, for as an evil tree bears bitter fruit so a sinful nation must come to a bad end. It was a political blunder on the part of king Hoshea that brought the climax just as a touch may spring a trap that has long been set. He refused his yearly tribute to the king of Assyria, and foolishly sought the help of Egypt. Shalmaneser rebuked this rebellion by at once besieging Samaria, and in the terrors of war king Hoshea paid an awful tribute.

THE ROAD TO RUIN.

Point of Contact. As a nation we are not in danger of such gross idolatry as that which ruined ancient Israel. Their rude stone and wooden gods; their Baalim and Asherim and groves and high places; their calf worship and sun and star worship; their bloody altars and their sacrifices of beasts and boys and girls have passed away forever. But we have idols of pleasure and of gold and of the market-place that are equally dangerous. Among us also there are drunkards, and we have an altar of lust on which thousands are sacrificed, and to the god of gold we pay heavy tribute through our trusts and monopolies. Our future is a question of Christ and Christliness against such altars and such gods.

"Thorns and Thistles on Their Altars." "Samaria is cut off with her king as foam upon the water." This is the cry of Hosea as he foretells the destruction of the city which was the capital of the kingdom of Israel. It is a figure both sad and beautiful. In his tenth chapter the prophet goes further and rebukes the idolatry of the people, saying, "The high places also of Aven, the sin of Israel, shall be destroyed; the thorn and thistle shall come up on their altars." It would be hard to think of anything more desolate than thistles growing on and around the altars where thousands had been coming to sacrifice their rams and lambs and oxen to their gods. It is a picture that describes the utter destruction of the nation.

In the early part of his reign king Hoshea had become subject to Shalmaneser the king of Assyria, and paid him tribute year by year. As long as he was loyal all went well. But Hoshea was a weak king and in an evil moment yielded to the fanatical Egyptian party and cut off his yearly tribute or tax to Shalmaneser and made an alliance with So the king of Egypt. Perhaps Shalmaneser was wanting a pretext for war, and if so he could have had nothing better than such a rebellion on the part of Hosea. He promptly besieged the city of Samaria and continued the siege through three terrible years, and at last destroyed it, and carried its people away into slavery, and thus with the high hand of a merciless despot collected his tribute.

Plowing Wickedness, Reaping Iniquity. A problem confronted the writer of our lesson. Jehovah was a God above all gods, and yet His chosen people had been destroyed. Could He not have saved them? Why had He cast them off? Why had He sent that dreadful enemy against them?

In verses seven to twenty-seven He gives His answer. It is found in one word; it was their sin. And their sin consisted in hard-necked, unreasoning idolatry. That was their root sin. On the hilltops and under the green trees all over the land they had placed their idols and built their altars, and they were worshiping just as the heathen worshipped. They sang heathen songs and danced heathen dances around their smoking altars. Much of this worship was shameful and cruel. They even threw their boys and girls into the fires of Moloch, for human sacrifice was a part of Moloch worship. These were the things that "provoked God to anger." He had spoken to them by all His prophets, but they had not heard Him. At last in His anger He had removed them out of His sight. This is how, according to the fine figure of Hosea, they had "plowed wickedness;" in their utter destruction at the hands of Shalmaneser they were "reaping iniquity."

Associated Sins. Sins are like grapes; they grow in clusters. In Israel idolatry was the stem sin, and it had many other sins clinging to it. One of the worst of these is pointed out by Isaiah in his 28th chapter, in the cry, "Woe to the crown of pride of the drunkards of Ephraim." They had a rich land with "fat valleys," and hillsides covered with vineyards; and from their grapes they made wine, and became drunkards. They had been living lives of careless luxury, and gluttony, and drunkenness for a long time. A half century before Isaiah, Amos had rebuked them for "lolling on couches, eating the fat of the flocks, singing idle songs, and drinking wine out of bowls." The prophets knew that such ways of living could not last. Isaiah warned them that their "glorious beauty" would be like a "fading flower," and that the nation itself would be ere long like the first ripe fig on a tree—quickly eaten.

The Links of History Run Far Back. Meditating still on the problem of Israel's rejection by Jehovah the writer of our lesson vv. 19 to 23, recalls the sin of Jeroboam two hundred and fifty years before. It was this "son of Nebat" who had made Israel to "sin a great sin." It was he who had turned them away from following Jehovah, and all through those long years the people had been walking in the sins of that royal sinner. "They departed not from them." And so King Sargon wrote on the tablets of Khorsabad, "I besieged and took and occupied the city of Samaria, and carried into captivity twenty-seven thousand two hundred and eighty of its inhabitants. I changed the former government of this country, and placed over it lieutenants of my own. And Sebeh (So), sultan of Egypt, came against me to Raphia to fight against me. They met me and I routed them—Sebeh fled."

Rebellion and Ruin. When we remember the history of Israel as a nation and reflect on its awful destruction it does not seem too much to couple these two words together, namely rebellion and ruin. The national rebellion was rebellion against God. He was the real ruler of that people. He had watched over them with kingly care even while they were slaves in Egypt; He had brought them out miraculously, opening a path for them through the Red Sea, overthrowing their enemies—"the horse and his rider"—amidst the waves where they had walked safely; He had provided for them water from the rock, and manna from Heaven, and quails from the wilderness; He had given them amidst the grandeurs of Mount Sinai laws, and rulers, and an altar, and a worship simple and glorious, and suitable to Himself; He had planted them as a choice vine in the promised land; He, in the days of their feebleness, had watched over them and guarded and defended them; He had brought them through the dangerous days of the Judges into the glorious ones of David and Solomon, of which the queen of Sheba said, "the half has not been told;" and now, two centuries and a half from those glorious days comes the inglorious end! Willfully, carelessly, with open eyes in the face of what God had done for them, and in the face of His prophets, they had sinned. In their idolatry they had rebelled against God. And from the rebellion ruin came like venom from a serpent's tooth. Homes abandoned, vineyards torn, wheat-fields wasted, city walls broken down, and smoking, blackened piles of stones and ashes where once were markets, palaces and altars. Such is the end of wrong doing whether on the part of a nation or a man. "The wages of sin is death."

And the Greatest Sin? In a sense all sins are great and terrible. But in a sense also some are greater than others. We are told that Jeroboam, the son of Nebat, drove Israel from serving Jehovah and caused them "to sin a great sin." The people of Israel knew better than to worship dumb and hideous and shameful idols, and therefore it was for them a greater sin than for the idolaters themselves. They had been chosen by God, and by Him they had been blessed and guided in a thousand ways. In view of all His goodness to them, to turn from Him was to sin a great sin. It was like the wicked cry, "not Christ but Barabbas." There is no greater sin than to miss the mark of life. John Ruskin says: "I do not wonder at what men suffer; but I wonder at what they miss."

Quiz and Study. 1. Does the worship of God tend to strict and sober living? 2. What was the relation between Israel's idolatry and drunkenness? 3. Is our own nation suffering from vices which began centuries ago? 4. Are we indulging vices which may ruin us in years to come?

Challenge Text: "Come, let us return unto the —; for He hath torn and He will — us; He hath — and He will — us up."—Hosea 6: (?).

Practical Thoughts: There is frequent reference in the books of Kings to Jeroboam, "who made Israel to sin." The example set by men in high position is too easily followed by men lower down.

Hoshea was a better king than those who preceded him. Yet he suffered more than they. He was bound up in their history. Just so in everyday life the innocent suffer with and for the guilty. We are like stitches in a stocking; when one is broken the rest ravel. A noble man will be careful lest he cause others to suffer.

SENNACHERIB'S INVASION

Therefore thus saith the Lord concerning the king of Assyria. He shall not come into this city, nor

there,
nor come before it with shield, nor cast

against it. By the way that he came, by the same shall he return, and shall not come into this saith the Lord. For I will defend this city, to save it,

for mine
own sake,
and for my servant

sake. And it came to pass that night, that the of the Lord went out, and smote in the camp of the Assyrians an hundred fourscore and five thousand:

when they arose early in the morning, behold, they were all corpses.

THE SCRIPTURE LESSON IS II KINGS 19:20-37.

Prayer: Almighty God and our Father, though our foes be mighty, and though they loast great things, and though the way seems shut before us, yet help us to know that Thine arm is strong and that Thy ways are wonderful. As in a single night Thou didst turn back the proud enemy of Thy ancient people, so Thou canst bring to us glad mornings. In Jesus Thou hast taught us to call Thee Father, and in His name we pray for childlike trust. For Christ's sake, Amen.

"The Assyrian came down like a wolf on the fold;
His cohorts all gleaming in purple and gold;
And the sheen of their spears was like stars on the sea,
When the blue waves roll nightly on deep Galilee.

Like the leaves of the forest when summer is green,
That host with their banners at sunset were seen;
Like the leaves of the forest when summer hath blown,
That host on the morrow lay wither'd and strown."
—Byron.

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, 701 B. C., according to the Assyrian chronology. Place, Jerusalem. Persons, Hezekiah king of Judea, Isaiah the prophet, Sennacherib king of Assyria, the people of Jerusalem, and the army of the Assyrians.

Scripture Setting: Parallel accounts, 2 Chron. 32. Isa. 36 and 37. Psalm 46 may be read as an ode to victory.

Life and Conduct Setting: Verses 20 to 28 are a taunt song in answer to the Assyrian braggart, Rabshakeh, whom Sennacherib had sent to demand the surrender of Jerusalem. The other verses present the answer to the prayer of Hezekiah, and the sequel to the history of Sennacherib. On the whole we have the spectacle of one godly man, the prophet Isaiah, hoping against all human hope, defying those who mocked his people and his God, and saving his city. "Wisdom is better than weapons of war."

HOW ONE MAN SAVED A CITY.

Rabshakeh at the Walls of Jerusalem. Sennacherib was one of the proudest of ancient kings. He tells on his monuments how other kings came and brought him rich presents and kissed his feet. When Hezekiah had reigned fourteen years this boastful monarch attempted to conquer the whole country as far west as Egypt. Judea lay directly in his way and he swept down over it, taking city after city. While he was besieging Lachish he sent to Hezekiah demanding a tribute of him. Hezekiah sent him at least a million of dollars, as we should say, and in order to get it he had to take away the gold and silver vessels of the temple and even the gold plates from the temple doors and posts.

This did not satisfy the proud and terrible king. Some time after he sent his captain, Rabshakeh, with an army to demand the surrender of the city. Rabshakeh was a braggart like his master. He strutted down to the city and there, instead of a courteous conference with Hezekiah's officers, he roared out his mockeries in the ears of all the people. Forty-six cities his master had taken. This, the capital, he would take with a single speech. He cried aloud to the people, mocking their king and their God, and promising them ease and luxury in his own country if they would surrender. "Make peace with me," he said, "and then eat ye every man of his own vine and every man of his own fig tree, and drink ye every one of the water of his cistern till I come and take you away to a land like your own, a land of corn and grapes, a land of bread-corn and orchards."

One Nest Not Robbed. When the Assyrian kings conquered a city and looted it they spoke of it as lightly as robbing a bird's nest. Here is an inscription on one of their monuments: "As one that gathereth eggs I have gathered all the earth; there was none that moved the wing or that opened the mouth or chirped." But there was one reason why this easy, bird's-nest sort of conquest should not succeed in Jerusalem. There was a man in Jerusalem greater than either of the kings in the conflict, and as brave as any soldier and loyal to God, and a lover of God's city and people. On this man king Hezekiah leaned and found support. To him the people turned and were guided. From him came defiance of Sennacherib and his army, and the prediction of their destruction. That one high-souled man was more to Jerusalem than trumpets and shields and spears and banners and an army and the king himself. It was Isaiah who gave Hezekiah faith to pray, and it was he who held out and saved the city when others would have given up.

An Ugly Letter Answered by Prayer. When Rabshakeh returned to Sennacherib he found him besieging another city of the old Philistine region, namely, Libnah. Then he heard that an Egyptian army was coming from the south, and he hastily sent a letter to Hezekiah demanding his surrender. Hezekiah took the letter into the temple and "spread it before the Lord," and prayed.

He prayed that the city might be saved and that the whole world might know that the Lord and He only was God.

Isaiah sent to the king the Lord's answer to his prayer, and a part of it is as though he were talking into the very face of Sennacherib. "The virgin daughter of Zion hath despised thee and laughed thee to scorn. The virgin daughter of Jerusalem hath shaken her head at thee. Whom hast thou reproached and blasphemed? And against whom hast thou exalted thy voice and lifted up thine eyes on high? Even against the Holy One of Israel. Because of thy raging against Me, and for that thine arrogancy is come up into mine ears, therefore I will put my hook in thy nose, and my bridle in thy lips, and I will turn thee back by the way that thou camest."

"My Hook in Thy Nose." This striking figure is drawn from the cruel practices of the Assyrians, who were accustomed to lead their captives away like beasts, with hooks in their noses. The "hook" in this case was a deadly visitation. In one night "The angel of the Lord went forth and smote the camp of the Assyrians a hundred and fourscore and five thousand. And when they arose in the morning, behold, these were all dead bodies."

When this happened the Assyrian army was on its way to Egypt and was turned back suddenly. There is an Egyptian account confirming the biblical one, of which Dr. George Adam Smith says: "The parallel with the Bible narrative is close. In both accounts it is a prayer of the king that prevails. In both the Deity sends His agent—in the grotesque Egyptian an army of mice; in the sublime Jewish, His angel. In both the effects are sudden, happening in a night."

The loss of so many soldiers in a single night was fearful. Besides what might happen in another day and night Sennacherib could not guess. He left the country as quickly as he could and on his proud monuments he simply says that he returned suddenly. He had nothing to boast of. "So Sennacherib departed and went and returned and dwelt at Nineveh" is the terse biblical conclusion. In this way the Lord answered Hezekiah's prayer and fulfilled Isaiah's prediction.

History cannot be explained altogether by "the heaviest battalions." Napoleon lost Waterloo "by the nod of a peasant's head." God was not on the side of the battalions there, nor at Moscow. Cromwell prayed and conquered. George Washington prayed and Yorktown surrendered. There were those who mocked Lincoln, calling him a boor and a railsplitter; but Lincoln went forward in prayer till he wrote the Emancipation Proclamation.

Better than Walls and Towers and Cat-

apults. "I will defend this city," saith the Lord. When the Lord defends His people He does not need the help of stone mason and the engineer and the soldier. Prayer is better than walls and forts and battlements. To please God is safer for us than an army with banners. Hezekiah prayed; Isaiah prophesied; and not an arrow from the bow of Sennacherib reached the walls of Jerusalem. "Not by an army nor by power; but by My Spirit," saith the Lord. It is right that makes might, and the Lord is right. When they flattered President Lincoln by telling him the Lord was on his side, he said, "I am not so much concerned to have the Lord on my side as I am to be on His side." Ah, that is what we should all seek; and when we are there we shall not need to carry guns and fight duels. In the stillness of the night the angel of the Lord will fight our battles, and we shall rest and be at peace.

The End of a Proud and Cruel King. Sennacherib called himself "The great king, the powerful king, the king of the Assyrians, of the nations of the four regions, the favorite of the great gods, the noble hero, the builder of monuments, the strong warrior," etc., etc. On his monuments he was painted as seated on a throne, in royal robes, with tiara and bracelets, receiving the spoils and captives of the city of Lachish and giving orders for the slaughter of the people. In the name of the Lord Isaiah stood up alone and defied him; the Lord smote his army; and in Nineveh, in the temple of his idol Nisroch, his own sons slew him while he worshiped. This was the end of the mighty monarch who fought against God and mocked the people of God.

Quiz and Study. 1. Did Rabshakeh think of Jehovah as different from other gods, or as one of them? 2. Had the gods of the Assyrians any moral character? 3. What was the secret of Isaiah's boldness? 4. How did he know that Jerusalem would not be besieged, and that something would happen to the Assyrian army? 5. What may be the worth of one brave and righteous man to a city or nation? 6. Which is more effective, a king on his throne, or a king on his knees? 7. Of all the great men in Jerusalem who was the greatest?

Practical Thoughts. 1. God really cares for His people, and when they obey Him, and pray to Him, He can and does answer them. 2. He has ways that we could never dream of. Perhaps even Isaiah had no idea as to how God would answer his prophecy when he said of Sennacherib, "He shall not come into this city, nor shoot an arrow there." He will find the way for us if we only trust Him. 3. Isaiah's faith was the kind that can remove mountains, and Sennacherib's pride was the kind that goes before a fall.

HEZEKIAH'S PRAYER

In those days was Hezekiah unto death.

And the prophet
Isaiah the son of Amoz and said unto him, Thus saith the Lord, Set thine house in order; for thou shalt die, and not live. Then he turned and prayed unto the Lord, saying, I beseech thee.

O Lord,

remember now how I have walked before thee in and with a perfect heart, and have done that which is good in thy sight. And Hezekiah wept sore. And it came to pass, afore Isaiah was gone out into the middle that the word of the Lord came to him, saying, Turn again and tell Hezekiah the captain of my people, Thus saith the Lord, the God of thy father, I have heard thy prayer, I have seen thy tears: behold, I will heal thee: on the third day thou shalt go up unto the house of the Lord.

THE SCRIPTURE LESSON IS II KINGS 20:1-17.

Prayer: Dear Heavenly Father, Thou art compassionate always. May we trust Thee whether in health or sickness, and to Thy will make us resigned. In Christ Thou hast revealed Thy tenderest care for us, and in Him Thou hast given us our highest hope. In the light of His revelation sickness becomes benediction and death translation. Yet we, too, like Thy servant of old, ask for added years that we may glorify Thee with lengthened labor. For Jesus' sake, Amen.

"There is a power which man can wield
When mortal aid is vain,
God's eye, and arm, and love to reach,
His listening ear to gain.

That power is prayer, which soars on high,
Through Jesus to the throne;
And moves the hand which moves the world,
To bring salvation down."

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, 712-3 B. C. Place, Jerusalem. Persons, Hezekiah king of Judah, Isaiah the prophet, Berodach-baladan the son of Baladan, king of Babylon.

Scripture Setting: Parallel account, Isaiah 38 and 39. A royal prayer, Psa. 61. A prayer of distress, Psa. 143. Prayer of a stricken conscience, Psa. 51. Christ's intercessory prayer, John 17.

Life and Conduct Setting: Hezekiah's prayer is a model of brevity. There are only thirty words. It is the prayer of a model life. "I have walked before Thee in truth, and with a perfect heart, and have done that which is good in Thy sight."

It is a prayer in which the petition is unspoken, but the life and the weeping express it. It is much to be able to present to God a perfect heart and a life of well-doing. God knew and answered the longing of the king still to live, and still to do good. As the king prayed he "wept sore." Prayer is not eloquence but earnestness. It is not "much speaking" but deep feeling. God hears and answers our tears.

A PRAYER THAT DROVE AWAY DEATH.

Point of Contact. Just as in sickness and sorrow and death we are all one, so we are all one in the resort to prayer when driven to our last stand. When there is no human help we turn our face to the wall and lift our heart to God. Victor Hugo's abandoned criminals in a sinking boat all pray, and the last we see is a hand with index finger pointing upward through the waves. Prayer is a note of the race. It is a necessity. It is communion with God as Friend and Father. There is nothing deeper in life than religion and there is nothing deeper in religion than prayer. It is the root and from it there is the promise of all the fruit of religion.

When you were in darkness you asked for light; when you were in trouble you asked for guidance; when you had a great inspiration to do good you asked for help; when you were under temptation you cried for deliverance; when you were in the deep waters you sought "the everlasting arms."

The Word of Doom and the King's Last Hope. In the fourteenth year of his reign Hezekiah became very sick. The Assyrians were threatening the city and the people were in great trouble. The prophet Isaiah, who was both minister and physician to the king, came to him and said, "Set thy house in order, for thou shalt die and not live." It is very hard to go to a man who is sick and tell him that he cannot get well, and when Isaiah did this he performed his saddest duty to his royal patient. We can see him turning at once with bowed head to go away.

The king turned his face to the wall, for it was a time to shut out the world. No one but God saw his tears while he prayed, saying, "I beseech Thee, O Lord, remember how I have walked before Thee in truth and with a perfect heart and have done that which is good in Thy sight." Thus in the face of doom the king had hope in God through prayer.

The Answered Prayer. Isaiah had not crossed the court of the palace when he was inspired to turn and go back and bring the king a glad answer to his prayer. And this was the answer: Fifteen years of lengthened life! The deliverance of the city from Assyria! And the Lord's defense of the city after it was delivered! We are not told that the king had prayed for so much, but it often happens that the Lord's answers are fuller than our petitions. Melancthon, who was a friend of Luther, said: "Trouble and perplexity drive me to prayer, and prayer drives away trouble and perplexity." So Hezekiah had been driven to prayer, and prayer had driven away not only death, but also the troubles of his throne.

Tears Also Answered. "I have heard thy prayer; I have seen thy tears: behold, I will heal thee. On the third day thou shalt go up into the house of the Lord." Nothing touches a mother's heart like a child's tear. And God is a Father as tender as any mother. He, too, sees our tears. When the heart is broken tears are but another form of prayer. They plead for us as the cry of the little child Moses plead for the sympathy of the Egyptian princess. When Pharaoh's daughter opened the ark of rushes, "behold, the babe wept. And she had compassion on him." The tears of that baby boy changed the world's history by melting the heart of a queenly woman, and gaining for the child a royal home. And like that baby boy, some of us have tears when we have no words. But to God our tears and heart-breaks are precious. He does not forget them. He answers them.

Tears are not only sad but noble also when their cause is great. Hezekiah wanted to live that "peace and truth might be in his days." A really noble man does not so much fear death as he longs to do good. When William Pitt the younger was dying, he sighed, saying, "My country! How I leave my country!"

The Returning Shadow and Healing Poul-tice. It was said above that Isaiah was both physician and teacher to the king. And now that he has brought the best of cheer to his pupil's mind he prescribes a medicine for his patient's body. The Divine providence and the household remedy were made to work together. Though we had miracles, we should still need doctors and medicines and wise and kindly nurses. Isaiah said, "Take a lump of figs. And they took and laid it on the boil and he recovered."

The sign granted to Hezekiah, for he seemed to think the news too good to be easily received, was that the shadow should go back ten degrees on the dial of Ahaz. God could work this miracle simply by curving the rays of light just as a man can throw a baseball in curves. If we put a straight stick in the water it seems broken at the surface of the water; but it is the rays of light that are broken, and not the stick. We cannot say that one miracle is greater than another, but it is right for us to understand them all as far as we can and to know that God may do great things in simple ways. This miracle inspired the prophet and helped the king to believe and soon he was well. His prayer was answered and the people rejoiced.

The King's Imprudence. The story of Hezekiah's sickness and his recovery reached as far as Babylon, and to congratulate him the king of Babylon, Berodach-baladan, sent him a letter and a present. On the surface this was a beautiful thing to do, but the messengers were spies and Hezekiah was "taken in" by them. He was so flattered that he showed them "all the house of his precious things, the silver and the gold, and the spices, and the precious ointment, and all the house of his armor and all that was found in his treasures." He kept back nothing. This was especially imprudent in those days when temple robbing was a business on the part of kings. And the vulgar display! How many kings of capital and favorites of fortune and newly rich people are given to that! The good king, through his vanity, was a blunderer in diplomacy and the rebuke of the far-sighted prophet was quick and keen.

"Whence came these men?" said the prophet. "From a far country, even from Babylon," said the king.

"What have they seen in thy house?"

"There is nothing in my treasures that I have not showed them."

Then the prophet sternly foretold the destruction of the city by the Babylonians, the plundering of its treasures, and even the captivity of the king's sons. And all was fulfilled in a little more than a hundred years.

Not Embittered but Made Better. The sickness, the answered prayer, the prophet's rebuke, made Hezekiah a better man. Some are embittered by sickness and misfortune. But Hezekiah became humble, and said that it was good that peace and truth should be in his days. And out of his gratitude to God he sang a hymn which Isaiah has treasured for us, in which he says,

"Behold, it was for my peace that I had great bitterness;
But Thou hast loved my soul from the pit of nothingness;
For Thou hast cast all my sins behind my back."

Quiz and Study. 1. What effect had faith and prayer in working the king's cure? 2. Is it wise to discard doctors and medicines? 3. Why was Isaiah so sure that the king would die and then presently so sure that he would live? 4. Did the king just simply want to live a few years longer or had he the nobler thought of the good of his kingdom? 5. Would it be pleasant to live with a date fixed for one's death?

Challenge Text. "I will take the cup of —, and call upon the name of the Lord. I will pay my — unto the Lord, now in the presence of all the people."—Psalm 116. (?)

Practical Thoughts. The prayer Hezekiah offered in his sickness was not his only prayer. He prayed when Sennacherib threatened the city and nation. He was a man of prayer, and as we look back on his history the greatest thing we can see in him, and the best thing we can say of him is just this, that prayer was the undercurrent of his life; it made him good, and helped him to become better.

Also his habit of prayer ranks him with great men. President Lincoln said, "I have been driven many times to my knees by the overwhelming conviction that I had nowhere else to go. My own wisdom, and that of all about me, seemed insufficient for the day."

THE CAPTIVITY OF JUDAH.

And in the fifth month, on the seventh day of the month, which is the nineteenth year of king Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon, came Nebuzaraden, captain of the guard, a servant of the king of Babylon, unto Jerusalem: And he

the house of the Lord, and the king's house, and all the houses of Jerusalem, and every great man's house burnt he with fire. And all the

But the captain of the guard left of the poor of the land to be vine-dressers and husbandmen. And the of brass that were in the house of the Lord, and the bases, and the brasen sea that was in the house of the Lord, did the Chaldees and carried the brass of them to Babylon.

THE SCRIPTURE LESSON IS II KINGS 25:1-12.

Prayer: Dear Heavenly Father, Help us so to live as a nation that there may come upon us no great calamity. May we have the godliness that leads to brotherliness, and the gentleness that ripens into greatness. In the law of love may we find discipleship toward Thy Son Jesus, and may we through centuries enjoy the salvation that springs from service. In the name of Jesus Christ, Amen.

O God, the heathen are come up into Thine inheritance;
Thy holy temple they have defiled;
They have laid Jerusalem in heaps;
The dead bodies of Thy servants they have given to be meat unto the fowls of the heaven,
The flesh of Thy saints unto the beasts of the earth.
Their blood they have shed like water round about Jerusalem;
And there was none to bury them.
—Psalm 79.

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, 586 B. C. Places, Jerusalem, the plains of Jericho, and Babylon. Persons, Zedekiah the king of Judah, Nebuchadnezzar the king of Babylon, Nebuzaradan captain of the guard of Nebuchadnezzar, a "remnant" enslaved, and "the poor of the land."

Scripture Setting: "Woe to the bloody city," Ezekiel 24. Destruction of Jerusalem foretold, Jeremiah 24. Parallel accounts of the destruction, 2 Chronicles 36:14-21, and Jeremiah 39. Lamentation over the city in ruins. Lam. 2:1-15.

Life and Conduct Setting: All the prophets trace the destruction of Judah to the sins of Judah. Carlyle found the same lesson in the French Revolution and its terrors. He says, "Through all time, if we read aright, sin was, and is, and will be the parent of misery."

God's justice must have its way when His mercy is mocked. The people would not hear their prophets calling them to repentance and to God. They stumbled willfully, blindly on, till they fell over the precipice.

The worship of God is a fountain of life. But the people of Judah preferred idolatry. "They hewed themselves out cisterns, broken cisterns, that could hold no water."

BROKEN COVENANTS.

Point of Contact. The national sins of the kingdom of Judah were followed by a great and terrible calamity, the utter destruction of the kingdom and its central city. As long as we have aged men among us who wear the grand army button we are not out from under the shadows of our own civil war. We nursed in our bosom a great evil, the sin of slavery, a crime against humanity. We paid the penalty in five awful years, the loss of half a million of brave men north and south, the expenditure of thousands of millions of dollars and a martyred president.

The Broken Covenants Were Three. 1. There was above all others the perpetual covenant between Jehovah and His people that they should worship and serve Him and that they should not turn aside to idols. Again and again the kings and people had reaffirmed this covenant and again and again they had violated it. They had turned their back on the altars of their fathers and in their gross idolatry had said "to a stock, Thou art my father, and to a stone, Thou hast brought me forth."

2. There was the covenant with the king of Babylon. Nebuchadnezzar had made Zedekiah king and Zedekiah had taken an oath of loyalty to the Babylonian monarch. Within eight years of this oath he sought an alliance with Pharaoh-Hophra, king of Egypt, and refused to pay tribute to Babylon. He "rebelled against Nebuchadnezzar by sending ambassadors into Egypt that they might give him horses and much people."

3. There was the covenant of liberty to their own enslaved brothers. During the dark days of the siege of Jerusalem the king, Zedekiah, under the influence of Jeremiah, proclaimed the freedom of all Hebrew slaves. The "princes" agreed and their man-servants and maid-servants were allowed to go free, according to the ancient law that none "should serve himself of a Jew, his brother." But presently Pharaoh-Hophra's advance drew away the besieging army. Thinking they were now safe, the fickle people at once violated this covenant also, and reclaimed their slaves. The rebuke of Jeremiah was fearful. In bitter sarcasm he cried, "Ye have not hearkened unto me in proclaiming liberty every one to his brother and every man to his neighbor. Behold, I proclaim a liberty to you, saith the Lord, a liberty to the sword, to the pestilence and to the famine. And I will make you to be removed into all the kingdoms of the earth."

The Boiling Pot. While Jeremiah was prophesying in Jerusalem, Ezekiel was living and prophesying among the captives already in Babylon, whither he had been carried in 597 B. C. Under the emblem of a rusted, seething pot of meat and bones he described the woes of the besieged and falling city. The figure is terrible, but not more so than the siege. "No horror was spared. The sepulchres were rifled for treasures; maidens and old men were slain. Princes were hanged up by the hand, and the faces of elders were dishonored; priest and prophet were slain in the sanctuary of the Lord till blood flowed like red wine over the desecrated floor." Palaces and temples were plundered and burned. Human flesh and offal served for food during the siege, and the emaciated survivors were led away into slavery.

"At The Head of Two Ways." In fulfillment of this prophecy Nebuchadnezzar is pictured by Ezekiel (21:21) as already on his way westward. He stands casting lots where the roads fork, one leading to Rabbah, the other to Jerusalem. Is it chance that decides which way he shall take? "He shakes the arrows; he consults the teraphim; he looks in the liver." By such hap-hazard will he decide one of the great events of history? We toss coppers over trifles. But this was more than a trifle. It was the Lord's will that Jerusalem should be rebuked. The Lord directed what Nebuchadnezzar dreamed was chance. Three arrows are shaken hard in a quiver. He draws out one and holds it high in his right hand. It is "the divination for Jerusalem," and the die is cast. We imagine the great king crying, "Forward—march!" and the caravan route to Jerusalem holds a terrible, conquering army.

Digging Out Through a Wall. By another emblem Ezekiel foretold the disgraceful flight of king Zedekiah. In the twelfth chapter of his prophecy he records this command from the Lord to himself: "Dig thou through the wall in their sight and carry out thereby." So the prophet packed his stuff as "stuff for captivity" and in the evening he digged through the wall with his hand and came out bearing his stuff on his shoulder. His face was covered so that he could not see the ground, signifying disguise, blindness and stumbling. No emblem could better show the shame and sorrow and blundering of king Zedekiah. Had he yielded he might have been saved, for so was the message of Jeremiah to him. But he hesitated and the awful siege went on. At last when they "made a breach in the wall" he sought to escape "by the gate betwixt the two walls; and he went out by the way of the plain." Disgraced, disguised and a fugitive, he was overtaken by the Babylonian soldiers and brought to Nebuchadnezzar at Riblah. There they slew his sons before him and then put his eyes out, and led him captive to Babylon. In his sad experience two prophecies, seemingly contradictory, were fulfilled. Jeremiah had said, "Thou shalt see the eyes of the king of Babylon." Ezekiel had said, "I will bring him to Babylon, the land of the Chaldeans; yet shall he not see it, though he shall die there." Nebuchadnezzar led away captive the fairest of the people, leaving the poorer and less capable to care for the land under officials appointed by himself.

The Burning of the House of the Lord. This was the climax of destruction. The siege ended in conflagration. The glorious temple that Solomon had built, the king's palaces and every great man's house, and all the houses of Jerusalem "burnt he with fire." The altar and the hearthstones of the people, their city walls and their market places, and even their streets—all were gone. They beat their breasts as they looked on their blackened homes and they turned away with torn hair and garments from smoking ruins as the Babylonian soldiers herded them together for the long march into a strange land. And the temple even! Hundreds of thousands of Jews had gazed with patriotic pride on that majestic building, with its lavish decorations of marble and gold, its sacred courts, its holy place and its holy of holies; there they had presented their sacrifices and had taught their children to pray, and there they had learned to trust Jehovah's power and protection. As they gazed back from distant hills on their weary march they saw nothing of all that recent glory but broken walls and crumbling marbles and smoking timbers. A wail went up from the hearts of the despairing people.

"They have laid Jerusalem in heaps;
The dead bodies of Thy servants they have given
To be meat to the fowls of heaven."

Quiz and Study. 1. Would loyalty to his oath on the part of king Zedekiah have averted this warfare and bloodshed and devastation? 2. When and how often had Nebuchadnezzar previously come against Jerusalem? 2 Kings, 23:36-24:1. Also 24:8-16. 3. Of what other awful siege in the history of Jerusalem does this one remind us?

Challenge Text: "The mercy of the Lord is from everlasting to — upon them that — Him, and His righteousness unto children's —; to such as keep His —, and to those that remember His — to do them." Psalm 103. (?)

Practical Thoughts. 1. Righteousness is a nation's best protection and sin is its greatest danger. 2. There is such a thing as honor under the hardest conditions. Zedekiah should have been true to his oath to Nebuchadnezzar till some better way could have been found than a secret alliance with Egypt. 3. God's teachers and prophets should be heard and heeded. Zedekiah recklessly disregarded the warnings of Jeremiah and Ezekiel.

"God sends His teachers with every age,
To every clime and every race of men,
With revelations fitted to their growth
And shape of mind."—Lowell.

DAVID'S CHARGE TO SOLOMON.

THE SCRIPTURE LESSON IS I CHRON. 28:1-10, 20, 21.

Prayer: Lord Jesus, Thou art the rightful Ruler of our lives. By creation and again by redemption Thou dost doubly own us.

We hail Thy power, as we have been won by Thy grace. Do with us, and by us, as it may seem best to Thee. May all our plans and ambitions be ever subordinate to Thy wise rule and will. Work in and by us to advance Thy kingdom and glorify Thyself. For Christ's sake. Amen.

An easy thing, O Power Divine,
To thank Thee for these gifts of Thine!
For summer's sunshine, winter's snow,
For hearts that kindle, thoughts that glow;
But when shall I attain to this—
To thank Thee for the things I miss?

—Thomas W. Higginson.

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, B. C. 1015. Place, Jerusalem. Persons, David and Solomon.

Scripture Setting: Conditions of Best Service. Basis of service, Deut. 6:4-9. Fruitful service, Psalms. 1. Strong service, Isa. 40:22-31. Diligent service, 2 Pet. 3:9-14. Happy service, Isa. 26:3-12. Full service, Rom. 12. Adaptive service, 1 Cor. 9:19-27. Secret of service, John 15:4-16.

Life and Conduct Setting: In this great disappointment of David, we are taught some important principles in Christian work. 1. The principle of co-operation. Note the nine influential classes he interests in the work, verse 1. 2. Mutual and frank counsel regarding the work, verse 2. 3. Submission to the will of God, even when he was prevented from his chosen work, verse 3. 4. Gratitude for past mercies, and public acknowledgment of them, verse 4. 5. Seeing God's hand in all things, verses 5-7. 6. A full and hearty obedience, and influencing all the people to the same, verse 8. 7. A worthy character and life, by which God is declared to others, verses 9, 10.

A GOOD FATHER'S ADVICE TO HIS SON.

The Best Work. Not everything that is right is best. David had been a man of war, and this was right, for God had ordered it. Even David himself would not claim that war and conquest were the best things. But David had it in his heart now to do one of these best things, namely, to build a house for God, where He might be worshiped and where He could specially reveal Himself to the people. We can scarcely think of any nobler task than that, for it means the distributing of many blessings to the world. The house of God stands for the book of God, and the day of God, and the Spirit of God, and the people of God. These five things or forces are the means by which God builds up His kingdom in the world; and if the house of God is lacking all the others would be prevented from doing their best work. David felt this, so he was anxious to build a fitting temple for the God of Heaven. He is called the "man after God's own heart," and it must be that he was sincere in this desire. He began to gather material for a magnificent temple. He even selected the place for it and engaged skilled workmen and had the promise of cedar and other wood from Hiram king of Tyre.

Aim for the Best. Some men are afraid of being too religious. What we need today is men who believe down deep in their souls what they profess. The world is tired and sick of sham. Let your whole heart be given up to God's service. Aim high.

God wants us all to be His ambassadors. It is a position higher than that of any monarch on earth to be a herald of the cross; but you must be filled with the Holy Spirit. A great many people are afraid to be filled with the Spirit of God —afraid of being called fanatics. You are not good for anything until the world considers you a fanatic. Fox said that every Quaker ought to shake the country ten miles around—D. L. Moody.

The Best Spirit. David had not gone far until God sent His prophet Nathan to talk with him about this house he wished to build. Did God tell David how to build the temple, as he had told Moses how to build the tabernacle? No, it was something very different, and it was a very great disappointment to David. God told him that he should not go ahead to build the temple, for he had been a man of war and it was not fitting that such a man should build a house that would stand for peace and prayer. God also told him that his son should build it. Now what does David do? Does he make other plans to use all these spoils of war and the other materials? No; he submits to God's will in the matter and we are not told that he was displeased in any way. That kind of a disappointment is a great test of character and David shows the very best spirit by his submission. He is the "man after God's own heart" and also after God's own will. Another way in which David showed a good spirit was by turning all over to Solomon and even gathering more material for him. This was the very best of advice, for it set an example of the best spirit.

How to Win When You Lose. "Do you remember the time I lost the race I'd been so sure of?" said Dick to Bob.

"I felt just as you do—disgusted—ready to throw the whole thing over. It was Professor Dana who saved me. He came up and shook hands and congratulated me. I can remember his words now. 'Field,' he said, 'you put up a good race, and next time you'll win; but you've won a bigger victory today, in proving yourself a good loser. I'm proud of you.' I wasn't, you know; I was black as night inside, but that made me think. Sometimes I've thought I didn't get anything in college so valuable as that sentence. It fits in everywhere."

This time Bob nodded and smiled approval.—Forward.

The Best Worker. That picture of war tells us something of David's life, and we would hardly think that he was the best person to build a temple of worship. But one of David's sons shall do this work, for the kingdom shall have a time of peace and quietness. His very name, Solomon, means "peaceful," and by nature he will be fitted for the great undertaking. David told Solomon all that he had planned and done, and urged him to go forward in the work. He also asked all the people to aid him by gifts, which they did. Solomon enters heartily into the plans of his father David. Together they work in fullest sympathy. Really it is almost as much David's temple as Solomon's, for he had done so much in advance. God purposed that Solomon should personally superintend the work, but he also gave David the credit for the thought of his heart and for all the preparatory work for it.

God believes in the motto, "To everyone his work," and by His providence He seeks to show each one what he should do and what he could do best. Everyone is best fitted for some certain work and he should not be satisfied until he finds what the work is and also the best way to do it. Here are some good rules for making the best worker.

"If I Were a Boy Again." In some of the papers of the late Dr. Harper, of the University of Chicago, was found a memorandum which read like this: "If I were a boy again, I would read every book that I could reach. I would strive to find out from good books how good men lived. If I were a boy again, I would cultivate new patience with the faults of others, and study my own with greater care. I would strive for humility. If I were a boy again, I would more and more cultivate the company of those older, whose graces of person and mind would help me on in my own work. I would always seek good company. If I were a boy again, I would study the Bible even more than I did. I would make it a mental companion. The Bible is a necessity for every boy. If I were a boy again, I would study the life and character of our Saviour persistently, that I might become more and more like unto Him."

The Best Helper. This seems to be a story of best things—the best work, the best spirit, the best worker, and now the best Helper. Are you thinking that that means David in Solomon's case? We have seen that David was a splendid helper to Solomon, both in the matter of advice and in the real contributions to the building Solomon was to erect. But Solomon's best Helper was not David, but rather David's God. Hear what God promised to and for Solomon: "I will give him rest from all his enemies." "I will give peace and quietness unto Israel in his days"; "he shall build an house for my name"; "he shall be my son and I will be his Father"; "I will establish the throne of his kingdom forever." Here are five great promises which cover every part of his life and reign and made by One who is able to fulfill them. The two last pictures show how God began fulfilling the promises. No one ever had a better start in life or a brighter outlook. There is one promise of Christ's which is worth more than all those five great promises; and it is made not merely to kings, but to all who are willing to receive it and believe it. It refers not only to this life and work here, but points to the future and assures the constant presence and aid of Jesus Christ, the great Helper. It is this: "Lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world."

Still Better to Follow Christ. There is a story told of a man who was once walking through a dangerous swamp in the night time and was startled to find that his little boy had followed him. Turning about, he said, "My son, don't you know that a misstep anywhere here might cost you your life?" To which the little fellow replied, "Father, I am stepping right in your foot-prints, then I know I will be all right."

Quiz and Study. 1. What bad son did David have, and what did he do? 2. What good son, and what did he do? 3. What are the five greatest Bible characters up to David's time? 4. Name some of the ten classes David influenced to build the temple. 5. What great desire of Moses was not granted, and why?

Challenge Text. "Whatsoever thy _____ findeth to do, do it with thy _____." Eccl. 9: (1)

Practical Thoughts. 1. Christian work requires above all else a right heart and spirit. 2. Nature, disposition, circumstances, surroundings, gifts, all help to determine our life work. 3. In greatest disappointments we may yet find greatest appointments. 4. The fullest co-operation necessitates much personal concession, and even sacrifice. 5. All believers are as a temple builded together in Christ, and for His glory. 6. For God's house, and for every other work, the best we have should be fully given. 7. Duty of fathers to counsel their children, and the duty of children to obey. 8. Everyone should find his place and his work in temple-building for God.

THE SCRIPTURE LESSON IS II CHRONICLES 14:1-15.

Prayer: Heavenly Father, We thank Thee for Thy ancient law and its penalties, for Thy love and its inspirations. Thy chastisements have been the chastisements of a Father's hand, and Thy severity is but the shadow cast by Thy kindness. Help us through the lessons of history, and more than all through the teachings of Jesus, to know Thee, whom to know is life eternal. In the name of Christ, Amen.

And the war-cry was forgotten.
Then was peace among the nations."

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, 955 to 914 B. C. According to some late authorities, 917 to 878 B. C. Places, Jerusalem and Mareshah. Persons, Asa king of Judah, Zerah the Ethiopian, an army of three hundred thousand out of Judah and two hundred and eighty thousand out of Benjamin.

Scripture Setting: Concluding record, 2 Chron. 15 and 16. Parallel record, 1 Kings 15:9-24. Poetic statements of the Hebrew faith in God's blessings on the righteous and His chastisements on the wicked, Psa. 1 and 34.

Life and Conduct Setting: Prosperity in peace and success in war were the rewards of king Asa while he lived in faith toward God.

The prophet Azariah (15:2-7) seized the moment of the king's victory to enforce upon him the conditions of continued prosperity. "The Lord is with you while you be with Him."

Both king and prophet saw clearly that loyalty to Jehovah meant war on idolatry, and quite heroically they overthrew the idols, and engaged in a great national season of sacrifice to God.

Good as he was king Asa lacked consistency in faith, and hence in conduct. He thought it safer to hire Benhadad against Baasha than to trust God. Thus blundering religiously he blundered politically.

GODLINESS AND GROWTH.

Ten Years of Peace. In those days of all but ceaseless warfare a respite of ten years was deemed worthy of note by the Hebrew historian. Ancient history is for the most part a record of battles and bloodshed and devastation. Wars were the rule; peace was the exception. Now peace is the rule and war is the exception. One of the most beneficent effects of Christianity is that it has militated against militarism. It has made wars fewer and their effects less terrible. Wars of extermination have entirely passed away among all civilized peoples and wars of conquest are out of keeping with the comity of nations. We have traveled a long way from the days when a short period of peace was a surprise. Under the reign of the Prince of Peace we are hastening to the time when "wars shall be no more." In our own land there has been but one war in a hundred and thirty years, and on the soil of England there has not been a battle for more than two hundred years.

Good Use of the Period of Peace. The vigorous and prudent king made use of these years in reforming the state religion and in preparing for war. The idol worship of Asa's people had become hereditary, for it began in the reign of Solomon. They were worshipping the gods that their fathers worshiped and that made it harder for the king to reform their religion. Besides, people do not readily give up their gods and sacrifices and priests and altars. Worship is too nearly related to life to be easily changed, and that is the reason that so many reformers are disliked and even persecuted. Asa's reformation must have been very unpopular with many of his people. But the good king began in a most heroic way. His own mother, the "queen-mother," was an idolater and had set up one of her gods in a grove. It was an Ashera and was something like a great post or trunk of a tree. Asa cut it down and stamped on it and took it down to the brook Kidron and burnt it to ashes and then "removed her from being queen." This was a brave way to rebuke the false religion of all the people. He proceeded to take away the images of the false gods and cut down their groves and destroy their altars. But he never fully succeeded, for it is said in chapter 15, verse 17, "the high places were not taken away out of Israel."

In addition to his religious reformation Asa used the period of peace in preparing for war. His people were warlike tribesmen, and if the religious movement made him unpopular this one would make him popular, and it was well for him that he carried the two side by side. The northern kingdom under Baasha was a continual menace, and Asa fortified the border cities. The numbers he enlisted in his army surprise us; they show the military enthusiasm of the people. There were 300,000 out of Judah and 280,000 out of Benjamin! That was great indeed for a land so small.

A Great Victory. Zerah the Ethiopian—perhaps Osorkon I, the second king of the twenty-second Egyptian dynasty—victorious in the Nile valley, began to overrun the region at the foot of the Judaean highlands. He had an army of "a thousand thousand, and three hundred chariots." The presence of such an army so near to his capital was a challenge that Asa could not ignore. Though the enemy were two to one, yet there was faith in Jehovah, and there was hope of victory. Not always is the battle to the strong or the race to the swift. At Agincourt sixty thousand French were defeated by twenty thousand Englishmen. At Marathon the Persians brought ten to one against the Greeks. Asa cried unto the Lord and said, "Lord, it is nothing with Thee to help whether with many or with them that have no power. Help us, O Lord, for we rest on Thee, and in Thy name we go against this multitude." The victory was decisive. It strengthened the good king mightily with his people, and under the instruction of the prophet Azariah he continued his war on the high places and the abominable idols.

"To Him That Hath Shall Be Given."

Success succeeds and prosperity prospers. The kingdom grew. When they saw that the Lord his God was with Asa they came to him out of Benjamin and Ephraim and Manasseh, and even strangers came. His policies in peace, his victories in war and his confidence in God made his land a home for refugees. They flocked "like doves to his windows." His policy of godliness made the growth and prosperity of his kingdom such that the people celebrated his fifteenth year by a great season of worship in which they sacrificed 700 oxen and 7,000 sheep. "And they made a covenant to seek the Lord God of their fathers with all their heart and with all their soul."

A Faith that Failed. We wonder that one who had been so helped of God could ever turn to lean on his own poor plans. Late in his life, in the thirty-sixth year of his reign, when Baasha, the king of Israel, came against him, Asa made an alliance with Benhadad, the king of Syria. He even robbed the house of God of its treasures of silver and gold, and gave them to the Syrian king for a bribe. He little thought, and little cared about the future of such a policy. Foreign help became at last the ruin of Judah. But Asa, like many another sinner, sold the future safety of his kingdom for a present mess of pottage. Benhadad came, and by attacking certain cities of Israel drew Baasha away from Judah.

The die was cast. The state was saved for a time, but a bait had been thrown to the foreign king, and God had been dishonored. The prophet Hanani came with a rebuke that was quick and sharp. "Thou hast done foolishly. From henceforth thou shalt have wars." Too much power and too many good things had made the king stubborn as well as foolish. He fell into a rage and put the prophet into prison.

And what an opportunity was lost by the fickle king! Would not God have delivered

Baasha and Benhadad also into his hand if he had been faithful? Ah, that lesson is hard to learn: the lesson of trust so finely spoken by the prophet; "the eyes of the Lord run to and fro through the whole earth to show Himself strong in behalf of them whose heart is perfect toward Him."

"Spices and Sweet Odors." During the last two years of his reign Asa was a sufferer. He had a disease in his feet and it was "exceeding great." We do not know what the nature of this disease was, but more interesting than that is the historian's censure. "He sought not unto the Lord but unto the physicians." We should not smile at the naive expression. We should remember that the physicians of that day were, aside from the Jewish prophets themselves, priestly magicians of idolatrous altars, similar to the medicine men among Indian and African tribes today. Their magic failed to cure the king, but it angered the prophets of his own people. It brought a shadow over his last days. In his death, however, the people remembered his goodness and forgot his weakness, and they buried him in state "in a new sepulcher in the city of David," amidst spices and sweet odors and "a very great burning."

Quiz and Study. What is meant by "fenced cities," and what great change is indicated by the fact that we have no such cities? 2. How is building a sign of prosperity, and how does prosperity conduce to building, and what is the relation of peace to both? 3. Today we have peace commissions, and arbitration tribunals, and international law. But what could Asa do when a great army came?

Challenge Text. "The angel of the Lord — round about them that — Him, and delivereth them. O taste, and see that the Lord is —. Blessed is the man that — in Him." Psalm 34: (9)

Practical Thoughts. Practical atheism is to trust something, or some one else, more than God. This is what Asa did when he turned to Benhadad for help against Baasha, and gave him silver and gold out of the treasures of the Lord's house.

Practical faith is to trust God and go forward even when the way is fenced up by mountains of difficulty. Face to face with an army greater than his own Asa prayed, and won the victory.

God's relation to us is like that of a friend. He can be friendly only while we are friendly. "If ye seek Him, He will be found of you; if ye forsake Him, He will forsake you."

King Asa's early years were his best, and his last years his worst. That is the saddest thing about him. Our lives should grow better with age, our faith stronger, our conduct more consistent, our friendships truer, and our prayers more earnest. The Apostle Paul said at last, "I have fought a good fight; I have kept the faith." Christ on the cross cried out grandly, "It is finished." That was His note of a victorious life.

THE SCRIPTURE LESSON IS II CHRONICLES 17:1-13.

Prayer: Heavenly Father, We thank Thee for those who have battled against idolatry and immorality and cruelty, and who have gained the world's greatest victories on its spiritual battlefields. We praise Thee for the teachers of men who lean more on truth and persuasion and love than on the shield and spear and sword. For the ancient synagogue and academy we praise Thee with fullness of heart, and yet more abundantly for our Christian churches and schools. Help us to teach much, and to fear not at all, and hasten the day when swords shall be beaten into plowshares and spears into pruning hooks. In Christ's name and Spirit, Amen.

"Lord, Thy word abideth,
And our footsteps guideth;

Light and joy receiveth.
O that we discerning
Its most holy learning,
Lord, may love and fear Thee,

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, Jehoshaphat's reign, 914 to 889 B. C. The teaching mission, about 912 B. C. (Some recent authorities give a much later date for the reign of Jehoshaphat, namely 876 to 851 B. C.) Places, Land of Judah and cities of Ephraim. Persons, Jehoshaphat and his teaching princes and Levites, vv 7 and 8.

Scripture Setting: Leading thought, the teaching of "the book of the law," and its power to remake a nation. Brief parallel account, 1 Kings 22:41-50. Ancient command to teach the law of the Lord, Deut. 6:1-12. Praise of the precepts of the Lord, Psalm 119:1-16.

Life and Conduct Setting: Jehoshaphat pursued the double policy of protection and education. He fortified the border cities and placed soldiers in them. He discovered that it was not enough to destroy idols, he must destroy superstition and the love of idols in the hearts of the people. So he sent out teachers of "the book of the law" through all the cities of Judah. He became a great and honored king, and his own people, and even the Philistines and the Arabians brought him presents. In later years his alliance with Ahab brought him under the censure of Hanani the prophet.

JUDAH'S KING AS PRECEPTOR.

The Real Reformer the Teacher. When Jehoshaphat came to the throne he found two conditions that needed his care. The border cities on the north that his father Asa had taken were weak and defenseless. He fortified them and put soldiers in them, thus protecting his kingdom.

Religiously there was a more serious condition. He saw that although the idols had been destroyed again and again, they were still there. He perceived that it was one thing to destroy an idol and quite another to change the heart of the man who worshiped it. As long as the people loved the idols and were ignorant of the law of the Lord, they would build again the old "high places" and bring back the images.

To us the king's greatness appears more in his effort to educate the people and so lift them above their gross idolatries, than in his enlistment of an army, the fortification of his cities and the collection of tribute from his own and weaker peoples. The historian presents this effort to enlighten the people of Judah as an incident. We hail it as the beginning of an age-long, beneficent policy. To educate is to remake. It is to remake the man himself in mind and heart and will and the only possible permanent reformation is in such remaking of men, one by one, till the whole state is remade. There is a Greek myth which tells how Sisyphus in Hades was condemned as a punishment to roll a huge stone to the top of a hill. It immediately rolled down and he had to roll it up again, and so keep on forever. This was the way with idolatry as long as the people did not know better. So king Jehoshaphat very early in his reign sent out his princes with priests and Levites "to teach in the cities of Judah."

The Power of the Word of God. "And they had the book of the law of the Lord with them." That is what they taught. It is a beautiful thing to see those princes and priests going about from city to city having in their hands rolls of the law of the Lord and gathering the people together and unrolling their "books of the law" and reading and explaining them. It was the beginning of synagogues and schools and our missionaries do very much the same way in India and China and Africa today.

And wherever the Bible is taught it makes people different. They think differently and love higher things and seek to do as God wills.

Prof. Green in his history of Puritan England tells us what a wonderful influence the Bible had when it was first translated and put in the churches. He says, "The Bible was as yet the one book which was familiar to every Englishman; and everywhere its words, as they fell on ears which custom had not deadened to their force and beauty, kindled a startling enthusiasm. Its effect, however dispassionately we may examine it, was simply amazing. The whole nation became a church."

It was in this way that the good king became a preceptor to his people. He felt what our national forefathers felt when they said, "We must educate or we must perish."

Education and Regeneration. Looked at closely the king was seeking more than the education, he was seeking the regeneration of his people. He wanted them not only to be better, but to be renewed in their relation to God. A striking parallel is found in the plans of our Saviour. After His resurrection, in His great commission, He said to His disciples, "Go teach all nations."

In Exeter Hall, London, an engine driver was called out before a crowded house of the Christian Railway Men's Association. He had not prepared a speech, but this is what he said: "Mr. Chairman, there are some people who say, legislate, legislate, legislate. So say we workingmen. Parliament can do a great deal for us, and the sooner it does it the better. There are others who say, educate, educate, educate. So say we workingmen, and we are thankful for what has been done of late for the working classes. But while we are ready to say legislate, legislate, legislate, and educate, educate, educate, we say above everything else, regenerate, regenerate, regenerate. Bring into the working class the might of the Spirit of God."

Policy of Conservation. The barest mention was made above to the fact that Jehoshaphat fortified the cities that his father had taken. He came to a kingdom made great and secure by the statesmanship of another. His wisdom is shown in that he conserved what came to his hand, and furthered the policy that had been successful. Those "fenced cities," that his father had thrown like a wall with towers along the borderland of the northern kingdom were a source of security and pride to him, and he honored his father by re-enforcing them and setting garrisons in them. He is a spendthrift who squanders his heritage, and he is unfaithful to his trust who fails to reap where his fathers have sown. He only honors the past who gathers out of it a better future.

A Mistake that Marred a Life. A single drop of certain dyes will stain a whole bucket of clear water. So there are lives marred by one mistake. In his later years Jehoshaphat visited the idolatrous king Ahab of the northern kingdom, and was feasted by him. "Ahab killed sheep and oxen for him in abundance, and for the people that were with him." That was the wily king's way of drawing Jehoshaphat into his quarrel against Ramoth-gilead. Jehoshaphat, like many another well treated foolish fellow, fell into the trap, and in spite of the warnings of the prophet Micaiah he went into the battle with Ahab. A ridiculous picture is drawn of his conduct in the battle. He had an army, according to the previous chapter, of more than a million men, and he went into the battle in his royal robes, while Ahab shrewdly went in dressed as a private soldier. The Syrians directed their attack against the first man they could find that looked like a king, and that man was Jehoshaphat, and he, the commander of a million men, cried out, shouting to the Syrian charioteers that he was not the king of Israel. Begging thus he got out with his life, and "returned to his house in peace to Jerusalem."

So there on the one hand is his great and loyal and wise life, and there beside it, marring it, is the fact that he went like a "silly bird" into Ahab's trap, and on the battle field he cringed and cried instead of fighting. At a later time he made a similar mistake in a commercial alliance with Ahaziah the king of Israel. But for the most part the people remembered his piety and loyalty to God, his teaching of the law, and the prosperity of his reign.

Loyalty and Prosperity. The books of Chronicles are written from the viewpoint of a definite theological conviction. The writer believed that Jehovah invariably blessed those who feared and served Him, and that He as invariably punished those who turned from Him to serve idols. Loyalty to God was therefore a synonym for patriotism, and its reward was national glory and gain.

In the long run this holds both of men and nations. It is only in the running of a short race that the wicked even seem to win. Somehow, somewhere, the way of the transgressor is hard; and somehow, ultimately the way of the just is as a shining light. The fruits of righteous sowing shall somewhere be garnered, and they that sow the wind shall reap the whirlwind. "The world was certainly not framed for the lasting convenience of hypocrites, libertines and oppressors." "Patience may be disappointed of her hope and Wisdom of her aim, but I have never yet seen folly fruitless of mischief, nor vice conclude but in calamity."

Walking in the commandments of the Lord king Jehoshaphat found the kingdom "established in his hand;" and presents pouring into his lap, "riches and honor in abundance;" and he enjoyed peace, for "the fear of the Lord fell on the nations round about him;" and "his heart was lifted up in the ways of the Lord."

Quiz and Study. 1. What was Jehoshaphat's first wise act on coming to the throne? 2. He had a great army, but what was a far better security to him? 3. What was his attitude toward idolatry? 4. What new and beneficent movement did he set on foot among the people looking to their permanent help?

Practical Thoughts. We cannot live as we should without our teachers and preachers of the Word of God. Alexander said, "I am indebted to my father for living, but to my teacher for living well." True religion inspires education. It was Jehoshaphat's love of God that prompted him to send out teachers to the people, and it is the Spirit of Christ that has built up our own great schools and colleges and universities. The church of God is the mother of education.

THE SCRIPTURE LESSON II CHRONICLES 20:1-30.

Prayer: Our Father in Heaven, May the nations learn in times of danger to trust Thee, and cease to lean upon the sword. Thy prophet spake, and the king's army was unused because not needed. In Christ we learn that Thou art the Father of all peoples, and that Thou art pleased when Thy children dwell together in peace.

May our rulers heed the prophets who today are pleading for peace, and planning for a sisterhood of nations answering to our Christ-given ideal of the brotherhood of man. For Jesus' sake, Amen.

"Out of my distress I called upon the Lord;
The Lord answered me and set me in a large place.

The Lord is on my side; I will not fear;

What can man do unto me?

The Lord is on my side among them that help me;
Therefore shall I see my desire upon them that hate me.

It is better to trust the Lord

Than to put confidence in man.

It is better to trust the Lord

Than to put confidence in princes."

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, 900 B. C. Places, The house of the Lord in Jerusalem, cliff of Ziz, and wilderness of Tekoa ten or eleven miles southeast of Jerusalem. Persons, Jehoshaphat the king, Jahaziel the prophet, musicians from among the Levites, the people of Jerusalem, and the army of the allies, namely Moabites, Ammonites, and Meunim.

Scripture Setting: The text presents one of God's mighty deliverances. Compare, deliverance from Egypt, Ex. 14:1-31. Destruction of Sennacherib's army, 2 Kings 19:20-37. Song of deliverance, Ex. 15:1-18. Hymn of the promised land, Psa. 105.

Life and Conduct Setting: Here is shown the power of national prayer, for Jehoshaphat and his people cast themselves on God. 1. The king set the example of prayer, standing before the people, and praying with them and for them. 2. He honors the great men of the past by appealing to God as the "God of our fathers." 3. Experience helps prayer. The king remembers God's providences and deliverances in the past, and appeals for present help to the same mighty Deliverer.

A GREAT VICTORY WITHOUT A BATTLE.

Point of Contact. The prophet bade Jehoshaphat have faith in God. That was worth more than a great army. We as modern nations may have that and more that Jehoshaphat could not have. In those tribal times he could not have faith in neighboring peoples for they were treacherous and warlike. But in these Christian times the nations have faith one in another. They are bound together by trade and travel and international law and courts of arbitration, and the acknowledged kingship of Christ. We need more both of faith in God and in one another, and less in standing armies and battle ships.

As most difficulties between men can be settled by faith and friendliness and prayer, so it is with nations. God will hear when His people, and their rulers, come to Him in real need and in real faith.

A Standing Army Unused. Jehoshaphat's army is listed at 1,160,000, the largest attributed to any king of the southern kingdom. Some of these may have been lost in the unfortunate campaign with Ahab, but his fighting force must still have been a commanding one. Not a shield was lifted, not a bow was bent, not a spear hurled. The time had come to re-enforce among the people of Judah a forgotten lesson of their fathers. Moses at the Red Sea had commanded the terrified people to "stand still and see the salvation of God." But the people were prone to put their trust "in chariots and in horses," and to forget the name of their God. The very greatness of Jehoshaphat's army made it a menace to faith in God, and the prophet sets it all aside; he does not reserve a Gideon's band from it. There are weapons of destruction best used when unused, and it was so with Judah's army.

"If drunk with sight of power we loose
Wild tongues that have not Thee in awe—
Such boasting as the Gentiles use
And lesser breeds without the law—
Lord God of Hosts, be with us yet,
Lest we forget—lest we forget."

The Policy of the Prophets. Faith, not force, was the policy of the prophets. Isaiah rebuked the people of his day for "refusing the waters of Shiloh that go softly," and seeking the help of Syria. Jeremiah cried out against their "gadding about to go down into Egypt." A simple life of peace and trust and independence was the prophetic ideal. And Jehovah, the Ancient of Days, was to be their "Shield and Defender." In the moment of crisis, when the army of the allies was at En-gedi, Jehoshaphat proclaimed a fast throughout all Judah, and when they had come together to seek the Lord, a strange prophet appeared, bringing a revival of the old political policy of faith in Jehovah. Jahaziel appealed to the king and his people in language that should have been familiar to them; "Be not afraid nor dismayed by reason of this great multitude; for the battle is not yours, but God's." Then he bade them go down the next day not to fight but to gather the spoils of war from the fields of a self-destroyed enemy. And they went down not with soldiers but with singers, children of the Kohathites and of the Korahites, making the way glorious with psalms, and chanting beforehand their paeans of victory and their processional odes.

The Nation Prays. A new court had been built to enlarge and beautify the temple areas, and thither the king called the nation to prayer. There he stood with them in a vast multitude, and there he prayed with them and for them. It was a great open-air meeting in the presence of God. And the king was never more kingly than when he bowed down thus in his royal robes, and acknowledged the higher Kingship of Jehovah, and his own feebleness without Him. The master of a million of men cried out to God, saying, "We have no might against this great company that cometh against us; neither know we what to do; but our eyes are upon Thee." Ah, then! They had learned the greatest lesson of life; they were looking to God. And now in few words, simple and sweet, the writer paints a most touching and beautiful picture; he says, "All Judah stood before the Lord, with their little ones, their wives, and their children." Every "little one" was an added prayer. Every loved one that we present to God is a thousand-fold plea to Him. Surely God would take note of those helpless wives and babes and little boys and girls.

A great statesman, whom every reader would know if I should name him, said, "I have not taken a drink of liquor for years. I have a reason. I have a boy."

The Prayer was Answered. While the hill-sides were ringing with the temple songs of Judah the valley of En-gedi was strewn with the slain. Like beasts in a cage the fierce tribes of Moab and Ammon and of Mount Seir had turned on one another; first Moab and Ammon against the inhabitants of Mount Seir, and then Moabites against Ammonites and Ammonites against Moabites, until "they were dead bodies, fallen to the earth." The people of Judah had gone out with praises; they returned laden with the spoils of a war fought by other hands than theirs. Such deliverance would remind them of the Exodus, when their fathers looked back and saw the bodies of the Egyptians washed ashore on the sands of the Red Sea. In the eyes of neighboring peoples the effect was greatly to enhance the prestige and security of the kingdom of Jehoshaphat.

The destruction of the Spanish Armada is in some ways a modern parallel. "It was in noble tone that England owed her debt to the storm that drove the Armada to its doom. On the medal that commemorated her triumph were graven the words, 'The Lord sent His wind and scattered them.' The pride of the conquerors was hushed before the sense of their mighty deliverance. It was not till England saw the broken host 'fly with a southerly wind to the north,' that she knew what a weight of fear she had borne for thirty years."

The Power of Faith. The writer of the Chronicles teaches, by this incident, such faith in God as leads to the non-resistance of man. Jehovah did not need the smiting of a man's puny hand to help Him. He could dispense with soldiers and swords, and all the poor accoutrements of war. The whole story is a protest against the support by the little state of Judah of the crushing weight of a great standing army. "It was shown conclusively that Judah could safely be contented not merely with an army smaller than those of its neighbors, but that she would be equally safe with no army at all."

But the world was not ready for this high teaching. Like other prophets Jahaziel outran the centuries. His lesson, however, is not lost. It rests in the heart of humanity wherever humanity seeks to be brotherly. Christ has re-enforced it with His doctrine of "the other cheek," and of the "putting up of the sword," and by His prayer on the cross.

Quiz and Study. 1. How did the people show their faith in the early morning after the king's prayer? v. 20. 2. What great promise did the king make to the people if they should believe in God and in His prophets? v. 20. 3. Instead of appointing captains of war whom did the king appoint, and what for? v. 21. 4. To whom did the people attribute the victory at last? v. 27. 5. In what public place did they gather to express their joy? v. 28. 6. What name do we give to such occasions?

Practical Thoughts. The story has good cheer for us as we bear our protest against political and social evils. "If we had to defend everything and fight everything in our own strength, the case would be perfectly different; but God says to us, 'Ye have this treasure in earthen vessels; the excellency of the power is of God and not of man.'" When Frederick Douglass expressed a doubt as to the issues of the struggle in the early sixties, Sojourner Truth impatiently cried out, "Frederick, Frederick, is God dead?"

National faith in God is worth more than an army. Without faith France had her revolution and her reign of terror. With faith little Switzerland has been a happy republic for many centuries.

Each one of us has his battle to fight. It is the battle of life. If we win we must pray. "He makes best time who marches on his knees."

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, 856 B. C. Place, Jerusalem. Persons, Joash or Jehoash the king, Jehoiada the high priest, the king's scribe, the high priest's officer, priests, Levites and workmen.

Scripture Setting: The lesson presents one step in a great movement, namely, the long struggle against idolatry and in favor of the pure worship of God. Parallel account, 2 Kings, 12:1-16. Later history of Joash, 2 Chron. 24:15-27. Usurpation of Athaliah, the mother of Joash, 2 Chron. 22:10-12. Revolution headed by Jehoiada, and crowning of Joash, 2 Chron. 23. Salutation to Jerusalem and the temple, a pilgrim song, Psalms. 122.

Life and Conduct Setting. In the following lesson Joash is represented as "the temple child" because he had been hidden in the temple and brought up in it.

Early associations have lasting influence. As a child he learned to love the temple, and later in life devoted himself to its restoration. The king's example was contagious. The people caught up his love for the temple, and gave joyfully and plentifully in answer to his calls. At last the king and people rejoiced in the beauty and perfection of their place of worship.

A REVIVAL AND A REFORMATION.

The Temple Child and his Love of the Temple. Joash was a "temple child." His grandmother, Athaliah, was the daughter of Ahab and Jezebel, and she inherited the ambition, the ferocity and the idolatry of her mother. Upon the death of her son, king Ahaziah, she seized the throne, and to make it secure in her hands she attempted to murder all "the seed royal." There was a little grandson of whom she seems to have known nothing. The good priest Jehoiada and his wife secreted this child in the vast courts and numerous chambers of the temple, which were seldom seen by the idolatrous queen, till he was seven years old. The secret of the existence of this child Joash, and of his temple training, was kept perfectly from the idolatrous queen, so that at his coronation the revolution on the one hand and her surprise on the other were complete. Hearing the sound of the silver trumpets that proclaimed his coronation she rushed into the temple courts, there to see her little grandson standing in royal robes, and to read in the faces of the priests and people her own doom. Just outside the temple precincts she fell by the sword, and in her death there passed from Hebrew history the dark race of Jezebel.

It was fitting that the temple child who had become the king of Judah should show his love to the temple by planning its renewal. Much grows old and worn in a century and a quarter. Besides there had been troublous times, and much idolatry and many faint hearts during those years. Jehoiada had taught the young king to love Jehovah, and from the larger love of the Lord sprang the lesser love of the Lord's house.

Perfunctory Priests. In his plans the king turned to the priests and Levites. He had a right to expect enthusiastic leadership from these ministers in holy things. But according to the account in the twelfth chapter of II Kings twenty-three years passed and nothing was done. The command had been, "see that ye hasten the matter." The chronicler significantly adds, "Howbeit the Levites hastened not." They had become mere functionaries. They waited at the altar for what there was in it, and were lazily willing to let well enough alone. It is among the sad features of religious history that in the hands of its ministers worship tends to become formal and stereotyped,

"Teily regular, splendidly null;
Dead perfection—no more."

In Hebrew history at least we must look to the prophets rather than to the priests for vitality and spirituality and progress. So indifferent and inactive were the priests that the king took the matter out of their hands. "The priests consented to receive no more money from the people, neither to repair the breaches of the house."

An Appeal to the People. The king's new plan created confidence and aroused latent enthusiasm. He had a chest made and placed at the gate of the temple. And he made a proclamation "through Judah and Jerusalem, to bring in to the Lord the collection that Moses the servant of the Lord laid upon Israel in the wilderness." Very likely the people distrusted the priests, and so had been withholding their gifts. When they saw a direct way to the work they rejoiced, and "brought in, and cast into the chest, until they had made an end." This laymen's movement resulted in a glad abundance. The money was counted in the king's office by the king's scribe and the high priest's servant, and again and again the chest was replaced and refilled till the amount was sufficient for the work.

"The House of God in his State." It is with a note of pride that the writer says, "And they set the house of God in his state, and strengthened it."

There is no better index of a town or city or nation than its churches. In southern Missouri there is a town called Liberal. Unbelievers tried to build it without churches, or Bibles, or preachers, or Sunday-schools. It got so bad that the railroad company threatened never to stop a train there. Decent people moved out. At last to save the town they had to build churches and invite preachers and open Sunday-schools.

An Illinois town of less than four thousand population has within recent years spent $55,000 on two new churches; $40,000 on a Young Men's Christian association building; and is now building another church at a cost of $50,000. The people pride themselves in this, and point to their churches as a sign of their prosperity. So the Hebrew pilgrims sang as they went up to Jerusalem to worship, "I was glad when they said unto me,

Let us go into the house of the Lord.
Our feet are standing within thy gates, O Jerusalem.

One Step in a Great Movement. The repairing of the temple is but one feature of a national movement of great significance. Baalism and kindred idolatries had threatened the very life of Judah and the worship of Jehovah. Under the statesmanlike administration of Jehoiada and the work of the prophets not named in the lesson the people were aroused and enlisted. There came a revival of the true and pure worship of Jehovah, and a reformation ensued. It was a religious and political necessity to dethrone Athaliah; to enthronate a son of David; to centralize the worship; to throw down the high places; to strengthen the order of the Levites; and to enrich and protect the ritual of the worship of God. It was a long process, and other centuries were required for its completion. But at last it gave the people a saving toughness, and united them in a grand state church, the earthen vessel of a treasure too precious to be lost, the treasure of ethical monotheism. From the days of Elijah to the days of Jehoiada unclean Baalism threatened the clean worship of Jehovah, and the world's best hope hung in the balance while the war waged. This lesson is one of the battlefields in that long warfare.

Greater than the King. It is not always the man in the limelight who does the work. There was a man who had saved the life of Joash, and protected him, and educated him, and crowned him, and inspired and directed him. As long as this man lived Joash did what was right, and he and his kingdom were prospered and blessed. No sooner had he passed away than the fickle king went wrong. He listened to the counsel of idolatrous princes, and forsook the glorious temple that he had so proudly repaired.

This good man was the priest Jehoiada, who died at a hundred and thirty years of age, and was so honored that they buried him in the city of David among the kings. All his life he was a prince and a power among men. He never wavered. From first to last he was loyal. He was not only priest to the souls of men, but also prime minister of his state and nation. Such men are God's best gifts. Through them He makes progress possible and history glorious. Through them he establishes righteousness, and makes truth as radiant as suns and stars that shine forever.

"Were a star quenched on high,
For ages would its light,
Still travelling downward through the sky,
Shine on our mortal sight.

"So when a great man dies,
For years beyond our ken,
The light he leaves behind him lies
Upon the paths of men."

Quiz and Study. 1. Who was the uncrowned ruler of Judah during the early years of Joash? 2. What is the significance of appealing to the people when the priests failed? 3. Did Joash succeed in ridding the land of the high places and the idols? 2 Kings 12:3. 4. What classes of workmen are named in the lesson? v. 12. 5. What compliment is paid to these workmen? 2 Kings 12:15.

Practical Thoughts. When the opportunity was afforded the people gave joyfully. All our worship should come from the heart and should be leavened with gladness. "If ye love me keep my commandments." Out of love we are privileged to sing and praise and pray; we should find pleasure in giving and in forgiving; in building and burden-bearing, in conflict and in victory. The religion of God and of Christ is the soul of optimism. "Rejoice in the Lord always; and again I say rejoice."

A dilapidated church building bespeaks a dilapidated faith. A traveler who has been through India says that Hinduism is dying; its temples are decaying and there is no enthusiasm to repair them. It is the picture of a dead religion that Byron paints in his "Siege of Corinth."

DEAN W. J. LHAMON.

And they withstood Uzziah the king, and said unto him, It appertaineth not unto thee, Uzziah, to unto the Lord, but to the priests the sons of Aaron, that are consecrated to burn incense: go out of the for thou hast trespassed; neither shall it be for thine honour from the Lord God.

Then Uzziah was wroth, and had to burn incense; and while he was wroth with the priests, the leprosy even rose up in his forehead before the in the house of the Lord, from beside the incense altar. And Azariah the chief and all the priests, looked upon him, and, behold, he was leprous in his forehead, and they thrust him from thence; yea, himself hasted also to go out, because the Lord had smitten him.

THE SCRIPTURE LESSON IS II CHRONICLES 26:16-23.

Prayer: Heavenly Father, We know that in the days when all is well with us we are most apt to forget Thee. Our hearts are prone to be lifted up by reason of our good health, or our fair looks, or our full store-houses, or our superior learning and culture. Help us therefore to be most on guard when the world seems best to us, and in days of prosperity may we be most thankful to Thee, remembering that Thou art the Giver of all good gifts, and that Thou dost desire Thy bounties to be received as blessings. In the name of Thy Son Jesus, Amen.

"But man, proud man,
Dressed in a little brief authority,
Most ignorant of what he's most assur'd,
His glassy essence, like an angry ape,
Plays such fantastic tricks before high Heaven,
As make the angels weep."

—Shakespeare.

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting. Time, somewhere between 765 and 758 B. C. Place, Jerusalem. Persons, Uzziah the king of Judah, Azariah the priest, eighty priests, and Jotham the king's son.

Scripture Setting. Parallel record, very brief, 2 Kings 14:21-22. The pride of Nebuchadnezzar humbled, Daniel 4:1-37. The pride of Belshazzar humbled, Daniel 5:1-31. The pride and the calamity of Sennacherib, 2 Chron. 32:1-23. The Savior's parable of humility, Luke 14:7-11.

Life and Conduct Setting. Uzziah's reign of fifty-two years is the longest with one exception of any of the kings of Judah. He was successful in war, vv. 6-8. He was devoted to the husbandry of cattle, v. 10. He made Judaea with Jerusalem as its center a great military power and employed "cunning" men to invent new weapons of war, vv. 11-15. Success set its crown on all that he did. Uzziah was a worshiper of Jehovah, and in his earlier years came under the influence of a godly man by the name of Zechariah. It was in his later years that he became haughty and sacrilegious and fell a victim to pride "which eats up itself."

A ROYAL OUTCAST.

Point of Contact. We all know of the impeachment of Andrew Johnson, the seventeenth president of the United States, and the successor of Abraham Lincoln. Mr. Johnson was acquitted by a very close vote on the part of the United States senate. Had he not been acquitted we can imagine him cast aside by his party and his country, and going away to live and die in shame, with the brand of his country on him. We are today glad that it was not so.

There is a sense in which Uzziah's leprosy was an impeachment. The writer of Chronicles presents it as the Lord's impeachment because of his pride and his sin. He went away in shame, and lived in a separate house, and died of a terrible disease. He could no more visit the temple or go abroad among the people. He was a royal outcast.

A Promising Character. King Uzziah came to the throne of Judah at an unpromising age. He was only sixteen years old. His father, Amaziah, had foolishly gone out to war with the northern kingdom, and had been defeated, and four hundred cubits of the walls of Jerusalem had been broken down, and the temple had been plundered, and its treasures carried to Samaria. Following this the people conspired against him, and he was slain at Lackish.

However, there was enthusiasm over the royal boy, for it is said, "all the people of Judah took Uzziah and made him king in the room of his father Amaziah."

It is well for a king so young and inexperienced to have the guidance of some one older and wiser, just as Joash, who was only seven when he began to reign, found himself under the care of the wise priest Jehoiada. There is just a hint given us that Uzziah had such a counsellor. It is said, "He sought God in the days of Zechariah, who had understanding in the visions of God." This man was one of the great company of the unknown and unheralded moulders of men; quiet teachers and prophets and priests, who do their work behind the scenes, and are real makers of history. It was in his days that Uzziah "sought God," and "did what was right in the sight of the Lord." There is no better promise of a strong and brave life than that a young man should admire the spirit and follow the instructions of such a teacher. It is teachableness that leads to the kingdom of greatness.

A Successful Reign. King Uzziah prospered greatly in war and in husbandry. It is much to say that a king is successful both in the arts of war and the arts of peace.

He conquered these old and troublesome enemies of his people, the Philistines, breaking down their city walls, and building other cities as he pleased; he overcame certain Arabians, and the people of Gur-baal, a place now unknown, and carried his victorious arms as far as Egypt. His fame was such that the Ammonites paid tribute to him, thus acknowledging his lordship seemingly without a battle. He had a great army for so small a kingdom. There were three hundred seven thousand and five hundred men in it, and he encouraged the invention of new arms and new ways of fighting. He built towers on the walls of Jerusalem, and put on them great machines for shooting arrows and hurling stones. The Romans called these rude, primitive machines catapults, and Uzziah is the first king of Judah that adopted them. It helped to make him famous and dreadful. "His name spread far abroad; for he was marvellously helped till he was strong," says the chronicler.

"He loved husbandry." And we love to hear that said of him, for we live in a land of wonderful fields and vineyards and orchards, and we know how much of wealth and prosperity there is in great crops and great herds of stock. Palestine has very fertile valleys and hills and mountain sides, and the vineyards that Uzziah planted, and the wells that he digged, and the towers of defense that he built must have helped the people mightily, and added greatly to their wealth. It is hard to realize what a full half century of such a reign must have meant to the people and king of Judah. It must have been to them what the reign of Queen Elizabeth was to the people of England in the sixteenth century, and what the reign of Queen Victoria was in the nineteenth.

Pride, Rage, Ruin. "But when he was strong his heart was lifted up to his destruction." We have seen trees in full leaf and casting great shadows suddenly broken by a storm, and then we have seen how the worms had eaten into their hearts. Outwardly the king was victorious and rich; inwardly his character was eaten out by pride. Isaiah, who began his prophecies in the last days of Uzziah, describes the people as being drunken and luxurious, and as mocking at righteousness, and as a vineyard bearing wild grapes, and "sinning as it were with a cart rope." In the eyes of such a people king Uzziah, victorious, rich, must have seemed on the upgrade and near the very top of glory, when suddenly there came like a storm the occasion that revealed his inner, downgrade life. He became so haughty and conceited that nothing was sacred to him. He even violated the law of the temple by going in to burn incense, an act of worship that should have been performed only by consecrated priests, "the sons of Aaron."

The Bible presents to us other examples of men who became rich and great and foolish. Solomon's wealth was fabulous. He received in one year eighteen millions of dollars' worth of gold; he built great palaces, and a temple on which he spent money by millions; his merchantmen traversed the seas, and his fame reached to Assyria and Egypt and Ethiopia. But he fell at last into idolatry, ensnared by his foreign wives.

Nebuchadnezzar, victorious, rich, and a mighty builder, walked proudly amidst his palaces and hanging gardens, saying, "Is not this great Babylon that I have built by the might of my power, and for the honor of my majesty?" Suddenly, "while the word was in his mouth," the kingdom was taken from him; he became insane, and was driven out to live like a beast in the fields.

"Pride goeth before destruction, and a haughty spirit before a fall." There is the fable of a frog which tried to be as big as an ox, and swelled and swelled himself till he burst and fell "stone dead." Napoleon's ambition got the better of him. Thomas Paine's brilliancy made him an infidel. The rich man's bursting barns robbed him of his soul.

Eighty brave priests with Azariah as their leader stood to rebuke the sacrilegious king and he became enraged. They said to him, "Go out of the sanctuary, for thou hast trespassed." But their rebuke was not needed. While they spoke the whiteness of leprosy rose in his forehead, right where his proud crown had rested, and in his terror he rushed out of the temple, nevermore to be a man among men.

No sadder picture can be drawn than that of the lonely king, in "a several house," slowly dying of a wasting disease; brooding in memory over his better days, and not forgetting that awful hour of temple desecration and of fierce anger at the priests of his God. And to crown his sorrow, he must have known, being a leper, that he could not be buried with his royal fathers, but in a field aside from them. It is more terrible than the rebuke of Nebuchadnezzar's pride, for he was permitted to repent and return to his kingdom. But from king Uzziah's leprosy and loneliness there was no return. The inscription that Dante places on the gate of hell is this:

"All hope abandon, ye who enter here."

Quiz and Study. 1. Were the conditions favorable to a successful reign when Uzziah came to the throne? 2. How large an influence may we attribute to the young king's counsellor, Zechariah? 3. From the viewpoint of his long and outwardly prosperous reign should we count Uzziah as among the greatest kings of Judah? 4. What in general is the picture that Isaiah draws of the kingdom in the last years of Uzziah? Isaiah, 5. 5. Does there always lurk spiritual danger in material prosperity?

Practical Thought. In what is known as the pearl of parables the prodigal son is represented as going away from his father in pride and returning in prayer. "Father, I have sinned against Heaven and in thy sight. Make me as one of thy hired servants."

THE SCRIPTURE LESSON IS II CHRONICLES 29:1-19.

Prayer: Our Heavenly Father, We thank Thee for the kings and prophets who have been great enough to know Thy will and to do it; who have turned away from uncleanness, and brought order out of disorder, light out of darkness, and hope out of despair. We ask Thee for singleness of heart that we too may worship Thee in temples made clean by the sprinkling of the blood of Jesus, even in our own bodies and lives, cleansed from sin and made fit dwelling places for the Holy Spirit. In the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, 726 B. C. Place, Jerusalem. Persons, Hezekiah the king of Judah, priests, Levites, and rulers of the city.

Scripture Setting: Brief parallel account, 2 Kings 18:1-7. For prophetic description of conditions at the time of Hezekiah's accession, Isaiah 5. Evil and idolatrous reign of Ahaz, 2 Chron. 28.

Life and Conduct Setting: Conditions had become dreadful when Hezekiah came to the throne, and he immediately sought a remedy. He began at the center of the religious, and therefore also of the political, life of the nation, namely the temple and the temple worship. His speech to the negligent priests and Levites, vv. 5-11, is in true prophetic and kingly style, showing a wise analysis of the national trouble and its remedy. The heartiness with which the priests and Levites entered on the work, the filthiness of the temple and its cleansing, and the restoration of the sacred vessels, are vividly described in the remainder of the lesson.

"Wash you; make you clean; put away the evil of your doings from before mine eyes; cease to do evil; learn to do well. Seek judgment, relieve the oppressed, judge the fatherless, plead for the widow. Come now, and let us reason together saith the Lord; though your sins be as scarlet they shall be as white as snow; though they be red like crimson; they shall be as wool. If ye be willing and obedient ye shall eat the good of the land; but if ye refuse and rebel, ye shall be devoured with the sword. For the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it." Isaiah 1;16-20.

THE KING OF THE OPEN TEMPLE.

Point of Contact. We are so blessed in this land of religious liberty and Christian graces that comparison with such new life and joy as must have come to the hearts of many a saintly Jew when Hezekiah reopened the temple are hard to find. But in the great island of Madagascar there was a recent incident that may help us. For many years the native Christians have been persecuted, first by their own cruel rulers, and later by French officials. Recently a new governor general was appointed by France, and when a petty official forbade the native Christians to rebuild a ruined church, this new and more generous ruler promptly issued an order that the people must not be interfered with in their work of church erection. Now therefore, those good people have the joy and enthusiasm that come of building and rebuilding their houses of holy worship.

Open Doors Once More. It is a sad picture we have here of the temple closed and deserted. That temple was the religious and political center of the nation, and to close it was a blow at once to both the church and state. But Ahaz had become so mad with idolatry that he cut to pieces the vessels of the temple, closed its doors, and built altars "in every corner of Jerusalem, and in every several city of Judah." He surfeited in idolatry.

And now it is delightful to see king Hezekiah, in the first year of his reign, in the ardor and glory of his young manhood, throwing open those doors, as though he were drawing near to the God of his fathers, and inviting Jehovah to return and dwell again among the people. "Sixteen years of licensed idolatry must have fostered all that was vile in the country, and have put wicked men in authority, and created numerous vested interests connected by close ties with idolatry, notably the priests of all the altars and high places." Meanwhile the priests of God and the Levites had been driven away from the polluted temple and scattered. The opening of the temple doors was the sign of a great change, a reversal of the national policy, a reformation, a war on idolatry and its evils, and a new attitude toward God. It was a brave, strong, manly deed on the part of the king. It was better than the winning of a battle. It was a victory, and the beginning of a godly and victorious reign.

A Sermon from the Throne. In one speech Hezekiah made of his throne a pulpit and of his pulpit a throne. It is both an edict and a sermon that we have in verses five to eleven of the lesson. The king was the preacher. The place was the open space east of the temple. The audience was made up of the priests and Levites, scattered and discouraged by Ahaz, and now recalled. The theme concerned matters of state, of the church, of the good of the people, and the pleasure of God.

The royal preacher speaks in commanding, kingly style. He says, "Hear me, ye Levites, sanctify now yourselves, and sanctify the house of the Lord God of your fathers, and carry forth the filthiness out of the holy place." This was the beginning, following which he reminds them of the evils and idolatries that cursed the land, the wrath of the Lord, the "hissings" of other nations, and the ravages of war. He brings his oration to its conclusion with a declaration and an exhortation. He declares that it is in his heart to make a covenant with God, and he exhorts his audience not to be negligent in their duties. Virtually he said to them, "Do it now."

A House Made Fit for a Heavenly Guest. There were months of preparation in England for the coronation of King George the Fifth. No pains were spared to make his palaces and courts and cathedrals beautiful and attractive. The nation was thrilled by the coming of the king to his throne and his crown. It is a very true and noble sentiment that prepares thus for a royal guest. How much more should His own house be prepared for the return and the residence of Jehovah! Hezekiah felt that he could not pray the Lord to return to His people till he had cleansed the place of His abode.

Sixteen years of neglect in a place where there had been so many sacrifices of oxen and rams and lambs must have left the great house in a frightful condition. The words "uncleanness," and even "filthiness," are used in describing it. They began in the "inner part of the house," and they were eight days in reaching the "porch." Companies of Levites carried the refuse far down to the brook Kidron, and it was sixteen days before "they made an end." Then they came to the king and told how they had cleansed the temple and the altar and the table of shewbread and the vessels. How different that great building must have seemed after those sixteen days! Now it was a thing of beauty with its shining walls and white marble floors, its burnished altars and tables, its golden and silver vessels washed and glowing, and its marble porches dazzling white once more. That cleansed temple is an emblem of the "clean hands and pure hearts" all should have who invite God to dwell with them.

A Royal Rededication. The king again appeared before the open doors, and within the courts that were cleansed, this time accompanied by the rulers of the city, and the priests and Levites. And they offered for a sin offering four times seven beasts, sprinkling the blood on the altar. The large brotherly heart of the king is shown in that he commanded this sacrifice as an atonement, not for Judah only, but for "all Israel."

And the whole congregation worshipped, bowing low, and they had a great orchestra and chorus, "and the trumpeters sounded and the singers sang." "They sang praises with gladness, and they bowed their heads and worshipped." To crown the day of this rededication they brought with a free heart thank offerings and peace offerings to the number of six hundred oxen and three thousand sheep!

An Index of the King's Life. This initial act is an index of Hezekiah's life and reign. Through all his days the temple doors stood open inviting the people to worship, and speaking of the presence of Jehovah. And we know that in one dreadful hour the good king himself passed through those open doors to lay a threatening letter before the Lord and pray for the salvation of his people, and that the Lord heard his prayer and answered it marvellously. He threw open not only the doors of the temple but also the doors of his heart to Jehovah, the God of his fathers. When in the days of David they dedicated Jerusalem, they stood before her walls and sang:

"Lift up your heads, O ye gates,
Even lift them ye everlasting doors,
And the King of glory shall come in."

Ah! Such a beautiful "open-door policy." We all love the king of Judah who stands thus inviting the King of glory.

Quiz and Study. 1. When and by whom was the temple built? 2 Chron. 3, 4, 5. 2. What had been the action of Ahaz in regard to the temple? 3. What does the closing of the temple indicate as to the religious condition of the people at large? 4. How many kinds of offerings are named in the lesson? 5. What is the Jewish, and what the Christian meaning of sacrifice? 6. What great prophet helped Hezekiah, and guided and inspired him? 7. Can you think of a better indication of character than one's attitude toward the church?

Practical Thoughts. In the New Testament we ourselves are called "temples of God," and our bodies "temples of the Holy Spirit." Some of us have lived closed lives to God, and our hearts need cleansing that the Holy Spirit may dwell in them. He who loves sin and keeps it in his heart, and does unholy things, is like the closed and filthy temple. He must repent, and be forgiven, and cleansed by Christ, before he can "glorify God."

A clean life is more beautiful even than a clean temple.

Hezekiah and his people came to the clean temple with sacrifices and music and joy. True religion brings true joy. Jesus says, "My yoke is easy and my burden is light."

As Hezekiah was "the king of the open doors," so we should be people of open, royal hearts for Christ and His church.

DEAN W. J. LHAMON.

And the children of Israel that were present at Jerusalem, kept the of unleavened bread seven days with great gladness: and the Levites and the priests the Lord day by day, singing with loud instruments unto the Lord.

And Hezekiah spake comfortably unto all the Levites that taught the good knowledge of the Lord: and they did eat throughout the feast seven days, offering peace and making confession to the Lord God of their fathers.

And the whole assembly took counsel to keep other seven days: and they kept other seven days with gladness.

For Hezekiah king of Judah did give to the congregation a thousand and seven thousand and the princes gave to the congregation a thousand bullocks and ten thousand sheep: and a great number of priests sanctified themselves.

THE SCRIPTURE LESSON IS II CHRONICLES 30:1-27.

Prayer: Dear Heavenly Father, Wilt Thou help us to remember that Christ, our passover, is sacrificed for us, and wilt Thou help us to keep the feast with the unleavened bread of sincerity and truth. May we know that the spirit of our worship is first, and that the forms of it are secondary. Though all other rules should perish, may we never fail in the law of love; and living, and laboring, and worshipping according to that law, may we be forever acceptable to Thee. In the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

"Who shall ascend into the hill of the Lord?
And who shall stand in His holy place?
He that hath clean hands and a pure heart;
Who hath not lifted up his soul unto vanity,
Nor sworn deceitfully.
He shall receive the blessing from the Lord,
And righteousness from the God of his salvation"

—Psalm 24.

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, 726 B. C. Place, Jerusalem. Persons, Hezekiah the king of Judah, priests, Levites, and a great throng of worshippers from the kingdoms both of Israel and Judah.

Scripture Setting: This feast follows immediately upon the cleansing of the neglected temple, Chap. 29. Original command to keep the passover, Ex. 13:1-16, Deut. 16:1-8. Song of pilgrims going up to Jerusalem, Psalm 125.

Life and Conduct Setting: During the first month of the initial year of his reign Hezekiah cleansed the temple and reopened it. According to the law the feast should have been kept in that month. But as this was impossible and as the king and people, now newly awakened religiously, did not feel that they could omit this great memorial feast entirely, they decided to keep it in the second month.

In breadth of brotherliness they sought to make it a feast for Israel as well as Judah, that is, for all the Hebrew race.

In their enthusiasm they doubled the days of the feast, making it fourteen instead of seven, another irregularity sanctioned of God because of the spirit in which it was done. These two great deeds, the cleansing of the temple and the keeping of the feast in the very beginning of his reign, were strokes both of piety and statesmanship on the part of the young king.

A KING OF BREADTH AND BROTHERLINESS.

Point of Contact. In our great missionary conventions we frequently decorate our halls with the flags of many nations. Side by side may be seen our own "Old Glory," as we fondly call her, and Great Britain's Union Jack, and China's Yellow Dragon, and the sunrise symbol of Japan, and the Persian Lion, and the Turkish Crescent, and many another from many an island, state and continent. It is a beautiful expression of breadth and brotherliness, and of that deeper spirit of loyalty to the one God and Father of all, "Who is over all, and through all, and in all," which must at last unite the nations. It is something of this spirit that Hezekiah has when he invites the people of the northern kingdom to unite with his own people in the passover feast. It is a new note of brotherliness after many generations of ill will.

A Royal Invitation. "Hezekiah sent to all Israel and Judah, and wrote letters also to Ephraim and Manasseh, that they should come to the house of the Lord at Jerusalem to keep the passover unto the Lord God of Israel." It is well to note this whole text for it is so full of breadth and brotherliness and devotion. He is a magnanimous man who can forget old feuds, and long cherished prejudices, and bitter quarrels, in an effort just simply to worship God. This was a royal invitation because it came from the king, but better still because it is so wholehearted, and unselfish, and inclusive. It is like the bands of the blue and the gray on opposite sides of the river, for a while taunting each other with "Dixie" and "The Star Spangled Banner," but at last uniting their music, and making the night memorable, with the melody of "Home, Sweet Home."

King and Congregation Pleased. The law was that the passover should be kept in the first month. But that was impossible. The priests were not sanctified and their purification would require seven days. The people were not assembled and could not be in so short a time. In addition to all else, to hold a passover in the neglected and filthy temple was not to be thought of. They resorted to what we should call case law, and found in the book of Numbers, the ninth chapter, an instance of certain men who could not keep the feast in the first month, and were allowed by Moses to keep it the second month. Acting on this the king and people decided that irregularity in worship was better than no worship at all, and were pleased to be able to keep the feast in the second month. There is a rigid and deadly way of keeping religious laws and forms and ceremonies, and there is a life-giving way of modifying them. It is the spirit that gives life; the mere letter kills. The Savior himself, instead of sacrificing a ram or a lamb in the temple, took a scourge of cords and drove out the flocks of sacrificial beasts, and rebuked the extortionate tradesmen, and overthrew their money tables, and declared that they had made the place "a den of thieves." Today we can see that the Savior's lash for thieves was more religious than the sacrifice of a bullock would have been. And Hezekiah was broad enough to see that the soul of religion lies deeper than the mere laws and forms that gather around it. He was pleased to be irregular for the greater good.

Not as the Fathers. Ordinarily we are told to follow the examples of our fathers. But Hezekiah asks the people of Israel and Judah not to be like their fathers. Sometimes the examples of the fathers are the best ones not to follow. If the fathers are proud and stubborn and idolatrous; if they are drunken and profane and dissipated; if they close their eyes to truth, and set themselves against progress; if they make a mockery of virtue, and laugh at sincerity, and sneer at piety and prayer; if they belittle Christ and His church, and the Bible and God, it is well not to follow their example. When the fathers fall into the ditch they are a warning to us rather than an example.

If Paul had been like his fathers he could not have been an Apostle, for they were Pharisees. If Luther had been like his fathers he could not have been a reformer. If George Washington had been like his fathers in Great Britain he never could have been the father of our country. Progress means that we shall save what is good in our fathers, imitate their virtues, avoid their mistakes, and go forward where they leave off. It is all right for the boy in kilts to believe just like his father does, if his father is at all sane and good. But when he is a man he should have a faith of his own, and be able to give a reason for it.

Crude Mockery of a Kingly Welcome.

King Hezekiah sent his letters of invitation by special carriers through the country and cities of the northern kingdom, bidding them to turn again to the Lord, and to their brethren and children; reminding them that God was waiting for them in grace and mercy, and that He would not turn from them if they would return to Him. But for the most part they were so crude and sunken in idolatry that they laughed at the message and mocked the messengers.

But there were noble and devout people among those tribes, who humbled themselves and accepted the kingly welcome to Jerusalem, and there God gave them one heart to worship with their brethren from whom they had been long separated. Maybe it was at this time that the 133rd Psalm was written, beginning,

Behold how good and pleasant it is
For brethren to dwell together in unity.

Truth Fighting Falsehood. To love the good is to hate the evil. The more one devotes himself to truth the more he opposes falsehood. When the people grew enthusiastic in this great passover worship they began to make war on the idols that were yet in Jerusalem, and they took them and their altars, and cast them contemptuously into the brook Kidron. As the priests and Levites had cleansed the temple so now the people cleansed the city.

A Wonderful Way of Giving. There is another indication of king Hezekiah's breadth and brotherliness. He had a wonderful way of giving to support the temple service. He set an example for all his people. He gave a thousand bullocks and seven thousand sheep. The princes, inspired by his example, gave a thousand bullocks and ten thousand sheep. Such was the generosity and enthusiasm that they were enabled to continue the feast another seven days with prolonged gladness. Perhaps the guests that the king had invited from the far northern tribes were unable to bring their sacrifices with them. In that case Hezekiah and his people entertained them royally by their princely giving.

Answered Prayers of a Right-hearted Ruler. There were many of the invited guests who had not prepared themselves for the feast according to the Mosaic law for cleansing. "They did eat the passover otherwise than as it was written." For these guests the generous king prayed this short, beautiful, heart-felt prayer: "The good Lord pardon every one that prepareth his heart to seek God, the Lord God of his fathers, though he be not cleansed according to the purification of the sanctuary." The Lord answered this prayer and received the worship of those who, having the heart preparation, yet lacked the legal preparation for the worship.

Nothing in all his reign speaks so much for the king's great and true heart as the incidents of this passover. We love him when we see him so brotherly toward all, so generous in his giving, so fervent in his prayers, so like a child in simplicity, and so like a hero in his reformation of religion. "When the heart goes before, like a lamp, and illumines the pathway, many things are made clear that else lie hidden in darkness."

Quiz and Study. 1. Of what great event was the passover a memorial? 2. In what month was it observed according to the law? 3. Was Hezekiah justified in holding it a month later, and if so why? 4. What was the effect of the invitation to the people of the northern kingdom? 5. Is religion primarily a matter of laws and forms or of the heart and life?

Practical Thought. As long as there was one idol left in Jerusalem the city was not cleansed from idolatry. When Madagascar became Christian the Hovas took down their idols and burned them. But the queen tried to play a double role. She kept a little black idol about three inches long, and wore it as an amulet about her neck. It was her darling idol—her pet sin. At last she came to the missionaries and gave it up, for she found that she could not be a Christian as long as she cherished that little black image. It is so with our sins. If we would be right with God we must not keep a single one of them.

THE SCRIPTURE LESSON IS II CHRONICLES 33:1-16.

Prayer: Dear Heavenly Father, We praise Thee for this, that when men have gone astray they may return to Thee. We thank Thee that in every age there has come the call to repentance, and there has been granted the promise of forgiveness, and therefore of reconciliation and restoration. Thou art a Father, and Thou dost look for Thy returning children, and run to meet them, and Thou dost kiss them, and present them anew with Thy robe and ring, and Thou dost make feasts for them, and bring them forever into the old home. And we thank Thee for Christ, who together with Thy prophets, has revealed this to us. In His name. Amen.

"True repentance consists in the heart being broken for sin, and broken from sin. Some often repent, yet never reform. They resemble a man travelling in a dangerous path, who frequently starts and stops, yet never turns back."—Thorn-top.

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, his captivity, 680 to 678 B. C. Places, Jerusalem and Babylon. Persons, Manasseh the king of Judah, the king of Assyria and his army, and the people of Judah.

Scripture Setting: Parallel account, 2 Kings 21: 1-16. The chastening of the Lord, Psa. 94:12, Heb. 12:5-11. God's pardon, Micah 7:18-20. Parable of the prodigal son, Luke 15:11-24.

Life and Conduct Setting: It is sad to think of so bad a son as Manasseh to so good a father as Hezekiah. Probably his evil and idolatrous associations explain it. He undid what his father had done. He made the whole land sinful and idolatrous. His evil example was easily followed, just because he was the king. He was no half-and-half character, however; he went the full length of his sinful course. He put an idol in the very temple, and burnt his own children in sacrifice to his hideous gods. His repentance under punishment is the best we know about him, and God's mercy in forgiving such a sinner is wonderful.

WICKEDNESS WIDE OPEN.

Point of Contact. Sometimes in our towns and cities mayors and councilmen are elected on what is known as "the wide open policy." Then the saloon keepers and gamblers and grafters, and the keepers of vile resorts rejoice, for they know that they will not be molested. Having the authorities on their side they sin openly, boldly, and brazenly. It is wonderful how terribly wicked such a place may become in a short time.

In Judah the idolaters rejoiced when the king came over to their side, and helped them. They threw Jerusalem open to the worst forms of idol worship, and the cruelties and superstitions and vileness that accompany such worship. The city and nation were wide open to wickedness.

Manasseh the Idolater. It is hard to realize that the son of Hezekiah could have been so abandoned to idolatry as Manasseh was. The explanation may be that he was a mere child, and that he came under the influence of idolatrous teachers, and of a party of idolaters that had lingered all through the reign of his father. It was the company he kept that led to his undoing.

His evil, it is said, was "like unto the abominations of the heathen." That is the severest thing the writer of Chronicles could say. He knew nothing worse than the things the heathen did, just as missionaries today tell us that there can be nothing worse than the things that are done in the name of religion by the worshippers of idols in such lands as Africa and India and China. Things which in our land are done secretly and in shame, and against which we make severe laws, idolaters do openly, and without shame, and as a part of their worship. So the holy heart of the Hebrew writer, revolting against it all, used the strong word "abominations."

Manasseh rebuilt the images and altars of Baal and Ashtoreth that his father had destroyed, and the groves and the high places were reopened to the vile songs and dances of the idolaters. Still worse, he brought in new forms of idolatry. He set the example to his people of the worship of Moloch, the ancient Canaanite god, a human figure with a bull's head and horns, and outstretched arms, into which children were placed that they might roll down into the red-hot furnace over which the idol stood. He introduced also Sabaism or star worship. He worshiped all the host of heaven. Within the temple courts he built altars to the stars of the Zodiac, and images of horses and chariots dedicated to the sun. In the seventh chapter of Jeremiah we have a description of sun and star worship in the cities of Judah and the streets of Jerusalem. "The children gather wood, and the fathers kindle the fire, and the women knead their dough, to make cakes to the queen of heaven, and to pour out drink offerings to other gods, that they may provoke me to anger."

With star worship there were connected all the superstitions of astrology. They imagined that the sun and moon and stars controlled the earth and the destinies of men. The planets especially, by their rising and setting, and their peculiar colors, revealed the fate of people and nations. They wore trinkets called amulets, in which they thought the power of some special star was centered, and they imagined that it would protect them from harm, and make them fortunate. They borrowed this species of idolatry from Assyria, and there was no end to its superstitions. They built altars to the host of heaven, and offered sacrifices, and saluted the sun by kissing their hands to him. In short, Manasseh and his people hesitated at nothing in the way of idolatry. They worshipped every god that fancy suggested or superstition dictated, and they filled the land with vileness till "the whole head was sick, and the whole heart was faint."

Manasseh a Prisoner. Could such conditions go on forever? Would the holy God of Israel permit them to continue? Must there not come a day of reckoning to such a king and people? There is a maxim which says, "it is a long lane which has no turn." Though the reign of Manasseh was the longest of any of the kings of Judah it was not all smooth and straight. There was a sad and shameful turn in it. He gave no heed to the warnings of the prophets, and there is an indication in the book of II Kings, Ch. 21, that he mercilessly killed the Jehovah worshippers who opposed him, for it is said, "Moreover Manasseh shed innocent blood very much, till he had filled Jerusalem from one end to the other."

At last the punishment came. We do not know the exact date, but we are told that, "Jehovah brought upon them the hosts of the king of Assyria, who took Manasseh in chains, and 'drove rings through his lips,' and bound him in fetters, and carried him to Babylon." Thus the Lord called a halt to the mad king.

And there in chains and loneliness, like the prodigal son among the swine, he came to himself. He thought, and repented, and prayed to God. "He humbled himself greatly before the God of his fathers." Thus the sadness and shame of the chains and prison walls were turned into spiritual benediction and reformation and hope.

It is interesting to note that recent excavations in Gezer, an ancient city in the western part of Palestine, has brought to light two deeds to land made in the time of Manasseh. The conveyance was made by a notary with an Assyrian name, thus indicating the power and influence of the Assyrians at that time.

Manasseh the Penitent. Manasseh remained "a penitent and a patriot." He sought to correct the evil that he had done. Bravely he took away the strange gods, and cast their images out of the temple and city, and restored the altar of Jehovah, and commanded the people to worship God.

It is sad to know that there were some things that the penitent king could not undo. He could not remove the stain of idolatry. He could not bring back the children he had burnt on the altars of Moloch. He could not forget entirely his terrible days.

The historian tells us that God heard the prayers of the penitent king, and was entreated of him, and "brought him again to Jerusalem into his kingdom." It is wonderful that God would forgive one so abandoned to idolatry and all its shameful deeds, and who had done so much to degrade the people. But the Heavenly Father's mercy is great toward all who turn to him in sorrow and reformation. Jesus teaches us that in His prayer on the cross, when He cried out, asking the Father to forgive those who were mocking and crucifying Him.

Whittier puts it beautifully when he says of Christ,

"Through all depths of sin and loss Drops the plummet of Thy 'cross;
Never yet abyss was found
Deeper than that cross could sound."

Quiz and Study. 1. Would it have been possible for the young king to have so completely committed the nation to idolatry if there had not been a strong party in favor of it? 2. What were some of the moral objections to the worship of idols? 3. Name the leading idols of the Manasseh cult. 4. What is the effect on a nation of a pure and noble religion? Of an impure and idolatrous one? 5. Is it better not to "sow wild oats," or to sow them and repent when the reaping time comes?

Practical Thoughts. Deep wounds heal with a scar. Shameful sins may be repented of, but they leave ugly marks in the life and memory. It was brave, and even heroic, in Manasseh to turn squarely around; to break with his old party and companions; to seek new associates; and in every way live a new life. In comparison with a life of mistakes and corrections, how admirable was the life of that noble prince, Gustavus Adolphus, whose youthful prayer was, "God grant me so to live that I may ever live with Christ, and on earth may never blush for my own deeds."

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, Reign of Josiah, 639 to 608 B. C. Finding of the book of the law, about 621 B. C. Place, Jerusalem. Persons, Josiah the king, Hilkiah the priest, Shaphan the scribe, Ahikam, Abdon, Asaiah, Huldah the prophetess, and the elders and people of Judah and Jerusalem.

Scripture Setting: Idolatrous conditions in Judah at the accession of Josiah, 2 Chron. 33. Prophetic description, Jer. 2. Punishment threatened, Zeph. 1. Blessings and curses of the law, Deut. 28:1-19. Psalm celebrating the blessings of the law of the Lord, 119.

Life and Conduct Setting: The finding of this "book of the law of the Lord" was providential.

It was just what the king and the nation needed, and the Lord answered their need.

The real goodness of the king's heart is shown in his reverence for this book, and in the sorrow and reformation it caused him. Hardened hearts do not heed the word of God so readily.

Many scholars think the book found was the book we know as Deuteronomy. This is one of the most spiritual books in the Old Testament, and one of the most eloquent. Our Saviour often quoted from it.

A life or a nation guided by the teaching of such a book cannot go wrong.

A BRAVE KING AND A GOOD BOOK.

Point of Contact. An African prince, who was sent from an Ethiopian court on an embassy with costly presents to Queen Victoria, requested that her majesty would tell him the secret of England's greatness and glory. The queen handed him a beautifully bound copy of the Bible and said, "Tell your king that this is the secret of England's greatness." Just so it was Luther's Bible that made Germany great, and America's Bible that has made America great, and the Bible of the Hebrews that made them the greatest people in moral and spiritual ways of the ancient world.

"I have found the book of the law of the Lord." These simple words contain a startling announcement. Hilkiah the priest and Shaphan the scribe were engaged, under the command of Josiah, in repairing the temple. Hezekiah had cleansed the temple but it had not been repaired since the days of Joash, fully two centuries and a quarter before. It must have appeared weather-beaten and broken, and Josiah in his zeal for the worship of Jehovah had determined to repair it.

One good thing often leads to another. During the dark and dreadful times of the idolatrous kings the law of the Lord had been forgotten, and the temple worship corrupted. It may be that Manasseh had destroyed all the copies of the law that he could find, for even the priests and prophets were without Bibles, as we should say. It was while making the repairs that Hilkiah found the "book of the law of the Lord given by Moses."

Scholars think that this was the book we know as Deuteronomy, though the roll that Hilkiah found may have included other parts of the Old Testament. "No work of literature that has ever appeared has produced a greater sensation than this. It was read before the king, and he rent his clothes as he listened; a thrill of horror went through the nation at the denunciations of idolatry coming to light right in the midst of their idolatry."

A Scene in the Palace. The king sits on his throne, and the scribe Shaphan stands before him and unrolls the parchment leaves of a book dusty and yellow from long neglect. Ah! There it was indeed! the book that his aged men had told him of, but that he had not expected ever to see. He touches it with reverence, and curiously scans its ancient pages. Then he listens while the scribe reads, and if we can see in imagination what the king must have seen we shall not be surprised that he was mightily moved, and that he arose and rent his robes. There is in the twenty-seventh and twenty-eighth chapters of Deuteronomy the story of a recital of blessings and curses that is beautiful and terrible. Six tribes stood on mount Gerizim to pronounce blessings on the people if they would keep the law of the Lord; and just across the valley on mount Ebal stood the other six tribes to pronounce curses on the people if they would not keep the law. And there they stood, a great chorus of thousands upon thousands of voices pronouncing blessings, and other thousands responding with curses. It was in this way that the majesty of the honored law was set forth, and the terrors of the violated law. And the king felt it as a king should who really loved his people.

In addition to all this king Josiah could recall some dreadful history that helped to make those curses more threatening to him. Just about a hundred years before his time Samaria had been destroyed by the Assyrians, and the people carried away into slavery. And in the days of his great-grandfather, Hezekiah, had not Sennacherib taken many cities of Judah, and had he not threatened Jerusalem? And his grandfather, Manasseh, had he not been a captive in Babylon? The king knew that the sins of his nation and the curses of the law were not to be taken lightly.

The Written Word and the Spoken Word.

King Josiah, thoroughly aroused by the reading of the law, sent at once to inquire of the nearest prophet what to do. This prophet was a woman named Huldah, who lived in the second quarter of the city.

Her answer to the king's messengers was a burning denunciation of idolatry, and prediction that the curses of the law should be fulfilled on the city and the people. For the sinful nation there was no hope. But to the king himself she sent a message of comfort because his heart was tender, and he had mourned for the sins of the people. She promised him that he should not see the evil that was to come on the nation, that he should die in peace and be buried with his fathers.

The King's Best Gift to His People. King Josiah did the best thing for his people when he brought the book of the law to them. At his command they gathered together, elders, priests, Levites, and all the people in the courts of the temple, and he "read all the words of the book of the covenant to them." That was a great gathering, and the beginning of a better time for the nation. The king led the people, "great and small," in a promise to God that they would keep His law, and as long as he lived they did not depart from it. To Josiah and his people that new-found law was state constitution and prayer-book, all in one. It was better for them than wealth or victory. For all future time this book held the respect and love of the Hebrew people, and helped to make them great and honored. Pious Israelites quoted chapters from it in their daily devotions, and our Lord was familiar with it.

It requires something more than olive orchards and vineyards and fields of wheat and flocks and herds and gold and silver to make a great nation. There must be moral and spiritual strength, and the Bible is the best book in the world to build such strength. "Our country," said Walt Whitman, "is made up of prairies and muscle and Rocky Mountains." But the poet Sidney Lanier replied in a burst of fine indignation, "Mr. Whitman, you cannot make a republic of prairies and muscle and Rocky Mountains. Republics are made of spirit." The Bible is the book that ministers to spirit, and therefore it makes great nations.

The King's wise Policy for his People.

King Josiah made a covenant before the Lord to keep his commandments with all his heart. In doing this he turned back not to the example of his fathers who had sinned, but to the older example of those great Hebrews who were faithful, such as Moses and Joshua and David and the good king Asa. The fact of a covenant with God is one of the greatest features of the history of that wonderful people. No other nation had any such thought about their gods, or any such relation with them.

To keep the agreement with God was wise because it was right, and when Josiah "caused the people to stand to it" he entered on a policy better by far than an alliance with Egypt or Babylon or any idol-worshipping nation. An alliance with the Lord was religiously right, but it was also politically safe. Oliver Cromwell felt that he also had a covenant with God. He was a man of prayer, and his soldiers were known as "the praying Ironsides," and they were as mighty in battle as they were earnest in prayer.

"I raised such men," said Cromwell, "as had the fear of God before them, and had some conscience of what they did; and from that day forward I must say to you they were never beaten." * * * The issue of the whole war lay in that word. It lay with 'such men as had some conscience in what they did.'"

Quiz and Study. What great king was the pattern of goodness according to the writer of Chronicles? 2. Is it easy for a king to reform the religion of his people, or does it require long and earnest and brave effort? 3. Which was the more precious, the book or the money that Hilkiah found in the treasury? 4. Can there be a great and happy nation without true teachers and true teaching? 5. What is the greatest and best book in the world, and who are its teachers?

Practical Thoughts. 1. The people of Judah would have been better off if they had not lost their Bible. Too many of us practically lose our Bibles by allowing them to become dust-covered; or we bury them under a pile of magazines and newspapers; or in the rush of business and professional life we forget them entirely. We need to keep our Bibles wide open, close to the very throne of our lives.

2. Like the open-hearted king of Judah, we should let the Bible right into our souls. A man who was reading the New Testament said to his wife, "Wife, if this book is true, I am a sinner." Later he said, "Wife, if this book is true I am lost." Reading still further he at last said, "Wife, if this book is true I may be saved."

3. The king had the book before his people. We may pray for and give to the missionaries and the great Bible societies as they seek to give this book to India and China and Japan and Africa and the world.

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, B. C. 536. Places, Babylon and Jerusalem. Persons, Cyrus, the chief fathers of Judah and Benjamin, Sheshbazzar prince of Judah, and Mithredath the treasurer of Cyrus.

Scripture Setting: A Study of Captivity. A useful captive, 2 Kings 5:2. Righteousness among captives, Dan. 2:25. Good news to captives, Jer. 29:20. Lamentations in captivity, Psa. 137. Prayer of captives, Psa. 126:1-4. Servants of sin, John 8:35. Ransomed of the Lord, Isa. 35:10;

51:11. Captives of Christ, 2 Cor. 10:5. God and captives, Deut. 30:3; Psa. 14:7; 53:6; 85:1.

Life and Conduct Setting: The position of the Jews in Babylon had been due to disobedience and sin. 1. The Lord accepted their repentance and offered them a new opportunity as a people. 2. The love of their country had been kept alive, and thus there remained a strong motive for their return. 3. Sin swept away their nationality, but had not destroyed the possibility of God's restoring it.

GOING BACK TO THE OLD HOME.

It was a joyous time for a people who had been long in captivity to another nation. Through how many days and weeks, months and years they had yearned for the beloved home-country. They had hung their harps on the willows and wept by the waters of Babylon because of enforced absence from their native land. Now God had compassion on them and the way was being opened for their return. How they smiled and laughed and wept for joy. It was too good to be true, but it was true. And men, women and children of the Jews rejoiced and talked and planned and thrilled with delightful expectation.

A Wonderful History. Their fathers had for ages rejoiced in the possession of the land given them of God. Abraham, Isaac and Jacob had lived in it before the years of bondage in Egypt. Then had come the wonderful departure of the host of freed slaves, their journey through the Red Sea and the wilderness. What a mighty conquest was that when Israel, under the Divine leadership, had gone up against the hosts of the native heathen of Palestine. How wonderfully they had been enabled to wrest from them "the land flowing with milk and honey." Having overcome the Hivites and the Perizzites and the Canaanites, the beautiful, rich land became theirs.

What a glorious history had been theirs for many ages! There had risen their mighty prophets, their great kings. There they had prospered and grown great among the nations. There they had built cities and planted vineyards and cultivated orchards and fields. Their cattle and their sheep had covered the plains and the hills. Their children had flourished in that happy land. David had risen and had subdued all enemies. Solomon had come in his glory and had built the Temple and adorned the city of Jerusalem. His fame had been known everywhere. Their prophets had spoken in the name of God and those splendid men had taught the people the Divine truth. It had been a glorious history. No men and women ever loved a country more deeply, more passionately than they had loved their own land.

Glory Changed to Shame. But a dread foreign foe had come, with vast armies, with irresistible weapons of war. The plains of Palestine had swarmed with the hosts of the Chaldeans. The battering rams of Nebuchadnezzar had pounded at the walls of Jerusalem. Their capital city had been taken. Their soldiers had been defeated. The fierce warriors of Babylon had driven the Jews, men, women and children, like sheep before them, away and away, over many miles, across rivers and plains, to be captives in the huge city of Babylon, a city whose very name had grown to be terrible in the ears of all other nations.

There in Babylon they were made to serve their masters. They had a certain amount of liberty; they were not prisoners in dungeons; they were not bound in iron. Some of them even succeeded in business and became rich in that land. They lived in a very great city and in a very fertile and rich country. But it was not their country. The Babylonians were not their people. The Jews were aliens among foreigners. They were looked upon and treated as inferiors, even when they were not actual slaves.

What a contrast to the ancient glory of Jerusalem. Now its walls were in ruins. The temple was desolate. The fields were uncultivated. So the Jews were sad. When the native Babylonians bade them sing their old songs of Zion and play upon their harps, they hung the musical instruments on the sad willows and wept, saying, "How can we sing the songs of Zion in a strange land." So they wept for their home. Each generation of children that grew up during that long captivity heard of all that had occurred. They were told of the ancient glory of their own people. They heard how their fathers had been carried away from a beautiful, rich country of their own. They were not permitted to forget, for all hoped that some day there would be a return.

New Masters. Now after Nebuchadnezzar died, others succeeded him. Then another nation came into power. Media and Persia started upon their conquests. Babylon was taken by Darius the Mede, and after a while Cyrus, the king of the Persians, extended his power almost everywhere. Then there was shown to this mighty monarch, Cyrus, a prophecy of the Jews which foretold that Cyrus would be the deliverer of the Jews and would send them back safely to their own country. Cyrus was deeply impressed by this mention of his own name in a writing of one of the prophets of the Lord. He declared he would carry out that design; give the Jews the privilege of going back to their own country and help them to accomplish that end.

Cyrus issued a royal decree to that effect. He declared that the Lord had given him all the kingdoms of the earth and had appointed him to build God an house at Jerusalem. He called upon any of the Jews who wished to do so to go up to Jerusalem and declared that God would be with such. He commanded that those who would not go should help those who returned, with silver and gold, with goods and beasts, as freewill offerings for the house of God, to be rebuilt at Jerusalem.

Good News. Gladly at that glorious announcement did many of the Jews make ready for departure. The chief of the fathers of Judah and Benjamin and the priests and the Levites rose up for this journey. All those around them gave of their wealth willingly. Cyrus also commanded that the precious and holy vessels that had been taken by Nebuchadnezzar from the temple, and which had been placed in the heathen temples in Babylon, should now be brought forth and given to the Jews to take back, to fit up the new temple when it should be erected. The treasurer of king Cyrus, named Mithredath, brought all these forth, about five thousand four hundred vessels of gold and silver, and gave them to Sheshbazzar, who was a prince of Judah.

So under the protection of the decree of Cyrus, with many gifts in their hands and with the vessels of the Lord's house restored to them, a host of the Jews set forth. There were more than forty-two thousands of the Jews, besides more than seven thousand servants and maids, and two hundred singing men and women. They had many horses and mules and camels and asses. They set off on that happy, longed-for journey of return to that beloved country from which their fathers had been carried many years before.

Doubtless there were many hardships on the way. It was a long journey; they had to endure many discomforts, but they were so overjoyed by the fact that they were actually on the road to their own country, they did not mind them. On and on they went, day after day, mile after mile. At last they drew near to the borders of that country which had been that of their race. With what eager eyes they caught their first glimpses of it. What joy welled up in their hearts at the prospect. Soon their feet touched their own soil. They were back again, returned from the dreadful captivity. They were a free people once more, in possession of their own land.

Have you ever owned homing pigeons? If so, or if you have watched the flights of such as have belonged to others, you know that when a pigeon of this species is carried far away and is then released he rises rapidly high in the air, circles around for a while, and then speeds straight toward his native cote. So should we turn from the captivity of sin and flee to our Heavenly Father for peace and liberty.

Practical Truths. 1. Sin, like Babylon, is a state of captivity. It is worse, indeed, than any bodily slavery. 2. God's gracious, loving purpose is to deliver those who are in bondage to evil. 3. Christ brings to us the only real freedom. All else is bondage. The Christian is the only truly free person. 4. As Cyrus permitted the Jews to go back and take possession once more of their own country, so God welcomes us from our sins into His favor and love. 5. The history tells us that some of the Jews did not return to Palestine, but continued in Babylon permanently. They were in love with it and were satisfied. It is pathetic to think of such men, from whose hearts the love of country had died out. But even that is a small thing beside the sinner who refuses to go back to his Father's House. 6. It is a very important truth that the Jews were made better by their captivity. They had been influenced by the idolatrous nations before they were carried away. The prophets had warned constantly against these demoralizing tendencies. But after their long experiences in a heathen land, and the bitterness they had passed through, there is evidence that the Jews never again departed from the worship of God. Much of the dross had been burned out of them in the furnace of captivity.

And when the builders of the temple of the Lord, they set the priests in their apparel with and the Levites the sons of Asaph with to praise the Lord, after the ordinance of David king of Israel. And they together by course in praising and giving thanks unto the Lord; because he is good, for his mercy endureth for ever toward Israel. And all the people with a great shout, when they praised the Lord, because the foundation of the house of the Lord was laid. But many of the priests and Levites and chief of the fathers, who were that had seen the first house, when the foundation of this house was laid before their eyes, wept with a loud voice; and many shouted aloud for joy:

Prayer: Our Father, We thank Thee that it is given to us also to have our share in the rebuilding of Thy kingdom wherever it has suffered from the power of evil. Help us to give ourselves with great joy and earnestness to this holy work. When we have come to the close of our earthly lives, may we have, by Thy grace, accomplished something toward this glorious end. In the name of Christ, Amen.

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, B. C. 536 to 516. Place, Jerusalem. Persons, Jeshua, Zerubbabel, priests, Levites, Jewish people, Cyrus, Tatnai the governor, the Cutheans, Darius the son of Hystaspes.

Scripture Setting: Temple Worship. Toward the temple, Psa. 5:7. Enquiring in temple, Psa. 27:4. Thoughts in the temple, Psa. 48:9. Defiling of, Psa. 79:1. Voice of God in, Isa. 66:6. Temple without God, Hosea, 8:14. The Lord present in, Hab. 2:20. Jesus in the temple, Matt. 21:12-13.

Life and Conduct Setting: The remarkable aspects of this rebuilding of the temple are that a foreign king, Cyrus, took a deep interest in it; the restoration of the sacred vessels that had been plundered from the former temple, the long journey of the returning Jews largely for the purpose of rebuilding the sacred edifice, and the removal of great and numerous difficulties that were in the way. 1. The help of God to this end was evident throughout. 2. The people, under Divine guidance, wrought willingly and persistently. 3. The foes of the movement were defeated in their plottings. 4. The whole history shows how believers are aided in their work.

BUILDING THE SECOND TEMPLE.

The idea of building and rebuilding is most attractive. It applies to character and life, to society and institutions as well as to material edifices. The young person has his life and character to build. He is to take part also in the laying of foundations and the rearing of walls in the institutions around him. Not only that, but he is to have a share in the rebuilding of whatever good or useful organizations have decayed or have been impaired from any cause. It is a rare opportunity and should awaken enthusiasm in every youthful heart.

The First Temple. Now we are to consider the rebuilding of the temple of Jehovah at Jerusalem. That temple had been one of the most glorious structures ever erected on the earth. It had long been planned and prepared for. While David was king he had collected gold and silver, iron and wood for this purpose. When Solomon came to the throne the actual work was begun and carried forward. Experts had been secured from neighboring kingdoms, the best architects, the most skilful workers in metals, wood and stone. At last the splendid temple stood completed on Mount Zion. It was dedicated with elaborate ceremonies in the presence of vast multitudes. For many years it was the center of worship for the children of Israel. Then came foreign invaders, who captured the city and destroyed the temple.

Hindrances. There are always foes, material or spiritual, ready at hand to overthrow the best that good men can establish. Even the temple of Jehovah was not secure from these. Neither is anything else. Good character, noble reputation, useful influence, the best institutions, all have foes. We must ever be on our guard to defend the good against the evil.

At last, the longings of Israel for the restoration of the temple are to have the beginnings of their fulfillment. Like other good works, however, this is to have its hindrances and delays. Nothing goes forward in this world without encountering difficulties. We must expect the difficulties and be ready to meet them, and persevere in spite of them. Cyrus had been deeply impressed by the prophecy which foretold that he should send back the Israelites to their own land and that he should build a house to the true God. Many of the Jews had gone back. He had restored to them the holy vessels of the temple which had been taken by Nebuchadnezzar, and called upon the people to supply them with gold and silver.

There was a king who was very ambitious that his son should become a leader of men, and in order to impress upon him the possibilities that were in him, he used frequently to stand by him and lay his hands on the youth's head and say with deep feeling, "You can. You can. You can." This experience so influenced the young man to effort that he led an energetic life and made a profound impression upon his age. What every young person needs is to be impressed with this thought, "I can do something for God. I can help in the rebuilding of His kingdom. I can. I can."

So, in the seventh month, the people of Israel gathered in Jerusalem. The city presented a great contrast to what it had once been. Now the walls were cast down, and the temple was a pile of rubbish. But the people were thankful for their return, for permission from Cyrus to restore what had been thrown down, and thankful for means by which to do this work. So, in spite of all, it was a joyous occasion.

Worship First. Everything has to have a beginning; usually a small one. A great deal was to be done and it would take a long time, but the people were ready to begin in an humble way. Though it would be years before the temple could be finished, they could speedily have an altar. The altar, under the Jewish dispensation, was really the center of their worship. It was the place where the sacrifices were made, and the offerings of animals to be slain stood for the giving by the people of themselves to God. Jeshua the son of Jozadak, and his brethren the priests, and Zerubbabel and his brethren builded the altar. Among the rubbish they found parts of the ancient altar. With reverent hands they cleared a space, and set up the parts as nearly as possible like what they had been before. Again a sacrifice was laid thereon and again the smoke ascended. The people reverently entered into the spirit of the hour, pledging themselves as a spiritual offering unto God.

This being the time of the Feast of Tabernacles and a great multitude present, they celebrated that event. It was a memorial of the days when their ancestors dwelt in tents. They were accustomed to erect booths made from branches of trees and to live in these during the feast days. Thus they commemorated one of their great annual feasts, and with the daily offerings laid on the altar they began to restore their ancient customs. At once also masons and carpenters were employed and arrangements were made with men of Tyre and Zidon to bring cedar trees from Lebanon for the work when it should begin.

Once two men were passing along a street of a large city when they came to a spot where a huge but old building was being torn down. The air was filled with dust; the sound of falling stones and timbers rose above the noise of traffic. The one man said, "How distressing it is to see so much waste. Think of the labor that went into the first erection of all that. Now it is but rubbish." "You are wrong," said the other. "It is glorious. You should think of what is to take its place. Nothing is grander than the rebuilding of something better, larger, finer, more useful." This is true. A large part of our work in life is this very rebuilding; putting up what has been taken down.

Beginning to Build. It was not until the second month of the second year that the foundations of the temple were ready. Then the leaders and the priests gathered, with the people. The great stones were in place. So much had been accomplished. Now the priests, in their robes and with trumpets in their hands, and the procession of the Levites and singers with their cymbals broke forth in praise to God. They sang by courses in praising and giving thanks unto the Lord, "because He is good, for His mercy endureth forever toward Israel." All the people shouted. Among those present were some aged men who remembered the first temple, and now they were stirred to tears of mingled sadness and joy.

Delayed. It seemed that all would be well and that the great work would advance steadily. But enemies interfered. It appears that long before this an Assyrian king named Shalmanezzer had conquered Samaria, and after a custom of those days had transplanted many people from Persia and Media as colonists, and these were known as the Cutheans. These and other neighboring people did not wish the Jews to come back to their own land nor to rebuild their cities. So they bribed certain of the officers of Cyrus to delay the work. Cyrus himself was busy with his wars and knew nothing of all this. Year after year the Jews were interfered with and made little progress. The Cutheans sent letters to several kings, who succeeded each other, accusing the Jews of being a rebellious people, and so the work was hindered. Artaxerxes, having received such a letter, sent in haste to Jerusalem and compelled the cessation of the work of building. When the next Darius, who was the son of Hystaspes, came to the throne, Zerubbabel and Jeshua ventured to begin again. The Assyrian governor to the west of the Euphrates heard of this, and bade them give their authority for what they were doing. Yet they persevered. Then the governor sent a letter to Darius stating that the Jews had answered him that they had authority from Cyrus to rebuild their temple and city. Darius upon this had search made among the records of his kingdom and found the decree of Cyrus. He then issued his own decree, granting permission to the Jews to go forward with their work.

Completed. Great was the joy in all hearts when at last this news came to them. The governor sent word speedily that Darius was favorable to their enterprise and that no man dared interfere more with them. Now they set to work in earnest and went on without interruption, until the walls had risen and the structure was crowned with its roof and all its appropriate fittings.

Practical Truths. 1. A religious enterprise, conducted in the right spirit, may be assured of God's supervision, leadership and help. 2. Out of the most distressing conditions, it is always possible to reestablish what is good. 3. Seasons of spiritual indifference are always followed, in due time, by revived interest and progress. 4. Every one of us, in our degree and place, can have part in rebuilding the broken places. 5. The demands on our time for work for God are as great and pressing as when the Jews rebuilt their temple. To the superficial observer, all may seem to be moving onward satisfactorily. But there is much to be done, and every worker is needed. Let us do our part. 6. "The family altar should be set up first in every family and the service of worship should be regular day by day." 7. "Worship is more important than the house in which it is offered."

DEDICATING THE TEMPLE.

THE SCRIPTURE ACCOUNT IS EZRA 6:16-22.

Prayer: Our Father, May we be interested always in Thy work, and give Thee our hearts while we worship in the temples dedicated to Thy holy name. Teach us reverence for Thy house, and may Thy house ever be to us a place in which we draw nearer to Thee. In Christ's name. Amen.

I love Thy church, O God:
Her walls before Thee stand,
Dear as the apple of Thine eye,
And graven on Thy hand.

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, B. C. 516. Place, Jerusalem. Persons, priests, Levites and people.

Scripture Setting: Study of Spiritual Bearings of the Temple. Witness against sin from the temple, Micah 1:2. Temples without God, Hosea, 8:14. The lame in, Matt. 21:14. Buying and selling in, Mark 11:15. Pharisee and publican in, Luke 18:10. Gate of, Acts 3:10. Swearing by, Matt. 23:16. God present everywhere, Acts 7:48. Man a temple, 1 Cor. 6:19. Spiritual temple, Ephes. 2:21. A pillar in, Rev. 3:12. No temple in Heaven, Rev. 21:22. God and Christ the Temple, Rev. 21:22.

Life and Conduct Setting: This dedication of the temple was characterized by the joy and enthusiasm of the leaders and of the people, by a feast of rejoicing, by the reestablishment of their religious ceremonies, by the consecration of priests and people anew to God, by the welcome given to such as had fallen into heathen ways, but repented and returned. 1. The temple became dearer to them than before. 2. It became the realized center of national and spiritual life. 3. The welcome to such as had fallen into sin became from that time onward a more marked feature of Jewish religious life. 4. So restored blessings may become dearer to us, after our experience of their loss.

A NEW CHURCH HOME SET APART TO GOD.

It is a beautiful act to dedicate, to set apart for God, or for any holy or good uses, a person, a building, or a portion of time. It has served many a noble purpose in the world so to do. All of us who do what we should do, dedicate ourselves to God. We can say, "This body shall be used only for good; this mind shall be consecrated to good; my time and talents and opportunities shall all be used for the best purposes."

Set Apart. Certain buildings are set apart for educational ends, some for art, some for business, some for homes, and then they are supposed to be used only for such ends. Sometimes elaborate ceremonies are employed in connection with the completion of art buildings, or great public structures. But especially are the churches set apart with religious ceremonies for the worship of God. And in this custom we follow the precedent of the ancient Jews who, with all the impressiveness of their ceremonies, proclaimed that the temple was given to God. The word itself is from a Latin one which means "to give." The dedication of the temple was the giving of it to God, for His worship.

The ceremonies with which this was done were used as an expression of the hearts and minds of the givers. In themselves they had no intrinsic worth; ceremonies do not change a material fact, a building, nor the character of a person. But they may be a very beautiful and valuable expression of the feeling of men and women and children. Ceremonies are nothing if used without sincere feeling and thought, but when full of affection and spirit they may be, and often are, of great beauty and helpfulness. When the temple was thus dedicated it became a holy place to the people who built it for God. While to us an altar with a slain animal upon it, being consumed by fire, would mean little, to the ancient Jews it was a devout and reverent expression of gratitude to the Divine Being.

A Happy Occasion. The Feast of Dedication was kept with joy. It was twenty-one years since they began to rebuild the temple. That seemed to them a long time, since they had wrought under such very great difficulties. True, this temple was not so vast and splendid as that of Solomon, but it was the best they could erect since they were a small and still scattered people. It was a center of national and religious life and they were glad. They consecrated it not with a fast but with a feast. There are some sad things in their circumstances, but these they would forget, and they would rejoice in what they had. They would not spend the days comparing this temple with that of Solomon and lamenting over their calamities, but they would praise God for the good they enjoyed.

"On his humble shoemaker's bench, Carey laid the foundation of British Baptist Missions. John Newton found in his congregation an unfriended Scotch boy, whose soul was glowing with love to Christ; he took him to see John Thornton, one of those noble merchants whose wealth, whose piety and whose beneficence increase together. They educated him, and that boy became Claudius Buchanan, whose name India will bless when Clive and Hastings are forgotten. John Bunyan was a gift of poverty to the church. Zwingle came from an Alpine shepherd's cabin; Luther from a miner's cottage; some of the apostles from fishermen's huts." Such are some of the gifts which poverty has dedicated to the service of Christ and the church.

Their worship was again according to their ancient customs. The regular order of priests was present. The Jews have always kept their genealogies with the greatest care, and they do so today. While they were in captivity in Babylon they preserved as much as possible of an orderly worship and of their national organization. So when they returned to their own land the succession of the priesthood was maintained. The offerings at this dedication were small compared to the days of Solomon, yet they were generous for this people at the time. Seven hundred victims were presented as a burnt offering. Twelve goats were sacrificed as a sin offering "for all Israel," one for each tribe.

With processions of priests, with trumpets and psalms, with prayers and shouts and sacrifices, the new temple was set apart for the worship of Jehovah.

The Passover Kept. Then on the fourteenth day of the month, the Passover was kept in celebration of the deliverance from Egypt. For seven days more they continued in their rejoicings, praising God.

By this dedication and by following it with the Passover, Israel again appropriately showed herself as the redeemed and favored people of the Lord. They felt themselves to be in covenant relation with Jehovah. At the same time they were beginning a new and glorious assurance of continuance and progress.

"The word 'temple' has as its root 'tem,' which signifies 'cut.' Templum means a portion 'cut off.' Its religious associations came in this manner: The Roman augurs, when they wished to observe the heavens, went forth with a sacred rod in their hands, and marked out with it a portion of the sky. Whatever passed within that portion was the subject of their augury, and no more. This was the 'templum,' the separated space, cut out of the blue heavens for sacred uses. Thus the word came to be applied to any enclosed spot which might be separated to sacred uses; to sanctuaries and houses of prayer. The fundamental idea is separation, the severing of a portion of the material universe for higher use and honor than the residue." So we can separate a portion of time, or a certain amount of money, or whatever we have of value, to give to God. When we enter God's house, we should realize that it is separated, "cut off" and devoted to spiritual things.

In preparation for this dedication, we are told that the priests and Levites purified themselves as one man, and they were all clean. This refers partly to the ceremonial cleansings, washing with water and the putting on of pure garments. But it also indicates that the men gave themselves anew in consecration of heart and life to God.

There was a noble readiness, a holy zeal on their part. We likewise should follow in their steps in this regard. Helping to build the church, joining in its worship, is not enough, but we should pray that our hearts and lives be cleansed from all iniquity.

An incident is related of a missionary and a proud and powerful Indian chief. The chief was convicted of sin. Trembling under a sense of guilt, he approached the missionary and proffered his belt of wampum, to be freed from his crushing fears. "No," said the missionary, "Christ cannot accept such a sacrifice." The Indian departed, but soon returned, offering his rifle and the skins he had taken in hunting. "No," was the reply, "Christ cannot accept such a sacrifice." Again the Indian went away, but soon returned once more with a troubled conscience and offered his wigwam, wife, child, everything for peace and pardon. "No," was still the reply, "Christ cannot accept such a sacrifice." The chief seemed oppressed with surprise for a moment; then lifting up his tearful eyes to the face of the missionary, he cried out, "Here, Lord, take poor Indian, too."

The Lost One Welcomed. Another feature of this celebration was that such others as were willing to unite with them and purify themselves from heathen customs round were welcomed to the dedication and the feast. "And all such as had separated themselves unto them from the filthiness of the heathen of the land came." These were descendants of the Jews and Israelites who had remained in the land when the rest of the nation had been carried into captivity. These had intermarried with the heathen. Now they were welcomed if they would forsake communion with these people and seek communion with the Jewish congregation. It was one of the gracious opportunities of the restored Jews, as it is of every Christian church, to gather unto itself from the sinners around them such as were willing to follow the Lord.

In all this wonderful story of the return of Israel, the rebuilding and dedication of the temple of God, it is plain that God was actively present. He used men and nations for His purposes, but it was His work. Cyrus and the others were but instruments of God in carrying out His plans and purposes.

Practical Truths. We should be careful to revere the very edifices erected to God. While they are built of earthly materials, they are made sacred by being set apart to God. 2. The worship of God is the highest use of our best faculties. We should bring to the temple attentive minds, sincere hearts and pure lips. We should strive to find help for our souls in public worship and beware of mere formalism. 3. Remember we are to dedicate not only temples, but ourselves, our talents, our time, all to God. 4. We should form a habit of regular giving to the church and to all the work of God. 5. We all may have a part in hastening the building of the temple of God's kingdom in the earth.

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, B. C. 458. Place, Babylon, the lands between the Euphrates and Syria, and Jerusalem. Persons, Ezra, Artaxerxes, priests and followers.

Scripture Setting: A Study in Journeys. The king's decree, Ezra 7:11-26. The journey of the children of Israel, Exodus 13:20. Of Abraham from Ur, Gen. 11:31-12:1-8. Of Jacob and sons into Egypt, Gen. 46:1-34. Of Jesus, John 4:6. Of disciples, Matt. 10. Paul's journey to Damascus, Acts 9:3. Paul's missionary journeys, Acts. Of the master in the parable, Mark 13:34.

Life and Conduct Setting: This was the expedition of an earnest religious reformer, who desired to turn his people from evil and destructive ways unto righteousness. 1. He had a commission from God to this end. 2. His manner of life and training had prepared him for this work. 3. He had won the esteem and confidence of the king, and so was able to carry on his mission with royal support and influence. 4. We should, in our degree, aim to be reformers of whatever is wrong around us.

PREPARING FOR A LONG, PERILOUS JOURNEY.

When a leader is needed for the affairs of God's kingdom, God always brings forward the fitting person. There is always demand for laborers in the field of God's work, and He can and will use us if we lend ourselves willingly to His purposes. But in the great crises; in the most trying times, men and women of remarkable gifts are required, and God equips and commissions them for the duty. It appears that many years had passed since the large company of Jews had returned to their country from Babylon and had rebuilt the temple. Meanwhile many others had remained in Assyria; some of these were engaged in prosperous business enterprises and so were anchored in a foreign land. Perhaps some of them felt that by remaining where they were and by increasing wealth they could best help those of their countrymen who went back to the Holy Land. Others were priests and officers of the Jews and were needed by those who remained in Babylon as spiritual advisers and leaders.

A True Patriot. Among those still in Babylon was Ezra, whose name means "the helper," and he indeed proved to be a help to his people. He is declared to have been "a ready scribe in the law of Moses," a scribe of the words of the commandments of the Lord and of His statutes to Israel, "a scribe of the law of the God of heaven," a priest. "He was a man of Judah and was descended from Hilkiah the high priest in Josiah's reign. He was qualified for the work which he undertook, since "he had prepared his heart to seek the law of the Lord, and to do it, and to teach in Israel statutes and judgments." He was, in short, a learned and pious priest.

Some years before Lincoln was elected President he declared that it would require a very great man to lead the nation through the crisis which he saw approaching. When he had become President, the man to whom he had made this remark wrote reminding him of it and asking if he thought he was such a great man. He replied, "I am not such a man, but I have faith that God can make me to be such a man." We may not in ourselves be equal to the duties that come to us, but we are not to undertake them in our own strength. With God's help we become better, and indeed greater.

He had learned that the Jews in Palestine had fallen from the good ways in which they had begun, and his motive in making his journey was to bring about a religious reformation. It is wonderful how easily individuals and large bodies of people can slip back and down from right paths. There is a constant struggle between good and evil and society and individuals require always to be on their guard. Moreover, reformers, leaders with earnest convictions and pure lives and influence, are needed to stir the conscience and awaken people to their duty. Ezra felt called of God to set forth to revive religion and righteousness at Jerusalem.

The King's Favor. A new king had come to rule in Babylon, by name Artaxerxes Longimanus. We do not know how Ezra had grown in favor with that monarch, whether by some remarkable act, or on account of his learning and character, or on account of special influence with his own people, such as the king approved. We do know, however, that Ezra did stand exceedingly high in the opinion of Artaxerxes, and that the king granted his request to be permitted to return to his country and he issued a special letter to that effect. In it the king said, "I make a decree that all they of the people of Israel, and of his priests and Levites, in my realm, which are minded of their own free will to go up to Jerusalem, go with thee." Ezra was authorized "to inquire concerning Judah and Jerusalem," to carry the silver and gold which the king was sending as an offering to God, also the free will offerings of the people. The king showed his remarkable faith in Ezra by writing, "And whatsoever more shall be needful for the house of thy God. . . . bestow it out of the king's treasure house." He ordered that all his treasurers westward of the Euphrates should do speedily whatever Ezra required of them "unto a hundred talents of silver, and to a hundred measures of wheat, and to a hundred baths of wine, and to a hundred baths of oil, and salt without prescribing how much." What confidence this heathen king had in his captive servant! The priests, singers and all who were to minister in the house of God were to be free of toil, tribute or custom. Ezra was also commissioned to appoint the judges and magistrates in the regions west of the Euphrates. He was authorized to execute judgment upon any who would not obey the law of God and of the king, even to death, banishment, confiscation of goods or imprisonment.

Napoleon said of the saying, "Man proposes, but God disposes," when it was quoted to him, "I propose and dispose also." But God overruled him and he was sent an exile to St. Helena. Ezra was wiser, and strove to see what the plan of God might be, and followed that. In our efforts to do good we should be wise and seek to learn God's plan and keep close to it.

Joining the Caravan. Thus commissioned and equipped Ezra read the king's letter to the Jews in Babylon, retaining the Epistle itself as too necessary to allow others to have. He made copies of the same and sent to all the Jews in that region. His countrymen were much pleased with the king's letter and many of those from outside Babylon came up to that city to join him in his journey. Altogether, there were gathered about Ezra, in the seventh year of the reign of Artaxerxes, seventeen hundred and fifty-four people, including priests, Levites, singers, porters and servants. This does not seem a large number, but we are to remember that it is not as simple a matter as it appears for people to leave their business, the homes they have made and to take wives and children, who may suffer from a long journey, and go to a far-away place even when their hearts yearn for the home land. Doubtless, multitudes of Jews were much interested in Ezra's expedition, who found it would be too much of a hardship for them to join him.

The Journey. The journey itself occupied four months. On the west side of the Euphrates they gathered together, and stayed there three days, to fast and to pray for God's presence and care, for preservation from enemies and accidents. Ezra had been offered an escort of the horsemen of the king, but he told Artaxerxes that God would care for them and so declined the aid of soldiers. He knew well that God's protection was more important than any help men could give. He trusted utterly in the Divine power, and his course was justified.

The End. Now on and on, over that wide region between them and their sought-for destination the caravan moves day by day. When they encountered officers and agents of the king the letter Ezra bore, with the seal of Artaxerxes, gave them right of way. God uses the kings of the earth for His purposes, as well as the lowliest instruments. Here was a small company of captive Jews marching, unprotected by soldiery, through a strange country infested with robbers, but God was over them and kept them safe, and even the seal of a heathen king was made to aid them. So after four months of wearisome journey they came in sight of the city that had been the pride and joy of their fathers. How their hearts must have thrilled and the hardships of the journey faded from memory as they looked upon the city of which in captivity they had said, "If I forget thee, O Jerusalem, let my right hand forget her cunning. If I do not remember thee, let my tongue cleave to the roof of my mouth." But they found many things to make their hearts sad in Zion—neglect and abuses that required time and tears to correct.

Practical Truths. 1. We should set out in faith upon the missions on which God sends us. 2. God can make even alien and hostile powers friendly to us, and cause them to serve good ends. 3. We should meet the critical times in the spirit of prayer. 4. As the Jews longed for Jerusalem, so Christians should desire the Kingdom of God to be established in the whole world. 5. Like Ezra, we are called upon to be loyal to the Word of God, whether in Babylon or in Jerusalem. 6. Ezra's good life had a profound effect upon the heathen king, and so loyalty to convictions and right counts everywhere and with all men. 7. Under the most adverse conditions we may be fitted for the service of God, as Ezra was when in captivity.

Prayer: Our Father, Teach us to pray in the true faith that Thou dost hear and answer. May we come to Thee with those real needs of our hearts that are truly felt. May we see the answers to our petitions in Thy providential removal of difficulties and the giving of the means whereby the ends may be accomplished. In the name of Christ, Amen.

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, B. C. 445-444. Place, Susa or Shushan ("a lily"), the chief of the three capitals of the Persian empire. Persons, Nehemiah and Artaxerxes Longimanus.

Scripture Setting: A Study of Prayer. Importunate prayer, Isa. 62:6-7. Prayer of waiting, Isa. 26:8. Sincere prayer, Psa. 66:18. Daniel's prayer, Daniel 9. Penitent prayer, Lev. 26:33, 42; Deut. 4:29-31. Prayer and kings, Prov. 21:1. Command to pray, Luke 21:6. Without ceasing, I. Thess. 5:17.

Life and Conduct Setting: If we become successful, we should not forget to help the poor among our acquaintances and relatives. We should consider the needs of all good people as if they were our own.

The greatest concern of all Christians should be for the Kingdom of God. Though we may gain high position and prosperity, our chief thought should still be for the glory of God. The coming of that Kingdom is what gives value to life and security to all the institutions in the world. Every good life, devoted to what is right and true, helps to bring in the Kingdom.

THE KIND OF PRAYER GOD HEARS.

One time prayer had very much to do with the building of the walls of a city. That may sound like a strange statement, but in a true sense the one depended upon the other. Our world is both spiritual and material, just as we have spirits and bodies. What the body does depends upon the spirit, and to a very large extent what happens in our world depends upon the spirit in man. Everything is under the control of God, who is a Spirit. Prayer has to do with the spirit, and prayer is uttered unto the Supreme Spirit. So what Nehemiah desired to do in regard to the walls of Jerusalem was first a wish in his own heart, was then expressed to God, and when he was assured that God would help him he went on to use the means God had given him. Prayer was thus the starting point and the inspiration of it all. We cannot believe too much in prayer. It works wonders and puts us into sympathy with the plans of God.

We are told by science that everything in the world is effected by causes. All is like the links of a chain, each one interlinked with another. It is entirely reasonable to believe that prayer, the devout human desire expressed to God, is itself one of the series of causes, a link in the chain.

The King's Cup-Bearer. It was some seventeen or eighteen years before that affairs in Jerusalem had appeared to be in a relatively prosperous condition. Ezra had gone thither and had stirred the people to reforms. But this progress had been interrupted. News of the present sad state of things came to Nehemiah. He was one of the captive Jews who remained far away from the land of his fathers. He was the cup-bearer of the king Artaxerxes at Susa, which was the principal Persian palace. Ecbatana was the royal summer residence, Babylon the spring, Persepolis the autumn and Susa or Shushan the winter residence. The position of cup-bearer was an important and responsible one. When kings were always in danger of being poisoned they needed near them men devoted to them personally and such as could be absolutely relied upon. The cup-bearer had as part of his business to watch carefully that no poisons were introduced into the king's drink. It speaks well for the character of Nehemiah that the king relied upon him to protect his life. A man in such a position was almost constantly near the person of the king, and if he were of an attractive nature the monarch would naturally treat him with some familiarity and friendship.

Bad News. Josephus gives us a more intimate glimpse of the way in which Nehemiah learned of the state of things at Jerusalem than we get elsewhere. He tells that Nehemiah was walking before the palace and heard some strangers that were entering the city, their garments showing that they had come from a long journey, speaking to one another in the Hebrew language. Nehemiah, knowing by their tongue that they were Jews, went to them and asked from whence they came. They told him they came from Judea. He began to inquire in what condition Jerusalem and the people there were. They answered that they were in a bad state, that the neighboring people had thrown down the walls. In the daytime they overran the country and plundered it, and at night they did mischief, sometimes carrying Jews away as captives. They said the roads were full of dead men. These reports caused Nehemiah to shed tears, and he cried to God to pity his countrymen.

He was so touched by this knowledge of the suffering Jews that he lost his cheerful appearance and often went about weeping. Once, as he was lamenting at the gate of the palace, a servant came to find him, saying the king was about to sit down to supper. He made haste and did not delay even to wash himself, and he went in to minister to the king in his office as cup-bearer. The king after supper was in a more cheerful mood than usual and looked on Nehemiah and asked him why he was sad.

The King Appealed To. Nehemiah, seeing that this was an opportunity to influence Artaxerxes in favor of his people, lifted up his heart to God and asked that He might give him persuasive words. He then said, "How can I, O king, appear otherwise than thus, and not be in trouble, while I hear that the walls of Jerusalem, the city where are the sepulchres of my fathers, are thrown down to the ground, and that its gates are consumed by fire? But do thou grant me the favor to go and build its walls."

Artaxerxes was moved by his appeal and promised that he would give him this permission, send him with a letter to his governors and aid him in every way. "Leave off thy sorrow then," said the king, "and be cheerful in the performance of thy office hereafter." Nehemiah thanked God in his heart, and thanked the king for his promise.

A boy heard his father pray that the needs of the poor might be supplied. He thought a while, and then said, "Father, I wish I had all the corn you have." "Why, son, what would you do with it?" "I would answer your prayer," said the boy. God expects us to use the means we have to answer our own prayers, so far as we can. He put it into the heart of Artaxerxes to help Nehemiah, and then Nehemiah was expected to carry on the enterprise.

An Earnest Prayer. When Nehemiah had gotten the sad news from the travellers, he began to fast and pray. He prayed "day and night." He was importunate. There was no question but that he wanted what he prayed for more than anything else in the world. This is the only prayer that avails. It is but mockery to go through forms of prayer without any deep desire for what the words express. Prayer must be the earnest expression of needs that are deeply felt.

His prayer was one of profound religious patriotism. It had in it noble unselfishness. He interceded for Israel, the people of God, the people who had suffered much and long and were now scattered, while the few at Jerusalem were enduring all manner of trials. He confessed before God national and individual sins. He magnified God as both just and merciful. He knew that wrongdoing was the source of these calamities, but he asked for pardon and mercy. He appealed to God as merciful, as willing to pardon the penitent.

He declared the repentance of his people; they had been justly punished, but now they were willing to turn and keep the commandments. He asked God to remember that they were His people, redeemed by His hand. In continuing his prayers day and night he had two thoughts in mind—the greatness of God and the sinfulness of God's chosen people. God was able to help, and the people who had sinned were penitent. Therefore would not God be merciful and restore them to their land? Had not God promised mercy?

God's Answer. God answered his prayers. Prayer is always answered in some way and at some time. These devout and continued petitions of Nehemiah found their answer in the effect God's Spirit produced upon the heart of the king. Nehemiah asked for a special thing: mercy and restoration for the Jews. For the restoration, means were necessary. The king could be the instrument of Providence, if he would. His heart was turned in compassion upon Nehemiah and upon the Jews.

Letters were given him by the king, bidding the governors of the provinces he would pass through, convey him in safety. An epistle was given him to the keeper of the king's forest, commanding him to supply timbers for the work. So all was arranged; the way was made smooth; the prayer was granted.

There is a picture in the Kensington Museum, England, of the famous Dr. Samuel Johnson waiting in the anteroom of a lord for audience with the nobleman. But God never keeps us waiting. We can enter His presence with our petitions at any time and in any place.

Practical Truths. 1. This history shows how a great movement can originate in one person. 2. The genuine patriot is the religious patriot, one who knows that the true advancement of his country is through obedience to God. 3. Nehemiah undertook and carried on his work in spite of the indifference and apathy of thousands of his countrymen. There were doubtless millions of Jews scattered throughout the realm of Artaxerxes. Only comparatively few returned or took an interest therein. The indifference of those who should be interested is one of the greatest trials of religious workers. But no Christian should be affected by that. He should go on praying and working. 4. Good works usually fall upon the shoulders of a few. We should be content to be of the few. 5. Prayer brings down the blessing and prepares us to receive it.

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

built over against his own house." He did the thing nearest at hand. God has placed us in families and united us in business and social relations that we might be helpful to one another. 3. Those who lived outside the city helped. It was a national affair. The whole people stood or fell with the capital. Our home, our town, our state, our nation, place obligations on us. 4. They used the material at hand. Into the new they put what they could of the old. 5. The building was done by piece-work. Every man's work affected his credit and his influence. 6. The sword and trowel were both used: one to combat the evil, the other to build up the good. 6. They had opposition. It always comes when the good is proposed. 7. Success came at last, but by hard and persistent work.

BUILDING A CITY WALL UNDER DIFFICULTIES.

Old-Time Cities. It was a fine thing to have part in rebuilding the walls of a city in the old days. Without these it was defenceless. It would seem odd to us nowadays to see a city with huge stone walls all around it and with no way to enter it except through great gates. But before gunpowder came into use and cannon were made all cities were surrounded by vast stone walls. These were sometimes twenty and thirty feet high and from five to ten feet wide. The walls of Babylon were indeed so wide that chariots could pass each other on the top of them.

Jerusalem had been thus protected for ages, but foes had torn down these defences, and during the captivity the site of the city lay open. Most of the houses also had been destroyed. The temple had been rebuilt, but the defences had not been repaired. In our world today the same is true of many things in a moral and spiritual sense. Many good causes lie open to attack from evil sources, and we are called, just as Nehemiah was, to help build the defences.

When Nehemiah made his request of Artaxerxes to go up to the help of his ancestral city, the king, being greatly attached to him, declared he could not let him go permanently, but he would give him leave of absence for as long a period as necessary. Nehemiah promised to return after the work of rebuilding should be accomplished. He was made governor of Jerusalem, and as such was furnished with an escort of cavalry, so that his journey was a safe one.

Opposition. Every good cause in the world finds foes to antagonize it. It was so with Nehemiah's plans from the very beginning. Sanballat the Horonite and Tobiah the Ammonite determined to give him trouble. Certain of the native people of Canaan, to whom the land had belonged before the conquest under Joshua, had left descendants, and these had always resented the presence of the Jews in that country. The tribes round about on the borders of Israel had given the Jews trouble all through their history in that land. When Jerusalem fell and the Jews were carried away, these Ammonites and Moabites, and others, had rejoiced, thinking the land would again be theirs. They were angry at every step taken for the return of the Jews. They had interfered with Ezra and had troubled the Jews ever since.

Whenever any evil is disturbed by good people it is certain to do all possible to interfere with the success of the good. If you drive the liquor traffic out of any community you may be sure it will strive to win its way back again by every device.

Careful Planning. Nehemiah arrived safely, and went about quietly to see what was needed and to plan the best way of undertaking the work. He did not at first announce for what purpose he came. He went out at night with a few men and surveyed the broken walls. When he had completed his view of the ruins, he called the rulers of the city together and addressed them. He told how the king had been touched by his story of the condition of Jerusalem and had given him authority to repair it. He reminded them of the antagonism of the native peoples and foretold that they would need courage in this undertaking. But he urged them to put their trust in God and to work diligently for the defence of the city. They were moved by his words and cried out, "Let us rise and build."

Now the mocking Sanballat and Tobiah and Geshem the Arabian, who were in the city and heard what was said, put the worst construction possible on the plan, and declared that Nehemiah was getting ready to rebel against the government of Artaxerxes. They cried out, "What is this thing ye do? Will ye rebel against the king?" One of the hindrances to all good works is the evil interpretation that sinners put upon what is done. It is always easy to find a bad significance in anything. Evil is ready to start a rumor that selfishness, money, ambition or some like unworthy motive is at the bottom of every movement for public or individual welfare. Evil-minded persons have no conception of the possibility of unselfish devotion to anything. They know their own hearts as evil and they attribute the same to everybody else.

All Together. All went to work. In general each man repaired "over against his own house," the part nearest and most convenient for him to reach. The names of certain of those who wrought are given in the Scriptures, and so they immortalized themselves by their useful service. It seemed doubtless a prosaic way to gain a name in the Divine Writings to lay stones in a wall, but that was a patriotic and religious task and it was worthier of record than many of the deeds that have brought men fame. All such as gave themselves to this service could not be mentioned, but their work spoke for them. It is not necessary to win a name; it is only essential that we do our share.

The earnest beginning of this building showed their enemies that the workers meant to diligently go on to the end. This stirred them to greater indignation. Doubtless many of the workers were but poor masons and this exposed the result of their labors to ridicule. Tobiah in mockery said, "Even that which they build, if a fox go up, he shall even break down their stone wall." But scorn did not stop the faithful toilers. Enraged by beholding the walls grow day and night, the foes conspired to join together and interfere by force. They made several armed attacks and slew many Jews. They hired certain foreigners to try to assassinate Nehemiah, but this failed. That brave leader appointed a body guard for his protection and persevered. He thus protected himself not from fear of death, but for the sake of the cause.

Working and Watching. He also had his followers arm themselves. Half of the people worked while the other half stood ready with weapons to protect them. Every one carried a weapon while at his toil, a sword girded on, or a weapon in one hand and a tool in the other. A trumpeter stood by the side of Nehemiah, and in case of an attack he sounded his trumpet as an alarm to those who were far off on the other side.

In this world where evil is ever ready to give battle to the good, we must be armed for spiritual contests. We must work while furnished with the whole armor of God.

So for two years and four months these Jews, under their faithful leader, pursued diligently their great undertaking. It was a tremendous task, but at last it was done. Earnest, self-sacrificing men, who had given themselves all those months to the task, now rejoiced to see the splendid result. Jerusalem, the beloved city, was safely enclosed.

Earthly glory passes, but work for God abides forever. When Isaac Newton was asked, late in life, to explain a passage in his work on mathematics, he could only answer, "I knew once that it was true." So the greatest mind fails. It is told that when the Duke of Marlborough was old, a friend, to entertain him, read him the history of his own campaigns. Forgetting his own part in that warfare, he asked from time to time, "Who commanded?" So earthly glory is forgotten even by those on whose heads it rests. But good deeds abide forever.

When Alexander the Great was ill, his trusted physician began to prepare him some medicine to drink. Meanwhile, he received a letter warning him that the physician was about to poison him. While Alexander was reading the epistle the physician came with the potion in his hands. Alexander took the cup in one hand and gave the letter to his friend, while he quickly swallowed the medicine to show his faith in his physician. When God gives us hard things to do or to suffer the world tries to make us doubt him. The wisest course is to drink our cup, and do our work with absolute faith in our Heavenly Father.

Practical Truths. 1. Many who lived far from Jerusalem came and took part in the work. Wherever we live, our hearts should be warm with love for Zion. 2. Co-working for defence of religion and country brings hearts together and forms the strongest bond of union. 3. We learn from the history that the nobles of Tekoah took no part, but opposed the work. It is often true that those with money and position are most indifferent to religious efforts. Others must be ready to carry on Christ's work without them. 4. The mechanics worked with the priests. They received and deserved the same honor. 5. Nehemiah was a layman and not a priest. He is therefore a fine example of lay work for God and his example should be an encouragement to others.

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, B. C. 444. Place, Jerusalem. Persons, Nehemiah, Ezra, priests, Levites and people.

Scripture Setting: Study of the Law. The Law, according to Jewish usage, was the five books of Moses. The Ten Commandments, a condensation of the Law, Exodus 20. Command to obey, 2 Chron. 6:16. Perfect, Psa. 19:7. In the heart, Psa. 37:31. Peace from, Psa. 119:165. Christ fulfills, Matt. 5:17.

Life and Conduct Setting: This lesson shows five effects of the careful study of God's Word. 1. Repentance. Always a result of the entrance of God's Word. "Their grief was occasioned by the vision of their own miserable imperfection in contrast to the lofty requirements of the law." 2. Joy in the Lord. Joy that sins are forgiven. Joy in fellowship with God. Joy of hope; of possibilities; of Heaven. Joy of victory over sin and evil. The joy of loving and being loved by God. 3. Generous giving to those in need. 4. Consecration to God. A covenant of renewed devotion to the Law and service of God was entered into and signed by the leaders. 5. A higher morality. They renewed the temple service. Kept their feasts, paid tithes, brought in the firstfruits and reformed their worldly manner of keeping the Sabbath.—Peloubet.

THE ENTRANCE OF THY WORD GIVETH LIGHT.

Religious Liberty. Now the Jews assembled for worship. They were within a walled city, with the temple near by. They were thus protected from foes: their liberties and their right to worship were no longer at the mercy of aliens. They rejoiced in this blessed condition. Many people today neglect the church who would consider it from another point of view if the churches were destroyed and they were forbidden by foreigners to worship God. Then if a day would come when the churches were rebuilt and liberty to worship was restored they would flock to the houses of God. Like other blessings, this would brighten when lost. The Jews had been long enough without their temple and without the protection of a walled city to appreciate fully their restored privileges.

We cannot overrate the privilege of religious freedom. One of the greatest incentives of the early pioneers who left the Old World to settle in America was the right to worship God according to their consciences. The prayer meetings used to echo this feeling, for grandfathers had dwelt upon America's freedom in this respect. But now we have gotten so used to freedom and know so little about what it is to be without it that we do not appreciate it. Nevertheless it is a great boon; one to be prized and defended when necessary.

The Preacher. The Jews from all the region round about, as well as from within the city, assembled. The learned Ezra, who had led the first reformation some years before and who presumably had gone to Babylon for some reason, had now returned to Jerusalem. He was the most learned man of his time in the Law of God, and it was he who now made ready to read the Scriptures to the people in public. Before the captivity the people had been regularly instructed in the law, but during that period and during the time of the restoration of the temple and the city walls this had been neglected. Indeed, few copies of it existed and these could not always be at hand. But a new order of things was begun.

Ezra appeared with a full copy of the Scriptures as written up to that time. The people gathered as one man in the street before the water gate. In our day the people are so used to hearing the Scriptures read from the pulpit and to reading them for themselves that oftentimes they give little attention. But to that people then present the Scriptures were practically new. They assembled to hear them with more enthusiasm than they would have gathered for any other purpose. Everywhere the subject of conversation was that they were to hear the reading of the Law of God.

The Pulpit. Ezra stood on a pulpit, with six scribes on his right hand and seven on his left. This is the first time a pulpit is mentioned. Its purpose was, of course, to place the reader where he could be seen and heard. We cannot estimate the influence and blessings that have come from the pulpit through all these ages. Instruction in Divine things, changed lives, consolations, inspiration and help in a hundred ways have come to mankind from the pulpit. It was doubtless the office of the scribes with Ezra, to relieve him by reading portions of the Scriptures from time to time. The people stood in ranks in front of the pulpit. And with them were thirteen other ministers, who also aided in helping the people to understand the Law. Ezra read in Hebrew and the scribes translated to the people, who had grown up in Babylon and spoke a mixed Chaldean dialect, so that the Hebrew had to be interpreted to some extent.

The Lesson. So began the reading to these returned Jews, the substance of that which we call the Old Testament. Then they heard unfolded before them the history of their nation, the story that we find in Genesis and Exodus, in Numbers and in the Kings. There they heard the wondrous narrative of all that their nation had accomplished and had suffered. The giving of the Law, the details as to what the Law was, its shaping influence upon their national character, the stories of obedience and of disobedience, were rehearsed. Anywhere and everywhere the Scriptures make an impression by their majesty, dignity and appeal to the heart and soul, but surely the appeal then and there, to that people to whom it was all fresh as if newly written and of whose ancestors the records told, must have been overwhelming.

The Result. We are told that all the people wept at what they heard, with regret for past glories and for the sins which had caused their great humiliations. But Nehemiah and Ezra bade them cease their grief and to eat and drink and provide for the needy, as the day was holy to God. Seven days were required for the completion of the reading, and these days were intermixed with hours of feasting and rejoicing. With branches of olive, pine, myrtle and palm they made booths on the roofs and in the courts of their houses, according to the custom at the feast of tabernacles.

After their rejoicings, they turned to humiliation and penitence. A fast of two days was held. The Jews clad themselves in sackcloth, with ashes on their heads. Three hours were given to reading the Law. The morning sacrifice was offered, and some time was spent in silent confession and prayer. After the noon hour, the Levites appeared on the steps of the temple, calling on the people to stand and bless God. A hymn was sung, telling of God's mercies from the days of Abraham. They confessed their sins and the sins of their ancestors and acknowledged the justice of God. They made a new covenant with God, which was put in writing, and before evening this was sealed by princes, priests and Levites, while the people swore to obey the law of God.

If we could suppose the Bible to have been lost for several hundred years and that a copy should now be found, what do you imagine would be the sensation it would make! The first pages of the newspapers would be covered with accounts of the discovery and with extracts from the wonderful Book. Such as now seldom read it would not rest until they had read every word. The frequent neglect comes from lack of real understanding of its importance, interest, beauty and usefulness.

The effect of that public reading of the Law was lasting. The Jews from that time onward never neglected their Law. It is true, alas, that they fell into other sins, but it was not into the sin of forgetting outward reverence for the Book. We may be sure that whenever the Book of God is given to any people it will produce results. The Word cannot return unto Him void.

I knew an elderly man who told me he had never read the Bible through. At my persuasion he began a thorough reading of the Scriptures. After finishing the Book, he declared he had not in all his previous life read anything half so interesting. He had neglected for sixty years or more to read the volume which on his own statement is the most interesting in the world.

Carlyle declared that after people see the sunrise a second time it ceases to be a miracle to them. So readily do the most marvelous creations of God become commonplace to us. It is so in regard to the Scriptures. When Ezra read the Law to the Jews they were overwhelmed with emotion; it was new to that generation. But in our time most people are possessed of a superficial familiarity with much of Scripture by hearing it from the pulpit, and so they cease to marvel at its grandeur and beauty.

No greater moral change ever passed over a nation than passed over England during the years of Queen Elizabeth's reign. England became the people of a Book, and that Book the Bible. Its literary and social effects were great, "but far greater was the effect of the Bible on the character of the people at large." "A new conception of life, a new moral and religious impulse spread through every class."—Green's Short History of the English.

Practical Truths. 1. The greatest freedom is in obedience to the highest law, that of God. 2. The memorizing of passages of Scripture is a habit that is most valuable. Such passages continue to be a source of guidance and comfort throughout life. In addition, they become molding influences as to style. Ruskin said he owed much to the portions of Scripture his mother had induced him to commit to memory. 3. Most of all the Book reveals to us Christ, and because it enshrines the record of His life it is supreme. 4. Every nation now existing is great in proportion as the Bible is studied and obeyed.

KEEPING THE SABBATH

In those days saw I in Judah some on the sabbath,

and

and as also wine, grapes, and figs, and all manner of burdens, which they

on the sabbath day:
and I testified against them in the day wherein they victuals.

There dwelt men of Tyre also therein, which brought and all manner

of

and sold on the sabbath unto the children of Judah, and in Jerusalem. Then I contended with the nobles of Judah, and said unto them, What evil thing is that ye do, and profane the sabbath day? Did not your fathers thus, and did not our God bring all this evil upon us, and upon this city? yet ye bring more wrath upon Israel by profaning the sabbath.

THE SCRIPTURE ACCOUNT IS NEHEMIAH 13:15-22.

Prayer: Our Father, May we reverence Thy holy day and use its rest and worship for the advantage of our souls, the honor of Thy kingdom and the well-being of our fellowmen. We thank Thee for the good gift of the peaceful Sabbath in the midst of the days of effort and worldly care. In the name of Christ. Amen.

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, B. C. 434. Place, Jerusalem. Persons, Nehemiah, priests, Levites and people.

Scripture Setting: A Study of the Sabbath. Command to keep, Exod. 20:8. Origin of, Gen. 2. A gift of God, Exod. 16:29. A rest day, Lev. 16:31. Punishment for breaking, Isa. 58:13. A sign, Ezek. 20:12. Proper use of, Matt. 12:13. Son of Man lord of, Matt. 12:8.

Life and Conduct Setting: We see herein how God is concerned for man's spiritual and bodily welfare. His laws are not arbitrarily laid down, but are interrelated with all that pertains to man's best progress and highest condition. 1. The Sabbath is a Divine institution, established by Him who comprehends perfectly our best interests. 2. Response on our part by obedience is a wise recognition of the goodness of God. 3. We should resist the tendencies that blind men to the spiritual values of God's ordinance. 4. We should try to enable our fellow men to comprehend the true import of the Sabbath.

ONE OF GOD'S GREAT GIFTS TO MAN.

"The Sabbath was made for man," Christ tells us, and God our Creator knows what we need, what is good for body, mind and soul. It is sacred since God set it apart for sacred purposes, sacred because of the needs of man's nature to which it ministers. A day of rest and worship is just as essential as air, sunshine, food and sleep. It is true that man can exist without the Sabbath, but he cannot live his best life and do his best for God and man without it. It is not an arbitrary, superfluous law that creates the Sabbath; it is a kind arrangement of Providence.

Drifting Away. The Jews, some years after the restoration of Jerusalem, had drifted into careless ways as to the Sabbath. They had begun well, but had not kept on well in all respects. In their fresh enthusiasm after the reading of the Law, they had joined enthusiastically in all national and religious observances. The dedication of the wall had been a happy event. Ezra and Nehemiah had led two processions, one starting to the right and the other to the left, and with trains of priests, with trumpets and songs of praise, they had marched round the city. They had been willing to carry out the requirement that they be separated from the aliens, the Ammonites and Moabites, with whom some of them had mingled.

Nehemiah Needed Again. Then Nehemiah had gone back to Persia, according to his promise to the king Artaxerxes. We do not know how long he remained away, but again he heard of abuses at Jerusalem, and again he asked the king to permit him to visit Jerusalem. The high priest Eliashib had proved to be a weak man, and had allowed Nehemiah's old enemy Tobiah, the Ammonite, to have a chamber in the court of the temple. That place had been set apart for sacred vessels, for offerings, frankincense and oil. But Tobiah had appropriated it for his own business. The Levites had not been given support and so had forsaken the temple and had gone to the cities set apart for their class. A grandson of the high priest had married a daughter of Sanballat the Horonite, who had been such a bitter opponent of the Jews. Moreover, the Sabbath was being violated in many respects. So Nehemiah returned.

A Cleansing of the Temple. He entered the temple and cast out the furniture of Tobiah from the chamber that Eliashib had given him, and he restored to their places the vessels of God's house. He brought the Levites back again. And he persuaded the people again to bring in the tithes.

Then he set about re-establishing observance of the Sabbath. He had found some treading wine presses on the holy day; some brought their sheaves in from their fields, and laded their asses. Foreigners brought their merchandise, wine, grapes, figs and other goods and crowded the gates of Jerusalem on the Sabbath. Men of Tyre brought fish and all manner of wares and sold these in the city, just as the pictures show.

Sabbath Restored. These violations of the law aroused the indignation of Nehemiah. He called together the rulers of the city and rebuked them for this profanation, reminding them that it was such disobedience that had brought ruin on them before. He ordered the gates to be closed at dusk the evening before and kept closed until the end of the Sabbath. He set his own servants to guard them and enforce the law. The merchants tried to evade this rule by pitching their tents round the wall, but this also was done away with, as he threatened to use force with them.

Queen Victoria was a conscientious observer of the Sabbath and never allowed matters of state to encroach upon that day. She declined to permit the highest noblemen to approach her on such subjects on the day of rest. A well-known merchant said to a clergyman, "Had it not been for the Sabbath and its peace and quiet, my business cares would have made a maniac of me long ago." When this was quoted in a company of merchants, one of them said, "That is the exact case of Mr. Blank. He was one of our greatest importers. He used to say the Sabbath was the day he planned successful voyages; showing that he gave his mind no rest. He has been in the insane hospital for years and will probably die there."

Once more the Sabbath came to be observed as a holy day. Peace and quiet spread over the land during those sacred hours. The abuses had doubtless crept in gradually, as such usually do, but the reformation was sudden and thorough.

Sabbath and Religion. We are to remember that the Sabbath is practically essential for all public, organized religion. One of the greatest American statesmen declared that there "can be no morality without religion, and there can be no religion without public worship." Without a day set apart for worship, rest and meditation, morality and religion would decline. Without the quiet and thoughtfulness and prayerfulness of the Sabbath there would be little spiritual growth. If there were no day set apart for sacred things, reverence and all the higher emotions would inevitably decay.

A Foe. Two great foes of the Sabbath exist. One of these was found in the days of Nehemiah. The desire to make money at the expense of the day of worship. Perhaps the foreigners, the Tyrian traders, introduced that spirit. They had no Sabbath; they cared nothing for Jewish customs. So they came with their merchandise. They found religious observances relaxed; the people were indulgently careless as to their business. Certain of the Jews tarried in passing, glanced at their goods, stopped, asked prices, bought some trifles. Then more came, and in a few weeks their Sabbath trade was established. Perhaps they started outside the gates, and then presently they were inside. So evils gradually grow.

Certain of the Jews themselves were tempted, by desire to save their crops, gain time, and began to work a little on an occasional Sabbath. Thus the evil spread.

Money Losses. In our own day business encroaches on the Sabbath. It is supposed to be necessary to run railway trains, passenger and freight. Certain great mill and factory owners assert that it is only at much loss they can shut down for one day and then begin again on Monday. Back of it is, of course, the desire for gain. The loss is money loss. It is not considered that there are other losses involved, the loss to the workmen of their right to a day of rest, the spiritual and moral loss to multitudes and to the nation itself.

Pleasure. The other great cause of encroachment on the Sabbath is pleasure seeking. The desire to have a good time overrides duty, obligation, the value of spiritual instruction, the building of character, everything in its way. Multitudes have little thought of anything but to do as they please, go on excursions, drive, picnic, hunt or fish, and play games. So the very existence of the Sabbath as a holy day, as sacred to rest and worship, is threatened seriously.

Perils Today. Sabbath desecration, as found today, is a very serious and real peril. It threatens spiritual disaster to multitudes. It threatens to bring upon our people an increase of nervous evils through lack of a needed break in the busy, over-burdened week. The open stores, open factories, Sunday railway trains and traction cars, Sunday theaters and newspapers, the widespread custom of Sunday excursions and picnics, are among the evils that are leading thousands to violate the Sabbath.

America is no more assured of permanence than were those nations of the past that have perished. Many nations have fallen through disobedience to the Divine laws. We, too, must fall if we abuse the good gifts of God.

Lord Macaulay declared it was his observation and experience that a literary man would do more and better work, year after year, by observing Sunday as a day of rest. An association of twenty physicians voted "yes" unanimously on the question: "Is the position of Dr. Farre, in his testimony before the committee of the British House of Commons, in your view, correct?"—that men who labor six days in a week will be more healthy and live longer, other things being equal, than those who labor seven; and that they will do more work and do it in a better manner?

Practical Truths. 1. Our Maker understands our needs and has arranged for our well-being, if we observe His laws. 2. It may be a trial at times to be loyal to our convictions in regard to the Sabbath, but in the end we will be happier and better for so doing. 3. The temptations, in our day to non-observance of the Sabbath are more numerous and alluring than ever before. To keep the Sabbath holy demands strength of will and force of character. 4. It is a common observation that those who begin by an occasional ride or picnic or excursion on the Sabbath soon come to a point where religion largely drops out of their lives and thoughts.

ESTHER BEFORE AHASUERUS

BY JULIUS SHRADER

The great king Ahasuerus was the sovereign of a vast territory in Asia; the most important part being Persia. In this country were many Jews who were captives but had climbed to the holding of high office. Among these was Mordecai, a favorite at court. These Jews were hated by the heathen officials. One of these, named Haman, had an important place in court. As Haman passed in and out, the Jew, Mordecai, refused to salute him. So Haman conspired against the Jews, to exterminate them, and he built a lofty gallows, especially to hang Mordecai on.

Ahasuerus had decreed that no one should enter his presence without a special invitation. To any intruder the king might reach out his scepter as a token of good will or he might condemn such a person to death. Queen Esther was a Jewess, a beautiful woman, who had been brought up in the family of Mordecai. She was induced to visit the king and attempt to protect the Jews. In appearing at court Esther risked her life. But her beauty moved the heart of Ahasuerus, so he reached out his scepter, and she secured the king's attention and checked the plottings of Haman, and finally caused this hater of the Jews to be hung on his own lofty gallows.

The artist Shrader is of the school which creates elegance, high finish and much beauty, not attempting to be absolutely literal. The king is dressed in magnificently embroidered robes so heavy that the wrinkles are ponderous. He reaches out his scepter. Esther is represented as greatly affected, but she is supported by a faithful servant. Here is an arrangement, used by many artists, to give effect to the graceful lines and beautiful faces of young Jewish women. He introduced immediately the strong square features of the old attendant, and the faces of the two charming children. One of these is the king's fan bearer. Every detail is carefully wrought out and the story is completed by the presence of the armed guard with his spear.

—JAMES WILLIAM PATTISON

JULIUS F. SCHRADER. 1815-1900.

Julius F. Schrader was born in Berlin, on the 16th of June, 1815, two days before the battle of Waterloo. In this great battle many relatives and friends of his father undoubtedly fought, for Berlin, the capital of the kingdom of Prussia and of the present German empire, nine years before had been captured by the great Napoleon, who at Waterloo went down to defeat at the hands of the English and Prussian armies, under command of Wellington and Blucher.

When old enough to walk, hand in hand with his father, up and down Unter den Linden (under the lindens), Berlin's imperial highway, he often strolled. With the great Brandenburg gate at the one end, and on either hand the palaces of German kings and princes, with monuments and statues of many of the historic and allegorical heroes of the German people, there quickly arose in the growing lad a sense of the romance of the past years of his country's history, which for the Germans, perhaps, more than for any other folk, bulk large in imagination, with a sort of mythological grandeur.

Painting and drawing continually, with such material as he could obtain, it was presently decided by the family council that Julius must make something of his talent, so at fourteen years old to drawing school he went, at the famous Academy of Berlin. Here for long hours every day he drew and painted from the living model till after some time of faithful work every exterior form and appearance of man, woman or child, of every conceivable type, representing all imaginable actions and sentiments, was as certain to him as the recital of the alphabet. From the earliest of his student days he was endowed with a rare sense of color and ambitious of its realization. With stern self-discipline he repressed impatience and studied form faithfully, till at last, painting with a full palette, there was in his work such a perfection of form, especially in the nude, in union with a splendid sense of color that marks him among painters.

In the realm of history, to illustrate the wideness of his knowledge, Schrader's grasp of a subject was so complete, so fully realized that his historical pictures are noted for their archaeologic accuracy, quite apart from their greatness of conception as works of fine art.

For eight years the young man studied and worked at the Berlin academy. In 1810 in Rome a little group of devout-minded men had gathered—the German Pre-Raphaelites, —whose aim as painters was to revive German art as a means of religious and moral expression. They felt that the painter's work should be consecrated to the service of morality and religion—that unless it was for the mental and moral elevation of mankind, art was vain. Their influence reached young Schrader, and in 1837 he placed himself under the tutelage of one of the most famous of this body, Herr Schadow, of Düsseldorf.

Wilhelm Friedrich von Schadow, of Berlin, director of its academy till 1819, and of that at Düsseldorf from 1826 to 1859, was the founder of a great school of German religious painters, as his brother, Johann Schadow, the sculptor, was founder of the Berlin School of Sculpture.

For eight years more the growing man worked under Schadow. In 1845 he went to Rome. As with many others, this was the keystone that made complete with inspiration the structure of scholarship and mastery that had all these years been a-building. He painted his first really important picture, "The Capitulation of Calais," founded on that most romantic incident of English and French history: the siege of the city by Edward III and the British forces in 1347. This is in the National Gallery at Berlin. Two years later a notable incident of German history was pictured, "Frederick the Great After the Battle of Kolin" (1849, Leipsiz Museum). The year after this came another, "Wallenstein and Seni." The "Death of Leonardo da Vinci" (1851) was the work that firmly established his reputation as a leader of German painters of his time, and a professorship in the Berlin Academy, in which he had been a student, was offered him.

In mural painting, as well as in easel pictures, his strength was shown, as in the fresco in the New Museum at Berlin, "The Consecration of the Church of Saint Sophia at Constantinople," an impressive occurrence in the early history of the Christian church; and in the mural paintings in the Chapel Royal, Berlin.

Other well-known works are "The Parting of Charles I from His Family," in which is shown the farewell of the ill-fated King Charles Stuart of England to his children, prior to his execution by order of Parliament, under the protectorate of Oliver Cromwell; "Esther Before Ahasuerus" (1856), and the "Homage of Berlin and Cologne, 1415" (1874), all of which are in the National Gallery at Berlin.

JAMES BEALINGS.

THE SCRIPTURE ACCOUNT IS ESTHER 5:1-14.

Prayer: Our Father, May we always have that confidence in Thee which may lead us into Thy presence with our petitions in all our seasons of need, knowing that the scepter of Thy favor will be held out to us. We would venture thus with boldness, since Thou art our Father and Thou art merciful and good. In the name of Christ. Amen.

"If only we strive to be pure and true,
To each of us all there will come an hour
When the tree of life shall burst into flower,
And rain at our feet a glorious dower,
Of something grander than ever we knew."

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, B. C. 488. Place, Susa or Shushan, the capital of the Persian empire. Its ruins are three miles in circumference. The remains of the great palace built by Darius, the father of Xerxes, in which the scenes of this lesson occurred, have been found. The great central hall is 343x244 feet. Persons, Esther, Ahasuerus, Mordecai and Haman.

Scripture Setting: A Study in Confidence in God. Boldness, Heb. 4:16. The Lord our confidence, Prov. 3:26; Psa. 65:5. Hold it fast, Heb. 3:6. A great recompense, Heb. 10:35. A clear conscience helps, 1 John 3:21. The measure of, 1 John 5:14. In Christ, Eph. 3:12. Concerning others, 2 Thess. 3:4. In death, 2 Cor. 5:8.

Life and Conduct Setting: "The destiny of God's people depended not only on the humors of this Persian king in general, but also upon the impression which a woman might make on that monarch. This must appear as very peculiar and highly significant. Women have exerted a decisive influence upon the destinies of nations. We have the view of Esther standing before the king, not as a wife before her husband, but as a petitioner before a sovereign. This represents the condition of the church of the dispersion. The king represents worldly power bearing rule over God's people. . . . But true worth dwells with Esther, who, impelled by love for her people, risks even her life."

TWO WOMANLY QUEENS.

Esther is one of the few women who have a holiday in their honor, and she well deserved this tribute from her countrymen the Jews. The Feast of Purim, which, among the Jews, celebrates the deliverance from foes as recorded in this book, has as its central character the queen Esther. She stands in the grateful remembrance of Jews with Deborah and Judith. If, however, holidays were appointed for all the good women who have dared and suffered for their loved ones the whole year would be devoted to such celebrations. We can honor them, however, in other ways, and one way is to be worthy of them by living brave, good lives and making the world better. The effect of Esther's heroism upon the Jews has been to make them love their nation more, as well as honor her memory. And that is the true effect of an inspiring and noble life.

The King. The king, called in this book Ahasuerus, is known to secular history as Xerxes, and it was he who tried to invade Greece and was driven back so disastrously by those brave people. The book of Esther opens shortly after that event, when Xerxes had returned to his own country. It is possible he wished to display to his own followers that he was still glorious and powerful, and so he proclaimed a great feast. He invited all the important people of his vast empire and they came from far and near. He erected an immense tent capable of holding ten thousand guests, adorned it in the most magnificent manner, and in this his great feast was held. In addition he entertained the lords and governors elsewhere in the most magnificent way. He showed them his palaces, his jewels and his vast hoards of gold and silver.

The Feast. Then he assembled them for the feast. There they were served from vessels of pure gold, and every conceivable luxury was set before them, while all drank to excess of the wines provided. Such a royal feast is supposed to reveal to us high life, but in fact it shows us low life. The abundance, the luxury, the lavish display, cannot hide the fact that it was a drunken revel, disgraceful to human nature. The drunken men were in fact just as repulsive and beastly as the lowest outcast in his cups. Ahasuerus' real disposition came out as that of a boaster and a capricious tyrant. His queen, Vashti, was at the same time giving a feast to her ladies, but we may be sure it was of a different character, as she showed her womanly nature in all she did. The drunken king, having boasted of everything else, began to boast of his queen, declaring she was the most beautiful of women. Certain of his excited guests proclaimed their wish to behold her, and the king, to satisfy a drunken fancy, ignoring the law of the kingdom which forbade such an action, summoned the queen to the feast of men. Nobly did Vashti reveal her dignity of character in refusing to come. So is every good woman justified in declining to enter conditions that compromise her dignity and womanhood.

Vashti's Fall. It is not to be expected that a sane view of her conduct would be taken under the circumstances. The king should have been proud of her womanliness, but instead he was angered. His wine-inspired councillors declared he should make an example of her to other women; that if such an influence got abroad among their wives they would all rebel against what men bade them do. On such advice Ahasuerus declared he would divorce Vashti, which he did.

Esther Made Queen. Then he sought among the maidens of his empire for the most beautiful one to take the place of the ex-queen. She who proved to be the most charming was a Jewess, named in the Persian language Esther, or a star, and in the Hebrew, Hadassah, or myrtle. She was the adopted daughter of a Jew, Mordecai, who was also her cousin. They were of the people who did not return to Jerusalem at the restoration, and Mordecai held some position among the officials of the monarch. Esther became queen and gained great influence over the king.

It is extraordinary how events that seem small in themselves, and come as it were by accident, play a great part in the larger issues. This Mordecai, who was relatively obscure, and who, apparently, after her elevation to the throne, kept apart from Esther lest the fact that she was a Jewess should become known, happened to overhear certain conspirators who were planning to assassinate the king. He made the plot known and the would-be murderers were hanged. Record was made of the occurrence in the chronicles of the court, but in the hurry of events the king forgot to reward Mordecai. This happening proved later to be of great significance. We should not despise the relation of events to each other, but should do well the duty that is nearest and be sure every good deed will bear upon the future.

Haman's Pride. There are people who are never satisfied with what they have gained, no matter how much this may be, but are always reaching after more and more of honor or power. Haman was such a man. He was a high officer of the king, chief vizier, and he was possessed of so great authority that whenever he passed by, in his chariot on the streets or walking in the palace, all men rose up and bowed to him. But Mordecai, perhaps knowing the real character of the man, had often provoked Haman by refusing to stand up in his presence. This appears a trifling matter, but with Haman's disposition it became a great grievance. It was not enough that all other people should salute him; all was spoiled since one man did not. Others are often equally foolish. They forget the good they have and magnify what they do not have.

Mordecai's conduct became a thorn in the flesh of Haman, and since he could not kill him legally, he hit upon a plan to excite the hatred of the king against all Jews. Slandering the Jews to the monarch, he persuaded Ahasuerus to sign a decree authorizing a general slaughter of these people on a certain day.

Esther's Lack of Courage. Terrified at this dreadful news, Mordecai sought a private interview with queen Esther, urging that it was her duty to save her people, and that she herself might be in peril if it became known that she was a Jewess. She was a true woman, loyal to her people, anxious to save her relative Mordecai, and she determined to brave all difficulties to this end. But she faced the peril in her own way. She used shrewd judgment and all her faculties of charm. No one dared enter the presence of such an Oriental tyrant as Ahasuerus without special summons, and he had not asked for Esther in many days. But she must reach the king. She arrayed herself in her most beautiful garments and ventured into the throne room. Beside the king stood the axemen, ready at a signal from him to sever the head of man or woman if so commanded. On the throne sat the king, holding his golden scepter. There was the moment of suspense, and then the king smiled upon his beautiful queen and extended his scepter.

When graciously received and bade to offer her request, unto the half of his kingdom, she smilingly asked that the king and his vizier Haman accept her invitation to a banquet. Ahasuerus, in his gentlest mood, accepted. And from that feast Haman went to his home exulting over the honor done him, and dreaming of future honors, not knowing that a plan was being laid which would end sadly for him and his ambitions.

Practical Truths. 1. There is an opportuneness in duty. Mordecai said to Esther that she "had come to the kingdom for such a time as this." She had risen to such a height for the purpose of meeting a crisis in the affairs of her own race. She nobly met the crisis, was equal to the time and its demand. 2. It is by love for a cause, for God, for humanity, for country, for home, for righteousness that any become capable of rising to the performance of great duties. 3. Esther used the means at hand. She was not foolhardy, but wise and even shrewd. She risked life, it is true, but she was forced to do that to accomplish anything. When the king received her graciously, she did not spring on him suddenly her real object. She asked him to a feast. The best ends may be defeated by abrupt, too hasty words and actions.

ESTHER VI: 1-5.

THE SCRIPTURE ACCOUNT IS ESTHER 6:1-14.

Prayer: Our Father, Purify our hearts, we pray Thee, from all evil passions. Help us to guard against envy, hatred, jealousy and all malice. In the name of Christ. Amen.

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, B. C. 488. Place, Susa. Persons, Mordecai, Haman, Esther and Ahasuerus.

Scripture Setting: A Study of the Heart. A clean heart, Psa. 51:10. A bad heart, Psa. 55:21. A wise, 1 Kings 3:12. To God, Prov. 23:26. Abominations in, Prov. 26:25. Folly of trust in, Prov. 28:26. Keeping commandments with, Prov. 3:1. Law on, Prov. 3:3. Trust God with, Prov. 3:5. Retaining His words, Prov. 4:4. With diligence, Prov. 4:23. Worthlessness of wicked, Prov. 10:20.

Life and Conduct Setting: "Remark in Haman the stupendous and wonderful judgment of God."

For the impious Haman is most exultant and fearless as regards the preservation and augmentation of his dignity and power; and he is most certain also of the destruction of Mordecai, whom he prosecutes with hatred. But behold now the end of the thing. The impious and secure Haman shall perish with sudden destruction, while the pious and afflicted Mordecai is unexpectedly raised to the highest dignity. Let us therefore cast away all impious security and fear God; so that, walking according to the calling of God, we may be preserved though the sky fall and the earth be removed."

THE DEFEAT OF A WICKED PLOTTER.

At the first banquet Esther gave the king and Mordecai she requested Ahasuerus that he and his vizier should come a second time. He was so fascinated by his queen and her hospitality that he gladly granted her wish. When Haman boasted to his family that night of his honors, he confessed that all was marred by the fact that on his way to the queen's feast Mordecai declined again to salute him. But his wife appeased him by suggesting that he have Mordecai hanged, and he declared that this would be a good end of his foe. So sure did he feel he could carry out this infamy that he at once ordered a gallows to be made.

The Turning Point. The thoughts of the king that night differed from Haman's. He could not sleep, and after his custom he called for a scribe to read from the court chronicles. During those hours of diversion the account was rehearsed of what Mordecai had done to save the life of the king. Ahasuerus, in a moment of realization of his rescue from peril, learned that nothing had been done as a reward to Mordecai. He vowed he would honor him above all men in some manner.

On the very next morning Haman came to ask the king for permission to hang Mordecai, but the king, full of his enthusiasm for the man who had saved his life, broke in with a question as to what the king should do for the man he most delighted to honor. Haman, thinking himself to be the man, pictured a street scene in which he should be the central figure. The king should clothe the man with his own apparel, mount him on the king's horse, place his crown on his head, have the horse led by one of the greatest princes through the streets, and proclaim before him, "Thus shall it be done to the man whom the king delighteth to honor."

This dream of selfish glorification was speedily shattered when Ahasuerus bade him deal thus with Mordecai. That was perhaps the bitterest hour of Haman's life. All his plotting had come to nothing and he was personally forced to act that which seemed to him a degrading part. We may be sure that his voice rang with little enthusiasm as he called out the words of the king's proclamation.

Haman's End. Ashamed, humiliated, covering his head, he hastened home. But he had brief space to nurse his grief when a messenger came to take him to the queen's banquet. There came the dramatic climax of his troubles in which his insane folly had involved him. When the king, well pleased, bade Esther make further requests, she cried out for mercy upon her people. She reminded the king of the cruel decree and of the approaching slaughter of the Jews. The monstrous story touched the king and he demanded the author of such a villainy. Esther terrified Haman by pointing him out and declaring that it was his evil doing. Justice speedily followed, and Haman was suspended upon the gallows he had ordered for Mordecai. As the king's decree was irrevocable, it was met with a second decree permitting the Jews to arm themselves and make their defence. In this they were successful, so that comparatively few were harmed. Haman's house was presented to Mordecai and he was exalted to a high place and covered with many honors.

Results of Jealousy. All Haman's disasters arose from a groundless and needless jealousy. He was jealous of every one who had the least credit or position and who retained pride enough to refuse to bow to him, though it could not but be known that he was unworthy of his position. We enter the zone of danger whenever we allow this over-estimate of ourselves and under-estimation of others to find place in our lives. Haman not only had enough, but he had too much. "Ambition grows by what it feeds on." The appetite for praise becomes insatiable, monstrous, all-devouring.

Nothing is more perilous than attempts at vengeance for real or fancied wrongs. It starts trains of evil that go beyond our power to stop. It is like dealing with something too strong for us. It is an engine that gets up high speed while the man in the cab is ignorant of how to shut off the power. Haman could have lived a life of honor if he had chosen; could have continued a favorite of the king all his life, but in attempting to destroy another he destroyed himself.

The folly of his course is monstrously shown in the growth of his hatred until he was willing to slay thousands of innocent people who had never offended him in order to reach one single man. When the evil passions have way they become immeasurably cruel. No demon could have devised anything more irrational, unjust, merciless, than to plot to murder thousands of Jews in order to kill Mordecai. We should never forget that all evil hardens the heart. It is its very nature to do so. The cruelty of sin is unspeakable; nothing is considered that stands in its way; home, friendships, country, decency, honor, all are overridden; everybody concerned is trampled upon.

Mordecai's Advancement. Mordecai was justly honored. He quietly attended to the duties of his office. When he had opportunity to save the life of the king, he did so and made no fuss about it, did not advertise himself, did not complain when no reward came. He pursued his way. He effaced himself that Esther might be advanced; he kept away from the queen lest the knowledge that she was a Jewess would injure her. He did not seek her until a crisis arrived when it was evidently her duty to save her people. Mordecai did not speak for himself but for his race, and doubtless for the safety of the queen herself. When Mordecai was advanced after the death of Haman it appears that he fulfilled his duties in a sane, wise way for the honor of the king, the good of his own race, and the welfare of all the people.

Haman was an upstart. He is called "an Agagite," probably an Amalekite. Such a man would have a strong dislike of Jews. He had risen to power through one of those revolutions that occurred among Oriental monarchies, by which suddenly the ruling powers were destroyed, new rulers arose, and their followers, often of the basest kind, got to the top. If he had been born to power he would not have been so exacting as to every trifling sign of respect. It is of the nature of the upstart to suspect others if they omit the least observance or outward honor toward him.

In the overthrow of Haman and the exaltation of Mordecai we may behold the workings of the overruling Providence. While wrong is often temporarily enthroned, in the end the good comes into its own.

Envy produces all manner of evils. Caligula killed his own brother because he was handsome, while he himself was ugly. A Roman named Mutius was of such a notoriously envious disposition that one Publius said, when he observed that he looked sad, "Either some great calamity has happened to Mutius or some great good to another." Plutarch said in regard to Dionysius the tyrant, he "punished Philoxenus, the musician, out of envy because he could sing, and Plato, the philosopher, because he could dispute better than himself." Cambyes killed his brother Smerdis because he could draw a stronger bow than he or any of his party.

There is a Greek story of one who was envious of one of his fellow citizens to whom a statue had been erected. This man had been a victor in the public games. The other was so jealous of his reputation that he went several nights to the spot where the statue stood and strove to cast it down. After he had tried this several times he succeeded in moving it from its pedestal. But in its fall it crushed himself. This is the legitimate result of envy.

A youth who had been wronged by another visited an old hermit and told him he had made up his mind to be avenged. The good man tried to persuade him from his purpose in vain. Finally he said, "At least, my young friend, let us pray together before you execute your purpose." He began to pray thus, "It is no longer necessary, O God, that Thou shouldst defend this young man, and declare Thyself his protector, since he has taken upon himself the right of seeking his own revenge." This prayer so smote the youth's conscience that he fell on his knees and prayed for pardon for his wicked design.

Practical Truths. 1. It is essential that by a good life and kindly deeds you should deserve honor. If you do not meet with recognition, you will still have done your duty. If recognition comes, it should be utilized not for vainglory, but for further service. 2. We must always count upon the misunderstanding, dislike or hatred of a certain kind of people against righteousness and religion. 3. The Christian does not assume to be better in himself than others, but he strives to get on the right side with God, and that is the strong side. 4. Evil carries in itself the seeds of decay. Haman, being like a tree decaying at the heart, was certain to fall.

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, about 1520 B. C. Place, the Land of Uz, probably the Hauran. Persons, Job, Satan, Job's wife.

Scripture Setting: Study of the Design of Suffering. To prove men, Deut. 8:2, 3. To keep from the pit, Job 33:16-30. To refine, Mal. 3:3. To manifest works of God, John 9:2. To produce more fruit, John 15:2. For consolation and salvation, 2 Cor. 1:6. To manifest life of Jesus, 2 Cor. 4:11, 17. To chasten, Heb. 12:5-11. For glory of Christ, 1 Pet. 1:7. To perfect and establish, 1 Pet. 5:10.

Life and Conduct Setting: The Mystery of Pain. 1. Suffering makes the most thoughtless to think. 2. The Bible reveals the goodness of God even in the most painful experiences. 3. One of the greatest problems in the world is that of the existence of pain and evil. 4. The wife of Job was blind to the deeper meaning of events. There is in fact light beyond the pain. 5. Nearly every good in human nature and in the world has come to us out of sacrifice and pain. 6. All suffering is not punishment for sin, though sin brings dreadful consequences. 6. God chastens as a Father. God desires to have us grow into the best possible men and women. The best people who have ever lived have believed most firmly in the value of the trials that came to them. 7. Remember that the common view of un-Christian men and women is sure to be wrong. Let us look to the Word of God for such views of life and experience as are noble, high, ennobling and strengthening.

HOW A GOOD MAN TRIUMPHED.

A Real Hero. There is no greater literature in the world than the book of Job, and no more pathetic; but no more heroic figure ever marched across the stage, upon which the mighty drama of life is being enacted. His was a soul well worth that desperate game which the devil played. And what a devil! Cynical, subtle, malignant, the utter incarnation of evil. The thought that a Titanic personality like this is striving perpetually to break down the characters we build with such pain and struggle is a solemn one, indeed.

Behold the grand old victim of this fiendish malignity; object of this supernal trial; vicarious offering to the list of the world's heroes, passing across the stage in solemn dignity; scraping his boils with a broken piece of pottery; sitting down to rest his aching bones upon a heap of ashes, but calm, serene, composed! It is, indeed, a sight to thrill the hearts of men and angels. Stripped of his property; cast down from his high estate; deserted by friends and maligned by the wife of his bosom, he stands like a rock in an ocean of sorrows, immovable, impregnable, sublime! I would rather have seen the unconquerable Job upon his ash heap than Hannibal crossing the Alps, or Cæsar the Rubicon. It is a nobler sight than Demosthenes or Cicero in the agora or the forum. No other struggle is so sublime as a moral struggle; no victory so grand as a spiritual conquest.

If you look on the wrong or back side of a piece of tapestry, while it is being woven, it seems all wrong. There is apparently no plan to the work. All is confusion. Yet the weaver works according to a pattern that is plain to him, and at the end the beauty of it is revealed. So God works, as it were, from behind the scenes; we do not see the pattern in His mind. But we are foolish if we conclude there is no plan in His work. In due time all its beauty will be seen.

A Foolish Wife. In the whole great story nothing is more dramatic than the appearance of Job's wife. Wringing her hands she comes; beating her breast, tearing her hair, and uttering wild reproaches. Her shrill voice rises above the din of traffic. A crowd gathers around, to ridicule and enjoy. Blushing for shame and trembling with sorrow she utters that mad, immortal interrogation, "Dost thou still preserve thine integrity?" "I have seen something of this world, and there are but two kinds of women in it,—those who take the strength out of a man and those who put it back," said the old Sahiba, in Rudyard Kipling's story "Kim."

Integrity. Of course Job preserved his integrity! It is the glory of all God-inspired manhood that it still preserves its integrity; through good report and evil report; prosperity and adversity; success and failure. George Washington and Abraham Lincoln still preserved their integrity, even when friends deserted and enemies stabbed them in the back. "Chinese" Gordon preserved his integrity even when the savage Moslems stormed the walls of Khartoum. Joseph preserved his integrity, and so did Daniel, although assailed by temptations fierce as hell itself. "Integrity!" Sound, whole, unimpaired, unbroken manhood, womanhood, boyhood, girlhood! This is what God demands and expects of every one of us. An "integer" is a complete person, or thing. Job was as whole a man in his temptation, and after it, as before. Trials reduce some men to fragments, as a stone does a gas lamp on a street corner. Troubles turn others into such tatterdemalions as a thaw makes of a snow man. How few of us came out of the terrible struggle—whole! There is a picture of a boy climbing over a fence and crying out exultantly, "He never touched me"—although a big dog on the ground has his mouth full of pantaloons! What the boy meant was—he never touched myself! He may, indeed, have torn my trousers, but the real me is as whole as a dollar! Many a boy and girl, many a man and woman, comes out of the conflict in tattered clothing, but with body and soul unbroken!

"Renounce God and die," said the foolish woman (trying to take more strength out of the man). Renounce God and you will die! It is like renouncing sunlight or air—the absolute conditions of existence. Imagine a kitten in a basket renouncing its mother's milk. Imagine a hollyhock in a garden renouncing the rain! Imagine a little boy in a street renouncing his father's hand! Love, hope, joy, peace (those soul essentials), can no more live without the presence of God in the heart than a tree can live without sap in its veins.

If I did not see God when I look at the world or into my own heart, I should be staggered, like a man who should look into a mirror and not see his face. No man could survive the shock.

There is a story of an American in Paris who had spent all his money and decided one evening to kill himself that night. While he was in his room, making ready for the act, a robber entered and tied him in his chair and left him there unable to carry out his design. The next morning the mail carrier arriving with the mail, unfastened him and handed him a letter. The letter announced that he had inherited a fortune through the death of a relative in America. That letter was already almost within his reach the night before when he was contemplating suicide. He was rich without being aware of it.

"What? Shall we receive good at the hands of God and shall we not receive evil"—also!

All the noblest spirits of all the ages have also felt like that. "A man is born, not for prosperity, but to suffer for the benefit of others; like the noble rock-maple which all around our villages bleeds for the service of people," said Emerson; and Huxley has left behind him this noble personal testimony, "I cannot but think that he who finds a certain proportion of pain and evil inseparably woven up in the life of the very worms, will bear his own share with more courage and submission."

It is the greatest of all arts to expect troubles without anticipating them. We know that they must come, and yet we ought not to permit them to take us by surprise and bowl us over. You would think, to hear the average man and woman whimper and fret when the commonplace sorrows of life fall upon them, that they had never seen others suffer! It may not make the pain less to have been prepared for adversity, but it does take away the sting of surprise and astonishment. You know you have to take the bitter with the sweet; how then does it happen that you can not do so with quietness and submission? Why do you not meet trouble with the patience of Job; or with the heroism of a Huxley?

"Out of the night that covers me,
Black as the pit from pole to pole,
I thank whatever Gods there be,
For my unconquerable soul.
In the fell clutch of circumstance,
I have not winced nor cried aloud;
Under the bludgeonings of Chance,
My head is bloody, but unbowed.
It matters not how straight the gate,
How charged with punishment the scroll,
I am the master of my fate,
I am the Captain of my soul."

The leaders of the Roman republican party at the battle of Philippi, when they saw they were defeated, believed their cause at an end. Brutus and his friends slew themselves on the battlefield in despair. Yet shortly afterwards the tide turned in favor of liberty. They slew themselves too soon. So all err who give way to despair and fail to have patience until a favorable change comes.

Practical Truths. 1. There is an Adversary. The more we realize that the better. We get ready for the trial when we know that it is to be one. 2. Job's wife thought his religion had proved to be useless. She had the heart of a heathen. 3. It is a sad thing to misjudge God. We should try to be fair with men, and much more with God. To misinterpret the kindness of God grieves Him. 4. "Sin is not only vile, but foolish; it offends against our true interests as well as against God's honor." 5. Times of adversity are those which prove who are and who are not our real friends. How precious is sympathy and good counsel at such times. 6. Paradoxes lie all through the New Testament; and one may walk on them, like stepping-stones, from side to side. Sorrow is joy. Death is life. Down is up. Weakness is strength. Loss is gain. Defeat is victory. The world's mightiest men, the very monarchs of its joy, are they who died deaths daily.

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, B. C. 1520. Place, the Land of Uz. Persons, Job and his friends.

Scripture Setting: Study of Immortality. Through transition, Gen. 5:24. By the chariot of fire, 2 Kings 2:11. In God's presence, Psa. 16:10. Assurance of, Psa. 23:6. God receives soul, Psa. 49:15. Man's spirit goes upward, Eccl. 3:21. Returns to God, Eccl. 12:7. Of life and death, Dan. 12:2, 3. Eternal life, Matt. 25:46. God of the living, Mark 12:26. Life through Christ, John 3:14, 16, 36. Gift of Christ, John 10:28.

Life and Conduct Setting: "As surely as that Christ, our Redeemer, is risen from death by His power and is entered into glory, so surely will all who believe in Him rise again to eternal life by His Divine power. The Messiah is in such wise the Living One, yea more, the Life itself, in that He proves Himself to be the Living One by making us alive. This is the best comfort in the extremity of death, that as Christ rose again from the dead, therefore we shall arise with Him."—Starke.

A BLESSED HOPE.

At the beginning of this great tragedy we behold a man tormented with physical pain and overwhelmed with the sense of financial loss. But his experience widens and deepens as the full consciousness of what he has to endure is gradually disclosed. He begs for help, but no one hears; he invokes justice, but it is everywhere denied; he finds himself despised and stripped of his glory; hope has been plucked up like a tree; wrath has been kindled against him; his enemies have encamped upon his trail; his acquaintances are strangers; his kinsfolk have failed him; his familiar friends have passed him by; his servants refuse to answer when he calls, and the wife of his bosom, together with his children, repudiate his affection and scorn his name.

Anguish. The misery of man becomes at times complete. His agony can not be exaggerated. Even Shakespeare could not portray the grief of Lear in all its unconsolable wretchedness. People actually suffer up to a pitch of intensity which no extra amount of pain could increase. And to this point Job had come. He could not express himself, for such grief is inarticulate. He could only moan and wish in vain that the awful torment could be adequately described.

"Oh! if my feelings could be uttered.

"Oh! if they could be written in a book.

"Oh! that with an iron pen and leaden hammer they could be carved upon a rock!"

Thank God, that such grief is sometimes cured by reaction. The advancing tide of the ocean even, can only go so high, then breaks and ebbs. And so sorrow (even oceanic sorrow) is broken by its own impotency. Upon the heels of his despairing outburst there follows a sudden calm; a wonderful peace, an uplifting hope. Up from the depths of his spirit arose a sublime conviction. A star appeared suddenly above the dark horizon. He felt a strange security.

Hope. "In spite of all, I feel (I know) that there is salvation from this sorrow! There must be somewhere a Divine Spirit of love and consolation. It is inconceivable that existence should form an unmitigable curse. There is; there must be; it is necessary that there should be, a great and powerful Saviour. I know that my Redeemer liveth! You need not ask me how I know! I know!

"I know that He will come to earth and mingle among men, bearing their sorrows; enduring their griefs."

"I know that death does not end all; but that, emerging from this body, my soul like the life of a seed, shall arise in a new and exalted state, in which I shall be able to recognize this Divine being."

"I know that I shall see Him for myself! His being and nature shall not be revealed to me second-hand! I shall not behold Him through a stranger's eye, but through mine own!"

That many people besides Job have had convictions as profound as these, there is not any room to doubt. The pages of the world's literature abound with narratives of the sublime revelations that have come to great souls; of the certainty of eternal life, eternal consolation and eternal justice!

"I believe with all my soul; I feel, I know with certainty that, dying, I shall be happy. I shall enter a world more real!" exclaimed Tolstoi on his eightieth birthday.

At a dinner given to him in Paris, Victor

Hugo, in an impromptu address exclaimed with resistless conviction and eloquence: "When I go down to the grave, I can say I have finished my day's work; but I cannot say I have finished my life. My days will begin again the next morning. The tomb is not a blind alley; it is a thoroughfare. It closes in the twilight, to open on the dawn."

Faith. Why should we not believe these words of the great seers? To their testimony we lesser people ought to pin our faith, for they are men who speak as they are moved by the Holy Spirit. Theirs are souls which are strangely sensitive to the unseen universe. As the sensitive plant vibrates to the tread of the hoofs of horses entirely out of the sight or hearing of men, so their spirits are agitated by influences which average people do not feel at all. No greater folly can be committed than that of placing the testimony of the great "materialists" above that of these mysteriously sensitised beings. It is not to the man accustomed to examine and test the physical elements alone, that we should refer the problems of the spiritual world! We ought to pin our faith to the great experts of the spiritual universe, like the author of this book.

And so ought we to pin our faith to those ideas which exert the most powerful influence for good, like those in this sublime passage about the "living Redeemer." Multitudes of people are dominated by the cares and feelings which belong to the lower realms of man's existence. Can anything be stranger than their not seizing with insistent eagerness upon those that have made the world better? "Give me a great thought to rest my head and heart upon," said a dying philosopher. It is the great thought that we need!

High Ideals. There is another thing. We owe it to ourselves to govern our lives by the best and noblest thoughts and emotions which visit our own souls. We may not be inspired prophets, but we all are visited by great, as well as feeble thoughts. Why then is it that so many people govern their lives by the thoughts that come in the ebb tides, when the whole head is sick and the whole heart faint? Instead of remaining under the dominion of the cynical or skeptical thoughts that came to him when crushed by the sense of his loss, Job put himself at beck and call of the mighty faith that welled up from the depth of his nature, in that supreme moment of victory. What we need is the hope inspired by those exalted moods! With such hopes burning in our hearts we can survive the loss of all things.

Before Alexander set out for Asia, he divided his kingdom among his friends. "What have you left for yourself, my lord?" asked Perdicas. "Hope," he replied. "If it is good enough for Alexander, it is good enough for Perdicas," said the young nobleman. It is good enough for any one!

No mother, sorrowing over the loss of a little child; no man, contemplating the wreck of his business; no ambitious youth, defeated and baffled in the attempt to realize his fondest dreams, could be cast down utterly with a hope like that of Job's illuminating the pathway over which he had to go.

A bulbous root found in the hand of a mummy three thousand years old, when placed in the earth grew and blossomed into a beautiful flower. If the life of a root can be thus retained in darkness for so long a period, does it not well-nigh demonstrate the persistence of the spirit of man?

A certain lord had, according to the old custom, a fool to make jests for him. He gave him a staff and bade him keep it till he met a greater fool than himself. Some years later, the lord became ill, and seemed likely to die. The fool visited him, and his master said, "I must shortly leave you." "Where are you going?" asked the fool. "Into another world." "And when will you return? within a month?" "No." "Within a year?" "No." "When then?" "Never." "Never? And what provision have you made for entertainment where you are going?" "None at all." "None at all?" cried the fool. "Here, then, take my staff, for with all my folly, I am not guilty of such folly as this."

Practical Truths. 1. A vivid faith in Heaven is one of the most practical forces for right living. "He who has no hope of immortality but half lives." 2. Belief in another life is the greatest consolation in the midst of the trials of this. 3. There is nothing more reasonable than the conviction that God does not build up merely to tear down. 5. We can keep the faith of eternal life real to us by daily giving it a place in our thoughts. 6. We must strive by all means, by prayer, by study of God's Word, by entertaining sound and wise ideas, to keep before us the reality of Heaven.

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, B. C. 1520. Place, the Land of Uz. Persons, Job, Eliphaz, Bildad and Zophar.

Scripture Setting: Study of Prayer for Others. Abraham for Sodom, Gen. 18:23-32. For Abimelech, 20:17, 18. Abraham's servant for his master, Gen. 24:12. Jacob for his children, Gen. 49. Life and Conduct Setting: "The inward restoration of Job; his deliverance from the errors which had beclouded his heart and his knowledge, and his penitent submission under God's righteousness and gracious will, is immediately followed by his outward restoration and redemption. This comes to pass in immediate connection with the sharp rebuke which God visits upon Job's friends because of their unreasonably harsh condemnation of him, and also in connection with the brotherly prayer which Job offers in their behalf, thus heaping coals of fire on their heads."—Lange.

HOW A PRAYER WORKED WONDERS.

Turning Point. In every human life there are pivotal points upon which its destinies turn as on a hinge. One man's turned, for example, upon a conversation. Perhaps it was the thoughtful advice of a friend; perhaps it was the malignant sneer of an enemy; possibly it was an accidental word overheard on the street. At any rate, upon it his whole career turned around. From a bad man he became a good one; or from a good, a bad one. Another man's turns upon an accident; another, upon an incident; another, upon a chance acquaintance. Nothing seems more incredible or unreasonable than the power of mere trifles to deflect the careers of men to Heaven or hell; but no fact is more demonstrable and no experience more real.

Job's destiny turned upon a prayer. All that he had endured was impotent to restore him to his right mind or lead him into the right path, until at last he prayed! That prayer proved revolutionary in its effect. A skeptic would not have believed it. "What difference can a prayer make with him?" a skeptic would have asked. "He will be just the same after he prays as before." But he was not! No sooner had all the pent up feelings of his burdened soul poured out, than a great change came over him. Up to that moment his thoughts and hopes and purposes had, as it were, been carrying a ball and chain upon their feet. After that moment they were freed! His chains fell off. The door of his prison was opened. He passed into liberty.

The Change. Upon a thousand different kinds of prayers the destinies of men have turned. One man has to pray a prayer of penitence before his captivity is turned. Another must offer a prayer of self-surrender. Another of forgiveness, another of aspiration. Job had to offer a prayer for the men who tortured his spirit with their criticisms and confused his thoughts with their false philosophies. He had tried in every other way to be rid of them and, at last, he prays. He prayed for their help and enlightenment, and suddenly a great change came over his own thoughts and feelings. He felt a new kindness and a new peace. Nor did the change confine itself to his interior life, but was reflected in the outer world. Everything began to "come his way." He could not understand it. It seemed to him, as to so many, no doubt, impossible that one little prayer could extricate a man from so many troubles and bring about so many wonderful and happy changes. But it was true.

Prosperity Returns. Yes, everything began to "come his way." His brothers and sisters, who had deserted him in his sorrow, were seen wending their ways toward the place where he sat in the ashes. Even those casual acquaintances who had turned up their noses at him in his adversity called to wish him well. They brought him food to eat; they expressed their sympathy with him in his troubles; they loaned and they gave him their money. Once more his crops made good. Again he heard the welcome evidences of cattle in his fields. Fourteen thousand sheep; six thousand camels; a thousand yoke of oxen, and a thousand she asses came lowing and bleating around him. Above all, it fairly rained children and little grandchildren, and the old man's heart was full of joy.

The Seed and The Harvest. Do not let any one persuade you that these events were too great to be the consequences of one little prayer. No events are too great to be the consequences of the least causes! A loud shout from the lips of a mountain climber in the Alps has started an avalanche, which destroyed a village. The pressure of a man's thumb upon an electric button has set in motion the machinery of national expositions thousands of miles away. A single sentence flashed through the telegraph wires across a continent has depreciated the value of stocks, into the millions. A wireless message for help shot out into the darkness of night has summoned a fleet to the help of a sinking vessel. The shot of a cannon precipitated a civil war. The decision of a man to cross a little river in Italy established a Roman empire. The sound of a hammer on the door of a cathedral brought forth a reformation.

When the books are opened at the last great day, the assembled multitudes are certain to hear stories of the efficacy of single prayers, that will fill the universe with wonder. Some feeble petition, uttered centuries ago by the lips of an obscure man or woman, will be proven to have been the source of immeasurable revolutions in the thoughts and feelings of the world. That prayer of Jesus on the cross, for example, "Father, forgive them, they know not what they do." Who can establish the boundary lines of its influence? The effects which it produced are widening yet, and will until the heavens are old and the stars grow cold, and the leaves of the judgment book unfold.

Who knows how to measure the consequences of that prayer which (nobody can doubt) the mother of Moses put up to Heaven, when she launched the little boat which bore her baby to the feet of a royal princess! No, do not for one moment be disturbed by the sneers of the doubters of prayer. They laugh at us for our simplicity and ignorance. We pity them for theirs!

"You are hopelessly ignorant! I do not believe you know how many letters there are in the alphabet," exclaimed a teacher to a little boy. "But neither do you know how many letters there are in the post office," he replied.

We Christians may know but little about the great mysteries of life; but we cannot help but think that the skeptic knows much less. At any rate, we do not propose stupidly to lose the mighty possibility of influence opened to us by prayer. If it does no one else good when we pray, it does ourselves. Whatever effect his prayer for his friends had, Eliphaz, Bildad and Zophar, it turned the captivity of Job.

Illustrations.

Alexander the Great visited the noted Greek philosopher Diogenes and asked him if there was anything he could do for him. The abrupt reply was, "I want nothing but that you should stand from between me and the sun." Doubts, fears, unbelieving persons, sins, get between us and the light, and we need to get these out of the way.

When George Stephenson, inventor of the railway engine, was on a visit to Sir Robert Peel, in company with some other celebrities, they observed a railway train dashing along. "Now," said Stephenson, turning to one of his friends, "I have a poser for you. Can you tell what is the power that is driving that train?" "Well," his friend began, "I suppose it is one of your big engines." "But what drives the engines?" "Oh, very likely a canny Newcastle driver." "What do you say to the light of the sun?" "How can that be?" "It is nothing else," replied Stephenson, "it is light bottled up in the earth for tens of thousands of years, light absorbed by plants and vegetables being necessary for the condensation of carbon during the process of their growth, if it be not carbon in another form; and now, after being buried in the earth for long ages in fields of coal, that latent light is again brought forth and liberated—made to work, as in that locomotive, for great human purposes."

So it is light from God that moves human life in right directions. It was light that cheered Job after all his troubles.

When John Knox was dying, he was asked if he had "hope." He was unable to speak but he raised his finger and pointed upwards. It is hope that carries us through all our troubles. Job had been in the depths and now he was coming into the light. During the worst he had been supported by hope that the issue of all his tribulations would be good.

Practical Truths. 1. Often friends speak ungently and unfeelingly because they do not understand. 2. The better and loftier view of the problems of life comes after passing through lower and ignobler views. A better understanding of great problems comes by experience. 3. Presenting any interest before God in prayer is certain to give us a better view of it and to put us into a different attitude toward it. 4. To pray for people is to learn to take a new interest in them and to see them in a new light. 5. Job's experiences and their issue in his restored happiness on earth contradict the oft-times repeated error that religion is chiefly for a future life. His godliness triumphed in the present life. It is gross injustice to religion, gross misrepresentation, to defer its benefits to the hereafter.

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, about 1052 B. C. Author, David. Place of composition unknown, but this Psalm was probably written in Jerusalem.

Scripture Setting: The Righteous Contrasted with the Wicked. Tested and hated, Psa. 11:5. Protected and afflicted, Psa. 32:10. Kept and cut off, Psa. 37:17-22. Prosperity of each, Psa. 73:1-28. A chain of contrasts, Prov. 10:15; 21; 22; 28. Rewards, Rom. 2:7-10. With and without hope, 1 Pet. 4:18. Children of God and Devil, 1 John 3.

Life and Conduct Setting: "Blessed"—see how this Book of Psalms opens with a benediction, even as did the Sermon of our Lord upon the Mount! The word 'blessed' is a very expressive one. The original word is plural. Hence we may learn the multiplicity of the blessings which shall rest upon the man whom God hath justified, and the perfection and greatness of the blessedness he shall enjoy. May the like benediction rest on us!"—Spurgeon.

"As the book of the Canticles is called the Song of Songs because it is the most excellent, so this Psalm may not unfitly be entitled the Psalm of Psalms, for it contains the very pith and essence of Christianity."—Thomas Watson.

GRANDFATHER'S APPLE TREE.

Commenting on this wonderful psalm is like trying to improve a lily with a coat of paint and varnish. When a group of beholders watch the sun go down, the fool expatiates but the philosopher is silent. And yet, in every art gallery and library there must be an interpreter. Not every one possesses insight, penetrative power, ability to comprehend, and those who do must therefore teach. The thing to be careful of, is, blowing one's own thoughts upon transparent loveliness like this and letting it freeze like your breath on a widow pane, so that neither yourself nor anybody else can see through it.

There is a legend in the Orient that tells of a marvelous tree. On it there grew apples of gold and bells of silver. When a breeze arose and moved the branches a shower of these apples fell and the bells rang sweetly. Pure religion makes the righteous bear golden fruits, and the harvesting is accompanied by great joy.

Blessedness. We cannot go astray if we begin by saying that there is such a thing as "blessedness." The beatitudes of life are real. More ways than one are known to put the soul in a beatific state. Blessed is the man who is loved by a good woman. Blessed are the parents who have dear and obedient children. Blessed is the little child which grows up in a home where love abides. Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord. Blessed are the pure in heart; the merciful; the mourners; the seekers after God; etc., almost ad infinitum. Do not doubt this for a moment. You may yourself be miserable, unhappy and dissatisfied. It may appear to you that every one in the world is wretched and rebellious. But you are wrong! There are millions who are in a state of mental peace; of blessedness. They have simply found the path which you have missed.

Wickedness. No one, in the whole long history of the human race, has found blessedness by walking in the counsel of the ungodly nor standing in the way of sinners, nor sitting in the seat of the scornful! You might as well expect to find partridges, if you were a hunter, by walking down a city street; or an alms, if you were a beggar, by standing on the north pole; or a dinner, if you were hungry, by sitting on a camp stool in a desert. Wickedness, sinfulness, and scornfulness cannot produce blessedness any more than fire, acid and dynamite can produce flowers and fruit. They have their inalienable characteristics, which can no more be separated from them than qualities from substances, as for example: acid from a lemon, or bitterness from gall. They agitate the soul and drive men along as wind does chaff. Look sharply at a crowd of wicked people, old or young, and see. They are restless, uneasy, impatient, rampant and perturbed. They wander about the house, the town, the world. I have seen an autumn wind sweep down a street, gather up the leaves and send them whirling before it, as a victorious regiment puts its enemies to flight. And in a rout like this sin sweeps its victims along a troubled pathway to the grave.

Righteousness. But the righteous are not so! They are like trees planted by the streams of water, bringing forth unwithering leaves and incorruptible fruit. Is there anything else in the world more like a good man than a tree? No wonder that we love those beautiful emanations of the Divine Spirit of life! "Under the shade of a tree

Gotama was born; under the shade of a tree he overcame the god of the world and the fear of death. Under the shade of a tree he preached his first sermon clothed in a shroud; under the shade of a tree he died. Between men and trees there is a mysterious kinship. Our Saviour loved to compare men to trees. "Like them," he said, "we must bear fruit." Now and then, we have to be patient with and cultivate them as the gardner does the tree, and give them a chance. But, at last, they must yield fruit or go down under the axe. Like a grand and noble tree with its roots amidst the living springs of water stands a true man, yielding year by year his never-failing crops.

Fruitfulness. In the rear of my grandfather's house stood a magnificent old, sweet harvest apple tree, which became my earliest symbol of bountifulness. I never knew it to fail of a crop; nor have I ever seen such apples since. We little people used fairly to live among its wide-spreading branches. From our various points of advantage we watched each apple as it slowly ripened in the sun and turned to gold. In the mornings we scrambled out of bed and rushed half-dressed to see if any of them had fallen to the ground. To munch one of them on the road to the swimming pool or eat it cut up in a bowl of milk was bliss. Our faith in the tree was boundless. We should as soon have expected to look up in the sky and see no stars; into the old well and see no water; into our mother's face and see no smiles, as into the branches of that old, sweet harvest tree and see no apples!

Then, as our comprehension of life deepened, the tree became a symbol of the old grandfather. He, too, bore fruit! To him also, we could go with perfect assurance of finding a crop! No more than the old apple tree did he refuse us a smile, a kindly word, a helping hand, a loving look. Before he died he all but impoverished himself by his gifts to his children. Is it not blessedness to live like that?

Of course, not every human life can be so very bountiful in fruit as those of the "great hearts" of history; but we must never forget that the mission of some men, like that of some of our trees, may be the bearing of only nuts, and even leaves.

We knew of a stranger who built a costly house in a beautiful suburb where the residents in general cultivated and highly prized their trees. The whole place was like a park. But this man prepared for the building of his home by cutting away all the trees on his grounds in order to have an open lawn. After the house was finished, he changed his mind and went to live elsewhere. Then he wished to sell the property in which he had invested much money. But those who came to inspect it, while they admired the house, were disappointed at the absence of trees, and declined to buy. The property remained unsold for several years, until other trees had time to grow.

Generousness. There is a charming tradition in China of a tree in the cemetery where the body of Confucius lies buried, any one of whose leaves, laid upon a difficult passage in his writing, will shed a mysterious interpretative light, by means of which its meaning may be known. Such a tree as that would not be worthless even though it never bore an apple, a peach, or a nut! Let's try to shed our leaves and fruit; not be like one of those trees which have to be clubbed before you can get anything from it, fit to eat! And do not be like the maple tree, whose hard bark has to be bored into to make the sap run! Shake your own boughs! Exude your own sap! Be generous, be bountiful! Keep on bearing fruit—no matter who gets it and no matter who appreciates it. Say to the world—here is my gift to the race. Take it, or leave it. My mission it to produce it.

Practical Truths. 1. It is not enough to avoid evil and to keep separate from bad companions. This Psalm presents a positive side. "His delight is in the law of the Lord." Observe the "don'ts," at the same time follow the "dos." Positive goodness should be our delight. 2. There are stages in wrong-doing. There is a beginning time and act. First the sinner merely walks by. Then he stops, stands. Presently he is seated among the scornful. 3. It is pleasant to realize that God has knowledge of our ways, if we are true and loyal. He who does right is not alone, is not unobserved. God sees and approves. 4. Religion does not hinder happiness, but furthers it. The Bible and Christian experience prove that real and abiding welfare and joy come alone through well-doing. 5. There is a mocking play on the saying, "Be good and you will be happy," which asserts, "Be good and you will be lonely." That is false. It is sin that is lonely. Sin separates the best friends.

THE SCRIPTURE LESSON IS PSALMS 2:7-12.

Prayer: Lord Jesus, The world is Thine, for Thou madest it; and I am Thine, for Thou gavest me being, and that I might usefully live here and afterwards live forever, Thou wast born in a manger and didst die upon the cross. I come to Thee to offer my allegiance and service, praying that the kings of earth and princes of the people may all bow to Thee, Thou Prince of Peace and King of kings. Amen.

King of kings, and Lord of lords!

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: An ancient Hebrew song of royalty, prophetic in teaching. A poem of four stanzas of three verses each, the lesson including only the last two stanzas. Written undoubtedly by David, and so credited in Acts 4:25, 26. Quoted with chapter number in Acts 13:33. See other quotations, Heb. 1:5, 5:5. The one place mentioned (verse 6) refers to Jerusalem. Three speakers, Jehovah, the Messiah, and the Psalmist.

Scripture Setting: Steps to the Throne. Making a way for the King. Isa. 40:3-10. The missionary commission. Matt. 28:16-20. True nature of idols. Isa. 44:9-20. The wrath of royalty. Rev. 6:15-17. Allegiance of earthly kings. Isa. 60:1-12. Christ's coronation. Rev. 14:14-20.

Life and Conduct Setting: This passage sets forth the opposing powers in the age-long struggle for the world-wide kingdom. 1. Christ's right as universal King rests on His work as Creator, His love as Redeemer, and His life as a perfect example. 2. Those subjects alone are worthy of prayer which embrace humanity and touch eternity. 3. The rule of the kingdom is service—the greatest is greatest in service. 4. National idols to be broken are the goddess of pleasure, the calf of gold, and the blindfolded god of unbelief. 5. That nation is most Christian which most fully exhibits the Divine Fatherhood and human brotherhood.

THINE IS THE KINGDOM.

The Royal Decree Published. Only in the history and character of Christ can we find a sufficient explanation for the prophetic language of this Psalm. Its imagery of forces fiercely contending reflects the war-like events of David's reign. The king was forced to assert himself against many plotting foes. Following an ancient royal custom Christ is represented as inaugurating His reign by proclaiming the fundamental law upon which His government rests—His Divine Sonship. Christ's relation as Son of God gives Him the right to universal dominion. Historically the Catholic faith has rested its claim upon the authority of the church, while the Protestant faith has rested upon the authority of the Bible. It would seem here that the true foundation is the personality of Jesus, the same yesterday, today, and forever.

Prayer and Missions. "Ask of me and I will give thee the nations." When they complained to the Marquis of Salisbury about his colonial policies he answered their little minds by saying, "Gentlemen, you need to study larger maps." Christ thought in the terms of continents and taught us to pray, "Thy will be done on earth." The purpose of prayer is not to drag God down to our narrow plans and feeble policies, but to lift us up to God's imperial and ageless purpose. Men can do nothing so far-reaching as to pray, for prayer links each separate life to all other life, both human and Divine. A man cannot remain selfish and provincial if he truly prays. Some men pray only when driven into a corner, and then with a spirit of pessimism they exclaim, "There is nothing else left to do but pray!" That is the lowest view of prayer. This lesson puts prayer before us as the first privilege. It calls for a church-wide enlistment for world-wide evangelism. It is the imperial view. Through prayer we are led to the mountain top of the Great Commission where the imperial mind of our Lord is revealed in four directions,—to boundless space, "Go ye into all the world," to boundless need, "to every creature," to boundless truth, "all things which I have commanded you," to boundless time, "I will be with you always."

Thy Possessions—the Uttermost Parts of the Earth. How true is it that those nations which have withstood Christ have been broken with a rod of iron, and dashed in pieces like a potter's vessel. Herod and Pilate passed, Rome and Greece perished, but Christ and His Kingdom live. Christianity is more than a hope that lingers around Joseph's rock-hewn tomb; it is a living, pervasive, conquering force.

Uihern, the historian, says, "Never in the whole course of human history have two such unequal powers stood opposed to each other as ancient heathenism and early Christianity, the Christian church and the Roman state, apparently the weakest of forces confronting the strongest." Yet follow Christianity's growing force. In 300 years Paul's epistles were the Magna Charta of the Roman empire; in a thousand years there were 50,000,000 Christians; in 1,500 years there were 100,000,000; in 1,800 years there were 200,000,000; and in the twentieth century there are 400,000,000. In fact in the year of our Lord 1910 there were 800,000,000 people living under Christian government. This is the testimony of history. Christ is possessing His own.

The Iron Scepter. He who wept over Jerusalem and prayed for His enemies spoke also the austere words man ever heard as He pictured the doom of His enemies. He was walking the very ground where He saw in anticipation a century later the Tenth Roman legion encamped. In that most terrible siege on record thousands died from the horrors of famine; 97,000 of the Jews were taken prisoners; and 1,100,000 perished. For planting that central cross and shouting "His blood be upon us and upon our children" Jerusalem saw later the ground so thickly planted with crosses bearing crucified Jews that there was no more room.

The idols of the heathen are rapidly being shattered in our day. Our God is a jealous God who will have no other gods before Him. At the Laymen's Missionary Congress in Chicago a missionary declared that in northern China there are great stretches where the vast temples of heathendom are being converted into schools. The gods of the temple are sometimes piled together into some little room, where they are kept for a year or two until the people forget; then they are burned or cast into the sea. The idols of the heathen are to be dashed in pieces like a potter's vessel. The overthrow of idolatry is to be complete.

An Ideal Reign. After Jehovah and Messiah both have spoken David himself utters the concluding words of this Psalm. He calls upon rulers in general to serve with godly fear. One is reminded of David's last words as he looks backward on his own reign, and forward to Solomon's:

"One that ruleth over men righteously,
That ruleth in the fear of God."

These two ideas, justice to men, reverence to God, not only guided David in the duties of his realm, but were deemed worthy to be handed down to other kings as changeless principles.

Victoria, it is said, believed her family history could be traced back to David's royal line. When, in 1837, she was crowned at Westminster Abbey the young girl was instructed to remain seated while all others stood during the singing of the halleluiahs chorus of the Messiah. But her religious feelings gained the ascendancy over her regard for court decorum, and she fell upon her knees before her Christ, her young face diffused with tears. It was a favorable omen of her long and glorious reign. She never forgot that she was "Victoria by the grace of God."

The Gospel of Reconciliation. In ancient times princes were kissed in token of homage. When Samuel the prophet anointed Saul as Israel's future king he kissed him as a sign that Jehovah had made him ruler (1 Sam. 10:1). It behooves all, says David, to kiss the Son, lest by His anger ye perish. It was considered an unpardonable offense not to pay the full respect due to royalty.

When Xerxes passed over the bridge of the Hellespont the whole distance was strewn with branches, while the burning of rare perfumes filled the air. When Alexander entered Babylon they scattered flowers. When Queen Elizabeth came to a miry place in the road young Walter Raleigh took off his new and costly mantle and spread it on the ground to protect her feet. Christ had His day of triumph as He entered Jerusalem amid the song of children and the spreading of palm branches. Nor did Jesus silence them. If these held their peace the very stones would cry out, He declared.

The public acknowledgment of Christ as Sovereign in the spiritual realm is the immediate duty of every man. To neglect or to refuse is fraught with greatest peril.

When the emperor Justinian II entered Constantinople in 710 he was required to recognize the temporal power of the pope, Constantine I, by kissing his toe. Later the popes wore a slipper with a cross which was to be kissed. In recent years Protestants who wished an audience were required only to slightly bend the knee. But Christ, the true and only vice-gerent of God, has never changed the one clear way of reconciliation with the Father. It is the way of a full, personal, spiritual allegiance to Christ as Son of God.

If Jesus Christ is a man,
And only a man, I say,
That of all mankind I cleave to Him,
And to Him will I cleave alway.

But if Jesus Christ is God,
And the only God, I swear
I will follow Him through Heaven and hell,
The earth, the sea, the air.

—R. W. Gilder.

Quiz and Study. What was the meaning of Christ's answer to Pilate's question, "Art Thou a King?" 2. What are four national obstacles to making Christ King? 3. In what three realms corresponding to the three languages nailed to the cross may Christ be my King? 4. By what means does Christ inspire and compel loyalty to His Kingdom?

Challenge Text: "And He shall speak — unto the heathen; and His — shall be from — even to —, and from the — even to the ends of the —." Zech. 9: (7).

Practical Thoughts. 1. The human manifestation of Jesus as Son of David does not preclude His everlasting Sonship. 2. The foundation stones of Christ's throne were cemented by His own blood. 3. Rebellion against established government is worthy of death. There is something in God to fear. 4. The miracle of modern missions reveals Christianity as a virile, conquering force.

THE SCRIPTURE LESSON IS PSALMS 19:1-11.

Prayer: Lord Jesus, my Teacher, I long to know Thee, who art the Way, the Truth and the Life. Lead me as Thou didst lead the wise men of old, by the light of Thy star, and the prophecies of Thy Word. I would search for truth as the bee searches for nectar; lead me to Thy Book, which is sweeter than honey and the droppings of the honeycomb. I would dig after nuggets of truth as the miner delves for nuggets of gold; lead me to Thy precepts which are more to be desired than gold, yea, than much fine gold. Teach me all I can learn while I live, and teach me the rest in Heaven. For Thy name's sake. Amen.

The heavens declare Thy glory, Lord;
In every star Thy wisdom shines;
But when our eyes behold Thy Word,
We read Thy name in fairer lines.

The rolling sun, the changing light,
And nights and days Thy power confess,
But the blest volume Thou has writ Reveals Thy justice and Thy grace.

—Isaac Watts.

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: A nature piece by David. Time, his early manhood. Like Psalm 119 it extols God's law, giving to it various epithets. Verses 1-6 reveal God through nature, verses 7-11 reveal Him through revelation.

Scripture Setting: The Seeker After Truth. Wonders of nature, Job 38:19-38. Natural and spiritual wisdom, 1 Cor. 2:6-16. Led by star and prophecy, Matt. 2:1-10. The heavens great but man greater, Psa. 8:1-5. Value of Bible study, 2 Tim. 3:14-17; Psa. 119:1-8. Unbounded knowledge, Psa. 139:1-12.

Life and Conduct Setting: The passage gives us the signposts of religion, natural and revealed, on life's journey. 1. The regular appearances of the sun by day and the moon by night teach us the unflinching faithfulness of God. 2. Even the blind feel the warmth of the sun, and the ignorant are helped by reading God's Word. 3. The books of nature and revelation claim the same Divine Author. They should be used to interpret each other. 4. Everything visible and material is a symbol of something invisible and eternal. 5. Arguing from the less to the greater the seed supplied the sparrow assures me I shall not lack; and the Hand that guides the planets with precision will guide my steps aright. 6. Faith need not wait on scientific demonstrations. The pure in heart may see God without mastering the laws of optics.

THE DIVINE AUTHOR'S TWO VOLUMES, NATURE AND REVELATION.

The Point of Contact. It was evening. A shepherd lad lay stretched upon the green slope overlooking Bethlehem. He gazed long into the starry depths where Orion marched with his jeweled sword. He studied the glowing Sirius, the Dog-star, and watched Arcturus, of whom Job had written ages before. With his keen shepherd eyes used to long distances he tries to compute the distance to the changeless North star. To the young David with his poetic nature there came a mighty sense of vastness, a suggestion of infinite distance, and from his lips there escapes an exclamation deeply religious, "The heavens declare the glory of God, and the firmament sheweth his handiwork."

Day Unto Day Uttereth Speech. We are all born with a thirst to know. The baby in the cradle awakens one morning to see a bright spot on the nursery wall he has never seen before. He is outgrowing his cradle. Another morning he catches sight of the bright red flowers in the garden. He is outgrowing the walls of his nursery. Another morning he is in the garden but sees beyond the garden wall a vast world carpeted with turf, and canopied with blue. This young explorer has outgrown his garden. When you have taught him a little of the geography of earth and the astronomy of heaven his imagination will expand beyond these confines. He asks, "Father, Mother, what lies beyond the stars?" The answer may make him a believer or an infidel. It is more natural for him to believe. For the infant mind is born with a sense of infinity, and the baby soul is haloed with the gleam of eternity.

The Glory of the Heavens. No star-charts of scientific astronomy are needed to feel the vastness of the universe. "Their line is gone out through all the earth." When David exclaimed,

"When I consider the heavens, the work of thy fingers,
The moon and the stars which thou hast ordained,
What is man that thou are mindful of him,
Or the son of man that thou visitest him?"

he did not know the force of his own words as we know them now. We have become quite well acquainted with some of our neighbors who are twenty trillions of English miles out there in space. They are so far that this string of ciphers we make carries no real conception to the mind. Even if we state their distance in the terms of centuries required for a cannon ball to reach them from us we are dazed rather than enlightened. But borrowing a shaft of light that radiates from the sun as our yard stick, we may reckon that it will travel from the sun to the earth, a distance of 92 million of miles in eight minutes and seven seconds. But there are known stars so far from us that their light at this rate would not reach us in thousands of years. So great are some facts that it is possible to know, but impossible to conceive them. The space of the stars awakens reverence and awe. "The undevout astronomer is mad." In the study of the firmament, the handiwork of God, we can find no adequate words to describe our wonder, so we borrow the Psalmist's:

"O Lord, how great are Thy works!
In wisdom hast thou made them all."

Man's Greater Glory. The computations of astronomy are wonderful. Yet greater are the mysteries of the human mind and eye. Not content with naming and numbering the host of heaven, man, the pigmy creature, determines their composition, approximates their weight, measures their vast distances, and photographs them when he cannot find them with the telescope. In this way in the last few months has Professor Hale discovered 60,000 new stars at Mount Wilson observatory. Think of all these worlds, but think of the tiny pupil of man's eye where all these 10,000 rays of light cross each other and give us a correct but inverted picture of the starry heavens. Think how the light falling from yonder star drops upon that delicate patchwork of nerves behind the eyeball and the human mind grasps and comprehends its significance. Man comes into this world with all the delicate organism of the eye attuned to see the stars and clambers up by thought and study to where he can think God's thoughts after Him.

"Thou madest him a little lower than the angels Thou crownedst him with glory and honor."

How it ennobles and dignifies man's existence to remember that the Spirit of the living God deigns to enter the narrow recess of the human heart. This little earth is only a waif amid the greater planets, but be it remembered that God's only Son walked its vales and died upon one of its hills. That makes our little earth the moral center of the universe. And how glorious is the lot of man since God becomes his Friend and Brother.

The Glory of God's Written Revelation. Some things truly the heavens teach us with their wondrous lights and perfect mechanism. The stars tell us of their Creator,

"Forever singing as they shine,
'The hand that made us is Divine.'"

They say that God is great, that He is wise, that He is good. But for the great lessons that reveal the full proportions of the Divine nature we must search beyond the skies, we must go to the Bible. Those whose eyes have appreciated most the beauties of nature—flower, bird, and star, have appreciated more the beauties of the Bible.

Coleridge says that the fairest flower he ever saw climbing around a poor man's window was not so beautiful in his eyes as the open Bible which was lying within the poor man's window. The literature of the Bible is the poor man's university. Lincoln read it in his youth by his fire of logs, and long years after its spirit and style were distilled from his pen when he wrote his second inaugural or his Gettysburg speech. Bible teachings have transformed entire civilizations and converted cannibals into a great Christian power. Our own ancestors in the bogs of old England ate each other's flesh till Augustine took them the Bible. Luther's translation opened up the Bible to the plowboy, and awakened the intellectual life of Germany. This Book comes to us hoary with antiquity. Yet man's interest in the Bible is perennial. It is still to be reckoned among the best sellers. A few years ago the American revision of the New Testament was announced. It produced a literary sensation. The day it was published in New York it was telegraphed almost bodily from there to a great Chicago daily that it might arrive twenty-four hours in advance of steam. This was the longest message ever telegraphed, and it goes without saying, the very best.

The Bible is not a treatise on astronomy, nor an abstract philosophy of life. It is a glad personal message of salvation sent of God. The great signpost at the parting of the ways that leads the weary traveller home is the sure sign of the cross. This is the cardinal message of the Bible.

Quiz and Study. 1. What special opportunities were given David to study nature? 2. Who was it dreamed that the sun, moon and eleven stars bowed down to him? 3. On what notable occasion did the sun stand still? 4. On what greater occasion was the sun's brightness eclipsed and the earth shaken? 5. Mention some of the rewards for observing God's law. 6. How many times does God's name appear in the ten commandments? In the beatitudes?

Challenge Text. Open Thou mine —, that I may — wondrous things out of Thy —. Psa. 119: (?).

Practical Thoughts. 1. We are in the habit of giving each flower a sentimental language, and the rainbow is a bow that speaks forth a scripture promise. 2. Christ used natural objects in His teaching—the seed, the wind, the lily, the sparrow and the mother hen. 3. Some men through custom kiss the Bible in court but treat its warnings and promises with contempt. 4. The stars are the signal lights on our Heavenly Father's veranda hung by the angels to show us the way home. 5. When the earth gets between us and the sun we are in darkness, and when the pursuit of the world gets between us and our Father's purpose, we are in spiritual darkness.

THE SCRIPTURE LES SON IS PSALMS 23:1-6.

Prayer: Great Shepherd of the sheep, watch over this foolish and defenseless lamb. Once I loved to pick my path and I wandered far. I fed on poisonous herbs, I was torn in the thicket, till numb and bleeding, Thou didst find me, and bear me back. No wonder I know Thy voice, and love to follow Thee! Lead me in the paths of righteousness down to old age. Gather me at last into Thy presence where there shall be one fold, one Shepherd. Amen.

"An' de Shepherd go out in de darkness
Where de night was col' an' bleak,
An' dat lil' brack sheep He find it,
An' lay it agains' His cheek.
An' de hirelin' frown, 'O, Shepherd,
Don' bring dat sheep to me!
But de Shepherd He smile, an' He hol' it close,
An'—dat lil' brack sheep—wuz—me!"

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: A pastoral poem describing in a beautiful metaphor God's loving care. Written by David, perhaps not long before he was called to walk through the shadowy valley of death. For the belief that Christ is the Lord here referred to as a shepherd see John 10:14; Heb. 13:20; 1 Pet. 2:25.

Scripture Setting: The Zion Sheepfold. David the shepherd, Psa. 78:52-55, 68-72. False shepherds, Ezek. 34:1-10. The fold restored, Ezek. 34:11-17. The duty and reward of undershepherds, 2 Pet. 5:1-9. The lost sheep found, Matt. 18:10-14. Christ the Shepherd and the Door, John 10:1-16.

Life and Conduct Setting: Soul refreshment seems to be the key thought of the passage presented in the double figure of a green, well-watered pasture, and a joyous, bountiful feast. 1. God, lifted out of the distant heavens, is placed with man, even more, He becomes "my Shepherd" in tenderest intimacy. 2. The sheep nature falls an easy prey to its enemies, hence the need of a shepherd possessing superior strength and wisdom. 3. A pasture where sheep lie down in content and a table where the cup overflows denote spiritual blessings without stint or measure. 4. There is no true proportion between our service and His goodness. He leadeth us for His name's sake, or regard for His own moral perfection. 5. A review of a life of Christian experience gives confidence that God will not cast us off in old age, or forsake us in death. The table spread by the Divine hand is not the banquet of a night or the reunion of a day, but the family meal where the partakers shall go out no more forever.

THE ABUNDANT SUPPLIES OF GRACE.

Point of Contact. When John Muir was a young man fresh from college he spent a summer in the Sierras herding sheep. He calls it the most important year of his life. He left the corral in June with a flock of two thousand and fifty. He returned late in September, having lost only thirteen. The wild life in the mountains did much for the sheep, but it did more for the future geologist and explorer.

What David Learned. It is written of Israel's greatest king, "He took David from the sheepfolds to feed Jacob His people, and Israel His inheritance. * * * So he fed them according to the integrity of his heart, and guided them by the skilfulness of his hands." The Bethlehem sheep ranch was a great university. The task of feeding and ruling a few hundred sheep developed the skill to feed and rule the hundreds of thousands of his kingdom. David's arm was strong, but we would miss our lesson if we should forget that David learned early to trust an arm that was stronger. Now in his old age he rests a bit, giving himself up to retrospect and reminiscence. He dwells upon his whole career, the days of his early pastoral life, and the years of royal responsibility. Conscious of the Providence that overruled and the Divine care that upheld, he gives glad testimony to the secret of his success. "The Lord is my shepherd."

Attachment of Shepherd and Sheep. The Oriental shepherd made sheep raising a serious pursuit. Under that marvelous Palestinian sky, he had the occasion and the conditions for communing with nature. But he never forgot that first of all he was a shepherd. At any moment his serene musings might be broken by the attack of a lion or a bear. Then at great personal hazard he became their protector. David fought for his sheep as a father would fight for his children. Through such experiences there grew up the tenderest intimacy between the shepherd and his sheep. Having a small flock, the shepherd knew each sheep by name, and the sheep in turn learned the shepherd's voice, and followed him rather than a stranger. He led them where the grass was tallest and tenderest, and the water most abundant. Under his watchful eye they could lie down in restful content. Such is the tender relationship which may be established between God and the soul.

Keeping the Count Full. David kept his father's sheep, but he was not a craven hireling. His was a labor of love. Jesse knew that his son would keep the count full. 'The wild beast that stalked at night to prey upon his flock would pay for his presumption by his carcass. So the Heavenly Father knew when He sent forth the Son of David from the ivory palaces of Heaven that He would guard well the sheep fold, and destroy the last enemy of the race to keep the count full. And when the Heavenly Father saw His darling Son's garments all dripping with blood, the guilty brothers said, "An evil beast hath devoured him." But the Father knew that His Son had slain the wild beasts, sin and death, and completed the work for which He was sent,—to save the lost sheep of the house of Israel.

"But the Master Shepherd shook His head; The count was short, and He gently said,—
'I have a hundred to love and keep,
And I must find my wayward sheep."

"The wood may frown, and the thorn may tear,
And death creep forth from the rocky lair,—
Through wood, and thorn, and death I hold
My sheep, till all are in the fold."

Paths of Righteousness. The great superiority of the Eastern shepherd over the Western is that the Oriental herder goes before his sheep and picks out their way for them. If the sheep were left to themselves they might miss the greenest pastures, the deep, cool waters, the gradual, easy descent, and the safe way through the treacherous ravine. There is a world of difference between the sheeppaths made by sheep instinct and the path made by the sagacious, careful shepherd. When a human life chooses its own way, following appetite and impulse, it can only be a crooked, meandering path, oftentimes dangerously near forbidden ledges. It is as foolhardy to pick our way through this life without Christ's direction and presence as to cross the Alps without a guide.

Before His followers were ever called Christians at Antioch the manner and method of Christian living was referred to in the Acts of the Apostles as "the Way." And Christ declared that all He had to teach, all He was in character was included in that triple designation, "the Way, the Truth, the Life." In conduct He did only those things that pleased the Father. His counsels and precepts set for all times the boundaries of true ethics and morality. His life became the one historic example to men, the perfect and original career for all to imitate. In a very real sense Christ is still the Good Shepherd going before, leading in the paths of righteousness. The path of right living leads away from the slippery places of sin; though narrow and straight, it leads to life eternal; it is the only way that is pleasing to God. Ancient prophecy is the sign post directing thereto. "Stand ye in the ways, and see, and ask for the old paths, where is the good way, and walk therein, and ye shall find rest for your souls."

Through the Valley of Shadows. We can well imagine those dark, deep, sunless ravines between the mountains through which David led his sheep. Here the beasts of prey would find a natural hiding place. The timid sheep of their own accord would never pass through these shadowy depths

But the shepherd going before armed with rod and staff inspired confidence. The staff supported the shepherd in hill climbing and was his weapon against wild beasts and robbers. The rod or crook guided the sheep, and in dangerous places helped to lift them out. There are many dangerous places in life that inspire terror, but it is a comfort to the good man to know that his steps are ordered of the Lord.

Man naturally dreads death; even to him who hopefully looks beyond it there comes an involuntary shudder. But in the presence of Christ's companionship shadows will flee. "There'll be no dark valley when Jesus comes." The walk down to the cold waters and through them will be like the walk to Emmaus. "I will fear no evil, for Thou art near me." This Psalm might well be called the friendship pillow of dying saints. This Shepherd Psalm has been whispered more by dying lips than any other passage of scripture.

The Table of Goodness and Mercy Prepared. Rich as is the Psalmist's figure of the sheep so contented and supplied that they lie down in the midst of the tender grass, it is not equal to the burden of his luxurious thought. So he changes his figure from a sheep to a banqueter, reminding us of the Savior's exclamation, "How much more, then, is a man better than a sheep."

The natural world to David was a feast. He had enjoyed good health; he had a full, bright eye to enjoy beauty whether of flowers or of stars. He had a musical and poetic nature. He drank deep of the cup of friendship, leaving in his attachment for Jonathan an immortal picture. Even his one-time enemy, Saul the jealous, had been compelled at times to sit in the gallery uninvited and look down upon David seated at the feast of popular favor. Perhaps David strikes a note of personal thanksgiving for his kingly favors when the one-time shepherd lad declares, "Thou anointest my head with oil," and his mind goes back to that glad day when old Samuel consecrated him to be a king. He completes this picture of spiritual abundance by declaring that the cup of grace overflows—kindness beyond measure. The delights and satisfactions of the Christian life are the royal bounty of God's overflowing cup. They include forgiveness of our sins, cleansed hearts fired with new motives, the gift of the Holy Comforter, the witness of Christ's abiding presence, the sure promises of God, unlimited possibilities for service, and the assurance of eternal life. No wonder David desired that in such a banquet-house he might live forever.

Practical Thoughts. 1. Contentment is found in absence of jealousy as much as in accumulation of riches. 2. Refreshment, guidance, protection, abundance, these are the four legs to the table the Lord prepares. 3. The still waters of God are not the boisterous currents of dissipation, neither are they the Dead Sea of stagnation and satiety. 4. A sense of God's presence is a silent rebuke to anxiety and fear. 5. The beauty of the rainbow comes after the storm, and the beauty of the Shepherd Psalm breaks through the tear-stained spectacles of old age.

CONFIDENCE IN GOD.

THE SCRIPTURE LESSON IS PSALMS 27:1-6.

Prayer: God of David, my Sword and Buckler, help me to drive out of my life the secret enemy of sin and the boasting giant of fear. With Thee on my side I have no enemy that can harm me. Make me not afraid of the leaders of opinion or the great host of the majority that may be encamped against me. Whether I am under the roof of Thy sanctuary or in the midst of the storm in Thy great out-of-doors Thou wilt hide me in the pavillion of Thy love. Amen.

Strong Son of God, immortal love,
Whom we that have not seen Thy face,
By faith, and faith alone embrace,
Believing where we cannot prove;

Thou wilt not leave us in the dust:
Thou madest man he knowns not why,
He thinks he was not made to die;
And Thou hast made him: Thou art just.
—Alfred Tennyson.

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: A Psalm of fearless trust written by David probably soon after Absalom's rebellion. Deprived of the sanctuary service, he extols its gracious benefits. The reference here is to the tent erected on Mount Zion to receive the ark of the covenant.

Scripture Setting: The King's Token of Victory. David flees from Jerusalem, II Sam. 15:30-37. Jehovah's pledge to Jacob, Gen. 28:10-22. Jehovah encourages Joshua, Josh. 1:2-7. The pledge of the Divine presence, Isa. 43:1-7. Saved from slippery places, Psa. 73:1-18.

Life and Conduct Setting: The whole passage shows how communion with the Divine furnishes reserve strength for the soul under trial. 1. The measure of a strong life is its ability to resist adverse conditions. 2. Our confidence in God grows through adversity as the cedar roots strike deeper by battling with storm. 3. "Sharper than an adder's tooth is the ingratitude of a thankless child." 4. Our appreciation of public worship is increased by forcible separation from it. 5. Some fitting temple inquiries: The benefits of suffering; the meaning of life; the destiny of the soul.

DAVID'S CONFIDENCE IN GOD.

Point of Contact. On the supposition that David composed this Psalm shortly after Absalom's unsuccessful rebellion, we shall understand it best by remembering the conditions of the king's exile from Jerusalem. How sorely did he miss the services of the sanctuary. We have now followed David all the way up from the red-haired shepherd lad to the enviable position of Israel's greatest king. Hitherto we have seen him move forward through an almost unbroken succession of victories. In this lesson is exhibited the strength of his soul in adversity.

The truthful historian records that this great character was marred by sin. Under peculiar temptations he had fallen, but the sincerity and depth of his penitence we may judge by a study of the lesson which follows this. Irving says, "The hearts of a hundred men strove and struggled together within the narrow continent of David's heart." Because of David's sin against the house of Uriah, Nathan the prophet had declared that his child would die and God would raise up evil against him out of his own house. So that when Absalom raised his rebellion against his royal father, David remembered the warning, and fled from his home in Jerusalem suddenly unmanned. Not his sins, for they were sudden, erratic, and incidental, nor his fear, for it was brief, but his zeal and loyalty to Jehovah, ever steadfast and persistent, mark the strength of his character.

Sustaining Power of Personal Faith. "The Lord is my light." Here is the light that did not fail. Driven from the capital he had builded, David the exile was in the dark. Hurrying up the side of the Mount of Olives, with head covered and weeping, he stops long enough to pray. Here his courage returns. God is the good man's light, and prayer is the instantaneous button by which the illumination is turned on. David thereupon sends back to the city the priests who are fleeing with the ark of the covenant. He is confident that he shall return also. He journeys forward conscious of the Divine presence.

The Destroyers Destroyed. Absalom had forfeited his right to live, first by murdering his brother Amnon, and afterwards by stirring up an insurrection against the king. His ambitions led to plot violence against his father. But in his eagerness to eat up his flesh he stumbled and fell. In the battle he set to slay David, Absalom himself was killed. Such is ever the irony of fate, the retributive stroke of justice. Haman builds a scaffold to swing Mordecai, and from it he himself swings. Wilkes Booth fires a shot against the government, and the flag of the government catches the spur of his boot, throwing him so heavily as to break his leg and prevent his escape. Ahithophel, the wisest of David's friends, turns traitor, his plans are foiled, and in remorse he dies by his own hand. Judas meets Christ in the midnight of His agony with a traitor's kiss, he lives long enough to say, "I have betrayed innocent blood," then rushes to adjust the halter to his neck. Soon his bleeding, broken body lies on the rocks beneath. Thus have evildoers plotted, stumbled and fallen. The body of Absalom swinging by the hair, struck through with arrows, is history's scarecrow for all evil birds of prey.

Confident Against an Enemy's Host. From Dan to Beersheeba the insurrectionists flocked to the colors of the young prince until they were like the sand by the sea for multitude. Twenty thousand were slaughtered in the battle. Josephus says that David had but 4,000 mustered under him. But the king was not afraid. His soldiers see his courage and exclaim, "Thou art worth 10,000." How often do the pages of history corroborate the wise man's conclusion that "the race is not to the swift, nor the battle to the strong." It is not a question of opposing numbers so much as of unwillingness to surrender. It is the virtue of religion to destroy fear and inspire confidence. "One shall chase a thousand, and two shall put ten thousand to flight."

It is wonderful how God clears the way for one resolute, confident man. Think of Robert L. Stevenson, the invalid courageous, who battling against hemorrhages, could write, "Acts may be forgiven, but not even God Himself can forgive the hanger-back." One Sunday afternoon when he was a boy his grandmother insisted on reading aloud a chapter from the Bible. "Well, Granny," he said, "if I must listen, read me a chapter from the fightingest part of the Old Testament." It was that part that David had a hand in making.

Faith's Arsenal the Sanctuary. We are indebted to David for the loftiest expressions of loyalty and regard for God's house. Throughout his life he consistently engaged in public worship. The temple service owed much to the suggestions and labors of David. He first of all planned a stone-built sanctuary, and collected much of the material for its construction and embellishment. He furnished the noble hymns afterwards sung by the temple choirs. But the sanctuary also did much for David. He never esteemed it so highly as when in his exile he was deprived of its gracious benefits. Its ritual and its praise unfolded the beauty of the Lord. It was there he contemplated the benign attributes of Deity and poured out his soul in adoration. Once he passed through a conflict of doubt and almost lost faith. His mind had stumbled over the prosperity of the wicked. They escaped trouble and had no pangs in death. Perhaps he had cleansed his heart in vain. In a noble Psalm he tells us the victory of personal faith:

"When I thought to know this, it was too painful for me;
Until I went into the sanctuary of God, and considered their latter end."

By inquiring in God's temple we arrive at a correct philosophy of life. Christ, our example in all things, found as a lad in the temple the great call to his Father's business.

The Exaltation of Life. When we are able to look down upon our enemies we have placed ourselves beyond their reach. It is something beautiful to see how David could pity his enemies. How carefully does he gather up the dust of Saul from a dishonored grave to give it decent burial. Yet Saul had struck at him with murderous intent, and hunted him as a partridge over the mountain. And when Absalom came on the field to slay him he gives orders to his captains to deal gently for his sake with Absalom. It was such generous impulses as these that made David a man after God's own heart. That man indeed can lift his head above his enemies who has learned that enmity weakens the nerve power, that envy is a slow poison, and that "He that ruleth his own spirit is greater than he that taketh a city." A calm, settled conviction that the just Judge shall at last adjudicate all claims exalts a character far above littleness and meanness. His pigmy enemies may snarl and bite round about him but he is safe. Such a man is lifted up upon a rock.

Songs That Never Die. The sacrifices of joy which David vowed to offer in the sanctuary were the immortal Psalms he wrote. It was the peculiar province of this shepherd minstrel to leave a great body of national and religious songs. Thus imperishably with his songs of question and answer, strophe and antistrophe, has he written his name large upon the world's religious life. His harp was his magic wand. And in his last words he himself seemed to be the vibrating instrument upon which the Divine breath played.

Quiz and Study. 1. How did Joseph's slave days in Egypt, Moses' flight into Midian, and Paul's imprisonment at Rome fulfil the Divine purpose? 2. In what particular incidents in David's life was God his (1) light; (2) salvation; (3) strength? 3. How does Divine worship contribute in making character (1) beautiful; (2) joyful; (3) exalted? 4. Where were nature's first temples? 5. Where did Christ tell the Samaritan woman that men would eventually worship? 6. What is John's reference to the temple in Revelation and its meaning?

Challenge Text. The — is my —, and I will not — what — shall do unto —. Heb. 13:(?).

Practical Thoughts. 1. Faith is trusting God in the dark; the reality to the soul of things invisible to the senses. 2. David looked forward to his return to the sanctuary with the hope and dependence that a steamer captain looks forward to the next coaling station. 3. David was not the soldier who feared to strike a trial blow on the boss of his shield lest he break it. He had tried God, and God was his salvation. 4. Evil men, like beetles and bats, scurry for darkness, but David calls upon God to turn on the light, "Search me, try me, examine me."

THE SCRIPTURE LESSON IS PSALMS 32:1-11.

Prayer: Thou, loving, patient Christ, who would not bruise the broken reed, nor quench the smoking flax, take my poor heart with all my sense of sin, and shame, and failure, and take my hand to lift me up. Make me glad with a sense of sin's burden removed, and with the assurance that Thou hast given me a clean heart. For Thy name's sake, Amen.

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: The second of seven penitential Psalms written by David about one year after the death of Uriah. Its historical background is found in 2 Sam. 12:1-10. Read in this connection Psalms 51, inspired by the same occasion.

Scripture Setting: The Welcome of the Home-Coming. The Heaven's rejoicing over the repentant, Luke 15:1-7. The call to repentance, Matt. 3:8-12. The gospel of a second chance, Jer. 18:1-8. The sinful woman forgiven, John 8:1-11. The reward of true repentance, Isa. 1:11-18. Final blessedness of the repentant, Rev. 7:13-17.

Life and Conduct Setting: The passage suggests the warm welcome which awaits the sinner's return. 1. Even nature is a kind mistress, healing the ugly scars of last year's storms. 2. A broken bone can bear but little weight; and a heart broken by remorse is sensitive to love. 3. Only after we have wandered far do we appreciate the light in the window beckoning us back. 4. Our love for Him may flicker like a will-o'-the-wisp, but His changeless love shines like a steady beacon. 5. "As we forgive others." Here is the key that unlocks the treasures of Divine forgiveness.

SIN CONCEALED, CONFESSED, AND CANCELLED.

Point of Contact. For men high as well as men low, for men on the throne as well as men on the scaffold, there is only one way to become reconciled to a sinful past. For David, whose word had become law, it was no easy task to submit to and acknowledge the Divine law which he had so ruthlessly broken. His guilty love for a beautiful face had taken full possession of him. He was willing to have the husband who stood in the way of the gratification of his covetous desire murdered in battle. Nathan recites a parable, as if an actual case, in which a situation of extreme injustice appeals to the shepherd-king's sense of fair play. He demands that the guilty shall pay four-fold restitution and forfeit his life. Suddenly the weight of the whole accusation is forced upon him. "Thou art the man." One element redeems the dark picture. David repents, renounces his own act, and resolves to arise from his shame.

Blessedness of Forgiveness. King David put in a miserable year from the time he conceived the murder of Uriah to the critical moment when by the point of the prophet's parable and the point of his accusing finger, he was brought to confession and repentance. David's sincere prayer was that God might restore unto him the joy of His salvation. The clouds broke and the long eclipse ended the very moment David cried, "I have sinned against the Lord." For David knew that God was waiting to establish the old relationships, just as the prodigal knew that all would be well the very moment he came to make the great resolve, "I will arise, and go, and say, father, I have sinned." To an awakened conscience sin becomes an intolerable nightmare. Its spell is broken when God says, I will put away the remembrance of it forever. Then there breaks upon the heart once burdened a new hope, in the Divine compassion as welcome as is the return of the sun's bright rays to the storm-tossed mariner after weary days of darkness and danger. To the impure the face of God is always eclipsed; but the blessing to the pure in heart is that they understand Him, appreciate His character, and feel a warm sense of His sympathy.

"Helpless and foul as the trampled snow,
Sinner, despair not! He stoopeth low
To rescue the soul that is lost in its sin,
And raise it to life and enjoyment again,"

Yes, David was the guilty man; but now he is the blessed man whose transgression is covered. He would go a step farther; he would have a spirit without guile. He desired purity as well as forgiveness. He had been pardoned; now he would be washed. While none but the redeemed themselves can know the exaltation of spirit which is awakened when the great love of the Divine pardon flashes upon the personal consciousness, yet there is a Heavenly beatitude beyond forgiveness. It is the beatitude of virgin purity. This world's ideal life is not his who repented of his sin, but His "who knew no sin."

The Curse of a Convicting Conscience. Now that David's restoration is assured, he naturally contrasts his happy estate with the memory of those days when he kept silence, hiding his sin. His wrong-doing was felt, but not acknowledged. This mental condition produced severe prostration of his bodily powers. "My bones waxed old through my roaring (groaning) all the day long." Not only were the days intolerably lengthened, but the nights were filled with sleeplessness. "Day and night thy hand was heavy upon me." What a misadjustment sin had wrought; instead of being in the Divine hand, feeling a sense of eternal support, he was under the Divine hand, feeling the pressure of eternal wrath. "My moisture is turned into the drought of summer." In David's country frequent and copious rains are the rule in the winter months. Soon after the heat of summer arrives, the grass withers, the flower fades, and the plant is dried up by its roots. The earlier part of David's reign, marked by innocence and integrity, had resembled a field refreshed by generous showers; but when God stirred up his conscience and set his sins in order before his face, his courage failed, and the beauty of his life's setting turned to an arid wilderness. The outward picture is fair, but inwardly the scene is a veritable chamber of horrors. The king sits proudly on his throne, for his rule is secure. The Ammonites are overcome, the Syrians are defeated. Valiant men are willing to die for him, beautiful women sing his praises. Fair Bathsheba becomes his wife and a baby's prattle is heard in the palace. Yet over this fair picture hangs a suspended sword, for already it was written, "The thing that David had done displeased the Lord."

The nature and operation of conscience have not changed since David's time. We all can remember times when we "kept silence" and suffered, while all the time conscience whispered, "Better go and talk it over and make the matter right." God's hand was heavy upon us so long as the wrong was unconfessed and unforgiven. We have lain on our bed when the lights were all out listening to the patter of the rain on the shingles and we could not sleep. We thought so hard that the moisture seemed to ooze from every pore of our body. We had wronged a brother weeks before when we were at play. He had forgotten all about it and was sleeping soundly at our side. What was it that kept us awake and brought misery with our remembrance? It was the power of conscience. And how the load was lifted, and sleep came when we wakened our brother and made a full confession and secured forgiveness. A convicted conscience is often the seeming cause of a painful experience, but the real cause lies deeper in a disordered life. If we take into our stomach poisonous food, how sickening and painful is the effect produced. But a merciful providence sends the pain as a warning that something is wrong and it leads us to a remedy. How fortunate that the soul is guarded by this tender, reproving monitor.

Forgiveness Based on Confession. No sooner had Nathan let go with unerring aim the sharpened shaft of conviction at David's heart than there springs from the king's lips the cry, "I have sinned against the Lord." As in all true repentance there were five elements in David's appeal to God, 1, conviction; 2, confession; 3, sorrow; 4, plea for mercy; 5, purpose of amendment. "I acknowledge my sin unto Thee." If every sinner made public confession in detail of his wrongdoing, little good would result and much harm might follow. All sins, even those against our neighbors and ourselves, are against God, since they violate His law. The confession of the soul, then, in most cases, is to be poured into the ear of God alone. To morally turn ourselves wrong side out for public inspection is not for edification.

Restitution, however, must accompany inward confession if the sin be the appropriation of something that belongs to another. The scripture rule is a four-fold restitution. David's sin was the more flagrant because he was the king. It would furnish a public example. The fall was the more to be deplored because he had been called a man after God's own heart. However others may have condemned David, none have done it so unsparingly as David himself. When he wrote his penitential Psalms, throbbing like his own overflowing heart, he published his guilt as widely as it could be borne by the language of man. "I confessed and Thou forgavest." Confession always precedes forgiveness and is the most eloquent plea for it. When the king shows humbled penitence Nathan asks no more, but immediately declares his pardon. There is no red tape in the government of God. Pardon is instantaneous. No penitent suppliant was ever kept waiting at the gate of Heaven. "And it shall come to pass that before they call, I will answer; and while they are yet speaking, I will hear."

The quality of mercy is not strained;
It droppeth as the gentle rain from Heaven
Upon the place beneath.—Merchant of Venice.

Quiz and Study. 1. What other persons are involved in the situation in the case of David's sin? 2. What did Nathan declare would be his double punishment? Did both disasters occur? 3. To whom did Christ offer forgiveness at the last moment, and what promise was attached? 4. Name five Bible sinners who became Bible saints.

Challenge Text. "I will — to you the — that the — hath —. Joel 2: (1).

Practical Thoughts. 1. Christ warned against evil thoughts. A covetous look proved David's undoing. 2. The sinner's first impulse is to flee from God; his safety lies in fleeing to God. 3. Nathan stands for the true friend who shows us our fault and leads us to repentance. 4. Sinful experiences may have a disciplinary and warning value, but "the bird with with a broken pinion never soared as high again."

THE SCRIPTURE LESSON IS PSALMS 51:1-17.

Prayer: My Father and my God, I have sinned before Heaven and against Thee, and am no more worthy to be called Thy son. But Thou hast never given me up, nor closed the door against my return. I have read the loving letter in which full pardon is freely offered me. Sick of the world and weary of its deceptions, I am coming back. Forgive me, receive me, and restore to me the gladness of the old days. For Jesus' sake, Amen.

"Break off the yoke of inbred sin,

Till I am wholly lost in Thee."

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: This Psalm of David, from earliest Christian times, has been called, by way of eminence, the penitential Psalm. It is also known as the Miserere, from its opening words in the Vulgate, Miserere mei Domine. See previous lesson for its historical basis.

Scripture Setting: Confession and Cure of Sin. The people's sin-offering, Lev. 16:15-19. Solomon's prayer for his people, 1 Kings 8:23-34. Isaiah's confession and forgiveness, Isa. 6:1-10. Job's acknowledgment of sin, Job. 7:11-21. The Redeemer, 1 John 1:1-10.

Life and Conduct Setting: This portion of David's penitential prayer expresses the universal desire of a sin-sick soul for God. 1. For every deadly and poisonous contact God does provide a healing antidote. 2. Lost soul-health, like lost treasure, is most surely found by immediate search to recover it. 3. Man-like it is to fall into sin; fiend-like it is to remain therein; Christ-like it is to rescue from its power. 4. The rejoicing of recovery leads us to publish abroad the good news of the cure.

THE BEATITUDE OF THE BROKEN HEART.

Point of Contact. St. Augustine, in his last illness, asked that one verse be painted on the wall opposite his bed, "A broken and a contrite heart, O God, Thou wilt not despise." There is a Persian proverb declaring that nothing broken has any value except the heart, which becomes more valuable the more it is broken. By some it is supposed that David, the "warrior king," was lacking in the more tender feelings of humanity. As a matter of fact David himself, especially in his later years, was not often in the field. His wars were carried on by his "mighty men of valor," who bore the brunt of the active military operations. By the glimpses we catch of his personality; when he laments over the death of Jonathan and Saul; in his whole attitude towards Absalom; and in the spirit with which he received Nathan's rebuke, we conclude that David was a man of tender heart.

Prayer for Purity. "Purge me with hyssop, and I shall be clean." Purity as well as pardon is desired by all true penitents. David uses three words to describe the contents of his heart, "transgression," "iniquity," and "sin." He also uses three terms to describe his heart's need, "purge," "wash," and "blot out." He had often seen the branch of hyssop dipped in water to be sprinkled upon some tent where a dead body had lain that it might be ceremonially clean according to the ordinances of Moses. Perhaps, too, he had seen the priest sprinkle with a branch of hyssop the blood of a dead bird upon a leper to cure him of his leprosy. His own heart seems like a dead body corrupted with putrefaction, or the spotted flesh that had been attacked by loathsome leprosy. His hope is that the Divine hand with the hyssop branch may purge him of his evil nature. Not ceremonial cleansing, but a pure heart is the burden of his prayer. The executioner of Sir Walter Raleigh asked him if his head lay right upon the block. His answer was, "It matters little, my friend, how my head lies, provided my heart is right."

"Blot out all mine iniquities." However erringly God remembers the sins of the impenitent, He graciously promises to forget the iniquities of all who repent and reform. "Thy sins and iniquities I will remember no more." Ian Maclaren tells of a stern, Puritanic father who, because Flora, his daughter, became lost in the temptations of a big city, blotted her name from the record in the great family Bible. Much more like God was that Scotch mother in her conduct towards her wayward girl, when she had her own pictures placed in the dance-halls of Glasgow with the words underneath, Come home. One night at a dance there was a shriek and a faint. They raised a young woman from the dance floor and she sobbed, Take me home, my mother.

"Create in me a clean heart." Gold is pure, when with crucible and fire it has been separated from all not gold; the diamond is pure when the lapidary finds nothing in it to hinder the refraction and reflection of light; the mirror is pure when it reflects accurately the image before it; the lens is pure when without flaw it passes on the sunbeam as perfect as when it came from the sun; the heart is pure when without distortion it sees the moral perfections of the Divine attributes.

"Wash me and I shall be whiter than snow." David remembers the pure white mountain tops of Lebanon that seemed so near to Heaven, made beautiful because God had covered their once-scarred and once-blackened heights with a merciful mantle of snow-flakes. Even the snow of lofty Lebanon might be soiled by the wind-borne dust, but God could wash away the last traces of guilt, making him whiter than snow.

The Poet of Praise. "Make me to hear joy and gladness." There was only One who could take David's life with its broken strings, its jangled chords, its fault, and fret and sin, and make it Israel's sweet harp of gladness and joy, capable of such music as the twenty-third Psalm. Hideous sounds on an instrument are called "wolf-notes." Sin had almost spoiled the music, introducing the wolf-notes of jealousy, anger, bitterness, hate, pride, and resentment. God changed his life to a grateful song. He found that his spiritual blessings were as hard to count as the stars in that Syrian sky. They included His loving care, the satisfactions of a Gospel experience, the renewal of his heart, sanctification by the Spirit, the gift of eternal life, and the abiding presence of God. Enough to awaken gladness and joy!

Once Mendelssohn came to see the great Freiburg organ. The old custodian, partly blind, refused the stranger permission to play. After much persuasion he granted him leave to play a few notes. The old keeper could hear, if he could not see. The few notes were enough. He knew the master was at the organ. There is only One who can bring out the highest and holiest within us.

"Great Master, touch us with Thy skilful hands; Let not the music that is in us die."

—Horatius Bonar.

"Restore unto me the joy of Thy salvation." Mrs. Browning draws in satire the picture of a solemn dame who "thanked God and sighed." But David in one of his immortal songs (Psa. 41) exclaims, "Clap your hands," "shout unto God," "sing praises." A beautiful bit of rabbinical lore used by Longfellow in Sandalphon tells us that in Heaven there are two kinds of angels,—angels of service and angels of song. The angels of song belong to the higher order. The sweet singer of Israel was certainly one of God's angels of song. He made the Psalms to be the music room of the Bible where the Spirit swept over the keyboard of the human soul. Psalmist, prophet, and apostle unite in declaring that redemption will be the joyful theme of the great angelic hosts.

Practice of the Presence of God. "Cast me not away from Thy presence." The permanence and high-mindedness of David's friendships reveal the nobility of his soul. His friendship for Jonathan rested on deep foundations; they loved the same love; they were in sympathy with the same high ideals of honor and manhood. When Jonathan died David's soul was as a dove bereft of his mate. Long years after when David finds the cripple boy belonging to Jonathan's family, he gives him a permanent place at the royal table. This trait in the warrior king of Israel shows he was capable of spiritual communion. He loathed his sins because they would separate him from God. He knew that permanent friendship and fellowship rested upon similarity of feelings. In the inner sanctuary of his heart he must be clean, like unto God, else he would be cast away from God's presence. So David practiced the presence of God, thought God's thoughts, and made himself by Divine help fit to be a friend of God.

"Uphold me by Thy free spirit." A man is not really cured until his character is changed, until he has substituted peace, love and courage for fear, worry and sin. Religion means a binding together, a power that unites and conserves the elements of our life. David had plenty of friends in his lifetime who played him false. We have already studied two, Ahithophel, his counsellor, and Absalom, his son. David's desire was the spiritual presence of a Friend who was touched with sympathy when he suffered; One who loved him with a love that was deep, tender, strong, everlasting; One who never counsels rashly, but possessed all wisdom for the ordering of his steps. This consciousness that God would never forsake him girded his life with strength. Said an invalid, restored to perfect health, "I've developed a passion for telling everybody of the good news about how I was cured." This is a natural symptom of soul health. The individual and the church with a healthy, positive experience begins at once the two-fold work of evangelizing and indoctrinating,—converting sinners, and teaching one-time transgressors.

Quiz and Study. 1. What three expressions are used in this lesson showing David's desire for entire cleansing? 2. What three expressions are used to show the Divine impelling? 3. In what two ways would David show his moral transformation? 4. What public but ineffectual attempt did Pilate make to clear himself from the guilt of Christ's death?

Challenge Text. "Though your — be as —, they shall be as — as —; though they be — like —, they shall be as —." Isa. 1:(?).

Practical Thoughts. 1. The great trees of California, one hundred feet in circumference, have seeds no larger than a lettuce seed. The seed of sin is small, but grows. 2. Sin is contrary to the Divine nature, and Heaven is permanent similarity of feelings with God. 3. Great souls like David broke through the forms of ceremonial law, and demanded an absolution from sin personal and conscious. 4. The deeper the sense of sin, the more heart-felt the gratitude for pardon. 5. The broken heart is the most precious thank-offering laid on the altar.

THE SCRIPTURE LESSON IS PSALMS 72:1-12.

Prayer: O Christ, Thou Friend of the poor and needy, Thou Deliverer of the oppressed, hear the cry that goes up from homes of poverty and disease. Do for troubled hearts what Thou didst do for Mary and Martha. Plead for our cities as Thou didst pray with tears for Jerusalem. Cleanse our churches of wrong thoughts and practices as Thou didst cleanse the temple. Put an end to human hate and meanness, and let the millennium begin now in our hearts. For Thy name's sake. Amen.

"Step by step since time began
We see the steady gain of man;
For still the new transcends the old
In signs and tokens manifold;
Slaves rise up men; the olive waves
With roots deep set in battle graves."

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: This Psalm was composed by David in his old age as a prayer for his son, Solomon, about to ascend the throne. It has a highly wrought figurative style not unlike the second Psalm.

Scripture Setting: The Nature of Messiah's Reign. The Messiah promised, Isa. 11:1-10. Solomon's glory excelled, Matt. 6:25-34. The strength of the Messiah, Isa. 63:1-6. The Messiah expected, John 4:19-25. The Messiah found, John 1:35-41.

Life and Conduct Setting: This passage pictures Jesus as the Desire of nations. 1. Righteousness exalts a nation by furnishing a sure foundation upon which the whole edifice may safely rest. 2. The world's life has only begun to tap the resources of water, sunlight, electricity and steam; the church has only begun to utilize the diversified powers of the Holy Spirit. 3. Three ways in which Christ lives eternally: in the affectionate remembrance of the redeemed; in the literature, institutions, and social life of succeeding generations; and in the presence of God and of His angels. 4. Three ways by which we make Christ King: the giving of our wealth; the living witness of truth; and the offering of prayer.

A REIGN OF RIGHTEOUSNESS.

Vs. 1, 2 and 3. That Solomon would "judge the people with righteousness and the poor with judgment" was seen by an incident that occurred in the midst of the festivities of his accession. Two mothers of the poorer class come to demand justice of the new king. The people stand around wondering what the youthful ruler will do. The mother of the living child tells her story with the sorrow and sincerity of truth. Not her son, but a dead babe, had been placed in her bed while she slept. The other mother as strenuously insisted that she was the real mother of the living child. Then the king throws himself upon the unerring instincts of nature. The living child is to be divided—and one-half is to be given to each. The true mother betrays her affection: "O my lord, give her the living babe (she uses a peculiar and affectionate word) and in no wise slay it." The king repeats to his swordsmen word for word, the mother's cry. And the living child goes to the arms of the true mother.

Thus inaugurated Solomon's reign began as a golden age of jubilant delight. The royal justice to the poor was like the welcome showers in the thirsty East. "Judah and Israel dwelt safely every man under his own vine and under his own fig-tree, from Dan to Beersheba, all the days of Solomon." The king was his own administrator of justice. He sat in the gate and adjudicated impartially the claims of his subjects. All classes prospered until idolatry and a passion for glory captured Solomon's heart. To build a glorious palace for himself and another for Pharaoh's daughter, he laid upon his people a grievous yoke of taxes.

Beyond Solomon, therefore, we must look for the enduring reign of righteousness, which was ushered in that day Jesus stood in the little synagogue in Nazareth and read, "He has anointed Me to preach the Gospel to the poor; he has sent Me to heal the broken-hearted, to preach deliverance to the captives, and recovering of sight to the blind; to set at liberty them that are bruised, to preach the acceptable year of the Lord." Jesus came to tell us that God is our Father and all men are our brothers. Not the least hopeful sign of our times is a real passion for righteousness. Men are learning to love kindness and to hate meanness. Even the very corruption which stains the pages of our legislation has been brought to light because fearless Christian men in the spirit of Christ have demanded that these evils shall cease. There is a growing demand for righteousness in trade; our cities are being cleansed of corruption. These are the days of splendid temperance victories. Beautiful service towards the waif, the orphan, and the morally depraved, is being carried on by institutions of charity and reform. The cry of the children has been heard, and child labor abolished. These illustrate the increasing hold Christ has upon our civilization. Much remains to be done, but we thank God and take courage.

Friend of the Poor and Needy. Verses 5-7. The dynasty of David's son was to end, but the Psalmist here catches the vision of that inaugurated by Jehovah's Son which shall continue "as long as the sun and moon endure, throughout all generations."

The luxury and selfish glory of Solomon's last days probably shortened his reign. Ascending the throne as the friend of the poor and early establishing a reputation as a just judge, he later formed a monopoly by which he became the great merchant prince, and enriched himself while his people suffered. Copying the Egyptians he enslaved the remnant of the Canaanitish race and sent them to the number of one hundred and fifty-three thousand to the quarries and forests of Lebanon. With palaces, summer homes, parks, and elaborate water works and defenses, even the Israelites were kept busy by the royal summons to share in rotation in this heavy labor. There could be but one end to all this extravagance. At sixty-one the king is prematurely old, facing a rising rebellion that grew out of the social injustices. The treasury was empty, the nation in debt, the taxes were multiplied, and the monopoly of trade more and more irksome. The glory of the temple and the royal palaces no longer dazzled the eyes of the people. The reign that began so gloriously ended in revolt and oppression.

When Jesus stood in the temple of Herod and declared, "Behold a greater than Solomon is here," He looked upon a nation that was oppressed and in bondage to Rome. His coming to befriend the poor and to redress all wrongs was like "rain upon the mown grass: as showers that water the earth." And ever since it has been the glory of the greathearts of humanity to befriend the weak. An unrighteous government regards the children of poverty as having no rights. But the Christian nations are compelling justice and civilized methods even among the rude barbarians. The establishment of international tribunals and the growing hatred of war are the triumphs of Christianity over ancient error and point clearly to the day when there shall be "abundance of peace so long as the moon endureth."

Tributes to the Universal Monarch. Vs. 8-11 Mr. Hugh Boyd, who conducted an embassy to the king of Candy in Ceylon, describes the extreme reverence with which an Eastern monarch must be approached. "The removal of the curtain was the signal for my companions to make obeisance. They exhibited the most perfect degree of Eastern humiliation. They almost literally 'licked the dust,' prostrating themselves with their faces close to the stone floor, and throwing out their arms and legs, then rising on their knees, they repeated in a very loud voice a certain form of words of the most extravagant meaning; that the head of the king of kings might reach beyond the sun; that he might live a thousand years, etc."

While the rich oriental setting here is undoubtedly a picture of the successful and widening reign of David's heir, yet it has a far deeper prophetic significance. The extension of Christ's dominion is the result, not of military force, but of moral influence; all nations will be won by the righteousness of His sway, more especially by His care for the poor and afflicted. Those who "shall bow before Him" and "shall fall down before Him" are the believers who in the attitude of prayer approach Him to petition for moral perfection.

In old times on May first, it was an annual custom in London for thousands of inhabitants to resort early to the fields to bathe their faces with the dew upon the grass. It was a superstitious custom resting upon the belief that thus they would become beautiful. To bathe one's face every morning in the dew of Heaven by prayer and communion is the one sure way to obtain the inward beauty of a holy life and character. Such is the homage that God requires from king and peasant.

The Psalmist sees an ever widening domain extending "from sea to sea, and from the river to the ends of the earth." The foreign nations mentioned (verses 9 and 10) could hardly be included in the limits of Solomon's kingdom. It is a larger Kingdom than earth has known, whose King is to be righteous, universal, beneficent, and perpetual. It is only Christ's spiritual reign, present and prospective, that can meet the lofty thought of this beautifully wrought imagery.

Quiz and Study. 1. What references in this Psalm would indicate that it is a prayer for Solomon? 2. What indications are there that a future, universal, spiritual, perpetual Kingdom is also included? 3. What references in the N. T. directly mention Solomon; the Messiah? 4. Why did Jesus refuse to be King of His people, the Jews? 5. What will be the extent of His Kingdom in time, in territory, and nature of its subjects?

Challenge Text. "We have — the —, which is, being interpreted, the —. John 1: (9)"

Practical Thoughts. 1. The test of the greatness of Christ's life is the magnitude of its influence. 2. Nearly all the kings and presidents of civilized governments do publicly acknowledge the supreme rule of Christ and their loyalty to Him. 3. Those in authority need our prayers; larger duties call for added grace. 4. The poor, the needy, and the oppressed are being sympathized with, planned for, and cared for as they never were before. Christ is inspiring and moulding all our reforms and benevolences. 5. The remotest nations and those richest in natural resources are being evangelized. India's mineral wealth and Africa's future food supply will minister to the support of the Gospel.

THE SCRIPTURE LESSON IS PSALMS 84:1-12.

A Boy's Prayer: Dear Father in Heaven, I am nothing but a poor, weak little fellow; I am tempted every day to do what is wrong; but I want to do what is right. I do want to be a good boy, and grow up to be a good, strong, noble man, and do lots of good in the world. There is ever so much fun in being a boy; but I want to be a boy in the right way. And so, dear Father, won't You help me today, for Jesus' sake? Amen.

Rev. C. H. Parkhurst, D. D.

"Though fate command me to the farthest verge
Of the green earth * * *
Yet God is ever present, ever felt,
In the wide waste as in the city full;
And where He vital breathes there must be joy."

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: The title to the above Psalm indicates it was written by one of the sons of Korah, a Levitical family of singers who accompanied David in his exile. The author, besides being a keeper of the doors, had doubtless been anointed to the priesthood. (Verse 9.)

Scripture Setting: Progressive Teaching of the Temple. The temple dedicated, 1 Kings 8:22-30. Jesus in the temple, Luke 2:25-38. The universal spiritual temple, John 4:19-24. The temple of the Holy Ghost, 1 Cor. 3:9-17. The passing of the temple, Rev. 21:1-4, 21-27.

Life and Conduct Setting: 1. Wherever God is worshipped, there He dwells. 2. Blessed are they whose hearts are in the way of worship, though their bodies are detained. It was well that David's heart built a temple, though his feet never entered it. 3. Dwelling in God's house means continuous communion with God, rather than constant participation in temple ordinances. 4. The church, the noblest expression of organized, effective Christianity, needs you more inside to improve it than outside to criticize it. 5. It is blessed to dwell in God's house; more blessed is he who dwelling in exile on dreary Patmos makes it the vestibule of Heaven.

THE MOST HALLOWED SPOT ON EARTH.

Point of Contact. "Much of interest is given to a Psalm if we will simply use the facts that the Psalm itself gives us. Take, for example, that beautiful lyric, the eighty-fourth Psalm: "How amiable are Thy tabernacles, O Lord of hosts." It may not have been written as the modern title indicates, by David during his flight from Absalom; it seems not the lament of one who had been driven from his home in hasty, enforced flight, but, rather, of a permanent exile. But we shall lose half its beauty if we do not realize in imagination the situation of the singer—an "anointed one," and therefore a priest or a king—in lonely exile somewhere, and pining for the familiar and sacred scene in which his days were wont to be. And he envies even the happy birds that can fly away and make their home, where once he was, in the courts of the Lord's house; and his imagination paints the companies of pilgrims journeying up to the annual feasts. How natural and touching his imagery!—as spontaneous as "Ye banks and braes o' bonnie Doon, How can ye bloom sae fresh and fair?"

—Prof. C. T. Winchester.

Our Church Home. "How amiable are Thy tabernacles." Every verse of this Psalm recalls a picture of the caravan journeys to the national festivals. Every spot of the familiar road, every station at which the writer had rested, lives in his heart. But it was the tabernacles, or tents, which housed the ark in David's time that stood forth the loveliest picture of all. In the halls of our memory there hangs a picture—we call it Our Church Home. When a thousand miles away we still see through the mind's eye its holy walls, and hear through memory's perfect phonograph the songs, the prayers, the sacred words of long ago. That old church home may have been a temple grand, or it may have been a modest frame, nestling among the foothills, and lifting its slim white spire high over the little village. But there in that old church in childhood a gray-haired man of God laid his hand upon our young head in holy baptism. There we formed the early friendships of blessed memory. There we return on sad days to lay away our precious dead. In that old church mother saw her fair daughter given away by the sacred marriage vow. There it was long years before that she first met father when he led the village choir. It was the warm hearts in that dear old church that sweetened our joys, and took the sting out of all our sorrows. It was there, we gave our young hearts to God and were received into the fellowship of the church; there we first partook of the sacred emblems of Christ's broken body and shed blood, while our hearts beat faster, and our eyes dimmed with tears as we recalled His simple request, "This do in remembrance of Me." No wonder we sing with tenderest feeling:

Beyond my highest joy
I prize her Heavenly ways,
Her sweet communion, solemn vows,
Her hymns of love and praise.

A Nest for Her Young. "Yea, the sparrow hath found an house, and the swallow a nest." This exile from his native land contrasts his own sad lot with the joyous swallows who twitter as they flit in and out from the nest under the eaves. An unerring instinct has brought them to the old spot. The family instinct has moved them to build the strong mud walls lined with downy feathers. Presently the eggs are broken and the mother bird broods over her nestlings soon to fly. The picture makes him homesick for the courts of God. Where is there so safe a place for the children as the altar of the church?

A young father left the church for a petty grievance. Moving to the remote West he said he hoped he would never again hear a church bell. For many years that wish was gratified. He soon fell into the coarse vices of the mining camp. His wife sickened and died from overwork. She left little Mary, her namesake and her miniature. A half-breed nurse raised her. At ten she had never entered the day school or Sunday school. The reading of the eighty-fourth Psalm awakened a train of memories in the father's mind. The curse against the church was on his heart like the perpetual snow on the side of the Mount of the Holy Cross. Spring came and the snowy cross on his heart melted. He visited his wife's grave one evening when the great resolve came. He would build a chapel over her resting place. He would be a church worker again. He would redeem the manhood he had all but lost. The swallow found a nest for herself where she might lay her young. The motherless child found a church home. On the walls of the church is written Salvation; her gates are called Praise; her spire points to Heaven.

God's Little Doorkeeper. "A day in Thy courts is better than a thousand. I had rather be a doorkeeper in the house of my God, than to dwell in the tents of wickedness." The language of this whole Psalm is retrospective. One of Korah's sons, now in exile with David, remembers the tabernacle where he ministered as a Levite, remembers the glad days when he and his brothers had charge of the tabernacle singers, remembers even back to his boyhood days when with other boys he served as a doorkeeper in the courses, and kept the gates of the tabernacle. He would rather serve God in that inconspicuous post than to be one of the wicked warriors plotting in their tents against God's anointed. One of those old days of boyhood secure in God's house, was better than a thousand in the dangers of exile.

This scene reminds us of another boy who ministered before the Lord, the obedient son of Hannah. The lad Samuel, girded with a linen ephod, and wearing the coat his mother's hands had made, kept the doors of the temple in Shiloh. He kept open the doors and he kept an open heart, for one night God called him from his bed and revealed to him the sin of Eli's sons who served as priests. From the humble service of a doortender Samuel rose to be the great prophet and statesman who anointed both Saul and David.

In the little village of Nazareth there dwelt a pious mother who took her boy each Saturday to the worship of the synagogue. And as Christ grew up I am sure there were fastened in his mind fond memories of that old Jewish meeting house. Years after He returned a man of thirty and on Saturday He went into the synagogue "as His custom was." The associations of childhood, the pull of memory, the power of habit acted even upon Christ. The mirthful feasts, the public entertainments, the lights and tinsel of the stage, the catchy airs of the ballroom pass away, for there is no substance in them. But the prayers of saintly men, the encouraging words and tender caresses of some white-haired mother in Israel, the stately old hymns such as "Jerusalem, the golden, with milk and honey blest," the heart-searching messages from the faithful pastor now gone to Heaven, the earnest talks by the Sunday-school teacher,—these touched our boyhood brow like the soft palm of an angel, and the sense of that impress cannot die.

Quiz and Study. 1. What boy ministered to Eli in the services of the tabernacle? 2. What three temples succeeded the tabernacle? 3. Of what did Peter heal the beggar at the beautiful gate of the temple? 4. How old was Jesus when He questioned the doctors in the temple? 5. What happened in the temple when Jesus was crucified?

Challenge Text. "I had rather be a — in the — of my —, than to — in the — of —. Psal. 84: (2).

Practical Thoughts. 1. The God who gave the homing instinct to the bird placed the homing instinct in the soul. 2. The temple windows were built larger on the outside on the principle that light from within was to be shed out upon the dark world. 3. Spiritual progress is measured by heart longings, not by present place. Would you rather be a doorkeeper or a vagrant? 4. A good rule. Never enter a place of worship without offering a silent prayer for the worshippers and for those who minister there.

A PSALM OF DELIVERANCE

I will hear what God the Lord will speak; for he will speak unto his people, and to his saints: but let them not turn again to folly.

Surely his is nigh them that fear him; that glory may dwell in our land.

are met together;
righteousness and peace have each other.

shall spring
the earth;
and shall look down from heaven.

Yea, the Lord shall give that which is

and our land shall yield her increase.
Righteousness shall go before him; and shall set us in the way of his steps.

THE SCRIPTURE LESSON IS PSALMS 85:1-13.

Prayer: Lord Jesus, I listen to hear what You would speak, and ask for strength to do what You would approve. I want to be merciful towards my pets, towards all dumb animals, and towards my playmates. I want to be truthful to my parents, to my teachers, to my young friends, and to Thee. I want my life to be clean and righteous, doing nothing of which I am ashamed. And I want to dwell in peace with my neighbors, my brothers and sisters, and with Thee. For Thy dear sake, Amen.

"Oh, Claudia,

If thou couldst have seen the face of Him!

Never was such a conqueror! Yet no pride

Was in it, * * * naught but love and tenderness,

Such as we Romans scoff at, and His eyes

Bespoke Him royal."

—L. M. Montgomery.

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: The unknown author pictures the return from a captivity (verse 2) not unlike the Babylonian described by Ezra and Nehemiah. This unknown is a patriot taking a national view. He feels uncertain whether the exiles, despite their great distress and weakness, have learned their bitter lesson (verse 8). Mystically the Psalm teaches the principles of that government which Christ later established.

Scripture Setting: True National Grandeur. The return from captivity, Ezra 1:1-11. National injustice rebuked, Amos 5:4-15. The national Deliverer promised, Isa. 55:3-13. The return to righteousness, Luke 3:3-17. Temporal and spiritual prosperity, Psa. 144:5-15.

Life and Conduct Setting: The passage teaches the influence of religion on a people's destiny. 1. National reformations consist in individuals getting right with God. 2. Prosperity is God's general gift to a Christian nation; blessedness is His special gift to His saints. 3. Much of national glory is vainglorious; a nation's real glory is the character it produces. 4. All truth that springs from the earth is from the Gospel seed. The ultimate harvest will be the conversion of the heathen. 5. The sifted, Christian seed first planted in America has produced piety, plenty and power.

THE NATION RESTORED.

Point of Contact. "I will hear what God will speak." Standing in the midst of the shattered fragments of a once glorious nation this lone prophetic figure has the courage to pray that there may be a complete restoration. Only a small part of the people as yet had stumbled back from the Babylonian captivity. A few had returned with Zerubbabel; a few more with Ezra and Nehemiah; but many still remained in Babylon, Media, Assyria, and Egypt. This unknown Psalmist goes as a prophet to consult the Lord, and waits an answer from the spirit of prophecy. God's answer is that salvation is nigh; that glory will soon dwell in his land. This meant that worship would be resumed, the temple would be rebuilt, and the Divine shechinah would reappear. But public prosperity would rest upon private piety.

How much this sounds like a recent editorial in the Wall Street Journal: "What America needs more than railway extension, and western irrigation, and a low tariff, and a bigger wheat crop, and a new navy, is a revival of piety, the kind mother and father used to have—piety that counted it good business to stop for daily family prayers before breakfast, right in the middle of the harvest; that quit field work a half hour early Thursday night so as to get the chores done and go to prayer meeting. That's what we need now to clean this country of the filth of graft, and of greed, petty and big, of worship of fine houses and big lands and high office and grand social functions. What is this thing we are worshipping but a vain repetition of what decayed nations fell down and worshipped just before their light went out?"

The Nation's Double Wedding. "Mercy and truth are met; righteousness and peace have kissed." Here are four Divine attributes which must be harmonized and incorporated in the life of every Christian nation. They easily lend themselves to a marriage scene. For two are masculine attributes, while the other two are complementary feminine attributes. Truth is a stalwart giant who carries a battle-axe. Strong of will and sure of his cause, he is not only respected but feared. Truth started forth on the war-path bent on making inquisition for sin. The human race feared him as the condemned merchant feared old Shylock demanding the pound of flesh nearest the heart. But Truth met Mercy on the way. She was the Portia with a heart of love. He loved her, for she was what he was not; was strong where he was weak. Mercy had started forth to plead for reconciliation between God and man. Truth and Mercy had their mutual claims, but when they met they blended them in common interest. They met in Jesus Christ. He made them one forever on Calvary's mount. So mankind was once afraid of Righteousness for he carried a shining sword and was the avenger of broken law. But Peace was a beautiful maiden sent from the throne of God to publish tidings of reconciliation. When Righteousness first looked upon Peace he embraced her for he knew she was intended to be his. Christ, our great High Priest, united them forever. The Gospel of reconciliation was proclaimed and the demands of a righteous law were met in His person and sacrifice. How the wedding bells of Heaven must have rung when God saw these four attributes harmonized in the salvation of men, Mercy, Truth, Peace, and Justice dwelling in perfect concord.

Heaven's Answer to Earth's Call. "Truth shall spring out of the earth; and righteousness shall look down from Heaven." Scripture says that "deep calleth unto deep." The deepest in the heart of God answers to the deepest in the heart of man. "As in water face answereth to face, so the heart of man to man." Thus spoke the wise man. But it is a wiser truth to say that what is in the heart of all good men finds a sure response from the heart of God. What great truths have sprung out of the earth; a hatred of human slavery despite its economical value; a horror for war even though its annals are gilded with glory; a hostility to alcohol though its license is merged with our taxes. God has never been without His witnesses on earth who contended for these reforms. Righteousness has looked down from Heaven and smiled on all these undertakings. Whenever truth is woven into our contracts, transactions, and promises, a righteous God pours upon us His blessing. There is a direct relation between moral rectitude and temporal prosperity.

Righteousness the Forerunner. "Righteousness shall go before Him; and shall set us in the way of His steps." By the preaching of the law men are prepared to receive the grace of the Gospel. It was exactly this to which Paul referred when he said, "the law was our schoolmaster to bring us to Christ." The pure and holy law of God must be proclaimed, and sinners must be made to feel that this broken law cries aloud for vengeance, before they will feel their need of a crucified Saviour. The message of John the Baptizer was one of stern and uncompromising righteousness. The crooked must be made straight. They must bring forth fruits worthy of repentance. Even now the axe lieth at the root of the tree. The multitude cried, What then must we do? How he was setting men in the way of Christ's coming steps! But he would not accept their plaudits. "There cometh One that is mightier than I."

Reading the Bible will not give us a new heart. Nothing short of a personal faith in Jesus can work the miracle of conversion. But the righteous precepts of God may put us in the way of His steps. The sinner must put himself where God passes. Blind Bartimaeus was probably deaf as well as blind. When they urged him to be still he seemed not to have heard but cried the louder. When the Master called for him all seemed to have heard but himself. But with his shortcomings he pulled himself to the side of the street where he felt sure Jesus would pass. Whoever faithfully reads the Bible will sooner or later see Jesus pass and be healed. Zaccheus had his limitations which he felt only too well, but the height of the sycamore tree helped the shortness of his stature and secured the attention of Jesus. If we begin this very day to live the noblest, purest, most useful life of which we are capable we will be already walking in the way of His steps, and surprised as were the disciples on their journey to Emmaus we will find Jesus walking and communing with us.

"The social Architects who build the state,
Serving the Dream at citadel and gate,
Will hail Him coming through the labor hum;
And glad, quick cries will go from man to man,
'Lo, He has come, our Christ, the Artisan;
The King who loved the lilies, He has come."

Quiz and Study. 1. From what calamity had Israel just been spared? Whom did God use to deliver them? 2. What four cardinal virtues of Christ's kingdom are mentioned? 3. Mention some national evils against which Christ set His face. 4. What are the material and spiritual blessings promised as the result of a national awakening? 5. Name some countries shaken by national revivals in recent years.

Challenge Text. "Happy is that — that is in — a case; yea, — is that —, whose God is the —. Psa. 144:1.".

Practical Thoughts. 1. Man's duty as well as privilege is to listen to God. America should heed God's Word "lest we forget." 2. Many nations more modern than Israel have foundered on the rocks of idolatry and apostasy. 3. Justice says, Strike the guilty; Love cries, Spare the man; Christ reconciles the two. 4. Peace arranged without justice cannot endure; mercy shown, inconsistent with truth, is equally unstable. 5. The Gospel of Jesus is the silken thread uniting the parts of the mantle torn by sin.

PSA. XCI: 9-16.

THE SCRIPTURE LESSON IS PSALMS 91:1-16.

An Old Family Prayer: "Blessed Lord, take us into Thy protection this night, and preserve us from disease, from sudden death, from the violence of fire, from the edge of the sword, from the designs of wicked men, and from the influence of malicious spirits. For Jesus' sake, Amen."

"Put any burden upon me, only sustain me.

—Miss Brigham.

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: This Psalm, undoubtedly David's, is full of martial imagery. Its spirit closely follows the 27th already studied. The pestilence mentioned in 2 Sam. 24 is the most probable occasion for it. The Targum treats it as a dialogue between David, Solomon and Jehovah.

Scripture Setting: God's Sure Defenses. 1. The pestilence stayed, 2 Sam. 24:10-17. 2. The saint's defense, Psal. 52:1-9. 3. Deliverance promised, Isa. 43:1-7. 4. Ministering angels, Matt. 4:1-11. 5. Unharmed by viper's bite, Acts 28:1-6. The seven assaults, Job 5:17-27.

Life and Conduct Setting: This passage sets forth the faithful love of the Keeper and the loving faith of the kept. 1. The path of duty, however forbidding, is the path of safety. 2. The truly honorable honor God's name, His day, His house, His word. 3. That house is safe protected by insurance from so strong a firm as Faith, Prayer and Obedience. The Divine protection involves body, household, property, reputation and soul. 5. God gives us two eyes, two ears, two hands, two feet, but only one soul. Its loss, then, is irrecoverable.

THE SAFETY OF HIS SAINTS.

Point of Contact. "There shall no evil befall thee." Every schoolboy learns the story of Achilles. His mother dipped him as a child in the river Styx to make him proof against wounds. But holding him by the heel she left one small spot on his body that was vulnerable. Disguised as a girl he was reared with the king's daughters. A peddler with a sword and shield among his wares came one day. Just then an alarm was sounded, and the girls all fled, but Achilles seized the arms, proving himself a warrior. After many heroic adventures he advanced against the Scaean gate, when an arrow aimed by Paris struck his vulnerable heel and he fell, lamented by all Greece.

This ninety-first Psalm is called in the Talmud "a Song of Accidents" on the supposition that it possessed a protective power, like a charm or talisman, if sung in times of danger. It has been named "the Soldier's Psalm of Life" because it offers safety within the fortifications, on the battlefield, and amid devastating epidemics. "A thousand shall fall at thy side, and ten thousand at thy right hand; but it shall not come nigh thee." (Verse 7.) This has been a favorite Psalm for soldiers to memorize.

Captain Hedley Vicars paid this tribute in a letter to a friend: "The little book of Psalms you gave me, I take with me whenever I go out for a walk. I have just learned by heart Psalm ninety-first, and it has filled me with confidence in Jesus." Here is safety against the arrows that fly in daylight, or the terrors of night attacks like those of Gideon; protection against the slanderous tongue as well as wasting disease; insurance against the perils of this life, and provision for an eternity of blessedness. There is absolutely no vulnerable heel, a target for hostile darts, since the child of God, bathed in His providential care, is immune to every carnal weapon.

The Protected Home. "Neither shall any plague come nigh thy dwelling." The teaching here is that God shall send His angels to guard the Christian home. In the Greek story of the Garden of the Hesperides there were four sisters sent to guard it, Brightness, Modesty, Love, and Service. Think what the modern home would be if these beautiful virtues were on guard. It would be as sweet and safe as the house in Bethany kept by the sisters Mary and Martha where Jesus was the guest. A general providence is over every home, but a special providence guards the Christian home. At midnight an angel visited every house in Egypt. From the first born of Pharaoh to the first born of the captive in the dungeon not one escaped save in the houses where he saw the blood upon the lintel and the door posts. The blood upon the door made that house safe from the destroyer. How graphically did the blood-mark foretell the love and sacrifice of Him who came long after to save our homes and bring every member of the family into affectionate relations with God.

The Guard of Angels. "He shall give His angels charge over thee." Angels are the agents of God's providence to the body and soul of man. Particularly were they the attendants of Christ in His incarnation, temptation, and resurrection. When Christ was exhausted by his fasting Satan comes to tempt Him to presumption by this very verse. Think of Satan with a Bible under his arm and a verse upon his lips! But angels come and minister to His worn body and weary mind. They came to Elijah in the hour of his discouragement and defeat. They are represented by Christ as attending the footsteps of little children. They are represented in Heb. 1:14 as "ministering spirits sent forth to do service for the sake of them that shall inherit salvation." The angels of God have an especial charge to accompany, defend, and preserve the Christian.

The Protected Warrior. "Thou shalt tread upon the lion and adder and * * * the dragon." In the narrow defiles of Palestine the traveler often had no alternative left, but must destroy the obstacle in his way or in turn be destroyed. The Christian warrior at times must do more than defend himself; he must aggressively attack his spiritual foes. Some of our foes are as open as the lion who roars in the presence of his foe; some are the sly and insidious defamers that crawl in the grass; some are like the dragon, or sea monster which have no reality in fact, but are the phantom fears of the mind, the dark troubles that worry us but which we never overtake.

It is the asp rather than the adder which is mentioned in verse 13. It is a small but most venomous serpent found in Egypt and Libya for whose poison there is no known remedy. Cleopatra, queen of Egypt, chose to die this way, because death results in from three to eight hours without pain. The writer could hardly use stronger language to show that when the believer moves forward in the path of duty and in the line of truth he will be Divinely panoplied and fortified; poison will be harmless, the fire will not burn, and natural barriers will be brushed aside.

The Shield of Honor. "I will set him on high, because he hath known my name." The force of this verse is seen in 1 Sam. 2:30, "Them that honor me I will honor." The man that honors God will not only be placed in an advantageous position out of the reach of his enemy, but he will be honored and ennobled thereby.

In the old chapel of West Point Academy the walls are ornamented with white marble shields set high in the masonry. On every one is the name of some great American general of the Revolution. Because they had set their love upon their country and helped to deliver it, their country has set them on high. There is one sad exception. For one shield bears the words "Major General," and the date of the unnamed general's birth, but not his death. What does it mean? It means this one won a place, but not an honorable place. The nation would not cut Arnold's name there nor the date of his death. He denied his country; his country has denied him.

A Citadel of C's. "I will answer, be with him, deliver, honor, satisfy with long life, and show him salvation." These are six great memorial stones that might be named: communion, companionship, conquest, character, continuance, and conversion. It reminds us of the great retreat pictured in Psal. 18:2, where Jehovah is called Rock, Fortress, Deliverer, God, Strength, Buckler, Horn, and High Tower. He affords us communion. Our desires, prayers, aspirations are not unheard nor unheeded. While we hush God listens. He affords companionship. He went with Joseph into the pit, with Job to the ash heap, with David to the altar of penitence, with Daniel amid the lions, with Paul to the Roman prison. He provides for conquest. Deliverance from sin is the greatest deliverance. A famous painting of St. George is greatly enhanced by the fact that his foot is firmly planted on the dragon. So the glory of the Gospel is only enriched by the presence of evil, provided you have your foot on its neck. He stamps with character. The baser metal stamped with the king's likeness passes as coin of the realm. Character is the finished product of life, the rough ore redeemed by the refining processes of love and sacrifice. He promises continuance. Long life was the special promise of the Old Testament dispensation. (Deut. 32:46, 47.) He leads to conversion. In the offer of salvation it is more than probable that the Psalmist saw the coming of Jesus as the consummation of the Fatherly affection. So the Psalm most fittingly closes with the promise of a life that shall be happy and long and a death happy and serene that leads to endless life.

Quiz and Study. 1. What four separate acts of acknowledgment are mentioned as the cause and condition of the protection promised? 2. To which one of the commandments is linked the promise of long life? 3. What home was protected from a general destruction by a scarlet cord? 4. Where was Paul when miraculously preserved from the bite of a viper? 5. When in David's life did he attack and destroy a lion?

Challenge Text. "He that — in the — — of the — — shall — under the — of the —." Psal. 91:1.

Practical Thoughts. 1. God takes away the terrors of night, fear of fire, dread of robbers, disturbing dreams, and gives us instead "songs in the night." 2. Troubles may sweep across the sky of the believer, but there is a cyclone cellar, "the secret place," and a Presence near, "I will be with you." 3. To expect direction and guidance by guardian angels we must walk only where God has appointed them to fly. 4. There are stones as well as storms in life; the Almighty provides sandals as well as overshadowing wings. 5. How like an angel's visit, unseen and unrealized, are some of the gracious but mysterious providences. God was in the place and we know it not.

A SONG OF PRAISE

The Lord is

and slow to anger, and plenteous in mercy. He will not always chide: neither will he keep his anger for ever.

He hath not dealt with us after our sins; nor rewarded us according to our iniquities.
For as the so great is his mercy toward them that fear him.

As far as the

is from the

so far hath he removed our transgressions from us.

THE SCRIPTURE LESSON IS PSALMS 103:8-18.

Prayer: O God, Thou who art like a father, I would take time to count Thy many mercies. I thank Thee for giving me life; for sparing my life to this hour; for the promise of eternal life through Jesus, Thy Son. All of these benefits are of Thy mercy, not of my deserving. I am weak and full of faults, but Thou art slow to anger and plenteous in mercy. Let me live to serve Thee, and praise Thee everlastingly. For Jesus' sake, Amen.

"The good man has a lowly mind; and to his God, Feeling the sense of his own littleness, Is as a child in meek simplicity. What is the pomp of learning, the parade Of letters and of tongues? Even as the mists Of the grey morn before the rising sun, That pass away and perish."

—H. K. White.

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: The Psalm is probably David's, and most closely fits the experiences mentioned in 2 Sam. 12:15-20.

Scripture Setting: Merciful Benefits for the Needy. The sanctuary for trouble, 2 Sam. 12:15-20. Forsaking God but not forsaken, Neh. 9:7-17. Human frailty and Divine security contrasted, Psalms 90:1-10. Strength of God for sons of men, Isa. 40:21-31. Dimensions of Divine love, Eph. 3:8-21.

Life and Conduct Setting: The passage praises

the Divine mercy that meets man's extremes. 1. God deals with many changing generations, all the generations deal with one changeless God. 2. To review the past thankfully is to advance hopefully. What God has done, He will do. 3. God's love can be compared with the father's in direction, but not in extent. God's love begins where the father's must end. 4. The cardinal directions of the cross are the height, depth, length and breadth of love.

MEASURELESS MAGNITUDE OF MERCY.

Point of Contact. Someone has called the rainbow "God's sunshine seen through nature's tears." Some of our most beautiful hopes and most glorious glimpses of Divine mercy come to us through the salty spray of human tears. Here is a Psalm of inimitable sweetness and excellence. We can best account for it as a rare rainbow of hope that sprung up in David's soul after the death of his baby boy. David had fasted and prayed during the child's sickness. All night long had he lain on the ground and watched by the side of the little sufferer. As he watched the babe's increasing weakness how the father heart was touched with pity for his helplessness! After seven days the servants whisper, and David knows the child is dead. Then he leaves the palace and takes himself to the house of God to worship. Was it not a strange time to write a Psalm of praise? I think it was the very time to stir the gift of song within him. Never had he realized before how much he loved his child. And it reminded him how much God loved His weak and soul-sick child. "Like as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth." In prosperity David forgot to count his blessings, but after losing so much he could "forget not all His benefits" that remained. Just as we can see the prismatic colors in the rainbow after the storm, so David could see in his affliction the variegated threads of mercy he had never seen before.

That the mercies of God are magnified by bereavement is seen in the experience of others beside David. It was a life habit with John Angell James to read the 103rd Psalm at the family altar every Saturday night of his life. But on the Saturday evening of the week in which Mrs. James died he called his motherless children around him, hesitated for a moment with the open Bible in his hand, and then quietly said, "Children, I have read these verses all my life, but now I see new meaning in the words, 'Bless the Lord, O my soul, and all that is within me, bless His holy name.'"

Three Tenses of Divine Mercy. 1. The present tense, or sense of conscious possession. "The Lord is merciful and gracious." Some songs celebrate a golden age long past, some a Heavenly state to be revealed, but this song celebrates the present joys of salvation. We have needed God in the past, we will need Him in the future, but it is certain we need Him now. He is "a very present help in time of trouble."

2. The past tense, or the proof of experience. "He hath not dealt with us after our sins." Religious experience is worth all it costs. God's past dealings with us reveal His faithfulness and encourage us to believe in Him, or as Paul puts it, "Experience worketh hope." In God's unchangeableness we have a right to reason that because He has helped us hitherto He will continue as our Helper.

3. The future tense, or the prospect of trials removed. "He will not always chide." In the kindergarten corrective methods are employed because punishment is necessary. But it is in the hope that we will put away childish things. As we learn that fire will burn, that disobedience brings punishment, so we must learn that sin brings a harvest of misery. When we have attained unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ, we will have matured into ripeness for Heaven, where sin, and sorrow, and sighing are done away.

Two Dimensions of Divine Mercy. 1. The infinite reach of mercy. "As the heaven is high above the earth, so great is His mercy." I think that the stars that gem the night serve a higher purpose than giving physical light. They are flying trapezes from the roof of God's gymnasium on which human minds can cling to swing themselves through the universe. I will not attempt to say how high the heaven is above the earth. It measures millions of miles to some of our nearer stars, but the more remote the new stars discovered, the higher grows our sense of Divine wisdom and love. They are God's signal lamps hung on high. "In every star Thy glory shines." The infinite reach of Divine mercy can also be measured by considering the heights from which Christ came, and the depths of the humility and shame to which He plunged to redeem a race. "He endured the cross, despising the shame." No man is so far down in the scale of respectability but that He who died between malefactors has power to lift him up.

2. The infinite latitude of forgiveness. "As far as the east is from the west, so far hath He removed our transgressions from us." God's mercy has been likened to a circle because it begins everywhere, and ends nowhere. On every sphere there are north and south poles, so that distance in either of these directions is measureable, being in the case of the earth about 12,000 miles from pole to pole. But a man may continue to travel either east or west indefinitely. The force of this illustration, then, is to emphasize the illimitable distance to which God has removed the iniquities of His people. It may also represent the latitude of forgiving love. When Jesus was asked how many times a disciple should forgive his brother, His answer was, "Until seventy, times seven." This multiplication of the perfect number meant infinity. If we imitate the forgiveness of God we never reach the last time.

"For the love of God is broader
Than the measure of man's mind;
And the heart of the Eternal
Is most wonderfully kind."

When Alexander camped before a city he set up a light. So long as it burned his enemies might have quarter, but after it was put out no mercy need be expected. The mercy and patience of God to sinners extends on year after year, generation after generation.

Infinite Mercy Measured by Finite Fatherhood.

"Like as a father pitieth, so the Lord pitieth." The justice of the eternal King is tempered by the mercy of the eternal Father. Ancient history tells us of a kingdom in which certain crimes were punished by burning out the criminal's eyes. It so happened that the only son of the king was found guilty of such a crime, and it became the father's duty to pronounce the stern sentence on his son. In doing so he fell back upon the well-known principle of substitution. Two good eyes should be given to uphold the majesty of law, but one should be his son's, the other should be his own. The king was disfigured, but the son was left his sight. So by the principle of substitution the Divine King suffered in the stead of the sinner. Only He bore all the penalty upon the tree. Isaiah declares, "He was marred more than the sons of men." The marvelous pity of God is enough to break the heart of stone.

The human soul can depend upon God "like as a father." When He calls we know it is Father's voice; when we would fall it is Father's arms that are underneath us.

Two men were talking by the gate when two lads returning from school drew near. One of the men suggested an experiment. He lifted one of the boys, his own son, to the top of a post some six feet from the ground, and stepping back two paces, held out his arms and asked the lad to leap. Without fear and without harm he jumped into his father's arms. The second boy was lifted upon the post, and although he had the advantage of the other's example, he could not be persuaded to make the trial. The boys were equally courageous, but one had the added confidence of knowing he was leaping into his own father's arms. What a sense of security in calamity, in temptation, to know He stands beneath us "like as a father." "He knoweth our frame; He remembereth that we are dust." It was a great source of human comfort to Christ to know that His human mother, Mary, was beneath His cross so full of tender pity. But what a sense of Divine comfort to know also that His Divine Father stood there ready to uphold Him. Death to Him was no "leap into the dark" as He confidently whispered, "Father, into Thy hands I commend my spirit."

Quiz and Study. 1. What two characters in the Old Testament may be said to wear the crown for patience? 2. What elements in this lesson teach the need of humility? 3. What merciful act did David show towards one of Saul's relatives? 4. What do you consider the greatest picture ever written on fatherly kindness? 5. What parable of Christ's most strongly shows the mercy man should show to man?

Challenge Text. "Thou art a God ready to —, — and —, slow to —, and of great —." Neh. 9: (1).

Practical Thoughts. 1. Each kingdom in nature feeds upon a kingdom unlike itself. Man requires of God that which he cannot himself supply. 2. Mercy reached its high water mark in this world when Jesus prayed, "Father, forgive them." 3. The spiritual benefits of Divine mercy are conditioned upon the fear of God and the remembrance of His commandments. 4. God does not regulate His mercy by our merit; one transcends the other as the heavens the earth.

Prayer: O Lord, Thou art my Help and my Keeper. In the watches of the night while I slumber Thine eyelids know no sleep; when the sun with fiery heat would beat upon my head Thou art my shade upon my right hand; the soul committed to Thee shall know no evil; when I go forth in the morning, as when I return to my home at the close of the day, I am in Thy care. In Jesus' name, Amen.

The glorious Mount I stand,

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: The author and time of these two Psalms are uncertain. They belong to the fifteen Psalms of Ascent, so called, either because sung by the caravans of Jews in their annual pilgrimages to Jerusalem to celebrate the three national feasts, or possibly because one Psalm was chanted on each of the fifteen marble steps leading up from the court of the women to that of the men.

Scripture Setting: The Sacred City, the Seat of Religion. Founding of the city of David, 2 Sam. 5:1-12. The city on the heights, Isa. 49:8-18. The city restored, Zech. 8:3-12. Mount of Divine blessings, the New Jerusalem, and our tired feet stand 10-16.

Life and Conduct Setting: These passages represent life as a pilgrimage to the City of God. 1. The religious impulse is personal in origin, but social in operation. Not for my sake, but "for my brethren and companions' sakes." 2. Every time we invite another our religious joys are multiplied. 3. We journey forward by families, communities, tribes and nationalities, but we stand before God at last as individuals. 4. It is our duty to pray that the onward march of church and country be towards the City of God. 5. Every time we go to church we add to the testimony of Israel.

TRAVELING TOWARDS THE CITY OF GOD.

Point of Contact. "I will lift up mine eyes unto the hills." How the high heathen fortress of Jebus was transformed into "the city of David," "the lair of the lion of Judah" is an interesting story of battle. David, the young king, wished for a rocky height centrally located and easily fortified where he could build his capital. He found that Jebus, still held by the original inhabitants, was an inaccessible location, perched high above the surrounding country, and guarded by deep ravines. He wanted it, and promised the highest office, chieftain of the army, to the soldier who dared to scale the precipice. Joab clambered up the cliff, dashed the defenders down, and was proclaimed captain of the host. Beyond any other important city that ever existed Jerusalem was to be built by David as a mountain city.

"Whither the tribes of the Lord go up." What must have been the impression made upon the boy Jesus, "the Son of David," as climbing the circling road from Jericho and Bethany He approached Jerusalem from the east! I like to think of Him in that vast caravan of Galilaean pilgrims on their way to the feast. It was late in April and the road was studded with the blue and purple and scarlet of innumerable flowers. They traveled gaily along on the backs of mules, horses, asses, and camels. The boys sometimes walked and played by their parents' sides, getting a lift when tired, on horse or mule. They paused sometimes to refresh themselves with dates and melons, or to gather up from the streams fresh water in their leather bottles. They traveled by families and communities, and the road was enlivened by mirth and music. When the way grew tedious the sound of drums and timbrels lent them cheer. After three or four days of such travel they enter the cool, deep defiles of the mountains, and in anticipation of the coming view of the temple with its gilded roof and marble colonnades, they begin to sing the ancient songs of the pilgrims, the songs of ascent.

The Keeper of the City. "He that keepeth Israel shall neither slumber nor sleep. The Jews believed that in a special sense Jehovah presided over the destinies of Jerusalem. This is seen in the opening of another pilgrim song, Psa. 127, "Except the Lord keep the city, the watchman waketh but in vain." If the pilgrim bands were anywhere in the vicinity of the holy city they eagerly pushed forward in the hope that they could "stand within the gates" before sunset, the hour when the gates were closed. The sacred ark, "the testimony of Israel," was kept in the holy of holies and was believed to make the city inviolate from attack or pestilence. The heathen had their local gods in various shrines and their man-made idols, but the Jew was convinced that Jehovah kept Jerusalem by day and by night.

We owe much to the Jew for what he has taught us of religious truth, but we have a larger thought of God than this local and national view. In our "going out" and our "coming in," in the blinding heat of the day, as well as in the darkness when wild beasts prowl, on the land and on the sea, in things temporal as truly as in things spiritual, "the Lord is thy keeper."

The Compact Character of the City. "As a city that is compacted together." The deep ravines bordering the table land on which the original Jerusalem was built are not more than half a mile apart. When David chose this spot it occupied neutral ground between the two chief tribes, Judah and Benjamin. So that the location of the city physically had very much to do with the unification of the tribes. "There are set thrones of judgment." The internal government was greatly unified by establishing at Jerusalem a judicial court. Each tribe was represented by a counsellor. The king also had a council of wise men, the most famous of whom was Ahithophel. "Whither the tribes go up." The effect of these annual pilgrimages on the educational and social life of Israel can hardly be estimated. It meant a constant interchange of ideas and sympathies. It meant a bright spot in memory to recall the enthusiasm of the vast processions impelled by a common purpose, moving towards the center of national worship.

"The tribes of the Lord." Religion, as the very meaning of the word suggests, binds and solidifies. The temple worship became the life of the people in epitome. Around them were peoples who believed in many gods, but as these pilgrims by holy vows bound themselves to Jehovah, the one true God, they unconsciously bound themselves to each other. Israel is unique among nations in having a capital within such narrow compass that exerted so wide an influence to bind together a whole people politically, socially and religiously.

The ancient Jerusalem in several particulars may well stand as the symbol of the New Jerusalem which John saw let down out of Heaven. As there were the deep ravines forming natural barriers to the city of David, so in Christ's parable we are told that after death there was between the faithless Dives and the poor, but faithful beggar "a great gulf fixed: so that they that would pass from hence to you cannot." As Jerusalem, the seat of religion, unified the nation, so the New Jerusalem by the principle of holiness shall unify those that are gathered out of every nation and tribe and tongue. "There shall in no wise enter into it anything that defileth." The pure in heart shall see God. The footsore pilgrims of Israel and Judah looked eagerly forward to the rest of the sanctuary as they climbed the steep ascent. As pilgrims here we climb the heights of life with the gladdening thought that "there remaineth a rest for the people of God."

The Companionships of the City. "For my brethren and companions' sakes I will say, Peace be within thee." The pilgrim Psalmist praises the city on the heights for its social joys, its renewed companionships, its communion of saints. The religious joy is contagious and socialistic. "I was glad when they said unto me, Let us go into the house of the Lord."

There is no place in the Lord's prayer for a man to pray for himself alone. Every time a Jew went into the temple and really prayed he gained a nation-wide view of life. The pity was he did not get a broader view. For we are God-like only when we get a view of the world-field. Israel's neighbors had little local gods, gods of tribes and towns. Israel had a conception of God no larger than the bounds of Palestine. But Christ came to give us this new definition of neighbor. He is the man that needs us most. He came to tell us that God gave His Son because He loved the world. It is our privilege to invite all mankind to journey with us toward the city of God, "old men, and babes, and loving friends, and youths and maidens gay." "Rest comes at length, though life be long and dreary;

The day must dawn, and darksome night be past;

All journeys end in welcome to the weary,
And Heaven, the heart's true home, will come at last."

Quiz and Study. 1. How many cities of refuge were established, and for what purpose? 2. State which are the Psalms of ascent and why so-named. 3. What Roman general conquered Jerusalem after the time of Christ? 4. To celebrate what feast did Jesus join the pilgrim band from Nazareth? 5. What were the names of the twelve tribes? 6. What song did the children sing during Christ's triumphal entry into Jerusalem?

Challenge Text. "Great is the —, and greatly to be — in the — of our —, in the mountain of His —." Psa. 48:(?).

Practical Thoughts. 1. We will be judged not by our starting point, but the direction and the company in which we travel. 2. The walls that guard our modern city are patriotism, education, civic pride, and righteousness. 3. Heaven is glad when father, mother and children fill the family pew. 4. The reunions of Heaven afford a joyful thought, but there is the joy of communion and companionship all along the journey thither. 5. Every Sabbath rightly observed is a holy mount of privilege where tired pilgrims feast on spiritual songs and Scripture promises.

THE SCRIPTURE LESSON IS PSALMS 126:1-6.

Prayer: Lord Jesus, We thank Thee for coming to earth to publish the glad news of deliverance. Thou hast done great things for us; whereof we are glad. May our hearts be filled with singing and with gratitude. Help us to scatter the precious seed of the Gospel in the morning as well as in the evening of life. If we sow in tears, may we reap in joy. And bring us at last, our sheaves in our hand, to the blessedness of Thy harvest home. Amen.

"Tho' sown in tears thro' weary years,
The seed will surely live.
Tho' great the cost, it is not lost,
For God will fruitage give.
The harvest-home of God will come,
And after toil and care,
With joy untold your sheaves of gold,
Will all be garnered there."

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: A Psalm composed by Haggai and Zechariah to celebrate the decree issued by Cyrus permitting the Jewish exiles to return and rebuild their city and temple.

Scripture Setting: Glad Release of Captives. The decree of Cyrus, Ezra 1:1-11. Israel torn and healed, Hosea 6:1-11. The exiles return, Isa. 66:18-24. Jerusalem rebuilt, Jer. 31:1-9. National prosperity restored, Joel 3:1-8, 17-20. The decree of Christ, Luke 4:14-22.

Life and Conduct Setting: The passage suggests the homecoming song of the reapers. 1. The rude forces of poverty, misfortune and necessity drive us from our mount of security, but develop ambition, experience and confidence. 2. Divine goodness draws the whole round circle of our going forth and our return. 3. The commonplace blessings of the present would look golden through the atmosphere of distance and separation. 4. The good seed develops and multiplies amid hard conditions. 5. The song of the harvest-home is the consciousness we have added to the world's real wealth. 6. The song of the angels published the edict that man was free.

GOSPEL SEED AND SHEAVES OF GOLD.

Point of Contact. In our last lesson we left the chosen people of God rejoicing in the security of their capital city Jerusalem. In this lesson we find they have been carried into Babylon and held in exile there for more than fifty years. Now new soil may be as beneficial to the life of a people as it is to the life of a plant. Divine wisdom has provided the seeds of various plants with wonderful formations by which, independent of man, they are transported by the wind from localities where they have run out to new localities where their former vigor returns. You have seen the seed of certain grasses traveling across the country like a ball blown by the wind. After a little thought I think you can see how the Divine wisdom suffered His chosen people to be carried far away from their own little country by the winds of fierce persecution that it might strengthen their own life and plant among heathen people the true worship.

The Storm-Scattered Seed. "When the Lord turned again the captivity of Zion." It is possible to trace a Divine philosophy in Judean history as well as in the growth and spread of Christianity. God saves and multiplies the good seed not by hoarding it, but by sowing it broadcast over the earth. To plant His church everywhere He makes use of a variety of means. Through widening commerce, by the exploration of new continents, in the interests of scientific investigation, He has scattered His seed, the children of the Kingdom. It was persecution that scattered the seed of the early church. When the first disciples were inclined to remain too long in Jerusalem, forgetting they were commissioned to preach the Gospel to the uttermost parts of the earth, a great persecution arose against the church in Jerusalem, "and they that were scattered abroad went everywhere preaching the Word." In missionary fields the greatest triumphs have followed the bitterest persecutions. "The blood of the martyrs is the seed of the church."

How dark was that midnight when Nebuchadnezzar's army made a breach in the walls of Jerusalem and Zedekiah the king saw that all was lost. Within a month both the temple and the palace were destroyed by fire, the sacred vessels were carried away to adorn the temples of Babylon, and the king was on his way to have his eyes burned out. But all was not lost. Without a temple and without their stated sacrifices, they turned for comfort to the more spiritual elements of the Mosaic institutions. There still remained common memories, common hopes, and a common faith. They diffused wherever they went a knowledge of the true God. They prepared their own nation and other nations for the dispensation of the Gospel.

The Seed in Heathen Soil. "Then said they among the heathen, The Lord hath done great things for them." The liberty which followed the edict of Cyrus was so unexpected, so extraordinary and miraculous, that the heathen peoples all about were led to ponder upon the power of this great Jehovah. They contrasted their own man-made idols with the God to whom the captives of Judea prayed.

Perhaps the greatest impact on the heathen mind, however, was what the Babylonians learned of the great things the Lord had done for the Jews in keeping their faith steady in persecution. If the purity of their domestic life and the enthusiasm of their religious life so deeply impressed Cyrus, how the great mass of heathen hearts must have been touched by a contact that lasted for more than fifty years.

In the great movement of modern missions we depend not so much on miracles to move the heathen mind as upon the unselfish love that gleams in the missionary's heart. Fifty years ago a young man, slight and alone, went out from very near the spot where this is being written to face three hundred millions in India. Now he has returned from that heathen soil, weary and spent, but not until he saw 153,000 in his church and 43,000 youth in his church schools. These results of the Gospel sower are largely the effect of Christian living on heathen hearts.

"O let us find the ancient way,
Our wondering foes to move,
And force the heathen world to say,
See how these Christians love!"

—Chas. Wesley.

The Spirit-Sifted Seed. "He that goeth forth and weepeth, bearing precious seed." The sower saves from the previous year's supply the best wheat for the seed. This involves the sifting process. Now the captivity was God sifting the Hebrew nation. Israel had fallen into apostasy and Judah into idolatry. During the captivity those who were of weakened faith lost their national identity, either through intermarriage or becoming permanently attached to the political destinies of Persia and Babylon. Those who did return to rebuild the city and the temple were deeply patriotic and devout. Here was the blood that was to produce the leaders, the teachers, the prophets, the priests, and the kings of God's own peculiar people. The experience was bitter, but it was needful. They returned a chastened but a holy people. Says one historian, "The captivity ended in the colonization of Palestine with a fresh and more thoroughly cultured population, who volunteered with pious zeal to lay anew the foundations of the Hebrew polity." It was indeed "precious seed" because so little, and upon it so much depended. Judah was now like a farmer who had passed through a long famine. He had saved but a little seed over against the springtime sowing. With a sorrowful heart he goes forth carrying his all, his precious seed, and consigns it to the furrows, watering it with his tears and imploring the blessing of God. And because he feels so deep a dependence upon God he is safe. The handful of returning Israelites shall see a joyful reaping.

The Song Amid the Sheaves. "He shall doubtless come again with rejoicing, bringing his sheaves with him." There is something indescribably joyous about a harvest home. Only he who makes the early sacrifices and stays by the standing grain can expect to ride in at last upon the golden sheaves shouting the harvest home.

William Wilberforce gave his voice and impassioned personality for thirty years in advocating the freedom of Great Britain's slaves. His health broke, his eyesight failed, but he did not cease. But in old age to him was verified the promise, "They that sow in tears shall reap in joy." In 1830, on the morning of the first of August, the slaves of the West Indian colonies came into the possession of their freedom.

Thousands upon thousands of them never went to bed the night before, but assembled in their places of worship, engaging in devotions and spending the last hours of the night in singing praises to God. They had stationed some upon the hills, from which they might obtain the first glimpse of the day of their redemption. By a signal they were to proclaim to their fellows below that the light was breaking on the hills. That they might shout for joy, for they were no longer goods and chattels, but men, men with souls that God created to live for ever. When the aged Wilberforce heard of this remarkable manifestation he lay back upon his bed and said, "I am satisfied."

What was done for the physical freedom of man by Moses in Egypt, by Cyrus in Persia, by Wilberforce in England, and by Lincoln in America, Christ did for the spiritual freedom of all. Much of His sowing was done in tears. As He wept over the unrepentant city, Jerusalem seemed a flinty soil. But Isaiah, who saw the coming of Cyrus and hailed it with delight, saw also the coming of Christ and His great deliverance. "He shall see His seed, He shall prolong His days, He shall see of the travail of His soul, and shall be satisfied." (Isa. 53:10, 11.)

Quiz and Study. 1. What important works did the decree of Cyrus encourage? 2. What remaining Psalm deals with this same period? 3. What causes led to the captivity? 4. What prophet foretold the return of the people and the vessels of gold? 5. In what respects is Cyrus a forerunner of Christ?

Challenge Text. "He hath sent me to — the Gospel to the —; He hath sent me to — the —, to preach deliverance to the —. Luke 4:(?).

Practical Thoughts. 1. For all that God has done we should render acknowledgment by taking the cup of salvation to others. 2. The Lord turned the captivity, though He prompted Cyrus to give the commission to return. 3. We are to pray so long as there are any left in captivity. 4. Not until the chaff was sifted away could Christ use Peter. 5. The Pilgrim fathers were sifted seed. They sowed in hardships, we reap in prosperity.

required of us a song: and they that wasted us of us

mirth,
saying,

the songs of Zion. How shall we sing the Lord's song in a strange land?
If I forget thee, O

let my right hand forget her cunning.
If I do not remember thee, let my tongue cleave to the roof of my mouth; if I prefer not Jerusalem

THE SCRIPTURE LESSON IS PSALMS 137:1-6.

Prayer: Lord Jesus, I thank Thee for the freedom I enjoy, for the good land of my parentage, for the blessed friendships of Thy church. I thank Thee for Thy wondrous Word, for the joyful songs of the Psalmist, for the vision of the prophet, for the loving zeal of the disciples, and above all for the golden truth of the Master. Not as a stranger and an exile, but as a child in my Father's house, I sing the songs of the sanctuary; may I never forget them, but sing them forever and ever. Amen.

"Shake off the dust that blinds thy sight,
And hides the promise from thine eyes;
Arise and struggle into light,
The great Deliverer calls, Arise!
"Shake off the bands of sad despair;
Zion, assert thy liberty;
Look up, thy broken heart prepare,
And God shall set the captive free."

THE LESSON IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: The author is unknown. It was composed at the close of the Babylonian captivity, probably by a Levite of the first company of returned captives.

Scripture Setting: The Affliction of Zion. Judea transplanted, Ezek. 17:3-7, 12-14, 22-24. Punishment of captivity, Jer. 32:27-38. Letter to the captives, Jer. 29:1-14. Zion in sorrow, Lam. 1:1-12. The Avenger of Edom, Isa. 63:1-9.

Life and Conduct Setting: This passage gives a pathetic picture of the Psalmist's harp unstrung. 1. The Christian on earth is in a strange land. 2. Our holiest thoughts naturally associate with sacred places. 3. The heart cannot sing in sorrow, yet the song of another may heal it. 4. All things have an eternal fitness; the song and the sigh have their place. 5. The Psalms voice the whole wide gamut of life, from strains of pathetic sadness to exultant notes of deliverance.

THE SILENT HARP ON THE WEeping WILLOWS.

Point of Contact. We now take up our last lesson in the Psalms and the one assigned for our study is one of the very last that was written for the psalter. We have thought of the whole book of Psalms as the music room of the Bible. We are loathe to leave it, for here we have heard wondrous notes as the Psalmist with his cunning right hand has swept over the strings. But now he is in exile in Babylon. The song dies in his soul. He would pray that his good right hand might be paralyzed if he should forget the dear country and its temple he had left behind. There is no inspiration to sing or to play.

The Home Unappreciated. "By the rivers of Babylon, there we sat down." Four walls do not make a home. An exile, however housed, is homeless. These Jewish exiles in the latter part of the captivity, we may suppose, were treated kindly. During the reign of Evilmerodach it is said that king Jehoiachin took precedence over all the subject kings at the table of the Babylonian monarch; that the unfortunate king of Judah was allowed to change his prison garments for robes that looked very much like the royal ones he had once worn in Jerusalem. After he reached manhood he married the beautiful Susannah and lived in a sumptuous house with fair gardens. Some of the choicest spirits of the nation were among these captives. The land was a rich and beautiful land. Babylon had her hanging gardens that were world famous. And Babylonia had her great rivers, the Euphrates, the Tigris, the Chebar, and the Ulai. Ezekiel had his own home near Babylon where he dwelt with his wife and guided the counsels of the small Jewish community on the banks of the Chebar. But his heart was not in the land of exile, but "in the land of his nativity." Across the rich garden of that fertile region, across the vast Euphrates, across the intervening desert, his spirit and the spirit of all his countrymen still yearned towards Jerusalem, still lived in the temple courts where once he had ministered. By the rivers of Babylon they sat down in dejection, not because they had no home, but because these patriots saw beyond the horizon the goodly Jerusalem they had left behind.

The Heart Afflicted. "We wept when we remembered Zion." As Ezekiel with others wandered through the vast halls of Assyrian palaces it brought to mind the one-time splendor of Jerusalem in sad contrast with its present desolation. "How doth the city sit solitary that was full of people!" History and poetry alike are full of descriptions of the holy city and they agree that it presented a picture of dazzling splendor. Its massive walls, its iron gates, its protecting towers challenged the world. "Walk about Zion, go round about her, tell the towers thereof; mark well her bulwarks." Of all the cities of Palestine Jerusalem alone was a city of palaces. The Psalmist could describe it only in exalted language, "Beautiful for situation, the joy of the world earth is Mount Zion." It is small comfort now for the exiles to remember that it has become a city of ruins. They could never forget that day when the temple, the palace and the houses of the nobles were deliberately set on fire. The framework of the city twisted in the writhing agony of the flame and smoke. The walls and gates seemed to lament and cry as they sank in ashes. Even the two beautiful pillars of the temple that had passed uninjured through many former devastations with their delicate ornamentation were broken in pieces and the parts carried away as souvenirs by the conquerors. No wonder Jeremiah cries, "Behold and see if there be any sorrow like unto my sorrow that hath been done unto me?" The holy city was gone. All that was left was an undying love in the hearts of the exiles.

The Harp Unstrung. "We hanged our harps upon the willows." The weeping willows were very plentiful in Babylonia. Perhaps it was on a Sabbath day that a little group of the exiles made their way to the "riverside, where prayer was wont to be made." It is suggested that they sing one of the songs of Zion. The harps are taken up and strung and perhaps one of David's joyful songs announced. But as the little company is reminded of other Sabbath days when in glad company they went up the temple steps there is no heart left within them. With one consent the harps are unstrung and hung on the willow bushes as the worshipers give freedom to the grief they can no longer control.

What was it that unstrung the Hebrew harp and left the worshipers weeping beneath the willows? Their sad condition was due to disobedience. Religion does not encourage sorrow, but is in the world to heal our sorrows. Sorrow comes to nation and individual when the restraints of religion are broken. When was it that David played upon his harp the soothing strains that cured Saul of his insanity? It was when his heart was pure and his faith strong. When was it he fasted and sorrowed and hung away his harp? It was when he had done wrong and God was punishing his soul? The harp was made to be sounded and the soul was made to sing.

There is a fable that Orpheus played so sweetly on his lyre that the stones began to move in harmony, and coming together were formed into the ancient city of Thebes. But in the ruins of Herculaneum was found a fragment that has interpreted this fable. Orpheus was said to be a musician employed by the laborers, playing to them during their toil, making their work seem so light that the city was built as by the magic of music. Now religion is such a musician, supported by the workmen themselves, going with them to their tasks, singing in their hearts, supplying courage and inspiration, helping to build the modern city.

4. The Hand Unhurt. "If I forget thee, O Jerusalem, let my right hand forget her cunning." It would appear that the Assyrians had heard of the religious songs of the Hebrews, and they wished to make use of their captives by compelling them to sing their native songs as a pastime at one of their heathen feasts. It was not only unreasonable to ask a captive people to be mirthful in their captivity, but it was insulting to ask that holy ordinances should be prostituted to idolatrous practices. Patriotism and religion alike blazed up in opposition. If they did not remember their country and their God above all else, then let the right hand with which they struck the strings of the harp be withered away. Such beautiful and noble language shows that they were slaves only to circumstances, but that their souls were free. The right hand is the symbol of the freeman's strength. With it he votes in the public assembly, and with it he casts his ballot in matters of government. It is the member most honorable and most profitable. But God's true freeman would rather sacrifice its strength than surrender patriotism or religion. To have played upon the harp under those circumstances would have been to dishonor his skillful right hand, making him a destroyer of his country, his people, and his religion. But the right hand that would not destroy was soon busy in building. The hand was busy, not with the harp, but with the hammer. The temple was rebuilt by heroism and sacrifice.

After the eruption of Mount Pelee there was found on the margin of the lava flood a human hand. It belonged to a woman of noble birth. She had escaped but returned to save an orphan girl. She pushed the girl beyond the fiery stream to safety but perished herself. The girl lived to tell that story of heroism. The woman of wealth lost all but her hand that was reached forth to save.

Quiz and Study. 1. Whose coming has prophecy seen typified in the coming of Cyrus? In what respects are these two conquerors alike? 2. What reasons could the exiles give for not singing in Babylon? 3. What queen refused to be made a spectacle at a banquet? 4. What is the complete number of the Psalms? How many have we studied? 5. State in what ways you think these lessons have benefited you.

Challenge Text. "Afterwards shall the — of — return, and seek the Lord their —, and — their King; and shall fear the — and His goodness in the latter days." Hos. 3:(?).

Practical Thoughts. 1. Slavery of the body is exile; slavery of the mind is ignorance; slavery of the soul is sin. 2. There are harps in Heaven, but no weeping willows. 3. What great souls have been tested by exile: Abraham, Moses, Daniel, John. 4. The charm of the Psalms is a religious charm, their highest beauty the beauty of holiness.

THE SCRIPTURE LESSON IS PROVERBS 1:1-19.

Prayer: Strong Son of God, help me to love righteousness and despise iniquity. Help me to keep my body clean from the drugs and drinks that deaden and the sins that blacken; help me to keep my mind clean from the foul stories, the worse than idle gossip, and all false standards of morality; help me to keep my soul free from green jealousy that poisons, from red anger that inflames, and from black doubts that damn. Help me to love honor more than life, to love wisdom more than words, and to love to save the world more than to save myself. For Thy name's sake. Amen.

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: The first 24 chapters of Proverbs were written by Solomon about 1000 B. C. The first nine chapters are eulogies on true wisdom. His remaining chapters are more strictly proverbs, terse and forceful.

Scripture Setting: Heads With Honor Crowned. Crown of wisdom, 1 Kings 3:5-14. Crown of knowledge, Prov. 14:8-18. Crown of praise, 1 Kings, 10:1-10. Crown of righteousness, 2 Tim. 4:1-8. Christ's crown of glory, Heb. 2:1-9.

Life and Conduct Setting: The value of Proverbs may be gauged from these several valuations: 1

"My conscience is my crown;
Contented thought my rest;
My heart is happy in itself;
My bliss is in my breast.

I feel no care of coin;
Well doing is my wealth;
My mind to me an empire is;
While grace affordeth health."

Aristotle, "Remnants, short and correct, saved from the wreck of human philosophy." 2. Agricola, "Short sentences into which the ancients have compressed life." 3. Bacon, "Edged tools of speech which cut the knots of business affairs."
4. Luther, "A book of good works, a handbook of devotion to be compared daily with one's life." 5. Coleridge, "The best statesman's manual; its political economy would eradicate extravagance, debasement and ruin." 6. Gray, "Embraces private morality and the great objects of political importance."

THE PREACHER'S PROVERBS A CROWN OF PEARLS.

Point of Contact. "The proverbs of Solomon, son of David, king of Israel." We now turn from king David and the Psalms to king Solomon and the Proverbs. Because Solomon chose wisdom rather than great riches or fame it seems that his wisdom was given a golden setting and brought to him far-reaching fame. His influence is thus described by one writer: "Thy soul covered the whole earth, and filled it with dark parables. The countries marveled at thee for thy interpretations and songs and proverbs and parables." (Ecclus. 47:14-17.) Frequently these dark sayings took the form of the Socratic dialogue: Solomon putting difficult questions to the kings and chieftains of neighboring nations, they in turn framing questions for him to answer. He asks in Prov. 6:16, What seven things are an abomination unto the Lord? And Agur in Prov.
30:24 asks, What four things are little but exceeding wise? The historians of Tyre record that this interchange of riddles went on constantly between Hiram and Solomon, each promising to pay a money forfeit for every question of the other he could not answer. Solomon got the better of Hiram until Hiram found a boy of Tyre, the younger son of Abdemon, who not only solved all of Solomon's riddles, but sent that wise man others which he could not answer. Finally a queen from a distant country, mentioned both in the Old Testament and in the New,
came in person to put her riddles to him.
With a long train of camels she brought gold, precious stones and balsam. But like Hiram, she was worsted in the conflict of wits. She went home profoundly impressed with the magnificence of his court, but more deeply impressed with his remarkable wisdom.

The Purpose of the Book. "To give subtlety to the simple, to the young man knowledge and discretion." In all Solomon spoke 3,000 proverbs of which only a portion are preserved in the Book of Proverbs. The book is not on a level with the Prophets or the Psalms. It has more of a worldly, prudential look. It is the philosophy of practical life. It lays special emphasis on industry, prudence, intelligence and a good education. This book of practical ethics was largely Solomon's contribution to the growing young men of the kingdom to help them to knowledge and discretion.

The Principles in Interpreting the Book.
"To understand a proverb and the interpretation; the words of the wise and their dark sayings." The meaning of a proverb cannot be seized usually at the first reading.
"More is meant than meets the eye." Hence they are called "dark sayings." A proverb has the advantage of condensation, a short saying standing for a whole discourse. Every proverb, then, is a brief allegory. Nathan was the friend and teacher of Solomon, and it is likely that he taught him the parable and proverb style. If you compare Nathan's parable of the ewe lamb with Solomon's parable of the poor man and the great king

(Eccles. 9:13-16) you will be struck by their strong resemblance.

The parable's condensed statement was afterward developed in its most perfect style by Christ in the stories of the prodigal son and the good shepherd. When He first gave His parable of the sower they understood Him not, but later He gave them His interpretation. His story first aroused their interest and made them inquire. A prophecy declared that Christ should preach in parables and He used many, such as, "A house divided against itself cannot stand." Lincoln was a great lover and student of the Bible, and by adopting its language and style became most effective in public speech. Like Christ "the common people heard him gladly" because he was the nation's story teller. His greatest speech embodying his slavery views is entitled "A House Divided Against Itself." It is the unfolding and explanation of Christ's proverb. Two principles will help interpret the proverbs. First, remember that the proverbs are only general rules, but may have occasional exceptions. Ex. Prov. 10:27, "The fear of the Lord prolongeth days." The days of God-fearing Abel who was murdered is an exception, while Cain the murderer, whose days were prolonged, is another exception. Second, the significance of a proverb is best seen when studied in the light of a particular case in Scripture. Ex. Prov. 1:10, "If sinners entice thee, consent thou not." Read the result of Balaam's yielding in Numbers 22.

The Primary Principle of the Book. "The fear of the Lord is the beginning of knowledge." The approach to Divine things in Proverbs is from a different angle than in any other Scripture. Virtue and vice, holiness and sin, in the Psalms, for example, are represented either as pleasing or displeasing to God. But in Proverbs "goodness" is "wisdom," while "wickedness" is "folly." It holds up vice before the light of reason, prudence and common sense and shows it is full of bitter disappointment and dissatisfaction. It exposes the bad man as not only wicked, but a miserable, contemptible fool. There are many men who are not particularly ashamed of being knaves, but mightily stirred if they are shown to be fools. For all such the book of Proverbs has a powerful ethical and religious appeal. In the practical school of ethics religious reverence is the beginning of knowledge. A tender conscience touched by the spirit of God is the first moving impulse towards honor, rectitude and moral character. He whose mind is influenced by the fear and love of God will learn more in a month than others in a year. Though many of the rules of life in Proverbs seem to be based on mere considerations of prudence, yet religious motives are either implied or distinctly urged.

Proverbial Principles as Pearls in a Crown. "They shall be an ornament of grace to thy head." Solomon here intimates that the surest way to eminence and distinction in civil matters is to follow true wisdom by obeying parents and reverencing God. A crown of diamonds and pearls on the head and a chain of gold about the neck are the distinguishing ornaments of supreme honor and glory. The pearls of noble principles which we shall wear as a crown to our characters are clustered there from many sources. Some good principles we get from good company. "My son, if sinners entice thee, consent thou not." Some principles we get from "the instruction of a father." Some others from "the law of a mother." A father teaches us how to get our bread honestly, but usually it is a mother who gives us the good advice and the consistent example of godly living.

In the southland before the Civil War a bright-eyed boy grew up in a Christian home in the closest confidence of his mother. When only seven years old he brought from school a book which pictured the United States Senate chamber, with the Vice-President of the nation presiding over the body of senators. Looking up into his mother's eyes as he showed her the picture he asked, "Mother, if I am always a good boy, mind what my mother tells me is right, and love God, will I ever get to sit in that great chair?" The mother paused, then said: "My son, I see no reason, if you are good and brave, why you should not reap the highest honors of your country."

Not very long ago a senator from a southern state was asked to preside over the Senate just as his term was about to expire. He took the occasion to review his public life, how he rose after many struggles to be a general in the Confederate army, and afterward occupied posts of honor in his country's service. But to preside over the Senate was the crowning glory of his life. Then he referred to his boyish question and the answer his mother gave in faith, and every eye was wet. "Gentlemen," said the old general, "that faith my mother had for me has never been forgotten. I have tried to always do what that mother taught me was right, and because of it I sit today in the great chair where more than fifty years ago my mother said I would sit." "My son, forsake not the law of thy mother."

Quiz and Study. 1. What books of the Old Testament are supposed to have been written by Solomon? 2. What two references are made to Solomon in the New Testament? 3. How many proverbs did Solomon write? 4. Why is Proverbs particularly a book for young men? 5. To what three persons in this lesson does the young man owe obedience?

Practical Thoughts. There is a proverb as a remedy for every complaint: 1. For the restless man, "Running up and down the boat brings you no sooner to land." 2. For the careless man, "Measure your cloth ten times, for you can only cut it once." 3. For the impractical man, "Pray to God, but row towards shore." 4. For the man who judges by appearance, "A black cow may give white milk." 5. For the trouble maker, "Speak the truth, but come away quickly."

THE SCRIPTURE LESSON IS PROVERBS 3:1-10.

Prayer: Lord Jesus, I would pray as did king Solomon, "I am but a little child—I know not how to go out or to come in. Give thy servant an understanding heart." In all my ways may I acknowledge Thee; in all my paths do Thou direct me. I would plant the vine of obedience that I may gather the grapes of contentedness. For Thy name's sake. Amen.

Christ's miracles were wrought of old;
The common thing, the common clay,

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: This chapter is undoubtedly Solomon's, written about 1000 B. C. It shows his favorite arrangement of grouping ten verses in a paragraph (1-10, 11-20). The repetition, "My son," is the language of the tutor instructing his pupil.

Scripture Setting: Fruits of Devotion. Golden fruit, Prov. 8:10-19. Grapes of Eschol, Num. 13:17-27. Sacrifice of obedience, 1 Sam. 15:13-23. The Divine Gardener, Isa. 55:7-13. The garden of God, Gal. 5:22-26.

Life and Conduct Setting: The passage points out the wisdom of the obedient life. 1. There is no moral law but may be followed as a condition to physical health. 2. The highest point of wisdom is to be wise against our own sophistry. 3. The failure: when God looks for good and finds only goods; his epitaph: "Born a man, died a grocer." 4. Let us learn Scripture by heart; let it rule the heart. 5. No two lives can tread the same beaten track. Christ is the Divine Director.

FOUR FRUITS IN THE CHRISTIAN'S CORNUCOPIA.

Point of Contact: "He shall direct." In a London shop window a young florist has placed a strange sign. It reads, "Ugly Corners Made Beautiful." He is an enthusiastic specialist trained in flower culture and orchard surgery. He takes charge of your neglected garden or waste side hill. He piles the loose stones to form a rockery, plants between them stately ferns, scatters seeds of gay and fragrant flowers, straightens the bent fruit trees, cleans their trunks of decay, fills the spaces with cement, sprays the leaves, and makes the ugly corner a nook of beauty.

Isaiah prophesied of another Gardener who would make the solitary place blossom like the rose, and uproot the briars to plant the myrtle tree. This Young Man came to an old olive garden outside Jerusalem's walls and He transformed it into Gethsemane, the rose garden of God. He found near by a horrible hill of execution, called "the place of a skull," and He transformed it into Calvary, the Mount of Redemption. One Sunday morning, Mary Magdalene, finding Him in the garden, "supposed Him to be the gardener." Truly He is the Gardener, making beautiful all the ugly corners of life.

Our present lesson pictures the Christian's prosperity as barns bulging with harvests and presses overflowing with new wine. We may view it as Christ's cornucopia filled with four kinds of fruit.

Longer and Deeper Life. "Length of days, and long life, and peace, shall they add to thee." Solomon tells us in Eccles. 2:4, 5 and 6, "I planted me vineyards: I made me gardens and orchards, and I planted trees in them of all kinds of fruits: I made me pools of water to water therewith the wood that bringeth forth trees." He planted these trees that he might enjoy their fruits in old age, for as we mentioned in our last lesson God had said, "If thou wilt keep my commandments, as thy father David, I will lengthen thy days." The laws of religion are in strict accord with the laws of hygiene and longevity, for the same God who inspired the Bible gave man his marvellous body. The Christian life is a life of addition. In the promise, "All these things shall be added unto you," is included length of days. The wicked do not half live out their time. Says Solomon, "Neither shall the wicked prolong his days, which are as a shadow." You seldom see an old, gray-headed man in the penitentiary, for sin kills them off before their time. It is a very usual sight to see gray-headed men at church, and to find them active in religious work. "They shall bring forth fruit in old age."

Religion not only prolongs life, but enriches it. David estimated that worship enhanced the value of a day a thousand fold, declaring that one day spent in God's courts was worth a thousand godless days. The worth of a life is not to be measured by the calendar alone, for as one has said, "We live in deeds, not words, in thoughts, not breaths, in feelings, not in figures on a dial. He lives most who thinks most, feels the noblest, acts the best." Every time we do a noble act we plant a tree that shall yield us the fruit of delight in old age. We need to plant early and late and to live long if we would enjoy the best of life. The picture of content is the old man dwelling in peace under his own vine and fig tree. The choicest fruit of all is the satisfaction of a life well lived. The peace that God adds to the aged saint is like the blush and bloom He adds to the cheek of the full-ripe peach or the sweet flavor of the mellow pomegranate.

Human and Divine Favor. "So shalt thou find favor and good understanding in the sight of God and man." A dear old grandmother had a fond secret. On her mantel was a bottle with a small neck containing a large, beautiful apple. Her keen-minded grandson could not guess her secret till one June he saw a tiny apple growing within a similar bottle. Then grandma's secret was out. A life beautified with human and Divine favor must be early trained under the protection of a Christian home. That Boy of twelve who went back to the Nazareth home and was subject to His parents ripened through eighteen silent years till the time came for Him to show Himself to Israel. All we know is that there was a steady, symmetrical growth. "Jesus increased in wisdom, and in stature, and in favor with God and man."

A pure, strong life enjoys both the favor of God and of good men. When Esther, the queen, stood forth arrayed in her royal garments, the Persian king bade her advance and make known her request, for it would be granted to the half of the kingdom. Such favor was pleasing, indeed, but deep in her heart was the consciousness of the Divine favor, because she had listened to the helpless cry of the Jews and risked her own life to save theirs. If the precepts of God are bound about the neck and written upon the heart the life which results will be pleasing to all good men, and what the best men favor God approves.

Public and Private Guidance. "He shall direct thy paths." A party of young people left a Pennsylvania city to spend the day on the Pocono mountains in late autumn. Only two had been there before, a husband and wife, but the company felt secure under their leadership. They delayed the return too long and were unable to establish directions or to find the return path. After a half hour of bewilderment they were thoroughly alarmed and some of the young ladies became hysterical. It was the time for little Ehrmin, the three-year-old boy, to speak, "Father, why don't you ask Jesus to show you the path?" They all knelt on the frowning mountain in the gathering darkness while in simple faith the child offered his simple prayer. Very soon one of the party stumbled upon the lost path. They reached the station at last. The mother has cherished in her heart that first impromptu prayer of her boy. The acknowledgment of Christ in God will solve for all of us life's riddles, and Jesus will show us the path.

All the conspicuous failures in history are men who tried to choose their own path. The successful characters, like Solomon, prayed for a discerning spirit. I venture to suggest that the forbidden apples eaten by Adam and Eve were the fruit of self-sufficiency and conceit. God afterwards directed their paths, but He directed them both out of the garden of paradise. To the young man who takes this verse as his life text and abandons himself to the mind of God I can conceive of no permanent possession, no lasting satisfaction that shall not be his.

Temporal and Spiritual Prosperity. "So shall thy barns be filled with plenty, and thy presses shall burst out with new wine." It is well to remember that the great temporal prosperity of Solomon's reign flowed down a golden stream as the fulfillment of a Divine promise. On the summit of Mount Gibeon, with a vast concourse of dignitaries, the young king offered his royal sacrifices. A thousand victims were consumed. He makes his choice, so well-pleasing to God, "Give Thy servant an understanding heart."

That Solomon honored the Lord with his substance is seen by the great work he did as founder of the temple, bringing his royal gifts with a lavish hand. Nothing could be too good to dedicate to religious offices. The great vessels of brass cast by Hiram in the clay pits of the Jordan valley were so numerous that Solomon, with imperial magnificence, would not weigh them—"their weight was never found out." The first-fruits and the lambs without blemish belonged to the temple and religion. And as a result of putting God first we read that "Judah and Israel dwelt safely, every man under his own vine and under his own fig-tree." Here is the great lesson of Christian stewardship beginning to take form. Except we be obedient to God in the realm of the temporal and seen, how shall we learn to be obedient in the realm of the spiritual and unseen? The writer knows a plain old farmer living on the hills who for a good many years has practiced tithing, and has sent annually five hundred dollars for foreign missions. His peach crops never fail, and best of all his soul is steadily ripening in the favor and sunshine of Divine love.

Quiz and Study. 1. Who was the first to offer fruits as sacrifice? Who was the first tither? What king was told that obedience was better than sacrifice? 2. What seven blessings are named in this lesson as the fruit of obedience? 3. What was Solomon's choice; his great monument; his chief sin; his contribution to the Scriptures? 4. What qualities of mind and heart are the fruits of a Christian life?

Challenge Text. "In all thy — acknowledge —, and He shall — thy —." Prov. 3: (?)

Practical Thoughts. 1. This lesson only samples the fruits in God's garden, only a cluster the messenger brings from the vineyards of Eschol. 2. The greater the growth from Divine rectitude towards human understanding the greater the danger to life. 3. The Garden of Eden describes the serpent of sin, human disobedience, the Divine curse, the flaming sword. 4. The City of God describes the tree of life, the serpent cast out, the curse removed, the dazzling crown. 5. Solomon gave us wise precepts, but a greater than Solomon is here.

THE SCRIPTURE LESSON IS PROVERBS 6:6-11.

Prayer: Teach my heart to pray, O Christ, and teach my hands to work. Let each day's task honestly performed be as a daily prayer that rises to Thee. May my life be steadier and my labor better because I remember Thee at the Nazareth work-bench. May my noblest thoughts find constant expression in doing good. May I love Thee more by serving my fellow-men more. May I never eat idle bread. Give me work, and keep me busy till the great whistle blows for quitting, then send me Home with eternal reward. Amen.

THE SUBJECT IN

Historical Setting: In this chapter, written about 1000 B. C., king Solomon reveals his fondness for observing nature, his own delight in study and labor, and his oft-stated conviction of a connection between laziness and immorality.

Scripture Setting: Observations on Industry. Creation's many teachers, Prov. 30:24-31. The field of the slothful, Prov. 24:30-34. Labor and bread, 2 Thess. 3:6-16. Idleness and hunger, Prov. 19:14-24. Pattern of good works, Titus 2:6-14.

THE TWO

Point of Contact. "Go to the ant, thou sluggard; consider her ways, and be wise." Does it not appear strange to see king Solomon down on his knees over an anthill studying entomology? How much better that was than taking a nap on the grass, for by studying he gained royal wisdom. His interest in ants was only to make better men in his kingdom. With a little ant he shames a big lazy man. In our present lesson he pictures two workmen, one industrious, the other lazy, or two ways, one leading up to fool's hill, the other leading to the summit of success. We see these two ways best when we see these two kind of men working in the same field, and possibly for a few days doing the same kind of work and getting the same pay. Verses 6, 7, and 8 picture the worker; verses 9, 10, and 11 the shirker.

"Let us be content in work
To do the thing we can, and not presume
To fret because it's little."

—Mrs. Browning.

An Independent and Intelligent Worker.

"Having no overseer, or ruler." Solomon's patience, no doubt, was often tried by the irresponsibility of Palestinian workmen in his building enterprises. A recent excavator says, "In employing workmen in this country (Syria) nothing annoyed me more than the necessity to hire an overseer. The workmen will not work at all unless kept to it. The overseer himself is a perfect specimen of laziness." Solomon's lesson here is that every ant is a responsible working unit. Each individual gathers its food, cares for its young, bears its burden to build the

"Two workers in one field

Toiled on from day to day;
Both had the same hard labor,
Both had the same small pay.
One worked with many a groan,
One whistled all the day."

ITS RELATIONS.

Life and Conduct Setting: This passage contrasts the worker and the shirker. 1. Labor is desirable for its own sake apart from its substantial results. 2. The hour of idleness is the hour of temptation. 3. There are four legs to the good workman's table: industry, knowledge, prudence, perseverance. 4. Idleness is the dead sea where virtue is drowned, the self-made sepulcher of living man. 5. No man can truly say, "I do not need to work."

WORKMEN.

mound, and in all its tireless labor is its own director. The work of life in all respects is an individual one. The idea that great leaders can stamp down upon the masses religion and civilization is a wrong one.

Said a university president to the graduating class before him, "Would you abolish poverty and advance civilization? Then educate individuals one by one to be more virtuous, more intelligent, more skillful, more industrious." The real worker waits not to be told or driven; he sees what is to be done, finds out how to do it, goes ahead and completes it. The donkey, the emblem of industrial stupidity, does not escape the work by loafing, but only gets the whacks additional. The young man who would rather see his own hands move than to watch the hands on the clock will not always be a hired hand. Watch him, for he is traveling towards the summit of success as steadily as the little ant climbs to the top of the anthill.

A Pattern of Foresightedness and Frugality.

"Provideth her meat in the summer." This is the homely philosophy of "making hay while the sun shines." Solomon states it as a rule for practical life in these words, "To everything there is a season, and a time for every purpose under the sun." There are three seasons for the ant to labor, spring, summer, and autumn, and she improves them all. She does not store for winter, like the squirrel, for in winter, when she cannot work, she wisely sleeps. But when the food is plentiful she stores it. There are three seasons to life, the study and preparation of youth, the serious pursuits of middle life, and the reflections, adjustments, and preparations that belong to old age. In death "the night cometh when no man can work." The man who kills time is killing the germ from which springs eternity. If we sow not in springtime and gather not in the summer, cheerless will be the outlook when autumn comes. The lessons we learn today, and the information and training we can acquire, we will need tomorrow, be sure of that.

A young man is called before the directors of a great corporation. The men around that table represent great fortunes and every one of them is old enough to be his father. But the young man has the floor, and the older men are intently listening. They listen because he knows. The day of your opportunity will as surely come. The question is, Will you be ready to meet it? It is a mistake to think we can make up lessons missed, days wasted, tasks ignored. For every day has its one lesson, its one task.

"Toiling, rejoicing, sorrowing,
Onward through life he goes.
Each morning sees some task begun,
Each evening sees its close."

The Nature of the Sluggard's Sleep. "How long wilt thou sleep, O sluggard?" I venture to say he will stumble on, walking in his sleep, and never get awake till he meets with a Divine awakening. We have considered the ant that works; now let us consider the hook-worm which is supposed to be responsible for laziness and shiftlessness. We have here a graphic description of the sluggard, an ironical imitation of his own lazy language as he yawns and stretches over his work, "Let me put off the job a bit, let me rest a little, let me fold my arms and take a snooze." He never quite gets to sleep, and sadder still he never quite wakes up. He is so slow about starting every job that he never quite gets through it. He is like the camel who lies down at night under his burden, bearing it in his sleep. Do not think he has no burdens. It is the work and worry of his life to escape labor, but the world is always finding a job to suit his gait.

A boy that was painfully slow and lazy was apprenticed to a naturalist. It took him two hours to throw seed to the canaries. "What will I do now?" he asked. The naturalist studied his collection as he reflected on the boy's speed, and finally said, "I think you may take the tortoise out for a run." A place is made in the world for the lazy and the sluggish boy. He must work even if he goes to the reformatory, but he becomes a mere hewer of wood and drawer of water.

The Slow Coming of Poverty. "So shall thy poverty come as one that travelleth." It is slowly, step by step, that the traveller approaches, but the sluggard however much warned is never ready for the emergency. He never begins a bank account, so there is nothing when the rainy day comes. He had no money to waste on life-insurance, so he dies to leave his children the wards of charity. He had a fair capital with which to start, but he has allowed it to dwindle away.

Solomon pictures each man's inheritance as an arable field and an enclosed garden. The slothful man instead of working it merely works at it. He simply puts in his time there. His neglect is soon manifest. Gradually it deteriorates. Little by little the thorns and the brambles appear; picket by picket the fence falls down; slowly but surely the weeds gain in the garden and choke out the good seed; the vines unpruned grow to wood and produce no clusters; breaks appear in the stone wall and the cattle roam at will. Poverty has at last reached his house, if it has been long in coming. His farm, run down and impoverished, no longer produces a revenue.

"Oh poverty is a wretched thing;
'Tis full of grief and pain.
It makes the heart of the little child
With weary sighs complain."

The Rapid Approach of Want. "Thy want shall come as an armed man." The slothful owner has failed to improve his chance and so loses it. He has been sleeping too many years. Now comes the rude awakening. His family is with him in bed. A horseman comes riding up and knocks at his door. It is a constable armed with a writ of ejection. He has always held that there was time enough, but now there is no time. He and his family must hurriedly dress and move out into the night. Others suffer and are shamed by one man's neglect.

There is some honest poverty, but much poverty is dishonorable and hardly short of criminal, the frayed out badge of worthlessness and wantonness. Such families are frequently startled by some critical hour of want and suffering. But the hour of their emergency is the natural and inevitable culmination of many unobserved and wasted hours preceding.

Quiz and Study. 1. What two characters and two results are here contrasted? 2. What other little workers beside ants does Solomon commend? 3. How do the Scriptures represent the man who provides not for his own household? 4. Who is the first person mentioned in Scripture? The first work mentioned? 5. What trade did Jesus learn? What reference did He make to His work and His Father's? What is the greatest work of life?

Challenge Text: "My — worketh —, and I—.
John 5: (?)

Practical Thoughts. 1. The rust of inaction destroys sooner than the wear and friction of industry. 2. Love, labor, and religion make a happy family. 3. Idleness, vice, and poverty are familiar bed-fellows. 4. No penal institution is a true reformatory where men spend the working hours in idleness. 5. A genius for hard work is the best native genius of all. 6. Idleness is one of the seven deadly sins, the devil's softest cushion.

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: This Eastern poem is the ideal picture of a fine woman which an honored and wise mother gave to her son, Lemuel, a Chaldee chief. This woman, whose picture she doubtless draws unconsciously from herself and her own practical character, is such as he may fitly seek for his wife and queen.

Scriptural Setting: The Uncrowned Queen. King's daughters. Psalms 45:8-17. Kindness of Shunemite woman, 2 Kings 4:8-17. Vashti's noble refusal. Esther 1:10-19. Her people's saviour, Esther 4:7-17. Good works of Dorcas, Acts 9:36-43. Sphere of the wife, Eph. 5:22-33.

Life and Conduct Setting: The lesson is a noble description of a queen in the realm of character. 1. The true standard of a nation is the moral condition of its women. 2. A good name and a noble spirit are womanly charms that never fade. 3. A woman's power for evil is seen in Jezebel; a woman's power for good is seen in Mary. 4. Christ lifted from woman the veil of ignorance, bondage and obscurity. 5. A woman's home is her throne, children her jewels, virtue her armed body guard.

A QUARTET OF QUEENLY QUALITIES.

Point of Contact. "Who can find a virtuous woman?" Our lesson is a carefully wrought acrostic poem, each of the twenty-two verses beginning with a consecutive letter of the Hebrew alphabet. This first verse begins with aleph and the last one begins with tau. The unknown mother who wrote it chose this form that she might easily teach it to her son and that it might be easily remembered. This son was a prince or a child who would inherit some unusual power. His mother, so anxious that he should form a happy and honorable marriage relation, may have composed this very soon after she had taught him his alphabet. Thus forewarned and forearmed he grew to young manhood. It must have exercised great influence on him in choosing his young lady friends to have early memorized these lines by his mother. She must have been a woman of strong sense and noble virtues herself to have drawn so fine and lifelike a portrait of the kind of woman she hoped her son would marry. Since the young prince was to choose a life companion and not a holiday partner, she greatly desired he might fall in love with a virtuous girl.

A Is for Affection: a True Wife. "The heart of her husband doth safely trust in her." Sooner than the young can imagine, the romance of courtship ripens into the more serious business of homemaking. A pure, deep affection is the very alpha or beginning of a happy and permanent marriage. Many a pretty girl is like the flower called the imperial crown, which is greatly admired for its showy appearance and unusual form, but has a very displeasing fragrance. But the imperial crown on the brow of the bride that is truly beautiful is affectionate faithfulness. The ideal bride is not the one who withers at the touch of fever or misfortune, like the flower, but lasts and endures on a bed of sickness, in old age, even unto death. "She doeth him good all the days of her life." The poem represents such a wife as a true helpmeet to her husband. "He shall have no lack of gain." She takes such wise care of his earnings that he reaps prosperity and she furnishes such inspirations and incentives that he achieves honor. "Her husband is known in the gates when he sitteth among the elders of the land."

A Puritan minister has left a very quaint sermon on "A True Wife" from a text in Prov. 18:22, "He that findeth a wife, findeth a good thing, and obtaineth favor of the Lord." How much like Solomon's are these proverbs: "A good wife should be like three things which three things she should not be like. She should be like a snail to keep within her house; but she should not be like a snail to keep all she has upon her back. She should be like an echo to answer when she is called; but she should not be like an echo always to have the last word. She should be like a town clock, always keeping time with regularity; but she should not be like the town clock, speaking so loud as to be heard all over the town." How beautiful was that tribute Pliny paid his wife, "She loved that which was immortal in me." By her silent influence she ruled the life of Pliny, and through Pliny ruled the Roman state.

B Is for Business: a Good Homekeeper. "She looketh well to the ways of her household." This ideal woman was very domestic and economical. "She seeketh wool and flax and worketh willingly with her hands." Horace Bushnell used to say that in the age of homespun, women were given by the Almighty to help their husbands get a living, but that now they only help to spend one. Frugal industry is here represented as being nourished by the wife. The ancient women used to dye a royal purple in their homes, but the secret process has become a lost art. So I fear has it happened to the careful prudence and thrift that belonged to the wife of the age of homespun. The careful watching of the corners, the little economies of wisdom are not marks of meanness; they represent rather a husband and wife striving together in consolidated love to make sure a reward and competency in old age. Instead of the bread of idleness this efficient business manager of the household provides an ample loaf; instead of skimmed clothing against the winter's cold, she provides scarlet wool for all her household. She has enough of all things always for her family, but never enough to waste. There are mothers who in their battles with necessity always win out each year a little advantage and advance of thrift, yet keep their families within the bounds of comfort. This wise economy may be a homely virtue treated by the careless with humor or scorn, but it has been a great schooling for future success. The book of Proverbs treats with scorn the incapable housekeeper. "As a jewel of gold in a swine's snout, so is a fair woman which is without discretion."

C Is for Child Culture: a Faithful Mother. "Her children rise up and call her blessed." This ideal woman is a moral manager as well as an ideal household manager. Her conduct toward her children, like that toward her clothing and her food, is beyond reproach. It is her constant care that her children shall keep good company and contract good habits. She is the embodiment of the apostolic ideal, "not slothful in business, fervent in spirit, serving the Lord."

Perhaps modern times have known no nobler type of faithful motherhood than that of Susannah Wesley presiding over the rectory at Epworth, Lincolnshire. Everything was so systematized in her large family that there was time for every duty whether it was instructing the younger boys in religious matters or writing a motherly letter to her "Jack," a college lad at Oxford. She has no ornate monument, but in Westminster Abbey are the tombs of her illustrious sons John and Charles, and the hand of Susannah Wesley now rings ten thousand church bells throughout the land. Of her, Adam Clark, the great commentator, writing on this very Scripture, says, "I have met at least the equal of this Jewish matron. Her Christianity gave to her virtues and excellences a heightening, which the Jewish matron could not possess."

D Is for Devotion: a Good Christian. "A woman that feareth the Lord, she shall be praised." It is undoubtedly true that the noblest type of a religious woman ever produced in America was the Puritan woman. This thirty-first chapter of Proverbs and the Apocalypse were the sources of her ideals. She stood for strong convictions on Scripture truth; she had an intense sense of the authority of righteousness; she had a clear-voiced conscience of the purest type; she had a profound sense of the Divine overrule; she represented a womanhood Christ-inspired to the fingertips. In the Apocalypse she found two striking symbols of woman—the one type powerful for good, the other powerful for evil. There is the woman upon the scarlet colored beast full of the names of blasphemy—the woman seducer; and there is the woman clothed with the sun, the moon under her feet, and upon her head a crown of twelve stars—the leader of good, the mother of light. The ideal woman of John's vision he calls the bride of Christ. It is better to be the bride of Christ than to be one of the 400. We need such a woman today to rule America from the throne room of the home; such a woman can make the watchwords of the twentieth century. This description of a woman now living recently appeared: "She is a woman of winning personality, broad culture, exceptional executive ability, great proficiency as a household economist, of high social standing, inspiring in her pupils' love and reverence." So that God hath not left the world without witnesses of queenly qualities today.

Quiz and Study. 1. What girl watched over her infant brother and afterwards became one of the leaders of her people? 2. What young woman, great-grandmother of David, found her husband in the harvest field? 3. What two statements in the lesson suggest womanly industry? What two womanly kindnesses? 4. What does she do for her husband, her children, her maids, the poor? 5. What woman wished Christ to be released from Pilate? What women were last at the cross? What women were first at the tomb?

Challenge Text. "A virtuous — is a — to her —." Prov. 12: (?).

Practical Thoughts. 1. Religion adorns the mind and heart. The King's daughters are all glorious within. Some wives are like a goodly merchant ship, some are like a deadly man-of-war. 3. A devoted wife is too busy for mischief, too noble for jealousy, too virtuous for scandal. 4. Four secular virtues mark the good housewife, early rising, cleanliness, industry, and economy. 5. Four reasons why the good wife may laugh at coming days: her stores and supplies prepared, confidence in her husband's regard, hope in her growing children, a heart committed to the Lord. 6. My lady beautiful is my lady bountiful: a sympathizing heart for the sorrowing, discriminating eyes to know the deserving, hands beautiful with benevolence.

Prayer: Lord Jesus, Thou art the maker of the worlds. Thou hast also created us for Thy glory. When sin and Satan had wrought ruin in the soul temple Thou didst come again to repair it; and thou didst give even Thyself, to insure a true foundation and a holy life and character. ### THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, B. C. 980. Place, Jerusalem. Person, Solomon telling of life's greatest duties.

Scripture Setting: Building the Life Temple. Beginning of wisdom, Prov. 9:1-12. Contrasted builders, Psa. 1. The one thing needful, Phil. 3:1-11. A working faith, Jas. 1:19-27. Redeeming the time, Eph. 5:15-21. Busy to the end, 2 Pet. 1:12-21. A building from God, 2 Cor. 5:1-10. Take heed how you build, 1 Cor. 3:9-23.

Life and Conduct Setting: Here is a list of convincing reasons why we should remember God; and we should remember that we can do this fully, only as we accept and love the Lord Jesus Christ. 1. Remember God, because He made us, and made us for His glory. 2. Because of the coming days of weakness and old age, when we shall specially need God. 3. Because the opportunity may not be continued to us, and death may suddenly end all. 4. Because we can get the best even out of this life only by having God in us and with us. 5. Because in no other way can we attain to true wisdom and blessedness. 6. Because abundant means and calls are present to direct us in the right way. 7. Because we shall be brought into judgment for the way we choose and live. All these reasons urge the duty with special emphasis upon the young.

"Youth is the time to serve the Lord,
The time to insure the great reward."

A WORD PICTURE OF LIFE.

A Message to Youth. Not all pictures are painted with a brush on canvas. He who knows how to use words can handle them with as magic an effect as the painter does his colors. We call such a word-picture an allegory, and nowhere do we find such a beautiful and complete allegory of life as this given by the ancient Preacher.

The opening words of the Preacher's warning are stately and solemn. "Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth, while the evil days come not, nor the years draw nigh when thou shalt say, I have no pleasure in them." The very first word of warning is the word which begins the fourth commandment. Admirable as it is to obey father and mother, the Preacher lays a higher command upon the young. He would have them remember their Creator; accept Him as Saviour; obey Him as Lord and King. He would have them use their youthful strength to His honor and glory; exalt Him with eager young brain and let untiring hands and feet perform His errands. Rendering reverence and obedience to the Creator of all makes youth worth while.

How wise the Preacher who so long ago declared that the best years are the years of youth, thus anticipating by two thousand years the recent scientific investigations which prove that the maximum of physical strength is attained between the age of seventeen and twenty-three, so that office, factory and workshop demand young men and women; and some of the great railroad companies even refuse to take a new man in their service who is over twenty-three years of age. Should a young man withhold the best period of his life from God and offer his Creator only the years of waning power and strength?

One of the most pathetic scenes in a great man's life was when after his retirement from the highest office in the land, Andrew Jackson made a public confession of Christ and joined the church in his old age. After he had taken the sacred vows, he stood before the altar and with trembling voice and tearful eyes, publicly voiced his regret that, though an old man in years, he was but a babe in Christ. Then he warned the young men to remember their Creator in the day of their youth, instead of wasting the best years of life in seeking earthly honor, and bringing to God the years of infirmity and weakness.

A Picture Parable of Life. Under the figure of a decaying, storm-swept house, youth is introduced to old age, and because it portrays a godless old age, the picture is dark and dreary. Just as some paintings are symbolical and need interpretation, so we shall understand this word-picture better, when we learn that "sun and light" stand for prosperity and blessing; "darkness" for calamity and distress. The "clouds returning," suggest the oft-recurring trials of life. The "keepers of the house" are the hands and arms which are as so many guards to the body-palace of which the head is as the watch tower. The "strong men" are the feet and legs—the supporting pillars of the body-building. The "grinders" are the teeth; those that "look out of the windows" are the eyes; the "doors" are the two lips, while the "daughters of music" are the vocal cords broken and unstrung. The "keepers of the house" become the palsied arm and trembling hand of old age, and the strong men of the body bend under the weight of years. The "grinders"—ah! they will one day cease because they are few; and those windows of the soul—the bright eyes of youth—will give place to the darkened vision of old age.

The Picture Grows. As the strong body of youth passes with swift decadence into the feeble, tottering tenement of old age, a transformation is seen in the master of the house. Instead of the undisturbed slumber of youth, he rises early—"at the voice of the bird." Confidence and daring are succeeded by extreme caution. Great enterprises and exciting adventures no longer appeal to him; he is "afraid of that which is high," even avoiding hills and stairs. Courage has fled; "fears shall be in the way" of the mind not stayed on the Creator.

"The hoary head is a crown of glory, if it be found in the way of righteousness," but the Preacher uses the figure of the "almond tree" blooming before other trees; to indicate the whitening locks of one whom sin has made prematurely old. One who has spent all his forces in evil pursuits so that even so light a thing as a "grasshopper shall be a burden"—cannot serve his Creator with energy and enthusiasm. Indeed he does not long to do so, since "desire shall fail" and the soul no more longs for God. The mourning over his departure will be as heartless as that of hired mourners. Such is the old age of the godless. Who would choose a life whose end promises so little?

Other Pictures. Is the word picture repulsive? The Preacher draws two more illustrations. He invokes sudden death in life's prime, using the figure of the ancient lamp, which consisted of a golden bowl or receptacle for oil, suspended from the roof of the house or tent by a silver cord. The whitish spinal cord, oftentimes called the "thread of life" is the silver cord, and the "golden bowl," a simile for the skull, which contains the brain. How often the cord of life is snapped; or something gives way in the brain, and soul and body are separated as suddenly as "ever the silver cord be loosed or the golden bowl be broken." Again the picture is of a deep well or cistern where the water is drawn by means of a windlass to which is attached a rope and bucket—a good image of the movements of the heart and organs of respiration. The bucket or pitcher is dashed to pieces, the wheel is broken and no water can be drawn. So the most active and useful life must end when heart or lungs cease to perform their function. How insecure a thing is life! Who can afford to wait some future time in which to remember God?

A Question Answered by the Questioner.

There was a time when the Preacher himself had asked, "Who knoweth the spirit of man that goeth upward, and the spirit of the beast that goeth downward to the earth?" Were man and beast alike and did death end all? Now he answers his own question. "Dust shall return to dust," but—and the words ring down through the centuries with bugle blast—"The spirit shall return unto God who gave it." The soul never dies. It is the living spirit of man, breathed into him by his Creator; released from its earthly habitation by death it returns to the great Giver of life.

When in his eighties, John Quincy Adams was accosted by a friend. "Well, how is Mr. Adams?" The statesman replied, "John Quincy Adams is very well, sir, but the house he is living in is fast decaying. The underpinning is shaky, the windows are clouded, and the roof not so strong as it once was, and, the fact is, John Quincy Adams is preparing to move into a new habitation."

Weighed in the Balance. The Preacher was a man who had touched life at every point. He was the wisest man of all ages. He knew both men and books, and out of his vast experience he had learned the emptiness of a life lived without God. "Vanity of vanities, saith the Preacher; all is vanity." The dying Alexander, longing for more worlds to conquer; the slain Cæsar with "none so poor as to do him honor"; the caged Napoleon on the lonely little Island of St. Helena; the pleasure seeking Leopold, dying in slow torture; the richest man in the world unable to eat a working man's dinner—all attest the truth of the Preacher's verdict. The attainment of one's heart's desire is powerless to grant satisfaction to the one who strives only for earthly good. Nothing in the world is lasting. Youth soon gives place to old age. The pleasures of earth dull; its riches have wings; its honors fade; its friendships do not last. Its rewards are uncertain. Death is the only certainty. The one who serves the world may soon lose all his gain.

The great and ambitious Cardinal Wolsey who forgot his Creator in the effort to win the patronage of King Henry VIII was sentenced to death by the fickle king he had served. He may have thought of these words of the Preacher as he sadly declared, "Had I served my God half as well as I have served my king, I would have met with a different reward."

Book Learning Versus True Wisdom. Though printing was not invented until the middle of the fifteenth century of the Christian era, we must not imagine that the people of ancient times were without a literature. Written documents are as old as civilization itself, and there are hieroglyphics or sign writings now extant which were made more than two thousand years before Christ. Though these ancient rolls or volumes bore little resemblance to our modern books and contained much less matter, they were often catalogued and collected in some place for the general use of the public. There were collections of books in the temples; in the royal palaces and even in the tombs of kings, so that the Preacher declared that "Of making many books there is no end." All dealt with religion or history.

The preacher was a learned man and conversant with this literature and his warning to those who, in the conceit of their own intellect, would solve the problems of life by a study of these man-made writings, might well be handed down to the present day when so many groundless assaults are made upon religion. Books without end have been written to disprove the word of God, until their "study is a weariness of the flesh," while the Bible is still the Book whose "words of truth" warn the living, and comfort the dying, and lead us to the one Shepherd.

The Test of Life. The Preacher has painted an unpleasant picture. He has drawn a dark and gloomy cavern where danger ever lurks and disappointment broods. Such is life without the loving care and guidance of God. Youth will never reach the goal of happiness which he has set out to attain if he enters upon that path of impiety, skepticism, and neglect of God's laws and ordinances. The Preacher has set a danger sign before the road that leads to ungodliness, and now he points to the road of true happiness and success. How different the picture! It is in the open. God's sky is overhead, the stars sing His praise, while one sees the glorious dawn of another day. God is very near. Life is a daily walk with the Creator of all good. Present happiness points to greater future joy, and old age is no longer dark and dreary. It is the glorious sunset of life, as of Moses, with natural strength unabated, or the psalmist who was able to "Walk through the valley of the shadow of death," without fear, comforted and strengthened by the God whose goodness and mercy had never failed.

The great truth which shall guide each one who obeys it to the happiness which youth desires to reach is summed up in the Preacher's final exhortation, "Fear God and keep His commandments." God knows each individual soul. Not only has He lifted man above the beast, but he distinguishes between good men and bad, and holds each personally accountable for his actions. Men judge by reputation, but God's test is character. "For God shall bring every work into judgment and every secret thing, whether it be good, or whether it be evil." No act of life is beneath the notice of the great Judge, no motive of life so hidden as to be unseen by Him. Truly we should remember our Creator in youth, since to our Creator we shall have to give an account of our thoughts, words and deeds, and from His just sentence there can be no appeal.

Quiz and Study. 1. Who wrote the book of Ecclesiastes? 2. What other books did he write? 3. How do we best show that we remember God? 4. Which one of the ten commandments begins with the word "Remember?"

Challenge Text. "I love them that — me, and those that seek me — shall — me." Prov. 8:—(?).

Practical Thoughts. 1. The whole life is needed in order to serve God fully. 2. If we do not begin to love God in youth, we have no reason to believe that we shall begin at all. 3. Youth is made for pleasures and joys, but they should not be allowed to keep one from the true joy of life. 5. Youth is the time for choices, and certainly the best things should not be neglected nor forgotten. 6. There comes a time when the power of choice is gone.

THE SCRIPTURE LESSON IS ISA. 1: 1-20.

Prayer: Lord Jesus, We thank Thee for the great salvation, by which the black stains of sin may be taken from the soul and life. May we hear Thy gracious call, "Come let us reason together," and may we be conscious of the wondrous change by which we are made "as white as snow." Help us that we may more and more cease from sin and live unto Thee. May we glorify Thee in our bodies and spirits which are Thine. For Christ's sake, Amen.

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, about B. C. 758. Place, Jerusalem. Persons, Isaiah warning the wicked nation.

Scripture Setting: God and the Sinner. Calamity for sin, Isa. 59:1-16. Sin condemned, Rom. 2:1-13. Deliverance possible, Isa. 54:1-17. Judgments for sin, Isa. 5:13-30. Redemption provided, Isa. 53. Life by the Spirit, Ezek. 37:1-10. The way of escape, Isa. 55:7-13. Why will ye die, Ezek. 33:7-20.

Life and Conduct Setting: In this lesson we find God's treatment of sin and the sinner. 1. As to the sin itself, He turns on the searchlight and shows it to be (1) unnatural, by a striking illustration from the animal world; (2) rebellious and lawless; (3) stupid and foolish; (4) ungrateful; (5) self-propagating and cumulative; and (6) a grievous burden to one's self and others. 2. As to the sinner, (1) God judges and punishes him by inward moral weakness, by outward physical troubles, by national public calamities; (2) he reasons and pleads with him to turn from his sin and accept blessing and favor; (3) he promises full redemption by Christ and purification by the Holy Spirit; (4) he calls him to all kinds of service for his fellowmen.

GETTING RID OF SIN.

"Quit Your Meanness." "What a bright light that was! There it is again and again! Oh, it is that new searchlight which was placed on the court house lately." This new light made everything stand out plain and clear, and made one shrink and almost tremble whenever it swept down on him. God has been turning His great searchlight on the Jewish nation in this chapter. He has shown up the sins of the nation, and also has shown them the very nature of sin itself. By this searchlight sin is seen to be unnatural, lawless, rebellious, stupid and foolish, ungrateful, burdensome, and growing rank and horrid like a bed of weeds. By His searchlight He really says to them to quit their meanness. He shows, too, that He will judge them for the sin and punish them, and also that they themselves will become weaker and weaker because of the sin. There are two great results that follow a life of sin. One is, that it fails of any real success outwardly for sin itself means "a missing of the mark." Another result is that it eats out and destroys all that is best in the heart. So it is a failure also inwardly. That first picture is a symbol of what we all need both outwardly and inwardly, namely, a thorough washing that we may be cleansed from sin.

God's X-Ray for Man's Sin. The French government has a new use for the X-ray; it uses it as a detective in the customs department. Every passenger at the customs examination has to pass in front of the X-ray apparatus, and is subjected to a most thorough examination. In a test trial recently 167 persons were examined in forty-five minutes, and on them were found all the jewels and merchandise hidden for the experiment. An expert wrapped gloves in linen and then in tissue paper and placed them next his skin, in the region of the heart. The X-ray discovered them at once, for the buttons of the gloves had betrayed the secret. Every method of baffling it was tried, but in vain, for not a single hidden article escaped detection.—Literary Digest. Even more thorough and penetrating is God's detection and exposure of sin. "Thou God seest me."

Begin to Do Right. God calls on all of us not only to "cease to do evil but to learn to do well." We are to "get right with God," and when we do we show it, and prove it, by doing right to man. Four classes of people are pictured out here as needing help. There are those who are deprived of their just dues for some reason, and we should "seek judgment" for such. There are some who are persecuted and oppressed in some way, and we should "relieve" them. There are the fatherless children who have no strong helper, and we should remember them always and tenderly. There are the widows who are fighting life's battles alone now, and we should both help them and influence others to help them. These classes of needy people are in every community, and they will stand for any other classes. Christ said that "the poor ye have always with you." Some are poor in one way, and some in another, and to all of them we should try to be helpful as we have opportunity and ability.

Put the Label on Your Life. The "Pure Food" law provides that every label must describe truthfully the contents of the package. If a can of glucose is labeled "Vermont Maple Syrup" the manufacturer who puts it up and the dealer who sells it are liable to prosecution. In short, food, medicine, drink, what not, the thing must be what it pretends to be. Coffee must be made from the coffee berry, lemonade from lemons and any compound containing hurtful components, as cocaine, morphine, acetanilid, or alcohol, must be so labeled. We ought to put the right labels on our lives. Then we would show what we really are and others could act intelligently. That wine-drinking young man ought to be labeled. You can think of others, even boys and girls, that ought to be labeled. Label yourself.—Exchange.

A White Heart and Character. No one can do real right with the hand unless he is real right in the heart. Some people seem to be good in the life even though not right before God in the heart. But their best acts yet lack an inward heart quality—even before men; and they are altogether unacceptable to God. They may not always know this, but God does know it, and so He has sent that wonderful, wonderful message to sinful men: "Come, now, and let us reason together, saith the Lord." This is the "snow" promise of salvation. Everyone should learn this, so as to repeat the whole of it. It is one of the ten greatest verses of the Bible. No matter how black and bad the heart of man be, God has planned a way to make it white. The Bible tells us that "the heart is deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked." It is so deceitful that it deceives its owner; so Satan tries to persuade each person that he is an exception to the general rule, and is really quite good. We may much better believe God's statement, for He knows, as no one else does. We are safe, too, in taking His statement, for, at the same time, He shows us how the heart may be made right and new and clean. This we know to be by the blood of Christ in and by which we are redeemed and purified. The saved in Heaven are described as those who "have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb." The "robes" are the hearts and spirits which go to make the character. When you see or think of the snow and the white wool do not fail to think also of this great snow promise of salvation. It is for all everywhere, old and young, however sinful.

Whosoever Will. Look at this dollar bill. It says: "United States of America. One silver dollar, payable to the bearer on demand." That is to say that the United States promises to pay "the bearer" a dollar for this piece of paper when he demands it. Who is the bearer? He is the person that has the bill. I am the bearer just now. If you had the bill you would be the bearer. The promise is not made to John Doe or Simon Pure or Tom Taft, but to "whosoever." You can write your name there and it will mean you. So God's promises are not given to special people, but to all. They are yours and mine, if we claim them. Listen: "God so loved the world that (put your own name in here) should not perish." God loves all His children and wishes to bless them all.—R. P. Anderson.

Which "If" Describes You? Do you know that "if" is one of the great words in the language of conduct? It is like a great iron door or gate that often seems to shut itself before us, blocking our way. Really, it stands at the parting of the ways, and seems to send some people off towards Heaven and blessedness and others off in the opposite direction. According to one's spirit and desire he will be led into the way of life or the way of death, as this gateway of "if" opens to him; "if willing and obedient"—life, and "if ye refuse and rebel"—death. The very solemn thing about these two choices is that they are final. One will send you forever along the bright way which leads to the eternal glory; and the other will send you forever along the dark way which ends in eternal misery.

Have you Started? The day the prodigal "arose and came to his father" he saved both his material and his spiritual fortunes. His remorse and his good intentions would have availed nothing unless he had actually taken up his homeward journey. The best of purposes alone would have left him still in the land of Sodom. Having brooded over his disgrace and made his plans to escape from it, he screwed his resolution to the sticking point and simply did the thing. He made up his mind to go home—and then he went. If he continued to feed swine he must give up a good father and a good home. If he chose father and home he must leave the swine. Which "if" describes you?—Exchange.

Quiz and Study. 1. How many "major" or larger prophets are there and who are they? 2. Verse 18 is one of the ten greatest verses in the Bible. Can you mention any of the other nine? 3. "What does God, the Father, do to save the sinner? 4. What does God, the Son, do? 5. What does God, the Holy Spirit, do? 6. What is necessary for the sinner to do?

Challenge Text. "If we walk in the —, as He is in the —, we have — one with another, and the — of Jesus Christ, His Son — us from — sin." 1 John 1: (?).

Practical Thoughts. 1. Worship without obedience is an offense to God, for "to obey is better than sacrifice." 2. A sin is against God and is therefore both ungrateful and foolish, as well as rebellious. 3. The duty of service rests on all men everywhere. 4. Only by the blood of Christ redeeming and the power of the Holy Spirit cleansing and strengthening can we do that which God requires. 5. God graciously condescends to man's sinful state to reason with him. 6. Since Christ has redeemed us by His blood we should consecrate ourselves to His service. 7. The gift of life to the sinner is guaranty of every other needed blessing.

THE SCRIPTURE LESSON IS ISA. 6:1-13.

Prayer: Lord Jesus, Thou art a Savior and more. Thou art ever before us as a shining example and holy ideal. Even into the lowly bush of life's experience Thou dost come with Thy glory and Thy power. Open our dull eyes that we may see Thee in Thy alluring and commanding beauty. May we hear Thy voice calling us to greater joy and service. Help us that we may respond, "Here am I, send me." For Christ's sake, Amen.

This little place Thou hast assigned to me,
Help me, dear Lord, to fill;
Since thou hast led me here, here would I be

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, B. C. 759. Place, Jerusalem. Persons, Isaiah and the Heavenly messengers.

Scripture Setting: Called and Equipped. The mantle on Elisha, 2 Kings 2:1-11. Power with God, Isa. 62:1-12. David equipped, 1 Sam. 16:1-13. Disciples equipped, Luke 5:1-11. Trained by suffering, 1 Pet. 4:12-19. Like unto Moses, Acts 3:14-26. Wait on the Lord, Psa. 27. Paul called and equipped, Acts 9:5-16.

Life and Conduct Setting: Isaiah is the great spiritual forerunner of Jesus Christ as John the Baptist was the physical and temporary forerunner. Next to the Apostle Paul Isaiah is one of the greatest characters in Scripture. It is interesting to note his call and anointment for service. 1. Called by a gracious revelation from Heaven, vs. 1, 2, reminding one of Paul's call. 2. Prepared by a remarkable vision of God's holiness and his own sinfulness, vs. 3-5. 3. Anointed by the purifying word and work, vs. 6, 7. 4. Receives the direct call and commission, vs. 8-10. 5. Is given an intelligent understanding of conditions, vs. 11, 12. 6. Is guided and inspired by the great germinal promise, based in and on God's purpose, vs. 13. This prediction was fulfilled again and again.

A STORY OF FOUR Vs.

First V.

The Vision. The Albert memorial monument in London is one of the most remarkable monuments in the world. High up on the third platform is a statue of King Albert, sitting in a royal chair, or throne. It was ordered built by Queen Victoria as a loving tribute to the king, her husband. How much grander is this vision of Isaiah. He sees the King of kings, living and powerful, seated on a throne "high and lifted up" and His train of attendants fills the whole temple. Or the "train" may mean His royal robes, resplendent in beauty and declaring His glory and power. For a canopy there are the seraphim angels, each with six wings, and glorious beyond description. This vision came to Isaiah in the year that the king died, king Uzziah, who had ruled in Judah for fifty-two years. Thus we see that God is not dependent on earthly kings in the workings of His providence and grace. Those splendid columns shown in the first picture give us an idea of the great temple in which the vision appeared. But soon the temple fades from view and God alone is seen on His glorious throne.

Be True to the Vision.

"With chisel in hand, stood a sculptor boy
With his marble block before him;
And his face lit up with a smile of joy,
As an angel dream passed o'er him.
He carved that dream on the yielding stone
With many a sharp incision;
In Heaven's own light the sculptor shone,
He had caught that angel vision.
Sculptors of life are we, as we stand
With our lives all uncarved before us,

Waiting the hour when, at God's command,
Our life dream passes o'er us.

Let us carve it then on the yielding stone,
With many a sharp incision;
Its Heavenly beauty shall be our own,
Our lives that angel vision."

Second V.

The Voice. There is the voice of one angel to another saying, "Holy, holy, holy." The very posts of the door moved at the sound of this voice, and surely Isaiah must have been deeply impressed. Then the angel speaks directly to Isaiah, and says, "Thine iniquity is taken away and thy sin is purged." Then, greater than all, there is the voice of the Lord saying, "Whom shall I send, and who will go for us?" It is not to be wondered at that Isaiah is troubled as he has a true view of himself. The pillars and posts of his own soul are moved in the midst of these holy surroundings. The voice has reached the deepest part of his being, and he is troubled. He sees himself as never before. Over against the holy angels, and the holier God he is conscious of his own sin and unworthiness. This voice sounded through him and revealed his wicked heart and life, and also the wickedness of all others about him. This voice is like the word of God, which is "quick and powerful and sharper than any two-edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow, and is a discernor of the thoughts and intents of the heart." This sword-voice of the Bible is cutting its way into every heart.

THE SCRIPTURE LESSON IS ISA. 9:1-7.

Prayer: Lord Jesus, Thou art wonderful in Thy nature and character; wonderful also in Thy gracious revelation of Thyself to sinful and needy man. Into this world of unrest Thou dost come and say, "Peace, be still," even as Thou didst quiet the turbulent sea. Speak peace to us, we pray, and enable us to be the heralds of Thy wonderful peace to all others. For Christ's sake, Amen.

"Unheard, because our ears are dull,
Unseen, because our eyes are dim,
He walks on earth—the wonderful—
And all great deeds are done for Him."

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, probably B. C. 734. Place, Jerusalem. Persons, Isaiah portraying the character of Christ.

Scripture Setting: Jesus the Messiah. Claims to be the Messiah, John 8:46-59. King of kings, Rev. 19:11-21. With the Father, 1 John 2:1-8. Superior to angels, Heb. 1:1-14. Worthy of homage, Philip 2:1-11. Praise to the Messiah, Psa. 118:19-29. The perfect pattern, Heb. 12:1-11. An inspiring leader, Rev. 1:10-20.

Life and Conduct Setting: Here we have a picture of the world Saviour in His origin, character, work and influence. 1. Jesus Christ is a God-given Messiah, lifting Him above all human saviours, vs. 1. 2. Jesus Christ is a sadly needed Messiah, vs. 1, 2. 3. Jesus Christ is a wonderful Messiah, in the marvelous transformations of His grace, v. 3. 4. Jesus Christ is a strong and conquering Messiah, v. 4. 5. Jesus Christ is a peace-loving and peace-making Messiah, v. 5. 6. Jesus Christ is a God-Messiah; not merely Divine but Himself very God. 7. Jesus Christ is an achieving and enduring Messiah, v. 7.

A PICTURE OF CHRIST THE SAVIOUR.

Jesus Christ a Human Saviour. Does that first picture make you think of another baby, that one of our stories was about? He, also, became a great deliverer and saved his people. He himself was saved in a remarkable way when he was three months old. Yes, it was Moses; and he was intended to represent Christ who was to come. This is a prophecy of the way he would come—"unto us a child is born." In order to be a real Saviour, full of sympathy and a knowledge of human nature and needs, it was necessary for Him to be just like us in every way. So he was born into the world of a human mother, as other babies are born. His true father was the Holy Spirit, but Joseph was called His father because he took care of Him. His mother's name was Mary. Every Christmas time we study about the wonderful Christ child who was God's Son in His glorious Heavenly home and who freely left it all and came down, down to earth to save us from our sins. At His birth the angel said that His name should be Jesus, "for He shall save His people from their sins." In Paul's letter to the Philippians, second chapter, verses 6-8, we are shown how many steps of humiliation Christ took in order to begin His work of salvation. He was equal with God in Heaven, and always had been. Then He stepped down by throwing off His robes of glory and power; He stepped down by making Himself a servant; He stepped down by taking on human nature, like us in all points except sin; He stepped down by giving up His life for us; He stepped down by submitting to the worst form of death, even the death of the cross and by being classed with the wicked.

A Sympathetic Saviour. Some time ago I met with a picture representing two women in great sorrow. Standing behind the chairs on which they were sitting there appeared the figure of Christ stretching out his hand over them. They could not see him, because their eyes were dim, but he was none the less present with them. He was near in all his effulgent brightness, with all his sympathetic consolation, and with all his helpful power.

What we need is the power to see—to see chariots and horses on the mountains; to see God all about us; to see the strong right arm of the Almighty stretched out to help us; to see that the darkest clouds and most threatening surroundings are under the all-controlling power of the Everlasting Father.—Exchange.

Jesus Christ a God Saviour. It is better to say God Saviour, rather than merely a Divine Saviour. Even saved people are Divine for they are the sons of God, and have His Divine nature. Christ is more than Divine. He is God for "in Him dwelleth all the fullness of the Godhead bodily," referring to His taking our nature upon Himself. In speaking of Christ it is better to use the word Deity, instead of Divinity; then all will know that we mean His Godhead. Many people, who deny His Deity, are yet willing to admit His Divinity. A man once said to another, "If you will show me a passage of Scripture which says that Christ is God, I will believe it." His friend quoted that verse in 1 John, "This is the true God and eternal life," referring to Christ who had just been named. If that would not satisfy anyone, this list here of five great names would surely do it. And if he should still be unbelieving it would be true of him as was said of another, "He will not believe though one rose from the dead." Yes, Jesus Christ, the Saviour is "Wonderful, Counsellor, The Mighty God, The Everlasting Father, The Prince of Peace."

"Wounded in the House of His Friends." The most dangerous blasphemers of our day are those so-called Christians who, in the name of religion, and with an open Bible, deny that Jesus is the Son of God. They are the ecclesiastical descendants of the scribes, who called Jesus a blasphemer, because He forgave sins. If He was not God, the scribes were right in calling Him a blasphemer. But how much more flagrant is this heresy in our day, after all the light and testimony that history has thrown upon the Divine character of Christ.

Jesus Christ a Conquering Saviour. We may know that He is because He is God, and the mighty God. He is able to overcome all enemies, even Satan and his hosts. Every one of these other names suggests the qualities of the conqueror. He is "Wonderful" in many ways, and not least in the extent and glory of His Kingdom. He is "Counsellor" and having all wisdom. His plans are made to outwit and destroy His enemies. He is the "Everlasting Father," and therefore Creator and controller of all persons and things. He is the "Prince of Peace," and so must have overcome all things that opposed Him in order to establish His reign of peace. The angel message of "peace on earth good-will to men" is being more and more fulfilled. The glorious time when "nations shall learn war no more" is drawing nearer and nearer, and all because Jesus Christ is a conquering Saviour. But best of all, Jesus Christ conquers sin in the world and in man. He saves "to the uttermost all who come unto Him." He makes man pure and clean by His blood and makes him strong and beautiful by putting His Holy Spirit within him. We are apt to describe a great person by several names and titles, which show what he is and what he does. The Bible is the record of what Jesus Christ is and of what He does. In it there are five hundred and twenty-five names and titles to describe Him. Each of these names sets forth one or more trait of character or kind of work. Each one shows Christ in some new light. The whole Bible is as it were the setting for the display of this priceless jewel of Heaven, this "pearl of great price," this diamond character, this "sunburst of God's love and mercy."

The Cross the Secret and Sign of His Power. In and by and on the cross He was a King. Even His enemies affirmed His kingship in the inscriptions placed on that cross. With regal power on the cross He dismissed His life, no one being able to take it from Him; and with Divine potency He took it again to Himself and rose from the grave, King over death and hades. Christ is almighty to deliver us from sin, from its pollution and its consequences. Who is He that marches forth, glorious in His apparel, traveling in the greatness of His strength? The resistless Conqueror answers: "I that speak in righteousness, mighty to save."

—R. S. MacArthur.

Jesus Christ an Eternal Saviour. As He never had any beginning so He will never have any end. He is forever and forever, and His saving work, His Kingdom of righteousness, is forever and forever." Of the increase of His government there shall be no end * * * from henceforth even forever." All of the great promises that were made to Abraham, to David, and to the kingdom of Israel were made because of the Christ who was to come; and they are all fulfilled only in and by Christ. He and His kingdom are eternal also, because established upon principles that are eternal—justice, righteousness, love and holiness. As nature seems to be exhaustless in the number and extent of her powers, and in the myriad applications to human need and comfort; so Christ is absolutely exhaustless and enduring in all His work as a Saviour. The crown and climax of assurance are given in that closing word of the Scripture lesson, "The zeal of the Lord of hosts will perform this."

"Because He First Loved Us." Mamma, I am tired of loving my dolly." "Why, my child?" "Oh, because she never loves me back." "And is that why you love me?" "That is one reason, mamma, but not the first one, or the best." "What is the first and best reason, then, my darling?" "Why, mamma, it's because you loved me when I was too little to love you back. That's why I love you so much now." The little girl, you see, was giving the thought that the Bible has about the Lord Jesus Christ, "We love him, because he first loved us."—Sel.

Quiz and Study. 1. There are four great names of Christ in the lesson. What other names does He have? 2. Mention six great facts about Christ. 3. Quote some of Christ's great sayings.

Challenge Text. Wherefore God, also hath highly — Him, and given Him a — which is above — name. Philip. 2: (?)

Practical Thoughts. 1. Jesus Christ is the commanding character in all history. 2. Redemption is a covenant between God the Father and God the Son. Man gets the benefit of it by accepting it. 3. God's "nevertheless" of grace and opportunity comes to every man again and again. 4. It is the greatest folly and sin to refuse allegiance to God and his Messiah-King. 5. Everyone must bow to Christ as Saviour or submit to him as Lord. 6. There is no salvation except through acceptance of Jesus the Messiah. 7. The Christ Kingdom differs from world kingdoms, as to its origin, spirit, method of government, elements of power, universality. 8. World empire is realized only by Jesus Christ and by the spiritual energy of love and sacrifice.

Prayer: Lord Jesus, Thou art a right and glorious King, and Thy Kingdom shall extend over all the earth. Speed the day when Thou shalt come into full power in all lands. Grant unto Thy people to "be willing in the day of Thy power" that they may go forth conquering and to conquer. For Christ's sake, Amen.

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, 720 to 711 B. C. Place, Jerusalem. Person, Isaiah foretelling the glory of Christ's Kingdom.

Scripture Setting: Christ and His Kingdom. The King of glory, Psa. 24. The King of peace, Zech. 9:9-17. The righteous King, Jer. 23:1-8. A mighty Kingdom, Psa. 45:1-7. A universal Kingdom, Dan. 7:9-14. The King of life, Col. 3:1-11. A returning King, Acts 1:1-11. A world-wide Kingdom, Isa. 61:1-11.

Life and Conduct Setting: The inspired prophet gives a picture of Christ and His Kingdom. 1. As to the King: (1) He is to be of the line of David, according to the purpose of God; (2) He is to be a spiritual King, as the representative of God; (3) He is to be a wise King, surpassing all the wisdom of man; (4) He is to be a just King, punishing the wicked and rewarding the righteous. 2. As to the Kingdom itself: (1) It shall be a Kingdom of peace; (2) It shall be a Kingdom of new natures and new conditions; (3) It shall be a Kingdom in coöperation with God; (4) It shall be a world-wide Kingdom; (5) It shall be the Kingdom of the true "golden age," ushering in the millenium.

THE GREATEST KINGDOM IN THE WORLD.

A Kingdom With the Greatest King. Great preparations were made for the coronation of, George V, King of England. He is doubtless the greatest earthly king today, and rules over a larger extent of territory than any other. But the King of this Kingdom we are thinking of is a greater, far greater King, than king George, or all earthly monarchs combined. It is King Jesus, the Son of God, who came to earth for the express purpose of founding a Kingdom, as He said to Pilate at one time. In that first picture of a girdle we see the kind of a King Christ is: namely a righteous King and a faithful King. These qualities are spoken of as "girdles," which means that they bind together and control all else, as a girdle does the flowing robes. The first verses of this chapter describe this Christ King as of the line of David: spiritual, wise, and infinitely just and tender. Jesus Christ comes in the power of God, and according to the purpose of God, and fulfills all the glorious prophecies of God; and all because He is God Himself, "King of kings and Lord of lords."

The Wonderful Christ King. We celebrate His birthday throughout the world; we date our letters from the year of His birth; we offer in Congress and Parliaments prayers in His name. The history of His life is printed in four hundred languages. Kings and emperors, presidents and judges, statesmen and scholars, peasants and slaves, declare this to be the greatest and best of all books. Thousands of magnificent buildings have been erected to Him—abbeys, cathedrals and churches. Our greatest colleges were dedicated to this poor boy who never went to college, never left His own little country, and died when He was only thirty-three years old. From His life and death painters, poets, orators and musicians have gained their highest inspiration. His loyal subjects are numbered by millions and increasing at the rate of almost a million a year.—Selected.

A Kingdom That Changes the Inner Nature. Here are named some of the animals having the very strongest animal instincts. They are blood-thirsty, ravenous and with desperate cunning to kill and destroy. Men by nature have some such instincts; and someone has said that every kind of animal may find its likeness among men. So when we are told that these fierce natures of animals will be changed it means then all that is wrong and wicked and vicious in man can be corrected. Look at this wonderful picture of the power in and from this Kingdom of Christ. There is something very remarkable about it. The wolf is changed in the nature like the lamb it has sought to seize from the sheepfold; the leopard lies down with the kid it has hunted among the mountains and precipices; the lion lives peaceably with the calf or ox it has been accustomed to carry off bodily; the bear feeds with the cow it used to hug to death and eat. The asp and the cockatrice, one of the smallest and one of the largest of venomous serpents, become so harmless that the very child may play with them. This is all a striking picture of the power of the Christ King and His Kingdom of transforming force. By this power men who swear and drink, who are selfish, sinful and vicious, are made good, gentle, kind and holy.

Voice and Power of the Blood. How often have we listened to the "noises of the sea" as we placed the sea shell to our ears! A recent writer tells us that this is but the sound of the blood as it circulates through our veins and is echoed in the empty shell. The sound of the blood! What is all this singing of praise that we hear in our churches and at our home altars? What these glad tidings proclaimed from our pulpits from Sabbath to Sabbath? What these evening and morning prayers, these dying confessions of God's dear ones as they wait the endless dawn? They are the voices of the blood that followed the Roman spear and flowed from the pierced brow and the wounded hands and feet. Oh, the sound of the Saviour's blood! It has given the keynote to the world's sweetest music and has changed human animals into saints, bringing blessing to the world. It has changed the sigh of the sin-cursed soul to an eternal song of praise.—Exchange.

A Kingdom That Wins by Love and Gentleness. Look at that large picture of the little child leading those animals. Not only are their ferocious natures changed, but they are led by a child. This means that they are controlled and used by the child forces. These forces are specially love and gentleness. One may not think there is much force in love and gentleness. It is true they do not win by force, but nevertheless they are the most winning forces. I like also to see a picture of the Babe of Bethlehem in that little child. Anyhow we know that the Christ child told us about these great forces of love and gentleness, and also showed us how to use them. So now, more and more every year, a man who is saved and has become as a little child in his nature is leading and controlling the human wolves, leopards, bears and lions. This new power in and from Christ changes their very natures and makes them helpers and workers for the Kingdom of Christ. Christ is changing and conquering the world, not by a war of destruction but in a movement of rebuilding through love and kindness in righteousness.

A Spiritual Kingdom. Christ is our King by virtue of legitimate conquest. But how different is the line of action of our Heavenly King in His conquest of our soul from the course pursued by earthly generals in subduing temporal kingdoms! Alexander the Great established an empire by wading through the blood of his fellow men. By the sword he conquered, and by the sword he kept his subjects in bondage. Our Divine Ruler obtained the victory over the kingdom of our hearts, not by the material sword, but by "sword of the Spirit which is the word of God;" not by enslaving our bodies, but by rescuing our souls from the bondage of sin; not by shedding the blood of others, but by the shedding of His own blood.—Exchange.

A Kingdom That Is World-wide. A world-wide empire has been the dream of man in all ages. No one has ever been able to realize the dream, even in the low plane of earthly and selfish ambition. But Jesus Christ, the God-man, had this dream of a world-wide Kingdom and He came from Heaven to establish it. We have seen that it was a Kingdom of blessing and peace, and was to be founded on love. No mere man ever even thought of those things. Christ has not only thought of them, but has purposed to secure them. Those last two pictures show two ways in which Christ will accomplish this world empire. One is by so binding and controlling the evil, that it cannot do any harm anywhere. The other is by the giving of the Gospel to the world, and covering the whole earth with the blessings of the Gospel, "as the waters cover the sea." This triumph of Christ's kingdom is absolutely certain, for God says that it "shall be." We see that it is already accomplished in the purpose of God, and that is a good assurance that it will be accomplished in the hearts and lives of men everywhere. It is necessary for us to do two things. One is to consecrate ourselves wholly to this King and Kingdom and let Christ rule in our being, which is itself a little Kingdom. The other is to consecrate all our powers, time, toil, prayers, money, to the extension of Christ's Kingdom in all the earth. Then speedily shall the kingdoms of this world "become the Kingdom of our Lord and of His Christ."

Enduring Because Right. Only such a kingdom can endure. Nothing is really settled till it is settled right. The powers of evil seem very strong, but every one is doomed to fall before Christ. The forces of intemperance shall be destroyed; organized oppression shall be broken; heathenism shall fall; infidelity be overthrown; slavery cease. The prince of darkness in darkest England, darkest Africa, and darkest America shall be torn from his throne, and the light shall scatter the darkness, and the Sun of Righteousness with healing in his wings shall change winter into spring, and night into day.—Exchange.

Quiz and Study. 1. Who is the rightful owner of the world? 2. Who is in possession now? 3. What are the ways in which He is winning the world? 4. When and to whom did Christ say, "That He was a King"?

Challenge Text. "Yet have I set my — upon my holy — of Zion." Ps. 2: (?).

Practical Thoughts. 1. It is our privilege and duty to pray for the light and guidance of the Holy Spirit. 2. Love to man is the great solvent of many problems. 3. The true Christian worker adapts his efforts to the case in hand. 4. If we should breathe more of the oxygen of Heaven and God we could have a higher life and do better work. 5. We should treat the animal world with more kindness and consideration. 6. Our present conduct should be keyed to the ideal consummation as here pictured. 7. Since the earth is the Lord's He will give it to us as soon as we claim it by missionary consecration. 8. The story of Christ never grows old, and charms all classes and conditions.

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting. Time, about 713 B. C. Place, Jerusalem. Persons, Isaiah pleading with the people.

Scripture Setting: Gospel Blessings. Full Forgiveness, Jer. 31:31-34. Eternal life, John 11:21-27. Salvation to all, Titus 2:1-14. Sustaining grace, Isa. 43:1-13. Christ's abiding presence, Matt. 28:11-20. The Holy Spirit, Joel, 2:21-29. The many promises, 1 Pet. 1:4-13. The motive power, 2 Cor. 5:14-19.

Life and Conduct Setting. The whole chapter is a beautiful picture, of the privileges and blessings of the Gospel. 1. The Gospel transforms the most cheerless conditions and surroundings, vs. 1, 2. 2. It encourages and strengthens and inspires, vs. 3, 4. 3. It awakens, girds and energizes all the powers, vs. 5, 6. 4. It refreshes, purifies, and blesses, vs. 6, 7. 5. It provides many guiding, helpful, and protecting providences, vs. 8, 9. 6. It supplies abundant and abiding joys, v. 10. All are assured and secured in the love, purpose and power of God.

THE BLESSINGS OF THE CHRISTIAN LIFE.

Blessings of the Body. "That is the best investment I ever made." The speaker probably had in mind mere money values. He may have invested in a mine, or in the manufacture of some invention. And we know that sometimes a comparatively small outlay will bring in very large returns. Or, he may have referred to an education for himself or another, or to some experience or sacrifice by which he was stirred and spurred to a life work. All of these are good and right in themselves, and they may be very good investments. But when we begin the Christian life by a personal, heart acceptance of Jesus Christ as a Savior, we have made the very best investment that anyone could possibly make; and best in every way, both for this life and for that which is to come.

The first five pictures seem to set forth the blessings of the body. They may point also to inner blessings. But, it is asked, does the Christian life give one eyes and ears and feet and tongue? Yes, indeed, in the sense that the Christian sees and hears much that the unsaved person cannot know or understand. The man who is physically blind or deaf is unable to enjoy the physical beauties of this life. Just so the man who is spiritually blind or deaf is shut away from the spiritual beauties of this earthly life. The same is true of the feet and tongue of the Christian. Every physical power is quickened and enlarged by the new heart and new life.

Fanny Crosby's Investment. Fanny Crosby, the blind hymn writer, was once speaking in one of the missions in New York City. Suddenly she stopped and said, "I wonder if there is not some wandering boy in this audience this evening who would have the courage to step out and come and stand by my side so that I might put my arms around him and kiss him for his mother?"

There was a hush upon the audience; then a boy from a rear seat started and came to the platform, and, with her arms about him and her lips against his cheek, for his mother's sake, Fanny Crosby said, "Oh, my friends, let us rescue the perishing." From this meeting she went to her home and, sitting in her room, wrote "Rescue the Perishing," a hymn which has been sung around the world.

Some years ago she spoke in St. Louis at a great meeting and related the incident. Before she had finished a man sprang to his feet and said, "Miss Crosby, listen to me. I am a prosperous merchant in this city, a husband and a father, a Christian, and an officer in the church. I was the boy around whom you threw your arms." This was the result of seeing the worth of a soul in a young boy. It was a good investment, which resulted in the birth of that immortal hymn, and of that immortal soul.—Exchange.

Blessings of the Soul. The pictures of the waterbrook and streams, and pool and springs seem to tell of the inner life and power. The benefits of this kind in the Christian life are even more marked than the physical blessings. Then, too, they are of a higher grade. Some people even though they are not Christians, seem to have physical and bodily blessings quite equal to those who are Christians. But when it comes to blessings of the inner life the difference is seen at once. Such blessings cannot be manufactured so readily. What are some of the blessings which are suggested by the water in various forms? The water breaking out is like that joy which only a Christian can have. The "streams in the desert" are the patience and contentment in time of trial. The "pool" and "springs" are the real pleasures the Christian has, over against the sinful pleasures of the worldly; pleasures which only deceive and disappoint. The figure is that of the mirage, as it is called, which really means a false pool that represents only an imaginary pleasure. The Christian pleasures are satisfactory and life-giving and like wells of water, bringing refreshing to the Christian and others.

Pandita Ramabai's Wells. Those who have visited Pandita Ramabai's settlement at Mukti will remember the large wells, with their abundant supply of water. The Mukti Prayer Bell tells of the naming of these sources of life after the names of the fruits of the Spirit—Priti (Love), Anand (Joy), Shanti (Peace), Dhir (Long-suffering), Upakar (Goodness), Vishvas (Faith), Kripa (Mercy), Upalati (Springing Up), Sanjeevani (Reviving), Asha (Hope). As each well was dug, the 55th chapter of Isaiah was read and prayer offered.

The spot is already marked for another well, which is to be called Jacob's well. It is to be on the roadside, where any passer-by may have a drink of water and hear the Gospel of Jesus Christ. "Please pray," says the Prayer Bell, "that the wayfarers may hear, believe, and be saved."—Bombay Guardian.

Blessings of Providence. Providence is a big word, but one which every one should learn to speak early. It is full of the wisdom, goodness and care of God. Every one is daily receiving the blessings of Providence. A great preacher announced once as the subject of his sermon, "Every man's life a plan of God." That meant that God was thinking of him and ordering all his life. Surely then the Christian is in God's good hands constantly, and is guarded and guided by Him. That picture of the "dragons" is a terrible looking one, and suggests one of the evils the Christian is protected against. Then a "highway" is cast up for the Christian to walk on; a "holy way" on which no bad and unclean persons shall go. It will be made plain to him also, just as if some one was beside him saying, "This is the way; walk ye in it." "No lion shall be there, nor any ravenous beast." This may refer to Satan, who "goes about as a roaring lion;" and his demons, which might rend and tear those they possessed. There will be the company of only the "redeemed," each helping and comforting the others. Altogether it is a beautiful picture of the love and care of God by his constant Providence.

How Providence Saved Livingstone. When Livingstone went to Africa, there was a Scotch woman named Mrs. MacRobert, quite advanced in life, who had saved up thirty pounds, which she gave to the great missionary, saying: "When you go to Africa, I want you to spare yourself exposure and needless toil by hiring some competent body-servant who will go with you wherever you go, and share your sacrifices and exposures." With that money he hired his faithful servant known as Sebalwe. When the lion had thrown Livingstone down and crushed the bones of his left arm, and was about to destroy him, this man, seeing his critical condition, drew off the attention of the lion to himself, thinking that he would save his master at the cost of his own life. The lion sprang at him, but just at that moment the guns of other companions brought him down, and Livingstone's life was prolonged for thirty years.—Exchange.

Blessings of Eternal Joys. The word which often describes this earthly life is pain, or at least unrest and uncertainty. This is particularly true of those who are not Christians, and to some extent is true even of Christians. But the prevailing keynote of the Christian life is joy. It is a joy which is inward in the heart, and outward on the lips. It is a joy which is eternal, and brings blessings on their heads. It is a joy which is complete for "sorrow and sighing shall flee away." In that tree of nine kinds of fruit, grown and ripened by the Holy Spirit, joy is second in the list. See Gal. 5:22, 23.

Love is named first, and all will agree that love should be first. Joy is next, and really is itself full of the spirit and flavor and beauty of love. In the ten "blesseds" of Christ's sermon on the mount, joy is the ground note of each, and at the last it swells into a loud song and chorus, "Rejoice and be exceeding glad." In joy we find much of "the Christian secret of a happy life."

Joy In and Through Gethsemane. We are apt to think of Gethsemane only as a garden of sorrow, which we enter with emotions of deepest and saddest sympathy. But Gethsemane has its bright side, a side of glory and joy. Under those olive trees, within sight of those sleeping disciples, there stood one of angelic brightness and beauty by the Master, bringing comfort and strength to His victorious spirit. The garden that echoed lately with the cry of agony was illuminated with a Heavenly radiance and glory.—Exchange.

Quiz and Study. 1. How many "Blesseds" are in Christ's sermon on the Mount? How many can you recite? 2. What benefits has the Gospel brought to your home or town? 3. What blind man did Christ heal? What deaf man? What lame man?

Challenge Text. "But my God shall — all your need, according to His riches in — by Christ Jesus." Philip. 4:(f).

Practical Thoughts. 1. They who work in and by the Gospel have the very power of God. 2. To be conscious of one's weakness is the first condition of strength. 3. The Church should always take special care of all unfortunates. 4. The most unlikely conditions are often made to minister to spiritual good. 5. Some people are so wise as to make themselves fools in spiritual matters. 6. God's "shalls" are the sure guaranty of all the believers' blessings.

THE SCRIPTURE LESSON IS ISAIAH 52:13—53:12.

Prayer: Lord Jesus, Thou art the lowly One and therefore the enthroned One. Thy Gethsemane and Calvary have made Thee mighty to save. Thou art worshiped on earth, and glorified in Heaven, because Thou didst suffer and die. May the time speed to us swiftly when Thou shalt "be satisfied." Make us to be more consecrated in service, even to the vicarious spirit, in sacrifice for others. For Christ's sake, Amen.

Lord make me wholly Thine,
Grant grace and strength Divine
To me.

"In thought and word and deed,

My soul, even though it bleed,
To Thee."

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, 712 B. C. Place, Jerusalem. Persons, Isaiah describing Jesus Christ in prophecy.

Scripture Setting: The Suffering Saviour. A glorious Saviour, Rev. 5. A despised Saviour, Psa. 22. A necessary Saviour, Heb. 2:1-15. A vicarious Saviour, Heb. 10:5-22. A life-giving Saviour, Col. 3:1-11. A victorious Saviour, Rev. 19:6-21. A purchasing Saviour, 1 Pet. 1:12-25. A Saviour for all, Isa. 49:1-13.

Life and Conduct Setting: Here is the fullest picture of the Christ in His sacrificial work. The prophet depicts Him as (1) A glorious Saviour, 52:13-15; (2) A rejected and misunderstood Saviour, 53:1-3; (3) A sorrowing Saviour, vs. 3, 4; (4) A sin-bearing, vicarious Saviour, vs. 4-6; (5) A suffering Saviour, vs. 7-8; (6) A dying Saviour, vs. 8, 9; (7) An interceding and victorious Saviour, vs. 10-12; (8) A transforming and comforting Saviour.

THE MAN WHO DIED FOR ME.

A Sorrowing Saviour. A man was seen in deep grief before a grave in a Southern cemetery. "Was it a relative of yours?" he was asked by a sympathetic person who witnessed his great sorrow. "No, no; he saved my life." Then he told the story of his being drafted into the army in a Northern state. He was distressed because he had to leave wife and family, and in not the best circumstances. The neighbor came to him and said, "I am a single man, and I will go to war for you." He even urged it, and finally the father consented for the sake of his family. His friend went, suffered much in many ways, and at last died in prison and was buried in a strange land. This grateful father came South whenever he could, and placed an evergreen wreath on the grave of the man who died for him.

Those first four pictures eloquently tell the story of Christ's sacrifices and sufferings because he came to take our place, and die for us. Did Christ ever smile? To look at the first picture, one would think not. He was "a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief," because our sins were upon Him. But I think this ought to be said that Christ had a smile in His heart for everyone. To those who know Him as their Saviour, "He is altogether lovely," and "the chiefest among ten thousand." To the penitent sinner there is no more beautiful face in all the world, than the face of the sorrowing Saviour. Look at those three other pictures—"wounded," "bruised," and "stripes," and remember that He bore it all, for you.

Sorrowing, But Saving. My study of the life of Jesus has showed me that wherever He appeared sorrow disappeared, and I am sure that He wishes in the same way to drive sorrow out of my life. In a harsh world of pain one of the works of God is to "wipe away all tears from our eyes."

Christ saves us from sorrow by giving us the right point of view. We weep because we do not understand. Have I erred? Why weep? Weeping will not help the mistake. Let me rather try to rectify my error; or, if that be impossible, do the thing again, and do it right. Has death taken from us a loved one? Christ points to the Father's house above and says, "Rejoice; he has gone to the Father." Have we suffered loss? What matter, if we have treasure in Heaven?—R. P. Anderson.

A Sin-Bearing Saviour. Why must this God-man suffer so much? There are two great reasons; one is because He loved so much, and the other is because man sinned so much. That word "so" is a great little word. We see its full meaning in John 3:16, "God so loved," etc. But it has equally great meaning in the expressions, "Christ so suffered," and "man so sinned." All three of these expressions belong together and each one helps to explain the others. Nothing but the death of Christ could atone for, or take away, the sin of man.

Now look at that picture of the sheep, and we get another thought or two as to man's sin. The sheep without a shepherd is the very picture of helplessness; ignorant of what to do, and an easy prey to the wild animal. Sin makes man like that, for all sin is a "missing of the mark," a failing to find safety and help. But perhaps you are thinking that sheep in general, in the flock, might be helpless and in peril; and that you as an individual sheep will be able to escape. The next clause is for anyone who may fancy he is not included. It reads, "We have turned everyone to his own way." Even if many others lead you into evil, yet you are individually responsible, for you have chosen to go with them, or to let them entice you. In all this sin-bearing work of the Saviour, how much of patient, tender and persistent love is required in order to rescue a wayward, frightened, helpless sheep.

Charge Me With It. A young man had gotten into evil ways, lost his position, lost the confidence of those who knew him. Finally, in a distant city during a tent meeting, he was led to Christ by a business man. He must now take a new start, but how can he in a business way? This business man was a practical Christian, and talked over with the young man his future. The young man had the business skill to hold a position, but he said he was owing a number of small sums back in the town where he formerly worked and that no one would believe in his conversion unless he could settle these. His benefactor had him get statements of his debts and gave him money to pay them all, and so gave him a new chance. Thus Christ cancels all the past sins of the soul, and gives a new nature and the Holy Spirit.—Exchange.

Saviour Dying for Man. This gospel prophet, who is sometimes called the fifth evangelist, gives the fullest picture of Christ dying for, and in the place of sinful man. Though written seven hundred years before Christ, yet he gives us the most striking and clear account of Christ's death. Surely God gave him the revelation, and just as surely it was necessary for it to be given and for man to know it. The reason Christ had to die in order to be a sin-bearer is because sin called for the death of the sinner. If he is saved then someone else must die. Jesus Christ comes to be that person.

Sin is not only "a missing the mark," but it is "transgression," which means opposition to God; and it is "iniquity," which means the upsetting of all man's powers; and it is "wickedness," which means weakness and utter helplessness. We do not wonder then, that Christ had to die for the sinner. Do not fail to note how willingly Christ gave His life, as shown in the "lamb" picture, and the "sheep before her shearers." Though Christ knew that He must die if He saved the sinner, yet His heart love was so great that He did not turn back, or waver at any time; but He "steadfastly set his face to go to Jerusalem," which meant His unjust trial, condemnation and crucifixion. He endured it all patiently and willingly. "When He was reviled, He reviled not again; when He suffered, He threatened not." That "judgment" picture looks very real, with the Pilate face in it, so many hundred years before Pilate was born. The whole prophecy is wonderful, and can apply only to Christ.

He Died For Me.

Under an Eastern sky,
Amid a rabble cry,
A man went forth to die,
For me.

Thorns crowned His blessed head
Blood stained His weary tread, Cross laden He was led,
For me.

Pierced were His hands and feet,
Three hours o'er Him beat
Fierce rays of noontide heat,
For me.

His path lay through Gethsemane and Calvary, and He knew that He must take it alone.—Ex.

A Conquering Saviour. As we look at the last pictures, and read of Christ's burial, we may think it does not look much like victory. But look deeper, and we will see that the thought of conquest and victory necessarily follows from the remarkable fulfillments of prophecy. The Scripture says, "He made His grave with the wicked," which means that His enemies intended to have Him buried with the wicked, and really did crucify Him with them. This latter prophecy is literally fulfilled. The prophecy "and with the rich" is also fulfilled; but in order to its fulfillment their purpose to bury Him with the wicked had to be defeated. This was done through Joseph of Arimathea and Nicodemus. So it came to pass, in a way which one would scarcely believe possible. We conclude, therefore, that all will be as foretold in the Bible, which pictures Christ as a conquering Saviour. In the closing verses of this very chapter it is said that "He shall see of the travail of His soul and be satisfied;" also this triumph is because of His sacrifice and His intercession. Christ has earned the right to victory and conquest, and He will receive it in fullest degree. Now, do not forget that all this suffering and sin-bearing was for you, you. In nine verses it is stated that it is "for us," and four times in verse five alone. Instead of "for us" or "our" or "we," read "for me," "my" and "I" and then you get the true vision of the suffering Saviour. Will you put a wreath of love and choice and sacrificing service on the cross of Him who died for you?

Quiz and Study. 1. What seven kinds of suffering did Christ endure. 2. This is one of the ten greatest chapters in the Bible. Can you name any of the other nine? 3. By what marks can we tell the true Christ? 4. To whom is Christ beautiful? 5. The Saviour is called the Lord Jesus Christ. Give the meaning of each of those names.

Challenge Text. "Thus it is — and thus it behooved Christ to — and to rise from the — on the third day." Luke 24:(?).

Practical Thoughts. 1. Christ is foretold in the Old Testament, and revealed in the New. 2. Christ the God-man dying in the place of sinful man is the central truth of the Gospel. 3. Christ is the only Saviour, for there is no other Son of God to die for man.

THE SCRIPTURE LESSON IS ISA. 55.

Prayer: Lord Jesus, Thou dost beset us behind and before by Thy grace and love. On all sides are the voices of blessing and warning calling us to Thyself and Thy service. Open our ears and hearts that we may hear, heed, and live. May Thy book, Thy day, Thy house, Thy people, and all Thy providences invite and constrain many to accept Thy love and life. For Christ's sake, Amen.

Historical Setting: Time, Isaiah prophesied, B. C. 759-698. Place, Jerusalem. Persons, Isaiah, the Jewish people, and needy everywhere.

Scripture Setting: Gospel Calls. A call from God, Hosea 14. A call to all, Prov. 8:1-17. A call from Christ, Matt. 11:20-30. A worthy call, Heb. 2:1-15. A desirable call, 1 Pet. 1:13-25. An urgent call, Rev. 22:7-17. A call to repentance, Matt. 3:1-12. A call today, Heb. 3:7-19.

an attractive picture of the great salvation. We see it to be (1) A salvation for all, vs. 1; (2) A salvation that satisfies the soul's craving, vs. 1, 2; (3) A salvation assured by Divine covenant, vs. 3, 4; (4) A salvation in Divine purpose and power, vs. 5; (5) A salvation which can be received by faith and repentance, vs. 6, 7; (6) A salvation that is abundant, vs. 8-10; (7) A salvation that gives increasing and abiding joy.

GOD'S COURIERS OF SALVATION.

The Courier of Blessing. "Well, how shall we find the way?" The question was an anxious one, with almost a note of despair in it. "Oh, you will have no trouble at all. Just watch the guideposts at the crossroads, and go as they direct." How many, many travelers have reached the desired place, by following this simple rule. Do you know that God has given, and is giving, full directions as to how we can reach salvation and Heaven? He has placed guideposts at all the cross-roads of life, and anyone who wishes can easily find the way to Him and to His Heaven. Too often the travelers are too careless, or too self-willed to watch and read these directions on these guideposts. They prefer to go their own way. So God has sent out couriers of salvation, persons, providences, and even things to call to men, arrest their attention, and entreat them to turn from the wrong way and travel in the right way. In all these ways God is saying, "Ho! Ho! This is the way." One of the most common of these is the courier of blessing. The figures of water, wine, milk, bread, suggest the variety and importance of these blessings. Every one of them is a voice from God, saying, "Ho! everyone, Come." If we should oftener count our blessings we would oftener go the way God calls us.

You Are That Traveler. A traveler is out upon a journey across a wide waste of desert. Days have passed by, and he is out of both water and food. Much of the journey lies yet before him. The parching sun is overhead and burning sands beneath his feet. At night he finds no place of lodgment but in the desert. He is thirsty, fainting, losing hope. All of a sudden there runs some kind friend to his rescue, with all needed supplies, and all given in great abundance free. Will he accept them? He surely will. You are that traveler. You are on the way to eternity. Unless you are succored you will die, for you are empty-handed. Jesus runs to meet you with all the riches of His grace. Will you eat and live? I hope you will.

The Courier of Warning. The great storm has swept away the railway bridge, and the train is soon due on that track. The station agent sends out a courier to flash a warning signal to the engineer of the train. The engineer does not need to be urged to heed it, but stops at once and so saves his life and his train. "Wherefore do ye?" How good, kind and gentle God is in this warning! "Why will ye die?" "Ho! come this way," "hearken to me." There is danger ahead, and the things that attract and allure can never satisfy. God knows this and sends His warning couriers to urge man to the right way. "Enter ye in at the straight gate." "Unto you, O men I call; and my voice is to the sons of man." The courier of blessing offers all needed good for this life, even a hundred fold; and the courier of warning would lead the traveler to escape death, and find "in the world to come life everlasting." By hearing and heeding we can save the whole life train, and be helpful in warning and saving others. Watch for the courier of warning and be sure to listen to him. It may be just a whisper to your own conscience.

Blessed, and a Blessing. A Christian workingman in Birmingham, England, has been laboring for some months trying to get some of his sin-bruised brothers back home to God. At last he came to his minister with face radiant with joy. "I've got him," he said, in his homely, colloquial, familiar way, "got him after eighty visits."

Night after night, for eighty nights, he went out for a single man, catching him before the drink could get hold of him. He prepared the way of the Lord for that man.

The Christian should be a courier that cries aloud his God-given message. Help us all to be advance agents for Christ the King. Forbid that we should do aught but advertise him. Whether men hear or forbear, may we ring true to our mission and message. May we not grow weary in the work.

The Courier of Divine Love and Guidance.

What does that mean? It means that God Himself has come down "to seek and to save the lost." Jesus Christ is the Good Shepherd, and He is not content until every sheep and lamb is safe in the fold. He seeks, and seeks, he knocks and knocks, he waits and waits. This story says to "seek ye the Lord while He may be found; call upon Him while He is near." All men are away from God, and opposing Him even as pictured out by the last pictures of the wicked person and the unsaved man. But notice that picture of mercy, running up into and between the pictures of the wicked and the man. The mercy and love of Jesus Christ are doing this constantly. Paul told the wicked Athenians that they even lived and moved in God, and that He was all about them; and that "they should seek the Lord, if haply they might feel after Him and find Him, though He be not far from every one of us." This courier of Divine love comes to every human heart and says, "Behold, I stand at the door and knock." And we should open to this Christ courier at once. I wonder why all do not, for He is "altogether lovely" and "the chiefest among ten thousand." Oh, I see why. There is another courier, always following the love courier. It is the hate courier; he hates Jesus Christ, and hates love, and hates the soul, and is trying hard to deceive it and destroy it. This hate courier is Satan, and he says "wait a little, wait just one day, until you do this or that." He knows that if he can keep the soul from the love courier this one day, he can more easily keep it the next day, and the next. Isn't he cunning? As cunning as he is mean and bad. The only way to beat him is to obey the love courier at once, who says, "Follow Me." This love courier says, "I am the way, the truth, and the life."

Whosoever Will May Come. The wretched woman of the town resolved to go back home and live a better life. One wild night she reached her father's house and knocked. She heard steps and voices within, but the door remained bolted. Presently the voices ceased, the steps receded, the light moved up the stairway. Penitent though she was, her home was closed against her. Not so with our Heavenly Father; rather, He calls unto all to come.

He waits to be gracious and welcomes every returning prodigal.—Burrell.

The Courier of Pardon and Forgiveness.

We have known that all these couriers come to lead us to the wonderful peace of God. We know, too, that we came into the land of peace and joy only through the gateway of pardon and forgiveness. All of God's couriers of salvation are shouting "grace, grace;" and "life, life." These are just the words sinful man needs to hear, for he knows that he is unworthy, and that he is dead and helpless. But this courier cries that "He will abundantly pardon." So we may be sure that even the hidden sin will be pardoned, and that even the sinful nature will be changed and made pure, for "the blood of Jesus Christ, His Son, cleanseth us from all sin." Chapter 53 is the "It is finished" chapter; chapter 54 is the "I will do it" chapter; and chapter 55 is the "abundant pardon" chapter. The avenger of blood is after every member of the human family, because everyone belongs to a sinful race, and every one has actually sinned. This pardon courier comes crying forgiveness if we will only flee to the haven of refuge, which is Jesus Christ. With all these couriers meeting us constantly in life's highways how easy it is to be saved! All we need to do is to let ourselves be guided to safety and blessedness. Listen any time, and you can hear the courier crying, "Ho every one! This is the way."

Full and Free Pardon. "Abundantly pardon" means abundant love, abundant ways and means, forgiving abundant sins, abundant fulness of grace and life, abundant blessings and joy.—A. C. M.

"God calling yet, I cannot stay;
My heart I yield without delay."

Quiz and Study. 1. Who was the first herald or courier of Jesus Christ? 2. Name some other persons or things that call people to Christ. 3. Name some Scripture characters who heard and obeyed the call. 4. Name some who heard and rejected the call.

Challenge Text. "Lo, all these — worketh God — with man to — back his — from the pit." Job 33:(?).

Practical Thoughts. 1. Every need and sin is a cry for a Saviour and is a proof there is a Saviour. 2. Man will toil and sacrifice for worldly good, and will not accept a free salvation. 3. This chapter tells us the what, when, why, and how, of salvation. 4. The best things are the freest, because we are not able to buy them, or create them. 5. Yet God graciously accepts our faith and love as a sort of purchase money. 6. God's promise of grace is even more certain than the laws of nature. 7. God gives strength and guidance to every one who desires to find Him. 8. There is a time coming when it will be too late to seek God and salvation.

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, About B. C. 608. Place, Jerusalem, at the temple. Persons, Jeremiah, priests, prophets, princes, people.

Scripture Setting: God Guiding and Girding. Helping the discouraged, 1 Kings 19:9-18. Inspiring trust, Psa. 43:1-5. Revealing His grace, 2 Cor. 12:1-10. The love of Christ, 2 Cor. 5:14-19. Supplying all our need, Phil. 4. All things for good, Rom. 8:28-39. Under His shadow, Psa. 91. God's shepherd care, Psa. 23.

Life and Conduct Setting: This trial and acquittal of Jeremiah furnishes a good illustration of God's care of His work and workers. 1. He gives boldness for the proclamation of His will and purpose, vs. 7, 8. 2. He sustains and inspires amid greatest opposition, vs. 9-11. 3. He gives special grace and heroism that His servant may reaffirm the message, vs. 12, 13. 4. He inspires His workers with marvelous faith and dauntless courage, vs. 14, 15. 5. He raises up able advocates and defenders, vs. 16, 17. 6. He vindicates his workers by and with God's Word, vs. 18. 7. He protects and preserves them for other work He has for them to do, v. 19.

FIGHTING ALONE AND WINNING.

Standing Alone for God. Did you ever attend a trial at court? The court room was nearly full when you got there. You have just taken your seat, and the order is given, "Bring in the prisoner." Soon the man on trial is brought in. All eyes are turned towards him as he is led to the seat reserved for him. Then you hear whispers on every side, for many people judge a case almost at once. Some say one thing and some another. The judgment may be because of his looks or acts or walk. Then the real trial begins before judge and jury. Let us take a look at this man who is on trial in our story. He is meek and mild in appearance, and really looks as if he were a good man. His name is Jeremiah, which means "The Lord layeth the foundation." I think we shall find some traits of character which are like great stones in the foundation of a building. He does not seem frightened at all, and he has said, "as for me, behold, I am in your hand; do with me as seemeth good and meet unto you." That looks as if he thought something else was more important than even his life. This is the case, for he has told them what God ordered him to speak. He knows God's message is true, and he is willing to stake his life on it. He seems entirely alone standing there for God and His truth. He was called the "weeping prophet" for he was so tender and pleading in his efforts to make his people better. But every feature of his face has an edge of firmness now and his eyes flash a quiet courage. It makes one think of Daniel when he was tried; or of Peter and John when they were tried; or of Christ Himself before Pilate. The mere fact of being gentle and kind does not prevent one from being firm and strong. They are often the people who can be firmest and strongest.

Who Is the Brave Boy? There is a great difference between a bold man and a brave man. A bold man may be a coward at heart, a brave man is never a coward. A brave man may be timid, and hesitating, and cautious, but he is not a coward. When the Emperor asked for a volunteer on a difficult and dangerous mission there were many who ran and asked to be sent; they were seeking favor with the Emperor. But he chose one man who had said very little, whose face blanched at the thought of the errand, but who said quietly, "I will go." The Emperor saw that here was a brave man, not necessarily bold and daring. He measured the cost, took his life in his hand, and went out to meet the danger.—Exchange.

Strange Accusers. Look about the court room now and see those who have accused Jeremiah. They are priests, and prophets as pictured out in the first pictures. But Jeremiah also was a prophet. These then must be false prophets and false priests. They are jealous of Jeremiah, and would like to have him put to death. They even said that he was worthy of death, and many people sided with them. These false prophets and priests had great influence, because the false gods were worshiped by many of the people. Jeremiah prophesied that God would visit judgment on the nation and city for their wickedness. Then it is said that they brought him to the city gate for trial. That was the court room of those days. It is a great study to contrast the face of Jeremiah with the faces of these prophets and priests. With bad hearts they could not help having bad faces. They are filled with envy, jealousy and hate, and they show it. He is like a lamb among wolves or like an angel among devils. It looks as if people and all are against him.

But let us see what happens next. The hate of the wicked may be one's best commendation.

A Good Recommendation. "Have you any recommendations?" was asked of the boy who applied for a position. "No, sir." "Why not?" The lad's lips trembled. "I—was—discharged," came at last in a faint voice. "My lad, why were you discharged?" the employer asked tenderly. "Because I would not work on the Lord's day," came back the reply, steadily and bravely. "Yes, I do want a boy," Mr. Lansing said, as he placed his hand on the petitioner's head. "I believe you are just the boy who will suit me. Come here at this hour tomorrow morning."

An Unseen Power at Work. All seemed to be against Jeremiah at first. But now the princes and some of the people are in his favor. They were influenced by the character and work of Jeremiah, but greater than all, and back of all, was the power of God caring for His prophet. So these princes say that Jeremiah is not worthy to die. The elders also and the people join in the plea that he is innocent, and a strong argument is presented. We will look at that soon, but just now it is well for us to remember that God keeps watch of His own servants and of His own people. Even when He must afflict them, as here, yet He does that for their good and saves them in it. Sometimes God works through others as He does through these princes. Sometimes he comes Himself, and walks with His afflicted servants, as He did with the Hebrew children in the fiery furnace. Sometimes he sends His angel, as He did to Peter in prison. God has many ways of comforting and helping those who love and trust Him. In the first chapter of this story we saw Jeremiah standing alone for God. But here we see he is standing with God, and also with many others whom God has influenced. You remember that God said once to Elijah when he thought he was the only true worshiper left, that He had seven thousand who had not bowed to Baal. God has His forces everywhere and of all kinds, and can do whatever He sees to be best for His people and His cause.

All Things Work Together for Good. Life is a flying shuttle. But the pattern grows, the web is wrought. It takes both dark threads and golden to work out God's design. You cannot judge the purpose of the Weaver by the thrust of one shuttle or the weave of one thread, whether it be dark or bright. "All things work together for good to them that love God." We are yet on the loom. The shuttles are not yet empty. Give God time to put this and that, dark threads and bright, together, and complete the purpose of His providence. With every new day let us think less of our present desire and more concerning the Divine Weaver's design.—G. B. F. Hallock.

Learning from History. What great lessons we learn from history! Bunker Hill and Washington's monument and the Declaration of Independence mean very much to us all. So other nations have their glorious past for their guidance and inspiration. Every person, too, is better and stronger for all the splendid and heroic deeds of his ancestors.

"Deeds of great men all remind us
We can make our lives sublime."

Here it was specially a lesson of warning, and also of example. A prophet had sent a message much like this of Jeremiah. Hezekiah, who was king at that time, heeded the warning and repented, and so saved himself and the nation. The last picture shows in a striking way, that God is able to fulfill his threats of judgment. A city may be like Jerusalem for glory and strength and yet God can make it to be "plowed like a field," and even the great temple itself may become "as the high places of a forest." The great lesson is that man cannot fight against God successfully, and that it is far better to heed His warnings, and thus receive His blessings. To make sure that Jeremiah should not be put to death, God sent a man by the name of Ahikam to be with him and keep him from harm, and so he was not only acquitted, but kept and guarded.

The Lesson We All Need to Learn. "But is a man to do nothing for Christ that he does not like to do? God pity him, if not. Liking or disliking has nothing to do with it. We have orders to 'go,' and we go. Love constrains us." Look anywhere, look everywhere, and you will see this same thing. People doing what they ought to do. Not what they want to do. It is the lesson of all history that is worth reading. Duty is duty. Duty's commands ought always be obeyed. Self-denial, service, duty, was Christ's teaching and Christ's example. And that is the way to Christ's crown for you, for me. We must suffer with him if we would reign with him.—Exchange.

Quiz and Study. 1. What great apostle was tried and acquitted? 2. What greater person was tried and condemned though innocent? 3. Whose face looked like that of an angel when he was tried and stoned? What caused that look? 4. When did an invisible hand write sentence of judgment on the wall? 5. To what class of prophets does Jeremiah belong?

Challenge Text. "The Lord is my _____ and my _____; whom shall I fear?" Psa. 27: (?).

Practical Thoughts. 1. The brave man makes friends, and also enemies. 2. It is foolish to cry peace and safety when there are perils and enemies. 3. Obedience to God will secure protection from wicked men. 4. He who is faithful to God can defy the power of man. 5. Every life has its times when God interposes and delivers; watch for them. 6. The believer is protected by God, and therefore he should be consecrated to God. 7. The Christian life is a warfare, and it takes courage to live it.

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, B. C. 607. Place, Jerusalem. Persons, Jehoiakim the king of Judah, Jeremiah the prophet, Baruch the scribe, Michaiah and Jehudi.

Scripture Setting: Rejecting the Truth of God. Jehoiakim pays tribute; his city is taken, 2 Kings 23:35; also chapter 24. Jesus reads in the synagogue and is rejected, Luke 4:16. A day of atonement proclaimed, Lev. 23:27. A good king gives heed to the law, 2 Kings 22:12-14; 2 Chron. 34:18-20.

An awakened conscience, Acts 24:25. Command to speak God's words, Ezekiel 2:7.

Life and Conduct Setting. 1. A good man does his duty even when it involves peril to himself. 2. The Lord gives all a chance to repent and reform. 3. The blessing of the written Word. "(1) It is present for everyone. (2) It is present in all its parts." 4. "The guilt of indifference to the Divine warnings. It involves (1) Contempt of God. (2) Unbelief. (3) Extreme hardness of heart."

THE BURNING OF THE PROPHECY.

It was in the great city of Jerusalem, where were the temple, the king's palaces and many other beautiful buildings. The king, Jehoiakim, lived in luxury and hosts of people did whatever he commanded. Though he held his throne subject to tribute to Egypt, yet he was in his own land ruler over all. He was not a good ruler, either, but a very bad one, self-willed, tyrannical and ill-natured to every one around him.

An Unwise King. Few people would have ventured to tell him anything unpleasant, even when it was for his good or that of the country. Like most people, especially such as are used to having their own way, the king did not enjoy disagreeable truths. Jehoiakim preferred to have near him men who told him he was a great king, that his land was not only prosperous but always would be so. He liked such as told him that other nations were afraid of him and that they would never venture to attack him. But sometimes the only way to save people and to save a country is to get them to realize that certain things are wrong and must be changed.

Jehoiakim and his country were then in danger, but he did not wish to think about that. Most nations then were ready to fight any other nations when they had power to do so. At that time Egypt and Babylonia were the most powerful countries, and, as has been stated, Jehoiakim paid tribute to Egypt. But far away to the eastward were the Babylonians, who were growing rapidly stronger and making war upon many weaker peoples.

The Prophet. At that time a good man lived in Judah called Jeremiah, who was a prophet. God enabled him to foresee many things and authorized him to tell about these coming events, that all might prepare for the evil or reform and be saved. It was made plain to Jeremiah that unless Jehoiakim changed his ways, obeyed God, looked after the defences of his country, and performed his duties as a good king should do, the Babylonians would come and destroy him.

Jeremiah had been accustomed to address the people and rulers at the temple and to tell them whatever God inspired him to utter. Many of his prophecies, which foretold peril unless they did better, had given offence and he had been forbidden to speak any more. So he called to him a man named Baruch, a ready writer, and to him Jeremiah dictated his prophecies. Baruch wrote them down upon pieces of parchment, which were then fastened together end to end, and made into a roll. Jeremiah then bade Baruch take the roll, go to the temple and read it to the people on a great fast day. As at that time many people were gathered for the fast from all the cities of Judah, multitudes heard the prophecies read.

Warnings. In these prophecies the nation was told that great peril was coming from the Babylonians and that unless they ceased to do evil king and people would be taken and carried into captivity. Such foretellings of evil could not but make an impression upon many people. Among others who heard the warnings was Michaiah, who, being greatly stirred up, went to the king's house and told the princes there of the dreadful prophecies. The princes commanded Jehudi, a page of the king, to go and get the book and bring Baruch to read to them. This was done.

The princes were startled by the words, and they warned Baruch that he and Jeremiah should hide themselves, for they knew the king would be angry. They kept the book and laid it away in the chamber of Elishama the scribe, and went and told the king.

The king then ordered Jehudi to bring the book and read it to him. So Jehudi read to the king and the princes the prophecies of Jeremiah. Or rather, he began to do so, for he was not allowed to finish, as you can see by the picture.

Foolish Anger. Jehoiakim had heard from others something of the nature of the prophecies. He also knew the character of Jeremiah, that he was a man who would fearlessly declare the truth. So he was ready to be angry before Jehudi began to read. When he heard from the book some of the severe things that the Lord had declared by the mouth of Jeremiah he grew more and more angry.

The king was seated in his winter palace, and there was a fire on the hearth.

When Jehudi had read three or four leaves, the king took a knife, and frowning angrily, cut the roll with it. Certain of those who looked on cried out and tried to restrain him. But he raged all the more and declared he would not leave a fragment of the roll. So with his own hands he cast the roll piece by piece into the flames on the hearth. It was soon reduced to ashes.

Having destroyed the roll, Jehoiakim felt more comfortable. The evil foretellings would annoy him no more, as he thought, and the prophet was forbidden to speak again at the temple. He fancied all would be well.

A returned missionary once related that he had been talking with an intelligent Chinaman in regard to the Bible, and had assured him it was very ancient. He gave him a copy of the Book. A few days later the Chinaman came to him with a look of reproach, and pointing to the first chapter of Romans, said, "You told me your Book was old, but that chapter you have written yourself since you came here and learned all about Chinamen."

So the Bible reveals the heart to itself whether it is good or evil. And the sinner oftentimes hates it because it exposes him to himself.

The Prophecies Restored. But although he had burned the only written copy of the prophecies he did not succeed in accomplishing what he wished. For Jeremiah was bidden by the Lord to dictate the prophecies again.

More than that The prophecies came true. The Babylonians came in due time against Judah. And the king was not ready to meet them.

We are to remember always that the truth cannot be destroyed. Many people have tried to destroy the truth. In the olden times many of the prophets were put to death by men who fancied that if they killed the prophets they would at the same time make their words of no effect. But their teachings lived on after their bodies were dust and ashes. The early Christians were persecuted by Jews and Romans. Multitudes of them were thrown to lions, burned at the stake, crucified, beheaded, but the truth for which they died lives on. We should believe the truth and know that God will take care of it.

Voltaire declared he would destroy the Bible, so that it would not outlast the age in which he lived, the Eighteenth Century. Yet the Nineteenth Century saw it translated into all the languages upon the earth and distributed in countless copies.

The Undying Word. As King Jehoiakim was blind to the fact that he could not destroy the truth, so all sinners are blind to the consequences of their wrong ways. They do not wish to think that while others suffer for their sins they themselves will do so. They fancy they can escape; that they will not be found out and punished. They do not wish to see, and so they shut their eyes.

The Bible has been attacked by unbelievers and foes in every age. On several notable occasions its foes have collected all the copies of it they could find and have burned them publicly. Yet it lives on and guides countless thousands into the way of life.

A few years ago a young American, on an exploring expedition to Labrador, became too ill to travel onward with his companions and had to be left behind, while they pushed on to find food and help. When they returned, he had passed away. Beside him lay his diary and a Bible open at the fourteenth chapter of John. In his diary he told that this chapter had comforted him inexpressibly. So the Word of God not only rebukes sin, but it is the greatest means of joy and consolation when all else fails. No circumstances are so desolate but that the Bible can bring Divine strength and comfort to the sufferers.

Practical Truths. 1. It is useless to fall into a rage because unpleasant truth is given to us. We should welcome the warnings and then do that which is right and avoid the evil which is foretold. 2. To refuse to listen to truth does not help matters. 3. An obedient child is better and wiser than a disobedient and bad king. 4. Every one of us who does right, who turns from sin, in so far, helps to save our country from its perils. 5. Jehoiakim brought his country into distress by rejecting the Word of God; he could have saved it by obedience. As we love our land, we must remember we can strengthen it against its enemies by loyalty to the truth, by righteous lives and by making the Word of God known to others.

Prayer: Lord Jesus, In Thy plan for our earthly life Thou dost make a place for even the hard things. Every burden has its wings; every trial has its compensations and inspirations; every dark hour has its glorious and shining messages from the Infinite. May our souls be alert to hear Thy voice and behold Thy beauty and grace. For Christ's sake. Amen.

Lo, all things can be borne!

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, About B. C. 589. Place, Jerusalem. Persons, Jeremiah, Irijah, Zedekiah the king and the princes.

Scripture Setting: Girded for the Life Battles. By right motives, 2 Cor. 5:14-19. By a right spirit, Psa. 40:10-17. By a right aim, 2 Tim. 4:1-8. By consecration, 2 Cor. 8:8-24. By right conduct, Prov. 3:5-18. By seizing opportunities, Eph. 5:15-21. By a heroic faith, Heb. 11:32-40. By deathless devotion, Rev. 2:8-11.

Life and Conduct Setting: The passage gives a picture of an ideal worker in varied life relations: 1. He is instant and constant in service (v. 4). 2. He is ready for God's new word and work, as providences lead the way (vs. 5-7). 3. He is brave and faithful to deliver the Divine message (vs. 8-10). 4. He seeks to save life and help the cause of his Lord (vs. 11-13). 5. He submits to persecution, but remembers his office and the claims of his Master (vs. 14-16). 6. He is wise and prudent in and for the truth (vs. 17-19). 7. He fights valiantly for life, but is ready for death, rather than disobey God (vs. 20, 21).

WAYS A GOOD MAN MAY BE HINDERED.

Getting Lost in the Crowd. In an army or any large company of men, a man could drop out and the lack would scarcely be noticed. Also, one might be lost because the army prevented him from doing what he might or ought to do. In this latter way, Jeremiah came near being lost and so hindered in his work. Sometimes in a Sunday school class, or young people's society, one member may be lost because there are many others, or because some one of them may think that he or she can not do much, or will not be missed. Jeremiah was not that kind of a man. He intended to count one wherever he could. These armies had not altogether prevented him, but they had hindered some. The army of the Chaldeans left off fighting Jerusalem because the army of Pharaoh came. Really it was God driving away the Chaldeans to test and try His people. God had said that the Chaldeans should burn the city with fire. Jeremiah trusted that the Lord would take care of him; but he knew, too, that he must do his part. So as soon as the army left he hurried out to go to his native town to get supplies. His farm, or estate, was there and he went to collect his portion so as to be prepared against famine. Jeremiah believed in trusting as if all depended on God and then planning and working as if all depended on himself. He did not purpose to get lost in the army nor because of it.

Men Who Counted for Something. History bristles with instances of men that felt it their duty to speak the truth that was in them; men who through their speech altered the course of the world. In Old Testament times there were Elijah, Jeremiah, and Amos, who thundered against the other prophets; in New Testament times there were John the Baptist, Peter, John, Paul, Christ Himself. At the dawn of the modern era we have Luther, who faced the power of the Roman Catholic Church and spoke the truth that he saw. Almost in our own day we have men like Wendell Phillips, Whittier, Beecher, and William Lloyd Garrison and the great Lincoln taking a determined stand against slavery and crying aloud until their voices were heard. "I am in earnest," writes Garrison; "I will not equivocate, I will not excuse. I will not retreat a single inch, and I will be heard."—R. P. Anderson.

Arrested and Accused Again. In our last story Jeremiah was arrested, tried and acquitted. Now he is caught again. Some think this was spite work by this man Irijah, for it is thought that Jeremiah had predicted the death of Hananiah who was Irijah's grandfather. Anyhow, a man sent of God like Jeremiah will make enemies because of his exposing the sins of the people. Some such thing probably made this guard charge Jeremiah with being a deserter to the Chaldeans. This made Jeremiah's blood boil, if he was mild and gentle. He replied to this base insult as quick as an echo, by saying, "It is false; I am not a deserter to the Chaldeans."

But this man had the star of authority on his uniform, and he blustered around and marched Jeremiah off to the princes, who were the leaders, and who also were Jeremiah's enemies. So this seemed to be a more serious hindrance to the plans and work of the prophet, besides putting his life in danger. Jeremiah had not sneaked away in the night, but had gone "in the midst of the people"; that is, with many others who were going on similar errands. This was a mean official trick to hinder and annoy a good man in a good work. But Jeremiah was ready to be arrested ten times or a hundred times just so he was doing his duty.

A Poor Brand of Princes. When Jeremiah was hurried away to the princes it should have meant his quick release. But these persons were even worse than Irijah. He might be excused for arresting Jeremiah on mere suspicion; but the princes should have heard his explanation and defense. Instead of that they judged him unheard and beat him and thrust him into prison. Princes, indeed! They were such only by name and dress. At heart they were full of hate because Jeremiah was good, and had told them the truth. These were not the princes who had been friendly to Jeremiah on two previous occasions. They had the same office, but were entirely unworthy to fill it. Sometimes such a thing happens in our day. We have known of aldermen, mayors and governors who were unworthy to fill those high and responsible offices. The office was honorable, but the officer was disgraceful. Good people are at fault if they do not put out the bad officers and elect good ones.

The pictures show these princes in their uniforms and they look as if they were good men; but the conduct is the test and measure of the real man. By their conduct they show that they are cruel, prejudiced and revengeful. Jeremiah is the real prince here, and he carries himself with dignity and is patient under the unjust treatment. He works, or suffers, as the case may be, and trusts that God will make it all count for His cause and glory.

What's This Stone For? A gentleman who was walking near an unoccupied building one day saw a stone-cutter chiseling patiently at a block of stone in front of him. "Still chiseling?" he remarked, pleasantly. "Yes, still chiseling," replied the workman, going on with his work. "In what part of the building does this stone belong?" asked the gentleman. "I don't know," replied the stone-cutter; "I haven't seen the plans." Then he went on chiseling. Now, that is what we should do. We have not seen the great plans of the Master Architect, but each of us has his work to do, and we should chisel away until it is done.

The Prison Becomes a Gateway of Safety. This "prison" was probably an underground cell, where public offenders were held. Into this Jeremiah goes, the two false princes rudely pushing him as the picture shows. These cells were under the house of Jonathan, the scribe, who is shown in the last picture, writing off the law. Sometimes there would be twenty, or more, such cistern-like cells for imprisoning people. This Jonathan may not have been a bad man himself. He has a very good name and we may hope that he was true to it, and also true to the great friend of David by that name.

We know that David's friend Jonathan would not do a mean or unjust act. Sometimes those scribes just wrote in a kind of business-like way, without thinking much of what they wrote. Would it not be odd, and even worse, if he should be writing some command about love or forgiveness, or kindness; and yet have one or more persons imprisoned unjustly right under where he was sitting? But how is this prison a gateway to safety? Well, Jeremiah is kept from being killed, and later he asked the king to look into his case. The king did this, and removed him into "the court of the prison," and ordered them to feed him daily. The king also received from Jeremiah the messages of God to the people. The prison really was the first link in the chain of providences which protected Jeremiah, and finally released him. So he found out again that "all things work together for good."

Leave Results With God. Be patient. Keep sweet. Do not fret or worry. Do your best and leave results with God. Believe firmly in God, in the fulfillment of His purposes and in the march of His providences. God's laws are immutable, and work with undeviating regularity. Walk in fellowship with God, and every year you will be a stronger, better, happier and sweeter man. Do not mar your peace or power by needless worry. Live by faith in the Son of God, who loves you and gave Himself for you. On some bright tomorrow you will come to anchor under a haven of sapphire and in a harbor of calm, with chimes ringing their welcome from the spires that sentinel the city of God, while from the battlements millions will shout, "Well done!" while God Himself will say, "Enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."—George B. Vosburgh.

Quiz and Study. 1. Tell about Peter's imprisonment and deliverance; also that of Paul and Silas. 2. Tell of a Bible young man who had a dream in prison. 3. Recite, or read Christ's "blessed," which speaks of persecution (Matt. 5). 4. What famous book was written in an English prison? 5. Why are godly people often persecuted?

Challenge Text. "In the world ye shall have —; but be of good —, I have — the world." John 16: (?)

Practical Thoughts. 1. As Christ was "made perfect through suffering," so also the believer may expect it. 2. Persecution and trials equip one to be helpful and sympathetic. 3. Paul's joy in the Lord was greatest in his epistle of suffering. 4. Persecution brings out both the strength and beauty of the Christian character. 5. God is glorified and declared in and by the persecution of His people. 6. Even the gentle and timid may be made strong and fine to endure hardship. 7. If we give God first place He will give us best place. 8. The true believer is the greatest saving force in society and the nation.

Prayer: Lord Jesus, Thy saving power is great and Thy keeping power is also wonderful. Thine eye is ever on those who love and serve Thee: Thy hand is ever quick to help. Thou canst use the slave and the king to do Thy bidding.

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, About B. C. 587. Place, Jerusalem. Persons, Jeremiah, Ebed-melech the Ethiopian, Zedekiah the king, and the princes who cast Jeremiah into the dungeon.

Scripture Setting: The Believer in Prison. Joseph in prison, Gen. 41:9-14. Daniel in prison, Dan. 6:10-17. Peter in prison, Acts 12:1-10. Paul in prison, Acts 16:22-32. Promise of help, Isa. 43:1-7. Courage in prison, 2 Cor. 4:6-18. Confidence in God, Psalms. 27. Praise for deliverance, Psalms. 18:6-19.

Life and Conduct Setting: The experience of Jeremiah is a common one, though the form of imprisonment may vary greatly. In a study of persecution in general, we may note: 1. The believer may expect persecution, if not in one way then in another, vs. 1. 2. The persecution will usually be according to one's fidelity and loyalty, vs. 2, 3. 3. Persecution is apt to be under the guise of the public good. The rascals persecuting are good at finding "reasons." 4. The powers that should protect are themselves wicked, or under the power of the wicked, vs. 5, 6. 5. God is in full knowledge of it all to control or stop it, vs. 7-9. 6. Persecution is made to declare the glory of God, advance His cause in the earth, and develop and glorify those who suffer. 7. The true attitude in persecution is patience in the trial, assurance of the Divine care and fellowship, and watchfulness for escape or service or both.

A PREACHER RESCUED FROM A PRISON.

A Trick of the Devil: "Here I stand; I cannot do otherwise." So said Luther when his enemies threatened, and his friends entreated. He would not swerve from the right, and so he was persecuted. Jeremiah is a good deal like Luther in his courage and convictions. As we sometimes say of a brave man, he had "the courage of his convictions." For this reason he was persecuted and imprisoned. This was not just the way his enemies put it, nor the way they would like to see it stated. The way they did put it was a trick of the devil. Satan is very shrewd and in his opposition to good people he tries to make his hatred look plausible. If he can't find any little slip in conduct, or weakness in the character, then he will manufacture something. He did so here, and influenced the princes to charge Jeremiah with being a traitor, because he had warned the people to flee to safety ere the king of Babylon would destroy the city. If any would flee to the Chaldeans they would be saved. They misrepresented Jeremiah's message, just as the Jews misrepresented Christ's words on several occasions. Notice how good Jeremiah looks in that second picture. The five times his face is seen in these pictures it is full of faith, peace, and purpose. He is always master of the situation, and he does not worry about what happens. We know too that he was much in prayer.

Courage and Conquest. A lad of seventeen had been sent to a saloon to take the measures for a new counter. It was very cold, and he arrived with his teeth fairly chattering, for his coat was thin. The saloonkeeper mixed a hot drink, and pushed it over the counter to him. "It'll cost you nothing," he said; "drink it down, and you'll soon stop shivering, my boy." "He meant it kindly, too, and didn't think any harm," said the apprentice, as he told the story. "That's what made it harder to push it back, and say I didn't want it." "It must have been a big temptation," said a friend. "Well," replied the lad, frankly. "I'd rather have had it than some other kinds. You see, it takes two to make a successful temptation."—Exchange.

Two Strange Helpers. They are shown in the first picture. One is a black man, an Ethiopian; but he seems to have had a white heart. He was a servant of the king, and had charge of the woman's department of the king's house. In this way he was with the king frequently, and he could see him when he wished. When he learned what had been done to Jeremiah, he was greatly stirred. He went straight to king Zedekiah and pleaded for the life of the prophet. He knew that Jeremiah would soon perish by starvation and exposure, if not taken from that filthy prison pit. The name of this black man was Ebed-melech, which means, "servant of God." He certainly was true to his name in this act. It took courage also, for sometimes a king would order a slave killed for daring to make any request. He was rewarded for this act of kindness by being spared when Jerusalem was destroyed. That was even better than a Carnegie medal for heroism. But who is the other strange helper? It is the king himself, giving that order to take thirty men and rescue Jeremiah. The strange thing about it is that he changed so quickly from an enemy to a friend. It was his weakness which led to Jeremiah's imprisonment. I think God must have breathed a little strength into him for this order.

How the Boys Helped a Cripple. "Here, boy, let me have a Sun." "Couldn't sell you no paper in this here block, mister, 'cause it belongs to Limpy. He's just up to de funder end now; you'll meet him."

"And who is Limpy, pray? And why does he have this special block?"

"'Cause us kids agreed to let him have it. You see it's a good run 'count of the offices all along, and the poor chap is that lame he can't git around lively like the rest of us."

"Yes, I see. So you newsboys have a sort of brotherhood among yourselves?"

"Well, we're going to look out for a little cove what's lame, anyhow."

"There comes Limpy now; he's a fortunate boy to have such kind friends."

The gentleman bought two papers of him and went on his way down town, wondering.

Lend a Hand Here. Did you ever see a lot of men working at something, when all had to work together? It might have been boatmen, or men in a shop, or on a building. The leader gives the signal, and then they all catch it up by their hearty "heave-ho, heave-ho." In this way they all act or pull together, and the work is soon done. These four men in the picture are thus working together. You see they had to, in order to pull Jeremiah up in comfort, or even to pull him up at all. Perhaps that one with the staff is giving the signals how to do it best. He is watching anxiously so that there shall be no blunder, or failure. The three who are grasping Jeremiah are bracing themselves to do their part. They are all busy, standing "shoulder to shoulder," and using their hands to help. How many times in life, at school, in play, at work of all kinds, much depends on all helping and helping together. Once four people brought a poor paralytic to Christ, and let him down through the roof. Christ healed the man, and He said it was because of the faith of all of them. It may take four of you, or even more, to bring that boy or girl to Sunday school or to the Young People's society. But it will pay, and the Master will see each worker and reward him. Don't be a shirker, or a jerker, or a kicker when there is a chance to do a good work with others.

How One Class Did It. A hint as to a method that wins may be secured from this incident related by a member of a Bible class. To this member's house came a workman, prepared to fix the telephone. When asked to join the Bible class, and handed a card of invitation, he said: "What kind of a bunch have you down there in that church of yours? I only came to town last Tuesday and already I have had five invitations to join the class. This is the sixth card that I have had given to me. Really I never saw a place where people looked after a fellow like this." And they won their man.—Exchange.

The Power Behind. "Time and God work wonders," said the old minister to a young pastor who was troubled about his church. God works in His own time and way. So here, it is God working through men and through the instruments used. These old rags shown in the pictures, may have saved Jeremiah's life! they at least added much to his comfort, by keeping the cords from cutting into his flesh. Rags and cords and men and even the king all had their places and uses, but "the power behind" is what really helped and saved the prophet of God, and that power was God. You have heard the old soldier talk about "the man behind the gun," so we think of God working out His purposes by many providences,—selecting, adapting and directing men and all things for His glory and the good of His people. Back of the love of friend, of mother, of wife, is the love of God which inspires and sustains all the others.

God and the Daisy. "I wish I could be of some use," said a newly opened daisy which grew in a pleasant field; "but I am so small, I wonder why I was made." The little flower looked timidly around, and as a soft wind played over the field, waving the long grass it kissed the little daisy, and said: "God has made nothing in vain, only look up." As the trembling flower raised its head, a bright sunbeam glancing by dried the teardrop that dimmed its eye. The daisy felt grateful, and looked up with a smile.—Exchange.

Quiz and Study. 1. What Ethiopian eunuch is mentioned in the New Testament? 2. How was Daniel watched and imprisoned? 3. Where and when did Jesus say, "Gather up the fragments"? 4. Tell of four men who carried a paralytic to Christ. 5. How was Christ's word about the temple misinterpreted?

Challenge Text. "He brought me up also out of an ——— out of the miry ———, and set my ——— upon a rock." Psa. 40: (?)

Practical Thoughts. 1. A prison may be an honor to one, and if so it is a palace. 2. Abuse of God's servants is in reality an insult to the Almighty. 3. The motives of good people are sometimes misunderstood and misinterpreted. 4. "Those persecuted for righteousness' sake prove the reality of virtue, the value of religion, the truth of God's Word." 5. A little help is worth a great deal of pity. A tender heart makes a gentle hand." 6. Even the weak and lowly, when acting in the fear of God and under his direction, may awaken the consciences of the great. 7. We should never hesitate to stand for the right.

EZEKIEL A WATCHMAN

Son of man, I have made thee a unto the house of Israel: therefore hear the word at my mouth, and give them warning from me. When I say unto the wicked, Thou shalt surely and thou givest him not warning, nor speakest to warn the wicked from his wicked way, to save his life: the same shall die in his iniquity; but his blood will I require at thine hand. Yet if thou the wicked, and he turn not from his wickedness, nor from his wicked way, he shall die in his iniquity; but thou hast delivered thy soul. Again, When a doth turn from his righteousness, and commit iniquity, and I lay a stumblingblock he shall die: because thou hast not given him warning, he shall die in his sin, and his righteousness which he hath done shall not be remembered; but his blood will I require at thine hand.

EZEK. III: 17-20.

THE SCRIPTURE LESSON IS EZEK. 3:4-27.

Prayer: Lord Jesus, Reveal to us Thyself and show us also Thy will. May we ever be on the outlook, watchful of all Thy providences. Help us to see the needs and sins of others so that we may warn and help and save. May we be true "watchmen" in word and life and constant influence. For Christ's sake, Amen.

"Thou must be true thyself,
If thou the truth would'st teach;
Thy soul must overflow if thou
Another's soul would'st reach;
It needs the overflow of heart
To give the lips full speech."

THE SUBJECT IN ITS RELATIONS.

Historical Setting: Time, B. C. 593. Places, Chebar and Tel-abib, in Babylonia. Persons, Ezekiel, angel spirit, Jews.

Scripture Setting: Duty of the Believer. Saved to serve, Eph. 2:1-10. Debtor to all, Rom. 1:8-15. Works to be judged, Eccl. 12:9-14. Responsible to God, Rom. 14:1-10. True to one's self, Job 2:1-13. Inspiration to duty, Isa. 61:1-11. Divinely appointed, Isa. 21:1-12. Fidelity imperative, Acts 20:17-35.

Life and Conduct Setting: We see here a beautiful blending of privilege and duty in the Christian life and work. 1. The dutiful privilege to live in the best spiritual fellowship, vs. 12, 13. 2. To be guided and helped by the Holy Spirit, vs. 14, 15. 3. To receive orders and strength from God, vs. 16, 17. 4. Privilege and duty meet and kiss each other, vs. 18, 21. 5. Privilege and duty safeguarding and protecting each other, vs. 19. 6. Privilege and duty joining forces in saving the lost, vs. 21. 7. Privilege is the more important from the standpoint of the believer; duty is the more important from the standpoint of God. Which, then, is more important? Both; and again I say both.

OUR DUTY TO WARN AND HELP.

Who Is the Watchman? Did you ever stand on the busy street in a great city, and see the people passing and crossing? Who is that in the middle of the street dressed in a special uniform?

He keeps telling people what to do when they ask him. He is there also to watch and warn any who may be in danger. We call him a policeman, but he is a watchman for the city. Ezekiel was made a watchman to warn people against sin and its consequences. Ezekiel acted as such a watchman for many other nations besides Israel, as many as eight in all. That first picture shows a watchman, on the high wall looking out for any enemies that might come. There are many watchmen in life of different kinds. The preacher is a watchman, who warns all to flee from sin and Satan; and who warns them also when he sees Satan coming like a wolf or a lion, to hurt and destroy. Father and mother are watchmen, who guard the home from the evil persons and things that try to get in. Every one who knows the truth and is trying to please God, is a watchman over and for others, to protect and help them. Even a boy or a girl may sometimes do a service which will bring safety and blessing to many people. Such a boy or a girl is a watchman.

Two Kinds of Death. That man lying there in the second picture is dead; and the three people seem to be wondering what killed him. Perhaps someone failed to give the warning, and he was struck by a robber or a falling tree; or he might have been killed by a wild animal. All such kinds of death are what we call physical death: that is, the breath leaves the body, and one ceases to act or think. The spirit has gone from the person, and then the body is buried in the ground.

That third picture is very different from the second, but it shows the other kind of death. He looks strong and vigorous, as far as physical life is concerned; but he has no spiritual life. He is a wicked man, and Paul calls all such "dead in trespasses and sins." This is a very much worse kind of death than the mere death of the body. This is the death of the soul, and means a hard and bitter heart, hating God and all good men and things. If such a person dies in that state, the body is buried in the ground, but both soul and body are sent away from God and Heaven to dwell forever "with the devil and his angels." He was determined to work for Satan in this life, and he must dwell with him forever. Scripture calls this "the second death." We need to keep warning people to escape.

Awake, Thou That Sleepest. A railroad collision occurred. The telegraph operator confessed that he was asleep at his keyboard and that he is responsible.

It is a crime to sleep when sleeping jeopardizes human life. There are other positions of responsibility where the safety of the souls of men and women is involved—positions where sleep is as common in its practice as it is tragic in its results. Millions are being hurried on toward death and judgment, all heedless of their peril. How often the watchmen on the walls are fast asleep and fail to sound the alarm! How many churches and Christians are sleeping away the golden hours while the Christless multitudes sweep by to their doom! Awake! Awake!—Exchange.

The Warning That May Save Both. I mean both the one who is warned and the one who warns. It is a great thing for one to warn another, and thus save a life; but this is a kind of watching and warning which saves both. This great truth is stated very clearly here: "If thou warn the wicked, and he turn not, he shall die in his iniquity; but thou hast delivered thy soul." So it seems that our own salvation and blessedness are assured and increased by our fidelity. It is also shown that these blessings will be ours even though we fail to persuade others. God does not hold us responsible for what others do; but he does hold us responsible for what we do, and especially in the matter of warning the wicked. The reason the figure of a snake is used in that picture of warning is because the snake stands for sin. Sin and Satan are cunning and deceitful just like a snake; and so people need all the more to be warned against them. That man acts as if he had not seen the real danger before, as indeed he had not. The man who is warning him has now done his duty, and he is rewarded for the work, whether the wicked man turns or not. But quite likely the wicked man will turn when he sees the great danger. To one who is a preacher, or Sunday school teacher, or other worker, or who is a Christian at all, even a boy or a girl—this is a great incentive to be faithful to all and at all times.

The Hiss of the Serpent of Sin. "Papa, pussy's very angry; she hissed at me just now. I can't get my ball." The child's plaintive persistence at last attracted the father's attention. Telling the lad to rise, he sent him for a couple of servants. They came to move the large old-fashioned bookcase in the corner of the room. It was the child of an India British official that uttered the cry, which proved to be a warning just in time. As the men moved the case they heard the hissing, which they understood full well. The space cleared displayed a cobra coiled up in the corner with its head raised, ready for instant attack. No time was lost in killing it, and so both the boy and others were saved.

The Neglect That May Hurt Both. This is seen in the last two pictures. The "wicked" man and the "righteous" man show the great difference in the face between those who do wrong and those who do right. It does not take long to decide which one you would rather be. The really beautiful face always comes from a good heart, redeemed by Christ and made new and pure by the Holy Spirit. This "seemingly righteous" man is one who has a good face and may come to have a good heart, and so be righteous in fact. He is like the good young man who came running once to Christ and claimed to obey all the commandments. Christ loved him and warned him of his lack; but he made the very warning a "stumbling block," and he refused to come to Christ. God does not tempt anyone to sin and the only way in which it may be said, "I lay a stumbling block before him," is that God gives a warning and the man turns it into a stumbling block. Now, such a man "shall die in his sin . . . but his blood will I require at thine hand, because thou hast not given him warning." The neglect to warn hurts both. This truth is even more important, at least more solemn, than the other; for our failure brings injury and possible death, both to ourselves and others. The poet has put it this way, "Heaven's gate is closed to him who comes alone." Spurgeon was once asked what would become of the heathen if they did not hear of the gospel. He replied that it was a much more vital question as to what would become of us if we neglected to take the gospel to them.

Was It His Business? A wealthy man was asked to aid in a series of temperance meetings, but he refused, saying, "Gentlemen, it is not my business." A few days later his wife and two daughters were coming home on an express. In his fine carriage he rode to the station for his family. "Accident" was the cry that greeted him. He finds the accident has occurred twenty-five miles distant on the road on which his loved ones were returning, and was caused by the drunkenness of the engineer. It is his business now. In half an hour the train arrives. He hurries toward it, and finds the mangled and lifeless remains of his wife and one of his daughters. In another carriage lies his other daughter, with her body crushed and her life ebbing away. His neglect to help may have been partly to blame for the drunkenness which led to the death of his family.—Exchange.

Quiz. 1. To what class of prophets did Ezekiel belong? 2. Name three ways in which any Christian can be a watchman. 3. Name the other "major" prophets, and some of the "minor" prophets. 4. If one warned us of danger how should we feel towards him? 5. Who are God's watchmen now, to guard us from sin?

Challenge Text. "Now then we are ——— for Christ as though God did ——— you by us; we ——— you, in Christ's stead, be ye ——— to God." 2 Cor. 5: (1)

Practical Thoughts. 1. God has stationed many special watchmen to warn man against sin. 2. The more truth and blessing one has the greater is his responsibility. 3. Every Christian and every church has a duty to the lost everywhere. 4. Sin unrepented becomes man's curse and doom. 5. Any service God requires of us is by that fact made possible. 6. By warning and helping others we bring greatest blessing to ourselves. 7. He only is prepared to "go" and speak who has "come" and heard. 8. He who is "lifted up" by the Spirit's power will be able to declare the Spirit's message. 9. "Heaven's door is shut to him who comes alone."

ye shall be clean:

And I will put my to your fathers;

and ye

THE SCRIPTURE LESSON IS EZEKIEL 36:25-38.

Prayer: Lord, We rejoice in Thy great power by which Thou canst change even the hard and wicked heart. By Thy Spirit and grace, and for the sake of Thy Son, Thou dost give the new heart to all who will accept it. Help us that we may feel our need and come to Thee for cleansing and life. Then may we have the power by which we may serve Thee and win others for Christ. For His sake, Amen.

THE SUBJECT IN

Historical Setting: Time, B. C. 587. Place, In the Euphrates Valley. Persons, Ezekiel, Holy Spirit, people.

Scripture Setting: The New Heart. Need of a new heart, John 3:1-8. Proof of a new heart, Tit. 3:1-8. A heart of flesh, Ezek. 11:14-20. A heart to obey, Deut. 30:1-8. A heart toward God, Jer. 24:4-10. A spiritual heart, 1 Cor. 2:6-16. The heart's cry for God, Psalms. 42. The heart's cry for holiness, Psalms. 51.

Life and Conduct Setting: When God would "make all things new" in the human soul, he begins with the heart. If that citadel and center is brought into full and sweet submission all

WHAT IS IT TO BE A CHRISTIAN?

The New Nature. My friend and I were at an open air restaurant in Paris and directly in front of the famous Eiffel tower. This tower is nearly 1,000 feet high, and is one of the most beautiful and graceful of structures. "Shall we go up to the top?" my friend asked. "Certainly," I replied. The trip took four hours because of the crowds going up and down. Many thousands were on it at once, and each one could advance only in his turn. But I speak of this here in order to say that the beautiful tower was supported by four sustaining legs, starting far apart and converging towards the top. These supported the tower and made it possible. The true Christian is the most commanding and beautiful form of life among men. In this story we want to find out what makes it so. We shall discover that four fundamental things are necessary in order to its full strength and beauty. All must be new from center to circumference. The new nature is shown in the first two pictures. The water is a striking symbol of the cleansing power of God, and His quickening and transforming grace. By God's help the Christian puts away all idols of whatever kind. Though Ezekiel is a thousand miles away and in captivity, yet God gives him this beautiful picture of a new land and a new life. This picture prophecy is partly fulfilled in the return of the Jews from captivity; but it is fully and finally fulfilled, both for men and nations, in Jesus Christ and His Church.

If peace be in the heart,
The wildest winter storm
Is full of solemn beauty,
The midnight lightning-flash
But shows the path of duty,
Each living creature tells
Some new and joyous story,
The very trees and stones
All catch a ray of glory,
If peace be in the heart.

—Charles Francis Richardson.

ITS RELATIONS.

else follows. A human soul is a miniature world, and here are some of the kingdoms which are conquered when the heart is won and made new: 1. The kingdom of the outward life—"filthiness" and "idols." 2. The kingdom of thought and desire—"new spirit" and "heart of flesh." 3. The kingdom of our duties to God—"my statutes," "my judgments," "my people." 4. The kingdom of temporal good—"corn," "no famine," "the fruit," "the field." 5. The kingdom of spiritual ideas and ideals—condemning self and glorying in God. 6. The kingdom of duty and service—"shall be builded," "shall be tilled," "inhabited." 7. The kingdom of prayer—"I will do it," "I will be inquired of," "I will increase them."

The Desert Shall Blossom. A heathen Fingo traveling through Hankey, where the London Missionary Society has a mission, sat down to rest at the church door. He asked one of the deacons how they got food in such a place, for he had formerly known it as a desert. The deacon told him to look and see if he was not in health and well clothed. He called a fine child, and asked him if it did not seem well fed, and asked him to attend service next day and see if it was not so with all of them. The Fingo, lifting his hand to heaven, exclaimed, "It is always so where that God is worshiped."—Dr. A. Thomson.

The New Heart. This is the second important condition or factor in making a Christian. The third picture sets this forth. We know that a man or boy will do about as his heart prompts him. The heart of every one is wicked by nature, and is called here a stony heart. If the heart is bad, the nature will continue to be bad, even though it may try to be good, and may really seem to be good for a time. At last the heart will control all the life. The need of a new and loving heart which is the "heart of flesh," is great, because the heart is the seed bed for the life. In the parable of the sower the hard and stony ground could not receive the seed, but the good ground could. When new and right the heart is like the hot bed of the florist, to grow all kinds of beautiful flowers and plants. If it is bad, Satan will use it to grow weeds and thorns. In one of Ezekiel's other pictures (18:31), he says to the people, "Make you a new heart," and here he says "A new heart will I give." This shows that we must work with God, and let him work in and with us, to get the new heart. Paul puts both acts in working together when he says, "Work out your own salvation with fear and trembling, for it is God who worketh in you both to will and to do of His good pleasure."

The New Power. This is the third needful thing to make a Christian. It is shown by that strange picture of a dove in the circle. The dove represents the Holy Spirit, as when He descended on Christ at His baptism. The circle stands for both heart and life, and those odd letters are the Hebrew for the great name of God, Jehovah. If one has the Holy Spirit giving right desires and great strength, and has also God ever in him and before him, he will be apt to be a good Christian. The next picture is closely connected with this for it is the Holy Spirit who enables us to understand God's Word, who also makes us love it, and who gives us willingness and strength to obey the commands of God. David says, "Thy Word have I hid in my heart, that I might not sin against Thee." So the Holy Spirit and the Bible are the great forces which make the Christian mighty. Such a one can say with Paul, "I can do all things through Christ who strengtheneth me."

And one of the later prophets cries out, "Not by might nor by power (that is any human effort), but by my Spirit saith the Lord." Those two people seem to be on their knees studying the "roll," which was their Bible. This is the true attitude for all who would learn God's will. If not in the very posture of prayer, one should be reverent, prayerful and earnest in searching the Scriptures. See Acts 17:11 for a model class in Bible study.

The Electric Current. Every condition of expert operating may be fulfilled, but so long as the electric circuit is closed, all your efforts are simply sounding brass and clattering platinum. Not a single spark of electric life do you transmit; not a single message of good or ill, of bane or blessing, is conveyed to the waiting listener at the other end of the line. Why? Because the battery is not working. And all your working is effort without result, activity without power. But now you open the little brass lever which connects your key to the battery hidden beneath the table—immediately every letter you form thrills with life, every word you write flashes a living message into the mind and heart of the far-away receiver. Through your work, dead and mechanical in itself, the electric battery is now pouring forth its vital stream, flooding with life and power. So the Holy Spirit floods the soul with light, and life and power.—Exchange.

The New Life. This is the fourth important thing to make a beautiful Christian. It follows from the others, and never can exist without them. But it is the most important of all so far as one's influence and usefulness are concerned. Then it is the first thing the world sees in a Christian. Paul likens a good man to a letter that is "known and read of all men." In the sermon on the mount, Christ said "Let your light so shine before men that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in Heaven." Those last two pictures show two ways in which the outward life proves that one is a Christian. One way is by the many blessings which such a person receives from God. These are represented by pictures of the goodly land they dwell in. All the gracious and kindly dealings of God to His people are saying always, to all others, "Come thou with us and we will do thee good." The other way is by the goodly people such a person associates with. One is known by the company he keeps, and if he is found at prayer meeting and church service and Sunday School, people will at once say, "Why, he is a Christian." His power and influence are beyond calculation.

Two Notable Illustrations. Jonathan Edwards, by his godly life and abundant labors, transformed Northampton, Mass., to be the model small city in all the world. So John Wesley changed the village of Cornwall, England. A young nobleman rode up and down the streets of that village looking for something stronger than water to drink. At last he stopped, and made impatient inquiry of an old peasant who was on his way home after a day of toil: "How is it that I can't get a glass of liquor anywhere in this wretched village of yours?" he demanded harshly. The old man, recognizing his questioner as a man of rank, pulled off his cap and bowed humbly, but nevertheless there was a proud flash in his faded eye as he answered quietly: "My lord, something over a hundred years ago a man named John Wesley came to these parts." And with that the old peasant walked away.—Sunday School Advocate.

Quiz and Study. 1. What Scripture texts can you quote respecting the heart? 2. What is the great mistake the heart makes? 3. What is the best gift a boy or girl can give to Christ? 4. How do you give it?

Challenge Text. "So teach us to number our — that we may apply our — unto wisdom." Psa. 90: (2).

Practical Thoughts. 1. God is constantly asking the heart to come to Him for cleansing. 2. Every such call is a warning of peril and punishment. 3. "Is the heart right with God?" is the greatest question one can ask. 4. If the heart is really right, all else will in time be right. 5. No one can come into the new spiritual Kingdom without a new spiritual heart. 6. A single soul, however wicked and ignorant, is worth one's best efforts to save. 7. No two hearts are alike, and no two are saved in just the same way. 8. Jesus Christ is infinite in His merit and resources and so can save all who are willing to be saved. 9. "Son, daughter, give me thine heart."

It declared that only through obedience to God's Word and the influence of His Spirit these things were to be accomplished. 5. It symbolized the power of God's Word and Spirit to restore the spiritually dead to life and to inheritance of God's best gifts. 6. It foreshadowed the coming of Christ's kingdom and the redemption of the world.
